Hecker, Johann Julius, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 2, 1707. He studied at Halle, was in 1735 preacher at Potsdam, in 1738 at Berlin, in 1750 member of consistory, and died June 24, 1768, leaving a few ascetical works. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hedinger, JOHANN REINHARD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stuttgart, Sept. 7, 1664. He accompanied the duke Johann Friedrich of Würtemberg as chaplain to France, was in 1692 military preacher, in 1698 court-preacher and member of consistory, and died Dec. 28, 1704. He wrote, De Fædere Gratia:—Quæstiones Vexatæ de Testamenti Veteris Natura a Novo Discrepantia, and some ascetical works. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hedstrom, OLIF G., a noted Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Sweden in 1803, of humble parents, who gave him a fair education. When twenty-two years old he joined a band of adventurous youths, who volunteered to take two frigates from Sweden to their purchasers in one of the South American republics. After a tempestuous voyage, instead of reaching South America they landed in New York. Mr. Hedstrom soon made arrangements to return to Sweden, but on the eve of his departure was robbed of his money. He was shortly afterward led to Willett Street Methodist Episcopal Church, N. Y., experienced religion, and on reaching his Swedish home began holding Methodist class-meetings and prayer-meetings, the first ever held in that land. In 1835 he returned to New York, joined the New York Conference, and in it travelled the following circuits: Charlotte, Jefferson, Coeymans, Windham, Catskill, and Prattville. In 1845 he was appointed to the Swedish mission, with his headquarters in the famous Bethel ship for Scandinavian seamen, foot of Carlisle Street, N. Y. He began by boarding, when possible, every incoming ship from Scandinavia or Denmark before it touched the shore, and distributing among the emigrants Bibles and tracts, telling them where they could find good temporary homes, and inviting them to the Bethel ship. In a single day he might be found in the counting-room of the rich gathering funds for the mission, far out on the deep seeking the lost sheep, at his desk answering letters from all parts of the world, at the bedside of the sick and dying, and pleading from his pulpit with the waiting throng to accept Christ. Thus he continued till his death, May 6, 1877. Mr. Hedstrom was thoroughly devoted to his work, had a simplicity of manner and fund of experimental Christianity that won the hearts of all. His religion was full of joy, and his life of success. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, i, 42; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Heeser, JOHANN, a Reformed theologian, who died in 1716, is the author of Prodomus Criticæ seu Observationes Philologicæ in Omnes Voces Chaldaicas et Multas Hebraicas Veteris Testamenti (Amsterdam, 1696, 1714):—אֲבֵן הַזֶּכֶר sive Lexici Philologici, Hebræo-Chaldaeo Sacri, Pars I (1714). Heimdál, in Norse mythology, is the son of Odin, born of nine Jote-maidens, so that all were mothers of this god. From them he inherited beauty and greatness, from his father wisdom and power, and Odin placed him as guard of the Bifröst bridge, where he lives in a beautiful palace, Himminbiörg (heavenly castle), and gazes about to see whether mountain giants or other enemies come near the bridge. When he is awake the gods can safely slumber, for no one can approach without his knowledge. At night he can see a distance of one hundred miles, he hears the grass and hairs grow, and sleeps as little as an eagle. When enemies approach he takes his horn and makes a great noise, and the Asas and the Einheriar, and the heroes in Walhalla assemble for combat. This takes place especially at the destruction of the world. He has a surname, Gullintani (gold-tooth), from the fact that his teeth are made of gold.

Heinemann, JEREMIAH, a Jewish writer of Germany, was born July 20, 1788, and died at Berlin, Oct. 16, 1855. He published, Jedidja, a Jewish review (Berlin, 1817-43):—Gebete an den hohen Festen (Leipsic, 1841):—Katechismus der jüd. Religion (1812):—Sammlung der die religiöse und bürgerliche Verfassung der Juden in den Preuss. Staaten betreffender Gesetze, etc. (1821-28):—Allgemeines Gebetbuch der Israeliten (1838):—Religions- und Schulreden für Israeliten (ed.).—Der Prophet Iesaiä, the Hebrew text with Rashi, Chaldee, and commentary (1842):—Der Pentateuch, with Targum, Rashi, German translation, and Hebrew commentary (1831-33). Heiner, ELIAS, D.D., an esteemed German Reformed minister, was born at Taneytown, Md., Sept. 16, 1810. He early connected with the Church; studied theology in the seminary of the Reformed Church at York, Pa., under the Rev. Lewis Mayer, D.D.; was licensed and ordained in 1833, and installed as pastor of the Reformed Church in Emmittsburg, Md. He was called to Baltimore in 1835, where he remained, faithfully preaching the gospel of the grace of God, to the close of his life, Oct. 20, 1863. Dr. Heiner was a man of respectable talents, good culture, deep piety, and great zeal, combined with a vast amount of practical tact. He was an acceptable preacher, and a most excellent pastor, enjoying to the last the full and unabated confidence of his people. He took a deep interest in the cause of missions, as well as in all the other benevolent operations of the Church, and did much to extend the Reformed Church in the city of Baltimore by his earnest and disinterested labors. He published the first volume of Dr. Mayer's History of the German Reformed Church, to which he prefixed a sketch of the author's life and labors. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Reformed Church, iv, 271.

Heinrichs, CARL FRIEDRICH ERNST, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1798. He was ordained for the ministry in 1823, and was from 1827 pastor at Detmold. He died Dec. 30, 1882, doctor of theology and member of consistory, leaving De iis, quæ Potissimum Contulerint ad Lutherum Sacrorum Reformatorem Sensim Effingendum (Göttingen, 1819). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 742. (B. P.)

Heinroth, JOHANN CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH AUGUST, a German psychologist, was born at Leipsic, Jan. 17, 1778, and died there in 1843, a doctor and professor of medicine. He wrote, Pistodice oder Resultate freier Forschung über Geschichte, Philosophie und Glauben (Leipsic, 1829):—Der Schlüssel zu Himmel und Hölle im Menschen (1829):—Die Lüge (1834):—Geschichte und Kritik des Mysticismus (1830). Heirio, Saint, a French monk, was born about 884, at Hery, near Auxerre. It is supposed that his surname has been given to him more on account of his knowledge than for his actions. At the age of seven he was intrusted by his parents to the care of the Benedictine monks of St. Germain d'Auxerre, from whom he received his first instruction. He afterwards went to the abbey of Fulda, where he was instructed by Haimon, a disciple of Alcuin. Some time later he left Fulda to go to Ferrière, to put himself under the discipline of the abbot Lupus. He died about 881. For his numerous writings we refer to Hoefcr, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hel (cocer), in Norse mythology, was the daughter of Loke and the giantess Angerbode, sister of the wolf Fenris and the snake Jormungand. The three sisters were the most frightful creations of the infernal regions, and as the Aas knew what dangers awaited them from these monsters, they threw the snake into the sea, where she grew until she encircled the whole earth as the Midgard snake. They also chained the wolf Fenris, and placed the third child in the infernal region. There she rules over all who do not die as warriors on the battle-field. She devours men, and lives on their marrow and brain.

Hela, in Slavonic mythology, was originally a Scandinavian deity, but worshipped also by the Wends, although in another sense, and with the attributes of an evil and angry deity. She was represented as a large woman, with a lion's open mouth. She was implored to protect from evil advice.

Held, August H. M., a Lutheran minister, was born Feb. 22, 1806, at Knoop, near Kiel, Germany. After preparatory study at Kiel he entered the College of Renzburg, and at the close of his theological course was ordained as a Lutheran minister. Instead of entering the pastoral work, he established the Held Institute at Kiel, which he conducted with signal ability for many years. In 1847 he arrived in America. For a time he was assistant pastor of St. Matthew's Church, New York city. Subsequently he founded St. Mark's Church, in Sixth Street. A division occurring in the congregation, a large portion followed him and formed the nucleus of St. John's Church, which at first held its meetings in the old Hope Chapel, and afterwards in the New York University building on Washington Square. In 1858 St. John's purchased the present church edifice in Christopher Street. For twenty-two years he was pastor of this church, and gathered about him one of the largest Lutheran congregations in New York. Two years before his death he was obliged to relinquish the pastorate on account of declining health. He died in New York city, March 31, 1881. See Lutheran Observer, April 8, 1881.

Held, Carl Friedrich Wilhelm, a Protestant theologian, was born in 1830 at Treptow, Pomerania. In 1852 he was repetent at Göttingen, in 1860 professor at Zurich, in 1866 at Breslau, and accepted a call to Bonn in 1867. He died May 30, 1870, leaving De Opere Jesu Christi Salutari, etc. (Göttingen, 1860):—Jesu der Christ, 16 Apologetische Vorträge über die Grundlehren des Christenthums (Zurich, 1865):—Moderne Weltanschauung und Christenthum (Breslau, 1866):—Selbstzeugnisse Jesu in 15 Betrachtungen für die Suchenden unserer Zeit. Heleph. Of Beit-Lif, which is now generally accepted as the modern representative of this place, the following is the description in the Memoirs (i, 201) accompanying the Ordnance Survey: "A village built of stone, containing about one hundred and fifty Moslems (Guérin says eighty Metawileh), situated on a hill-top, with a few olives and arable land. Two cisterns and a birket (pool) near by supply the water."

Helffenstein, SAMUEL, D.D., a prominent German Reformed minister, son of Rev. John C. Albert Helffenstein, was born at Germantown, Pa., April 17, 1775. He studied privately, partly under Rev. Mr. Stöck, and partly under Rev. Dr. Melsheimer. His theological studies he prosecuted under Rev. Dr. William Hendel, the elder, pastor of the Reformed Church on Race Street, Philadelphia. He entered the ministry in 1796 or 1797. After preaching for a short time in Montgomery County, he received a call to the Race Street Church, as successor to his theological preceptor, who died about this time. Here he labored for a period of thirty two or three years, when he retired from the active duties of the ministry, and spent the remainder of his days at his private residence in North Wales, Montgomery Co., where he died, Oct. 17, 1866. Dr. Helffenstein was a man of fine talents, thorough education, and superior pulpit abilities. He prepared a large number of young men for the ministry, and also took a deep interest in the establishment of the literary and theological institutions of the Reformed Church. In 1846 he published a work on didactic theology, which probably embodied the substance of his lectures to the students whom in earlier life he had under tuition. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 81. (D. Y. H.)

Helgoland, in Norse mythology, was an island of the North Sea, also called Fosetland, from the god Fosete. It contained only herds, sacred to the god, an altar, and a spring, to drink from which was very beneficial.

Helheim, in Norse mythology, is the kingdom of the cruel Hel (q. v.), large and extended, intersected by thirty-two rivers, which spring from the spring Hwergelmer, and one of which encircles the entire country. The gold-covered bridge, Gjalar, spans this valley. A maiden giantess, Modgudur, who keeps guard here, inquires of every one his name and family, and shows them the way to the palace of Hel. A high iron lattice surrounds the kingdom, and after having passed this, the visitor finds himself in one of the nine worlds. There are two maidens keeping guard also in Hel's palace; they have iron blood, which, when it falls to the ground, causes quarrel and war. Hel's palace contains a hall, Eliud, her table is called Hungur (hunger), Ganglate and Ganglöt are her servant and maid, Kor her bed, Blick and Böi her covering. In Helheim or Nifheim lives the evil snake, Nidhögr, which gnaws at one of the three roots of the ash-tree, Ygdrasil. There, in a cave, the dog Garmr lives, who is to bring about the death of an Asa at the destruction of the world. Helheim is not a place of punishment, but simply the dwelling-place of those who do not die of wounds on the battle-field. After the end of the world, the good are separated from the bad, the former go to eternal joy in Gimle (heaven), the latter to Nastrond.

Heling, MAURICE, a Lutheran theologian, was born in 1523 at Friedland, Prussia. He studied at different universities, was in 1550 rector at Eisleben, in 1556 superintendent at Nürnberg, and died Oct. 2, 1595, leaving, Colloquium Eva et Mariae Virginis:—De Perpetua Ecclesiae Conservatione Ministrorum:—De Argumenta Librorum Josue, Judicum, Ruth et 2 Librorum Samuelis et Locorum Communium Consignationes Breves. See Zeltner, Leben und Schriften Helings (Altdorf, 1715); Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Helios, in Greek mythology (among the Romans Sol), the god of the sun, was one of the Titanides, brother of Selene and Aurora, all three children of the Titan Hyperion and the Titanid Thia. Helios rides in the wagon of the sun, drawn by four flashing steeds, borne from sea to sea, and gives the world the day. Aurora precedes, opens the sun's portals, strews roses on his path, glowing rays and golden locks undulate about his head, a light dress, woven from the breath of Zephyrus, flies about his hips, when he comes forth out of his palace. The latter lies in the west of the known world, where the sun sets. In order to come from here to the east, he sails back during the night in a golden canoe until he arrives again at the east. Near his palace were his herds and his gardens. As every god had a seat of worship, so Rhodes was especially sacred to Helios. Besides this the castle of Corinth belonged to him. According to Diodorus, Helios was a son of king Hyperion and his sister Basilea. The brothers of the king, fearing the latter would excel them in power, murdered him and drowned Helios.

Helkath-haz-surim. Tristram thinks (Bible Places, p. 115) that a reminiscence of the battle here "seems to be preserved in a broad, smooth valley close to Gibbon [el-Jib], called Wady el-'Azzar, 'the vale of the soldiery.' It runs north-west from the village.

Helladius, bishop of CAESAREA, in Cappadocia, succeeded his teacher, Basil the Great, in that see in 378. He attended two councils of Constantinople in 381 and 394. His life of St. Basil is cited by Damascenus, but the authenticity of that work is doubtful. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hellaadius, bishop of TARSUS, lived about A.D. 430. He made himself remarkable by his affection for Nestorius, and was deprived of his bishopric on that account. But it was restored to him again on the condition that he would join himself with those who pronounced the anathema against Nestorius. There are extant of him six letters. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Helm, JAMES ISBELL, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, and afterwards an Episcopal, was born in Washington County, Tenn., April 25, 1811. He graduated from Georgetown College, Ky., in 1833, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1836. He was ordained an evangelist by the Presbytery of West Tennessee, June 23, 1838; labored as a missionary in Giles County in 1837 and 1838; was pastor at Salem, N. J., in 1840; teacher at Newton in 1852; at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1853, and at Princeton, N. J., in 1855. He was reordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1860; was an assistant rector in St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, Pa., from 1860 to 1862; rector at St. Paul's Church, Sing Sing, N. Y., in 1863, and died there Oct. 15, 1880. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 94.

Helmbreker, THEODORE, an eminent Dutch painter, was born at Haarlem in 1624, and was instructed in the school of Peter Grebber. On the death of that master he visited Rome, and spent some time in Florence and Naples. He finally settled at Rome, where he executed for the church of the Jesuits a noble landscape, in which is introduced The Temptation of Christ in the Desert. At Naples, in the refectory of the Jesuits' College, are three sacred subjects, most admirably executed: Christ in the Garden; Christ Carrying his Cross; and The Crucifixion. Helmbreker died at Rome in 1694. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Helmer, CHARLES DOWNS, a Congregational minister, was born at Canajoharie, N. Y., Nov. 18, 1827. After spending two years in Hamilton College, he entered Yale, from which he graduated in 1852. Hendel, WILLIAM, D.D., an eminent German Reformed minister, son of the Rev. Dr. William Hendel, was born in Lancaster, Pa., Oct. 14, 1768. After completing his preparatory studies he entered Columbia College in New York, where he passed through a regular collegiate course. His theological studies he pursued in the seminary at New Brunswick, N. J., under the Rev. Drs. Gross and Livingston. In 1792 he was licensed to preach the gospel, and the following year ordained, and installed as pastor of the Tulpehocken charge, in Berks County, Pa. He resigned this charge in 1823, and removed to Womelsdorf, in the same county, where he died, July 11, 1846. Dr. Hendel manifested a deep interest in the cause of education, and in consequence had to suffer some persecution. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Ref. Church, iii, 58. (D. Y. H.)

Henderson, Isaac J., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Natchez, Miss., Jan. 6, 1812. He graduated at Jefferson College in 1831, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1835. Soon after his license he spent two years as an evangelist in Mississippi, Arkansas, and Louisiana; then came to Galveston, Texas; accepted a call, and in a short time secured funds for the erection of the first Presbyterian church there. About 1850 he accepted a call to Jackson, Miss. In 1852 he went to Prytanian Street Church in New Orleans, and labored over eleven years. In 1866 he began to preach at Annapolis, Md. He died Dec. 8, 1875. Dr. Henderson was faithful, practical, and interesting to all classes. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 21.

Henderson, James, M.D., a Scotch Congregational medical missionary, was born in 1830, and received a careful religious training by a pious widowed mother. He began life as a shepherd-boy, but spent several sessions at the Edinburgh University. He offered his services to the London Missionary Society, and after six months of private theological instruction, during which time he received his degree of M. D. from the University of St. Andrews, he set sail for Shanghai, China. On his arrival, in 1860, he immediately applied himself with his characteristic zeal to medical work, and his thorough devotion, united with his remarkable surgical skill, soon raised the reputation of the Chinese hospital to the highest point. In June, 1865, he was seized with fever, and died July 31 following. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1866, p. 258.

Henry of SANDWICH, archdeacon of Oxford in 1259, was consecrated bishop of London in 1263. He took part with the seditious barons against king Henry III, for which he was excommunicated by Othobon, the pope's legate. He went to Rome, but did not receive absolution for seven years. He returned home, and died Sept. 16, 1273, and was buried in his own church of St. Paul's, London. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 135.

Henry, Caleb Sprague, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister and writer, was born at Rutland, Mass., Aug. 20, 1804. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1825; studied theology at Andover in 1828, and for several years was settled as a Congregational minister at Greenfield, Mass., and Hartford, Conn. In 1835 he entered the Episcopal Church, and was appointed professor of mental and moral philosophy in Bristol College, Pa. With Dr. Hawks he established, in 1837, The New York Review, and from 1839 to 1852 he was professor of philosophy and history in the University of New York, a part of the time acting as chancellor. From 1847 to 1850 he was rector of St. Clement's Church in that city. He afterwards held rectorships in Poughkeepsie and Newburgh and in Litchfield, Conn., and died at Newburgh, N. Y., March 9, 1884. Professor Henry was the author of many volumes of essays, etc., the last of which, entitled Dr. Oldham at Graystones, and His Talk There, was published anonymously in 1860.

Henry, Robert (1), D.D., a Scotch Presbyterian divine, was born at Muirtown, St. Ninian's, Stirlingshire, Feb. 18, 1718. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh; licensed to preach in 1746, and officiated at Carlisle from 1748 to 1760, and at Berwick-upon-Tweed from 1760 to 1763. He was minister of the church of the New Greyfriars from 1763 to 1776. In 1774 he was moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He died Nov. 24, 1790. As an author he is best known by a History of Great Britain (1771, 1774, 1777, 1781, 1785, 6 vols.). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 16, 71.

Henry, Robert (2), D.D., LL.D., an Episcopal clergyman, was born at Charleston, S. C., Dec. 6, 1792. He graduated from the University of Edinburgh in 1814, was president of the College of South Carolina in 1834 and 1835, and filled in succession in that institution the chairs of logic and moral philosophy, of metaphysics and belles-lettres, and of the Greek language and literature. He died Feb. 6, 1856, leaving several Sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Drake, Dict. of Amer. Biog. s. v.

Henry, Robert W., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was a native of Scotland. He came to America, and became pastor in Chicago, Ill., after which he removed to New York, and was installed co-pastor with Rev. Dr. McElroy of the Scotch Presbyterian Church. He remained in this charge until called by the North Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, Pa. He went to Europe in May, 1869, and having visited the East he was on his return home, but was smitten down by Syrian fever, and died at Alexandria, Egypt, Oct. 18, 1869. See Presbyterian, Nov. 13, 1869. (W. P. S.)

Henry, Symmes Cleves, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Lamington, N. J., June 7, 1797. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1815; studied theology for two years at Princeton Theological Seminary; was ordained evangelist by the Presbytery of Newton, May 3, 1818; became stated supply at Salem, Mass., immediately after his ordination; served as stated supply at Rochester, N. Y., in 1819; the next year of the Third Church of Philadelphia, Pa.; preached at Cranberry, N. J., from 1820 until his death, March 22, 1857. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 20.

Hensel, JOHANN ADAM, a Lutheran minister, who died in Silesia, Feb. 2, 1778, is the author of Geschichte der protestantischen Gemeinden in Schlesien (Liegnitz, 1768). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 808; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Henshaw, JOSEPH, D.D., an English clergyman, was made prebendary of Peterborough, dean of Chichester in 1660, and bishop of Peterborough in 1663. He died March 9, 1678, leaving, Horæ Successivæ (1631):—Daily Thoughts (1651). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hensler, CHRISTIAN GOTTFRIED, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 9, 1760, in Holstein. In 1786 he was professor of theology at Kiel, resigned his office in 1809, and thereafter resided in Halle until his death, April 24, 1812. He is the author of Bemerkungen über Stellen in der Psalmen und in der Genesis (Hamburg, 1791):—Erläuterung des ersten Buches Samuelis und der Solomoni'schen Denksprüche (1796):—Isaias neu übersetzt und mit Anmerkungen (1788):—Bemerkungen über Stellen in Jeremias Weissagungen (1805):—Aninadversiones in Quædam 12 Prophetarum Minorum Loca (1786):—Der Brief des Apostels Jakobus übersetzt und erläutert (1801):—Die Wahrheit und Göttlichkeit der christlichen Religion dargestellt (1803). Heothina (ῥά ἱεθινά), in the Greek Church, designates (1) an antiphonal anthem of lauds; (2) gospels relating to the resurrection.

Hepburn, a Scotch prelate, was rector of Partoun and abbot of Dunfermline in 1515. In June of the same year he was constituted lord treasurer. In 1516 he became bishop of Moray. He died in 1524. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 148.

Hepburn, George, a Scotch prelate, was early preferred to the provost of Lincluden, and Feb. 9, 1508, was elected abbot of the monastery of Aberbrothock. In 1509 he was made lord treasurer, and in 1510 he was elected bishop of the see of the Isles. In 1512 he was commentator both of Arbroath and Icolmkill. This prelate was slain with the king on the unfortunate field of Flodden, Sept. 9, 1513. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 305.

Hepburn, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Brechin in 1517, and was still there in 1532. He died in August, 1543. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 165.

Hepburn, John (2), a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Dunblane, and one of the lords of council of session in 1467. In 1476 he assisted at the consecration of dean Livingstone to the see of Dunkeld. He was bishop of this see in 1479. He died in 1508. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 178.

Hepburn, Patrick, a Scotch prelate, was prior of St. Andrews in 1522, and in 1524 was made secretary, in which office he continued until 1527. He was advanced to the see of Moray in 1535, and at the same time held the abbey of Scone in perpetual commendam. He was bishop of Moray still in 1561, and probably in 1568. He died at Spynie Castle, June 20, 1573. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 150.

Hepher. This place Trelawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.) identifies with Khurbet Kafir, which the Ordnance Map lays down eight miles northwest of Hebron (and three miles east of Um-Burj, the neighborhood which we had conjecturally assigned), and the Memoirs describe (iii, 355) as "foundations and heaps of stones. It has the appearance of an old site, and an ancient road passes it."

Heppe, HEINRICH LUDWIG JULIUS, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Cassel in 1820. He studied at Marburg, was in 1844 doctor of philosophy and licentiate of theology, and commenced his academic career at Marburg. In 1850 he was professor of theology, in 1864 he was honored with the doctorate of theology, and died July 25, 1879. He wrote, Diss. de Loco Evang. Lucas xxi, 1-9 (Marburg, 1844); — Thatsachen aus der Kurhessischen Kirchengeschichte (Cassel, eod.); — Geschichte der hessischen Generalsynoden von 1568-1582 (1847, 2 vols.); — Historische Untersuchungen über den Kasseler Catechismus (ibid. eod.); — Einführung der Verbesserungspunkte in Hessen, etc. (1849); — Gesch. des deutschen Protestantismus (1852-57, 3 vols.); — Die confessionelle Entwicklung der hessischen Kirche (1853); — Die confessionelle Entwicklung der altprotestantischen Kirche Deutschlands (1854); — *Dogmatik des deutschen Protestantismus im 16. Heracleia, a festival anciently celebrated at Athens every five years in honor of the Grecian god Heracles (q. v.).

Heraclydēs, surnamed Cyprus, from his place of birth, was liberally educated, became a monk under Evagrius, and deacon at Constantinople. He was an ardent friend of Chrysostom, who caused his election as bishop of Ephesus in 401; but he was afterwards persecuted along with that eminent ecclesiastic, and finally shared his exile.

Heraclyteans, the followers of the philosopher Heracitus (q. v.).

Heraclius (Eraclius or Bradius), bishop elect of Hippo, was designed by Augustine, Sept. 26, 426, to become his successor, but owing to some irregularity he was never inaugurated into that office, and the fall of Hippo into the hands of the Vandals abolished the see. There are attributed to Heraclius two sermons found among those of St. Augustine. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Heraclius (Eraclius or Everard), sixteenth bishop of Liege, was of a distinguished Saxon family, and was educated at Cologne under the care of Rathier, bishop of Liege. He became provost at the Collegiate Church of Bonn, and entered upon the episcopal see of Liege in 959. He devoted his attention entirely to the cause of education, establishing new schools, and placing at their head wise men, whom he called from Germany and from France. In 960 he became involved in political troubles, during which he died, in 971. There is extant of him a letter, written about 943, to Rathier, bishop of Verona, on the miraculous healing of a cancer. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Heranasikha (from the Singhalese, herana, a novice, and sikha, a rule or precept), a formulary required to be committed to memory by the Buddhist priest during his novitiate. It contains a number of obligations which the young priest takes upon himself.

Herberger, VALERIUS, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Fraustadt, Prussian Poland, April 21, 1562, and died there, May 18, 1627. He was a teacher in his native place in 1584, deacon in 1590, and pastor in 1598. His publications are still highly prized in the German Evangelical Church. He wrote, Evangelische Herzpostille (new ed. Berlin, 1853); — Epistolische Herzpostille (ibid.); — Geistreiche Stoppelpostille; — Magnalia Dei. De Jesu Scripturae Nucleo et Medulla (Halle, 1854); — Passionszeiger (ibid. 1858); — Geistliche Trauerbinden; — Psalterparadies; — Erklärung des Jesu Sirach. See Lauterbach, Vita, Fama et Fata Valerii Herbergerei (1708); Ledderhose, Leben Valerius Herbergers, in the Sonntagsbibliothek, vol. iv, parts 5 and 6 (Bielefeld, 1851); Specht, Geschichte der evangelisch lutherischen Gemeinde zu Fraustadt (1855); Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, *Bibl. Herberne, bishop of Tours, lived about the 9th century. He had been at first custodian of the Oratory of the Seven Sleepers, a dependency of Marmoutier, afterwards abbot of that monastery, which, however, is said to have been invested by the Normans in 853. He then travelled through Gaul, but finding no safe asylum, finally reappeared in the city of Tours, where he was received as a saint. Adalard, archbishop of Tours, died in 890, and Herberne was designated to succeed him. After the desolation of Marmoutier, the Regular Canons established themselves in the deserted cloister there, and Herberne failed to drive them away. He died in 916. Some critics attributed to him the Tractatus de Reverione S. Martini, which was published in the Bibliothèque de Cluny. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Herberstein, JOHANN CARL GRAF VON, a German count and prelate, was born in 1722. He became bishop of Laybach in 1772, and was one of the most ardent promoters of the ecclesiastical innovations of his day. Pending negotiations with the pope for his promotion to the archbishopric, he died, Oct. 7, 1787, leaving his goods to the poor and to the normal school of his episcopal city. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Herbert, a Scotch prelate, was abbot of Kelso, and chancellor of the kingdom. He was consecrated bishop of Glasgow in 1147, by pope Eugenius III. He died bishop of this see, in 1164. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 232.

Herbert, a French prelate, was born at Vouvray, in Maine. He was at first prior of Clermont, in Maine, and then abbot of Fontaines-les-Blanches, in the diocese of Tours. Having got into a quarrel with Thibault, count of Blois, he returned to Maine, where he became abbot of Clermont in 1179. Finally, in 1184, he was made bishop of Rennes; in 1190 he accompanied Richard, king of England, to Domfront. While at Rennes he had a difference with Andrew, lord of Vitre, whom he excommunicated until he obtained his entire submission. In 1198 the pope sent him to Bourgueil, on the frontier of Tours, to restore the good order of that monastery. He died at Rennes, Dec. 11, 1198. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Herbert of Bosham was born at Bosham, Sussex, and being a good scholar, was a manubus to Thomas à Becket, archbishop of Canterbury. He was present at the murder of that prelate, and wrote an account of it. Going over to Italy, he was by pope Alexander III made archbishop of Benevento, and in December, 1178, created cardinal. The date of his death is unknown. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 244.

Herbert de Losino, a Norman prelate, was born at Hiesmes (pagus Oximiensis), in Normandy, about the middle of the 11th century. He was a monk, and afterwards prior of the abbey of Fécamp. William Rufus called him to England in 1087, and made him abbot of Ramsey. By the royal favor, or some other means, Herbert became so rich that, in 1091, he bought from the king, for the price of 1000 livres, the bishopric of Thetford for himself, and the abbey of Winchester for his brother Robert. This most scandalous transaction was generally censured, and Herbert went to Rome to seek absolution from his simony. On his return to England he transferred the episcopal seat of Thetford to Norwich. At Thetford he founded a convent of monks of Cluny, and built a cathedral; also a monastery and two churches at Norwich, three churches at Elmham, at Lynn, and at Yarmouth. The last years of his life Herbert consecrated to the establishment of ecclesiastical discipline, thus effacing the spot upon his entry into the episcopacy. William of Malmesbury speaks of Herbert as a man of great knowledge, and Henry of Huntingdon makes mention of his writings. He died July 22, 1119. According to Bayle, he composed a book of Sermons, eighteen in number, two treatises, De Prolixitate Temporum et De Fine Mundi, monastic rules, a collection of letters, and a treatise, Ad Anselmum, etc., for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Herbert, William, D.C.L., an English clergyman, was born at Highclere Castle, Bucks, in 1778, and educated at Eton, and at Christ Church and Merton Colleges, Oxford. He took holy orders in 1814, was presented to the rectory of Spofforth, appointed dean of Manchester in 1840, and died in 1847. He published, The Triumphs of Christianity:—Sermons (1820):—The Spectre of the Tomb, etc. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Herbinus, John, was born at Bitschen, in Silesia, in 1632, and was deputed by the Polish Protestant churches to those of Germany, Holland, etc., in 1664. He died in 1676. Among his works is De Statu Eccle- siarum Augustanæ Confessionis in Polonia (1670). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Herbst, Ferdinand Ignatius, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born of Protestant parentage at Leipsic in 1798. He studied at Jena and Erlangen, joined the church of Rome in 1832, and was preacher at Munich, where he died, May 11, 1865. He published, Bibliothek Christlicher Denker (Leipsic, 1830-32, 2 vols.):—Die Kirche und ihre Gegner (Ratisbon, 1833):—Antwort auf das Sendschreiben eines Gliedes der evangelischen Kirche, etc. (Landshut, eod.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 351; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 541. (B. P.)

Herbst, Johann George, a German Benedictine, was born at Rottweil, Württemberg, Jan. 13, 1787. In 1812 he received holy orders, was professor of theology at Ellwangen in 1814, in 1817 at Tübingen, and died July 31, 1836. He published, Observationes Quædam de Pentateucho:—De Lingua Hebr. חֵבֶט et חֵבֶט:—Einleitung in die heil. Schriften des Alten Testaments (Freiburg, 1840-42, 2 vols.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 385; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Herder, Felix, a Swiss Reformed theologian, was born Jan. 31, 1741, at Zurich, where he studied, and finally died, Jan. 22, 1810. He published, Predigten über die Geschichte Josephs (Zurich, 1784):—Versuch eines christlichen Religionsunterrichts (edited by J. J. Hess, 1811). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 229, 339. (B. P.)

Heredia, Paulus de. See PAULUS DE HEREDIA.

Hereford (or Herford), Nicholas, an English confessor of the 14th century, was educated doctor of divinity at Oxford, became a secular priest, declared against some practices and principles of the reigning religion, maintaining (1) that in the eucharist, after the consecration of the elements, bread and wine still remained; (2) that bishops and all clergymen ought to be subject to their respective princes; (3) that monks and friars ought to maintain themselves by their own labor; (4) that priests ought to rule their lives, not by the pope's decrees, but by the word of God. From these positions many heretical opinions were drawn by his enemies. From Oxford he was brought to London, and there, with Philip Repington, was made to recant his opinions publicly at St. Paul's Cross in 1382. Repington became a violent renegade, persecuted his party, for which he was rewarded first with the bishopric of Lincoln, then with a cardinal's cap. Hereford's recantation did not much avail him, as archbishop Arundel's jealousy kept him a prisoner all his life. We know not the date of his death. Hereford by his protest anticipated the Reformation, but he probably had not the stuff to make a Wycliffe or Tyndal. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 491; Fox, Acts and Monuments, iii, 26.

Hereford Use, a term employed to designate that rite which, taking its name from the cathedral of Hereford, was commonly used in some of the north-west counties of England, and in parts of Wales, prior to the Reformation. It differs only slightly from the use of Salisbury in the prayer of oblation and in the communion of the priest. The service-books of these rites are extremely rare. MSS., no doubt, were everywhere destroyed. Only one printed edition is known—that of Rouen, dated 1502.

Heres, Mr. For this Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, iii, 337) Kefr Hâris, but he gives no clew to the locality.

Herft, Johann Bernhard, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born April 27, 1745. He studied at Münster, took holy orders in 1769, was in 1774 cathedral preacher at Osnabrück, canon in 1778, and dean in 1790. He died March 31, 1812. His writings are sermons. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Hering, DANIEL HEINRICH, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Stolpe, in Pomerania, Dec. 1, 1722. He studied at Halle, was in 1757 preacher at Neustadt-Eberswalde, and accepted in 1759 a call to Halle. In 1765 he went to Breslau, and died Aug. 21, 1807. He published, De voce populi in Decreto Apostolico (Halle, 1742):—De Doctrina Bileami, Nicolaitarum et Jezabelis (excl.):—Von der Schule des Apostels Johannes zu Ephesus (Breslau, 1774):—Abhandlungen von der Schulen der Propheten (ibid. 1777):—Historische Nachricht von dem ersten Anfang der evangelisch-reformirten Kirche in Brandenburg und Preussen (Halle, 1778), besides sermons. guilty. To implore his favor large sacrifices are made to him. Sixteen judges assist him, one half being males, the other half females.

Herman of CAPPENBERG, a Jewish convert of the 12th century, was a native of Cologne. His Jewish name was Judah Levi. After his conversion he entered the order of the Premonstratensians, and became abbot of Cappenberg, in Westphalia. He wrote Opusculum de Conversione Sua, preserved in the university library at Leipsic, and printed with Raymund Martin's Pugio Fidei. Herman also wrote Vita S. Godefridi Cuppenbergensis, found in the Acta Sanctorum under Jan. 13. See Bartolucci, *Bibl. Herman, Lebrecht Frederick, D.D., one of the earlier ministers of the German Reformed Church, was born in the principality of Anhalt-Köthen, Germany, Oct. 9, 1761. He prosecuted his literary and theological studies in Europe, and for a while served as assistant pastor in Bremen. In 1786 he emigrated to America, under the auspices of the synods of Holland, to aid in supplying the German churches in Pennsylvania with the means of grace. He labored for a short time in and around Easton, Pa., afterwards in Germantown and Frankford, near Philadelphia, and finally in Montgomery County. He died Jan. 30, 1848. Dr. Herman paid much attention to the training of young men for the ministry. He was in his day a prominent minister, and a learned and able theologian. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, ii, 360. (D. Y. H.)

Hermann, Emil, a German Protestant professor of canon law, was born at Dresden, April 9, 1812. He studied at Leipsic, where he also commenced his academic career in 1834. He was professor at Kiel in 1842, in 1847 at Göttingen, and in 1868 at Heidelberg. In 1872 he was called to Berlin as president of the Evangelical Superior Church Council (Oberkirchenraths), and occupied this position till 1877. He died at Gotha, April 16, 1885. Hermann published, Johann Freiherr zu Schwarzenberg (Leipsic, 1841):—Autorität des kirchlichen Symbols (Kiel, 1846):—Ueber die Stellung der Religionsgemeinschaften im Staate (Göttingen, 1849):—Ueber den Entwurf einer Kirchenordnung für die Sächsisch-Landeskirche (Berlin, 1861):—Die nothwendigen Grundlagen einer diöcesanale und synodale Ordnung vereinigen den Kirchenverfassung (ibid. 1862):—Das staatliche Veto bei Bischofswahlen nach dem Rechte der oberrheinischen Kirchenprovinz (Heidelberg, 1869). Hermanübis. Romans and Greeks sought to make their cultus accord with that of the Egyptians. Thus, Anubis of the Egyptians was confounded with Mercury of the Romans or Hermes of the Greeks, and thus there originated the compound word Hermanubis — Mercury being represented with the snake-staff, in human form, but with a dog's head, and to designate still closer the country of his worship, with a crocodile at his feet. See ANUBIS.

Hermengild (Erminigildus), Visigoth prince of Spain, was the elder of the two sons of the Arian king, Leovigild, by his first wife, and was made governor of Baetica on his marriage. He rebelled against his father, who finally captured him about A.D. 572, and put him to death. He is commemorated as a saint by the Roman Church on April 13, as he had embraced the Catholic faith.

Hermes, Hermann Daniel, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 2, 1784, in Pomerania. He studied at Halle, was teacher at Berlin in 1752, in 1766 professor at the Magdalene gymnasium in Breslau, in 1771 preacher there. In 1791 he was called to Berlin as member of the examination commission of candidates for the ministry, accepted a call as professor of theology to Kiel in 1805, and died Nov. 12, 1807. Besides several volumes of sermons, he published, Der Christ auf dem Krankenbette (Breslau, 1774); — Die Lehre der heiligen Schrift (1775-79, 8 parts); — Schema Examinis Candidatorum S.S. Ministerii Rite Instituendi (Berlin, 1790); — Briefe über die Lehrbegriffe des protestantischen Kirche (Leipzig, 1800); — Versuch zweckmäßiger Betrachtungen über die biblischen Weissagungen (1801). Hermon. We give the latest account of an ascent of this remarkable mountain (Conder, Tent Work in Palestine, i, 261 sq.):

"We commenced the ascent of some 5000 feet about 10.30 A.M. (from Rasheyah, which is three hours distant), passing first through the fine vineyards, into which the bears often come down, from the summit, to eat grapes; thence along lanes with stone walls, passing clumps of wild rose, of oak, and of hawthorn, and honeysuckle in flower. We thus reached the bottom of the main peak, consisting entirely of gray rocks, worn by snow and rain into jagged teeth and ridges, covered with a loose shingle or gravel. It seemed impossible for horses, and still more for laden mules, to toil up; but the breeze grew fresher, and the bracing mountain air seemed to give vigor to man and beast. Resting at intervals, we gradually clambered up, passing by the little cave where the initiated Druses retire, for three or four months, and perform unknown rites. Ridge above ridge, of rock and gray gravel, appeared, each seemingly the last, each only hiding one above. Not a creature was to be seen, except an occasional vulture, and not a tree or shrub, for the snow covers all this part of the mountain till late in summer. By two o'clock we reached the summit.

"A glorious panorama repaid us for our labor. South of us lay Palestine, visible as far as Carmel and Tabor, some eighty miles away; eastward a broad plain, with detached hills on the dim horizon beyond; westward the Lebanon and the golden sea; northward, mountains as high as Hermon, Lebanon, and Anti-Lebanon. As the sun sank lower, Palestine became more distinct, and appeared wonderfully narrow. The calm, green Sea of Galilee lay, dreamlike, in its circle of dark-gray hills. Tabor was just visible to the south, and from it the plateau ran out east to the Horns of Hattin. The broken chain of the Upper Galilean Hills, 4000 feet high, lay beneath the eye, and terminated in the Ladder of Tyre. The mole of Tyre stood out black against the gleaming water; and the deep gorge of the Litany could be seen winding past the beautiful fortress of Belfort. Dim and misty beyond, lay the ridge of Carmel, from the promontory to the peak of Sacrifice. The white domes in Tiberias were shining in the sun, and many of the Galilean towns, including Safed, could be distinguished. The scene presented a great contrast on the east and west. In the brown, desolate, and boundless plain to the east stood the distant green oasis of Damascus, and the white city, with its tall minarets. The flat horizon was broken only by the peaks of Jebel Kuleib, the 'Hill of Bashan,' some seventy miles away. South-east of Damascus was the terrible Lejja district, a basin of basalt seamed with deep gorges, like rough furrows, and with isolated cones, into which one appeared to look down, so distinctly were the shadows marked inside the hollow, broken craters. No trees or water relieved the dusky color; but the great dust whirlwinds were swirling slowly along over the plains, the bodies, as the Arabs tell us, of huge malignant spirits, carrying destruction in their path. At the foot of the mountain little villages were perched on the rocks, and a stream glittered in a green valley. In most of these hamlets there is a temple facing the rising sun, which appears first from behind the great plain on the east. On the west, high mountain walls, ridge behind ridge, reached out towards Beyrūt, and, on the north, cedar clumps and rugged peaks, gray and dark, with long, sweeping shadows, were thrown in strong contrast against the shining sea. The sun began to set, a deep ruby flush came over all the scene, and warm purple shadows crept slowly on. The Sea of Galilee was lit up with a delicate greenish-yellow hue, between its dim walls of hill. The flush died out in a few minutes, and a pale, steel-colored shade succeeded, although to us, at a height of 9180 feet, the sun was still visible, and the rocks around us still ruddy. A long pyramidal shadow slid down to the eastern foot of Hermon, and crept across the great plain; Damascus was swallowed up by it, and finally the pointed end of the shadow stood out distinctly against the sky—a dusky cone of dull color against the flush of the afterglow. It was the shadow of the mountain itself, stretching away for seventy miles across the plain—the most marvellous shadow perhaps to be seen anywhere. The sun underwent strange changes of shape in the thick vapors—now almost square, now like a domed temple—until at length it slid into the sea, and went out like a blue spark.

"Our tent was pitched in the hollow, and six beds crowded into it. Until one in the morning we continued to observe the stars, but the cold was very considerable, though no snow was left, and the only water we had was fetched from a spring about a third of the way down, and tasted horribly of the goat-skin. In the morning I ran to the peak, and saw the sun emerge behind the distant plain, and the great conical shadow, stretching over the sea and against the western sky, becoming gradually more bluish, until it shrivelled up and was lost upon the hills beneath.

"The top of Hermon consists of three rocky peaks; two, north and south, of equal height—the third, to the west, considerably lower. On the southern peak are the ruins called Kūsar esh-Shabīb—a rock-hewn hollow or trench, and a circular dwarf-wall, with a temple just below the peak on the south. On the plateau is a rudely-excavated cave, with a rock-cut pillar supporting the roof, and a flat space levelled above, probably once the floor of a building over the cave. Of all these objects of interest we made careful plans, as well of the shape of the summit.

"There is one remarkable natural peculiarity of Hermon still to be noticed—namely, the extreme rapidity of the formation of cloud on the summit. In a few minutes a thick cap forms over the top of the mountain, and as quickly disperses and entirely disappears."

Hertford, Council of (Concilium Hertfordiense, or Herutfordia), was held at Hertford, the principal borough of Herts, England, Sept. 24, 673, by Theodore, archbishop of Canterbury; the bishops of East Anglia (Bise), Rochester (Putta), Wessex (Lutherius), Mercia (Winfred), together with the deputies of Wilfred of Northumbria, and several canonists, being present. Ten canons were drawn up.

1. Commands the observance of Easter day on the Sunday after the fourteenth day of the moon in the first Jewish month.

2. Commands that no bishop shall intrude upon the parish (parochiam) of another bishop, but shall rest contented with the government of the people intrusted to him.

3. Enacts that it shall not be lawful for any bishop in any way to disturb or plunder any monastery.

4. Forbids monks to emigrate from one monastery to another without the permission of the abbot.

5. Forbids clerks to leave their own bishop and to wander about; forbids to receive them anywhere except they shall bring letters commendatory from their bishop.

6. Bishops and other clergy coming from another church to be contented with the hospitality shown to them, and not presume to perform any office in the church without the permission of the bishop of that church.

7. Orders the holding of synods twice in every year; and adds, that since many things may operate to hinder this, one shall at any rate be called every year, on the kalends of August, in the place called Cliveshooh (or Cliffshoe).

8. Orders that bishops shall take precedence according to the date and order of their consecration.

9. Declares that the question was raised, whether the number of bishops ought to be increased in proportion to the increase of the faithful, but that nothing was determined.

10. Relates to marriages: forbids all unlawful marriages: forbids incest, and to divorce a wife except for fornication; forbids a man divorced from his wife to marry another woman.

Hervæus (or Huvarnus) of Brittany, an abbot of the 6th century, was the son of Huvarnus, a pious and accomplished Gallic noble, was born blind, and educated by his widowed mother for the monastic life. He built a monastery upon some land given him by Clovionus, in the town of Laungredec, where he presided till extreme old age. He is commemorated as a saint on June 17.

Hervæus of Maine entered, about the year 1100, the Benedictine monastery at Bourg-Dieu, in Berry, and spent there about fifty years. He devoted himself entirely to the study of the Bible and fathers of the Church, and wrote commentaries, of which those on Isaiah and the Epistles of Paul have been printed (the former in 1721 and the latter in 1544, among the works of Anselm). Both are found in Migne, Patr. Lat. vol. 181. Hervæus belongs to those pious theologians of the early period of the Middle Ages, in whom Christianity had become a living reality, but who, fettered by the traditions of the Church, could not rid himself of the latter. See Chemnitz, Examen Conc. Trid., de Justificatione, art. 7, § 2; Loci Theologici, de Justificatione, cap. I, § 4; Frank, Die Theologie der Konkordienformel, ii, 54 sq.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Hervæus of Rheims was raised to that archbishopric in the year 900, and showed great energy and fidelity in its administration. He became chancellor of France in 910, and died July 2, 922. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hervetus, Gentianus, a French theologian, was born in 1499 at Olivet, near Orleans. In word and writing he combated Calvinism; was present at the colloquy of Poissy and at the council of Trent. In 1562 he was made canon of Rheims, and died in 1584. Besides a great many translations, he published of his own, Oratio ad Concilium Tridentinum (Paris, 1556, 1563):—Catechisme ou Sommaire de la Foi (1561):—Traité du Purgatoire (1562):—Les Ruses et Finesses du Diable pour Tâcher à Abolir le Saint Sacrifice de Jésus-Christ (1562). Herzog, JOHANN JACÓB, D.D., a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Basle, Sept. 12, 1805. He entered the university of his native town in 1822, and afterwards studied at Berlin. From 1835 till 1846 he held a professorship of historical theology in the Academy of Lausanne, and was involved with his colleagues, the distinguished Vinet and Chappuis, in the struggles which resulted in the formation of the Free Church of the Canton de Vaud. Here, at Basle, he published his Life of the Basle Reformer, Oekolampadius (1843, 2 vols.). In 1847 Herzog was invited to fill a chair at the University of Halle, where, in 1848, he published in the university programme, De Origine et Præsentia Statu Waldensium. In 1851 he received a commission from the Prussian government to visit Geneva, Paris, London, and Dublin, in order to investigate the sources for the history of the Waldenses. The result of this mission was his work, Die romanischen Waldenser, etc. (1853). At this time, also, he conceived the plan of his Real-Encyclopædie für protestantische Theologie und Kirche, which was published in 22 vols. from 1854 to 1868. After beginning this work he had left Halle for Erlangen, to succeed Dr. Ebrard as professor of reformed theology. In 1877 he retired from active academical duties. The last years of his life were occupied with his Abriß der gesammten Kirchengeschichte (1876-82, 3 vols.), and with the preparation of a second edition of his Real-Encyclopædie, which at the time of his death had reached the tenth volume, or the second third of the entire work. He died at Erlangen, Sept. 30, 1882. Besides the works already mentioned, he also published,

Les Frères de Plymouth et John Darby (Lausanne, 1845):—Bemerkungen über Zwingli's Lehre von der Versöhnung und Gnadenwahl (in the Studien und Kritiken, 1839):—and a biographical sketch, Johann Calvin (Basle, 1843). (B. P.)

Heshbon. The following is the latest description of this once famous place (Tristram, Land of Moab, p. 351):

"A large piece of walling at the west end of the hold, isolated hill on which the old fortress stood, with a square block-house, and a pointed archway adjoining—a temple on the crest of the hill, with the pavement and the bases of four columns in situ—on the east, in the plain, just at the base of the hill, a great cistern, called by some the 'fish-pools of Heshbon,' but more probably only the reservoir for the supply of the city—these are all that remain."

Heshmon is thought by Lieut. Conder (Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund." Jan. 1875, p. 25 sq.) to be el-Meshush, at the foot of the white chalk peaks of el-Ghur, three miles west of Tell-Milh, in the vicinity of Beersheba; and Tristram (Bible Places, p. 20) accepts the identification; but it rests merely upon a presumed order of the names.

Hesperides, in Greek mythology, were daughters of Atlas and Hesperis, and are mentioned as being from three to seven in number. When Juno married Jupiter, all the gods brought presents. Earth brought forth a tree, on which grew golden apples. Juno commanded the sisters, Hesperides, to guard them. But the latter helped themselves to the apples. She therefore sent a son of Typhon and Echidna, the frightful, never-sleeping, hundred-headed dragon Ladon, to the tree, who scared everything away that approached. Hercules was sent there to get three apples out of the garden for Eurystheus. According to Diodorus, the Hesperides were daughters of Atlas, seized by Busiris, and liberated by Hercules, wherefore the latter received the desired Mela (apples) from their father voluntarily.

Hess, Carl Ernest Christoph, an eminent German engraver, was born at Darmstadt in 1755. In 1776 he settled at Augsburg, and executed several fine plates, which gained him admission to the Academy in 1780. In 1782 the elector palatine appointed him engraver to the court, and in 1787 he visited Italy for improvement. On his return to Germany he remained some time at Munich, and afterwards practiced the art with great success at Düsseldorf until 1794, when he returned to Munich. Among his esteemed productions are The Ascension; The Holy Family; St. Jerome. He died in 1828.

Hess, Isaac, a Jewish rabbi of Germany, father of Mendel and Michael, was born Feb. 12, 1762, and died Aug. 9, 1827. He edited the work of his father Joseph, rabbi at Cassel, entitled בן מִרְיָה יוֹסֵף, a commentary on the Haphtaroth, homiletically arranged (Fürth, 1796), and wrote Ueber den Eid der Juden, etc. (Eisenach, 1824). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 390. (B. P.)

Hess, Mendel, a Jewish rabbi of Germany, was born March 17, 1807. He studied at Würzburg, and succeeded his father in 1827 in the rabbinate. In 1842 he settled at Eisenach, as land rabbi, but retired from his office on account of bodily infirmities, and died Sept. 21, 1872. From 1839 to 1848 he edited Der Israelit des 19. Jahrhunderts, in which he advocated reform among the Jews. He also published, Predigten (Eisenach, 1839-48, 3 vols.):—Ausgewählte Predigten (1871). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 390; Kayserling, Bibliothek jüd. Kanzelredner, ii, 153 sq. (B. P.)

Hess, Michael, a Jewish rabbi, brother of Mendel, was born April 9, 1782. He studied at Fürth and Frankfurt, and was professor of the Jewish high-school at the latter place from 1806 to 1855. Hess died Feb. 26, 1860. Like his brother, he belonged to the reform party among the Jews. He published, Freimüthige Prüfung der Schrift des Herrn Ruhs über die Ansprüche der Juden an das deutsche Bürgerrecht (Frankfurt, 1816):—Programm über den Religionsunterricht in der Schule der israelit. Gemeinde (1821). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 390; Kayserling, Bibliothek jüd. Kanzelredner, i, 383 sq.; Stern, Michael Hess, ein Lebensbild, in Diesterweg's Pädagog. Jahrbuch, 1862, p. 1-38. (B. P.)

Hess, Salomon, a Reformed minister of Switzerland, was born at Zurich in 1763. In 1801 he was first preacher at St. Peter's, in his native place, but resigned his office in 1830, and died in 1837. He published, Erasmus von Rotterdam nach seinem Leben und Schriften (Zurich, 1790-92):—Ursprung, Gang und Folgen der durch Zwingli in Zürich besirkten Reformation (1819):—Anna Reinhard, Gattin und Wittve von Ulrich Zwingli (1819):—Biographien berühmter Schweizer Reformatoren; vol. i, Lebensgeschichte des G. Colampadii (1793); vol. ii, iii, Lebensgeschichte des H. Bullinger (1828-29):—Andachten und Gebetsübung für die christliche Jugend (1820). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 579, 740, 748, 749; ii, 372. (B. P.)

Hesse, Johann Heinrich Gottlieb, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 21, 1779. He studied at Leipzig, was preacher there in 1803, and died June 29, 1823. His best work is Katechisationen über sittlich-religiöse Wahrheiten (Leipzig, 1820). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 269. (B. P.)

Hesse, Karl Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 5, 1706. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1735 preacher at Dresden, in 1747 at Stolpen, in 1760 at Meissen, and died March 22, 1775. He published Theologische Annalen für 1731-1750 (Leipzig, 1754). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hesse, Nicolas August, a French painter, was born in Paris, Aug. 28, 1795. He studied under baron Gros at Paris, and then went to Rome, where he gained the grand prize in 1868. He acquired celebrity by his religious paintings, which may be found in various churches. He succeeded Delacroix in the Academy of Fine Arts in 1863, and died June 14, 1869.

Hessels, JEAN, a Belgian controversialist, was born at Mechlin in 1522. In 1556 he was made doctor of theology at Louvain, in 1560 professor of theology, and died Nov. 7, 1566. He is the author of, Comment. in Matthæum:—Comm. in Epistolas Canonicas Johannis:—Comm. in Priorem ad Timotheum et in Priorem Petri:—Explicatio in Symbolum Apostolorum:—Explicatio Decalogi. Hessus, HELIUS EOBANUS, one of the most excellent Latin poets of Germany during the 16th century, was born Jan. 6, 1488, at Halgehausen, Hesse. He studied at Erfurt, was rector there in 1509, but left that place on account of the then existing troubles. In 1514 he was again at Erfurt, and in 1516 he was professor at the university. In 1526 he was called to Nuremberg, but returned to Erfurt in 1533, and accepted a call to Marburg in 1536. Hessus died Oct. 4, 1540. He deserves a place here on account of his zeal for the Reformation. He made a metrical version of the Psalms, whence Luther called him the rex poetarum. See Schwertzell, Helius Eobanus Hesus, ein Lebensbild aus der Reformationszeit (Halle, 1874); Krause, Helius Eobanus Hesus, sein Leben und seine Werke (Gotha, 1879). (B. P.)

Hesus, in Gallic and German mythology, was the god of war. His image had the form of a dog. The first prisoner of war was sacrificed to him. If a forest was to be dedicated, the sturdiest oak-tree was selected, and the name Hesus was cut into it.

Hesychius. (1) Bishop of Spolato, in Dalmatia, A.D. 405-429, wrote a letter of thanks to Chrysostom for his sympathy with the Eastern Church (in the works of the latter, Ep. 183). (2) Bishop of Castabala, in Cilicia Secunda, censured by the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 431, for opposition to Cyril. (3) Patriarch of Jerusalem, A.D. 600. (4) A noted disciple of Hilarion, and a monk of Cyprus in the middle of the 4th century, commemorated Oct. 3.

Heunisch, CASPAR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Schweinfurt. He studied at Jena, and died Oct. 18, 1690, a superintendent. He wrote, Clavis Apocalypica et Ezechielica (Rothenburg, 1684):—In Canticum Canticorum Commentarius Apocalypicus (Leipzig, 1688). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 391; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Heusde, PHILIP WILHELM VAN, a Dutch historian and philosopher, was born June 17, 1778, at Rotterdam. He studied at Amsterdam and Leyden, was in 1804 professor at Utrecht, and died at Berne, July 28, 1839. He wrote, Initia Philosophiæ Platoniciæ (Utrecht, 1827-36, 3 vols.; 2d ed. Leyden, 1842):—Brieven over den Aard en de Strekking van Hooger Onderwijs (ibid. 1829; 3d ed. 1835; Germ. transl. by Weydmann, Krefeld, 1830):—De Socratica School (ibid. 1834-39, 4 vols.; 2d ed. 1840-41):—Brieven over het Beoefenen der Wijsgeerte (1837):—Characterismi Principum Philosophorum Veterum (1839). After his death was published De School van Polybius (Amsterdam, 1841). See Rovers, Memoria P. Heusdii Commendata (Utrecht, 1841). (B. P.)

Heusden, HUGO FRANCISCUS VAN, a Roman Catholic theologian, and vicar to the archbishop of Utrecht, died Feb. 13, 1719, leaving, Batavia Sacra (Brussels, 1724):—Historia Episcopatum Federati Belgii (Lyons, 1719). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 823 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Heusinger, Jacob Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1719. He studied at Jena, was in 1750 con-rector, in 1759 rector at Wolfenbüttel, and died Sept. 27, 1778. He wrote, Disp. de Locis Matth. xvi, 18, 20; Luc. xii, 14; Jac. ii, 18 (Jena, 1746):—De in Evangeliorum Codice Græco in Biblioth. Guelpherbyt. (Wolfenbüttel, 1752). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 101; Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Heusinger, Johann Michael, a celebrated German divine, was born in September, 1690, at Sunderhausen, in Thuringia, and was educated at Gotha, at Halle, and at Jena. He was appointed a professor at Gotha in 1730, and remained there until 1738. He died in March, 1751, leaving many historical works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Heusser, MIRA, the best female song-writer and hymnist in the German language, was born April 6, 1797, at Hirzel, canton Zurich, where her father, Dietrich Schweizer, was pastor. In 1821 she married Dr. Heusser, an eminent physician, who died in 1859, and she herself died Jan. 2, 1876. Some of her poems appeared for the first time under the name of Einer Verborgenen (a hidden one). In 1857 the first volume of her poems was published, and in 1867 a second followed. In the English some of her songs are found in a little volume entitled Hymns from the Land of Luther, and also in Schaff's Christ in Song. A selection of her poems was published at London in 1875, under the title, Alpine Lyrics. See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 377 sq. (B. P.)

Hewytt, JOHN, D.D., an English clergyman, was minister of St. Gregory's, near St. Paul's, London. He was beheaded on Tower Hill in 1658, for a political conspiracy. He published nine select Sermons (1658): Repentance and Conversion the Fabric of Salvation, etc., being several sermons (eod.). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hexapla, an edition of the Bible prepared by Origen (q. v.).

Hey, WILHELM, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born March 26, 1790. He studied at Jena, was court-preacher at Gotha, and died May 19, 1854. He published, Predigten (Hamburg, 1830, 1832): Erzählungen aus dem Leben Jesu für die Jugend dichterisch bearbeitet (1838). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 552; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 108. (B. P.)

Heyd, LUDWIG FERDINAND, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died March 6, 1842, is the author of, Melanchthon und Tübingen 1512-1518 (Tübingen, 1839): Ulrich, Herzog zu Württemberg (1841-44, 3 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 552. (B. P.)

Heyde, JOHANN DANIEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 27, 1714. He studied at Leipsic, was teacher at Gera in 1737, and died Aug. 12, 1785. His publications are sermons, partly his own, partly translations from the French of Massillon and Bourdaloue. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 383; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Heym, Albert, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1801. He studied at Leipsic and Berlin, was tutor of prince Frederick Carl from 1830 to 1844, and preacher at Sakrow from 1844 to 1848. In the latter year he was appointed court-preacher at Potsdam, and he died Dec. 9, 1878. (B. P.)

Heym, Johann Gottlob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 25, 1738. He studied at Wittenberg, and died at Dolzig, in Lower Lusatia, Jan. 24, 1788. His publications are several volumes of sermons. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 192, 381; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 558. (B. P.)

Heyne, JOHANN, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1804 at Leobschutz, Silesia. He took holy orders in 1827, acted as priest at different places till 1857, when at his own request he was made custos of the cathedral-library at Breslau, with a view of perusing the archives there. He died Oct. 28, 1871. Heyne is the author of Dokumentirte Geschichte des Bisthums und Hochstiftes Breslau (Breslau, 1860-68, 3 vols.). (B. P.)

Heynlin de Lapide, JOHANNES, one of the last eminent representatives of scholasticism, was a native of Germany. He studied at Leipsic, Basle, and Paris, and in the latter place became a doctor of the Sorbonne. In 1473 he settled at Basle, and, as a decided realist, caused, first at Basle, afterwards at Tübingen, whither he moved in 1477, so violent a contest between realism and nominalism that he finally determined to retire altogether from public life, in 1487. He spent the remainder of his life in a Carthusian monastery in Basle, and died in 1496. Heynlin wrote a commentary on Aristotle while at Paris, but it was not published until many years later, by his pupil Amerbach. He also directed the editing of the works of St. Ambrose, which were published by Amerbach in 1492. See Trithemius, Liber de Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis (1494); Fischer, Johannes Heynlin, genannt a Lapide (Basle, 1851); Vischer, Gesch. der Universität Basel, p. 158 sq.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v. Hi, the second member of a mystic triad composed by Lao-Tseu, the celebrated Chinese philosopher. It is described as follows: "That which you look at and do not see is called I; that which you hearken after and do not hear is called Hi; that which your hand reaches after and cannot grasp is called Wei. These are three beings which cannot be comprehended, and which together make but one."

Hiadi, in Hindû mythology, is the collective name of the three highest castes of the Hindûs—the Brahmins, Kshetrias, and Banians—priests, warriors, and business men.

Hiadninger, in Norse mythology, are the warriors who fall in a battle, incited by the beautiful shield-maiden, Hildur. They fight until the destruction of the world.

Hicetæ (Ikirai), a sect of orthodox ascetics about the time of the emperor Marcian, who lived in monasteries, and spent their time in singing hymns, accompanied with religious dances.

Hickman, Charles, D.D., an English clergyman, was a native of Northamptonshire, and was a student of Christchurch College, Oxford, in 1667. He was minister of St. Ebbe's Church, Oxford, and lecturer of St. James's, Westminster, in 1692; subsequently rector of Hogenorton, Leicestershire, and finally bishop of Derry in 1702. He died in 1713, leaving some Sermons (1680-1718). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hickman, Henry, an English Nonconformist divine, was a native of Worcestershire, and educated at Cambridge. He was a fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, was deprived at the Restoration, and became preacher to the English congregation at Leyden, where he died in 1692. He published several controversial theological treatises (1659-74), the best of which appeared without his name—Apologia pro Ministris in Anglia (vulgo) Non-conformistis, etc. (1664). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hickok, MILO JUDSON, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Haven, Vt., Aug. 22, 1809. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1835; was professor in Delaware College three years; graduated from Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., in 1841; became a tutor in Middlebury College; and was ordained a Congregational minister, May 4, 1842. He became professor in Marietta College, O., and pastor of the Church in Harmar; two years thereafter he accepted a call as stated supply to the Presbyterian Church of Utica, N. Y., and in 1845 was installed pastor of a Church in Rochester. In 1854 he was stated supply of a Presbyterian Church in Montreal, Canada; the next year he was installed pastor of the Church in Scranton, Pa., where he remained until 1868. His health failing, he removed to Marietta, O., where he died, July 19, 1873. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 19. (W. P. S.)

Hidalgo, MICHAEL Y COSTILLAS, called the "Washington of the Mexican Revolution," was parish priest at Dolores, department of Guanajuato, Mexico. He appealed to his parishioners, raised the standard of Mexican freedom, headed the dissentients, and was proclaimed generalissimo, Sept. 17, 1810. He was joined by adherents from every side, and in six weeks was marching on Mexico city at the head of eighty thousand men. Five provinces recognised his authority.

Hidalgo, however, unfortunately halted in his advance on the capital, the royalists had time to rally, and he was utterly defeated at Puente de Calderon, Jan. 17, 1811, and after in vain endeavoring to rally the national army, was captured by treachery while endeavoring to escape to the United States. He was executed ten days afterwards. On his death, Morelos, another priest, assumed the command; a congress of forty members was called, but after the defeat and execution of Morelos, it was dissolved by general Teran, who succeeded him. The revolt was entirely quelled in 1819. Mexico gained its independence in 1822, which, amid anarchy and continual turmoil, it has retained until the present, barring the French occupation of 1862 to 1867. To-day the grateful republic of Mexico repeats in her decorations and uses on her postage-stamp the mild features of her illustrious son, the priest-patriot, Michael Hidalgo y Costillas. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1876, p. 105.

Hieracites, a heretical sect which sprang up at the end of the 3d or beginning of the 4th century, founded by Hieracas or Hierax (q. v.).

Hieratic Writing, a species of sacred writing used by the ancient Egyptian priests, especially the Hierogrammatists (q. v.). It is found chiefly on the papyri, and is an abbreviated form of the hieroglyphic (q. v.). The matter of these manuscripts consists almost entirely of texts in reference to purely religious or scientific description, and of religious inscriptions.

Hierodiacōni (from ιερός, sacred, and διάκονος, a deacon), monks of the Russo-Greek Church (q. v.), who are also deacons.

Hierodūli, in Greek cultus, were persons employed in the service of a temple, especially in Syria, Phœnicia, and Asia Minor. They were females, living near temples, who hired themselves out to strangers. They were obliged to care for the decorations of the temple, knitting and cleansing the veils, wreathing the altars, etc. The priests had no other income than the presents which pilgrims to the sanctuary brought, and in order to draw as many of them as possible, the surroundings of the temple were occupied by numbers of priestesses, who gave the presents they received to the temple, as is still the case in India with the Dewadashies (Bajaderes). In Cappadocia, in the temple-woods of the Comanian goddess, Strabo met over six thousand. This custom came to Greece and Sicily, especially in connection with the worship of Venus, and many a beautiful temple was built with the money thus obtained. See DIANA; VENUS.

Hierogrammatists (from ιερός, sacred, and γραμματής, a scribe), the sacred scribes among the ancient Egyptians. They employed the hieratic writing (q. v.), in transcribing religious writings on papyri, and in giving an account of religious rites and ceremonies. It was their duty also to expound the sacred mysteries as far as they were allowed to be made known to the people. They carried a wand, and were dressed in linen garments. See SCRIBE.

Hieromancy (from ιερός, sacred, and μαντεία, divination), a species of divination among the ancient Greeks and Romans, which consisted in predicting future events by observing the various appearances which presented themselves in the act of offering sacrifices. See DIVINATION.

Hieromonāchi (from ιερός, sacred, and μοναχός, a monk), monks of the Russo-Greek Church (q. v.), who are priests. They are considered sacred monks, and never officiate except on solemn festival occasions.

Hieronymi, WILHELM, a preacher of the German Catholics, was originally a Protestant, but joined the movement of the German Catholics in 1845, and died at Mayence, Sept. 14, 1884. He published, Kein Papiethum! Kein Symbolzwang (Magdeburg, 1845):—Die Hegelianer als Lichtfreunde (Darmstadt, 1846):—Zeug- nisse deutsch-katholischen Geistes (1847):—Freiheit oder Autorität, written against bishop Ketteler (1862). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 554 sq. (B. P.)

Hieronymus A SANCTA FIDE (originally Joshua Lorki) was a famous Talmudist and physician. When rabbi Salomon, afterwards bishop Paulus Burgensis (q. v.), had embraced and was preaching the Christian faith in Spain, Joshua Lorki wrote against him. But soon this zealous enemy of the gospel became himself an ardent confessor of the truth, and failed not to declare openly the reason which had given rise to this change in his religious opinions, by publishing two tracts against the Jews, Probationes Novi Test. ex Veteri Testamento (reprinted in the Bibl. Mag. Vet. Patrum, xxix). At the instigation of Hieronymus, who, after his baptism, entered the service of pope Benedict XIII, being appointed his physician, the famous conference was held at Tortosa (Feb. 7, 1413, to Nov. 12, 1414), under the presidency of the pope. The assembly was convened to discuss sixteen points, which were proposed by Hieronymus. Prominent among the Jewish disputants was Joseph Albo (q. v.). The result of this conference is passed over by Jewish historians with remarkable silence. According to the Christians, all the rabbis present declared themselves vanquished, and signed an act to that effect, with the exception of Albo and rabbi Ferrer. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 392; Kalkar, Israel und die Kirche, p. 28 sq.; Da Costa, Israel and the Gentiles, p. 328 sq. (B. P.)

Hieropoioi (from ιερός, sacred, and ποιέω, to make), persons anciently employed at Athens to superintend the oblations and sacrifices. Ten of these officers were appointed annually, and they wore at their girdles a consecrated axe as an emblem of their office.

Higbert (Higbehr), 14th bishop of Lichfield, A.D. 779, and the only one entitled archbishop of that see. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. a. v.

Higgins, WILLIAM, D.D., a bishop of the Church of Ireland, was born at Greenfield, Lancaster, England, in 1793, and was educated at the Lancaster and Manchester grammar schools, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, from which he graduated in 1817. His first clerical duty in Ireland was as chaplain to the Richmond Penitentiary, in 1820, subsequently he was chaplain to the Magdalen Asylum, rector of Roscrea in 1828, vicar-general of Killake in 1834, dean of Limerick in 1844, bishop of Limerick in 1849, and bishop of Derry in 1853. The same year he was appointed commissioner of national education, and he succeeded bishop Plunket as an ecclesiastical commissioner. He died at Derry, July 12, 1867. See Amer. Quar. Rev. Oct. 1867, p. 505.

Higga, GRIFFIN (or GRIFFITH), D.D., an English clergyman, was born at Stoke Abbot, or South Stoke, near Henley, Oxfordshire, in 1589, and was educated at Reading School and St. John's College, Oxford. In 1627 he was sent to the Hague as chaplain to the queen of Bohemia. On his return he was presented to the living of Cliffe, near Dover, and was also made chancelor of St. David's. In 1638 he was made dean of Lichfield. He lost all his preferments when the Church establishment was overthrown. He died Dec. 16, 1659. His published works are, Problemata Theologica (1630):—Miscellanea Theologica (ext.).

High Altar is the chief, central, or principal altar of a church. Other altars, in old documents, are often called "low altars," to distinguish them from that which is the chief altar. When there are many chapels in a church, clustering on either side of the chief chapel or chancel, the principal chancel, containing the high altar, is sometimes called the "high chancel." See ALTAR.

Highmore, JOSEPH, an English painter, was born at London in 1692, and was articled to an attorney in 1707, against his inclination. He employed his leisure hours in painting, finally commenced it as a profession, and soon met with employment. Shortly after he was commissioned by the duke of Richmond to do some work. In 1732 he visited the continent for the purpose of seeing the Düsseldorf Gallery, and two years after he went to France in order to examine the galleries there. He executed a series of pictures, which were engraved and published in 1745. Among his sacred subjects were, The Good Samaritan; The Finding of Moses; Hagar and Ishmael. He died in 1780. Hiisi is the name given to the devil among the Finns. He is described as having only three fingers on each hand, but these are armed with large nails, with which he tears in pieces all who fall into his power. He is supposed to reside in the forest, whence he sends out all manner of diseases and calamities, with which he afflicts mankind.

Hildebrand, JOACHIM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 10, 1623. He studied at different universities, was in 1652 professor of theology at Helmstadt, in 1662 doctor of theology and general superintendent at Celle, and died Oct. 18, 1691. He wrote, Diss. de Donatione Constantini Magni (Helmstadt, 1661);—Sacra Publica Veteris Ecclesie in Compendium Redacta (1699);—Exercit. de Veterum Concionibus (1661);—Rituale Baptismi Veteris, Publicis Lectionibus Olim Dicitum (ed. Schmid, 1699);—Rituale Eucharistiae Veteris Ecclesie (ed. Schmid, 1712);—De Nuptiis Veterum Christianorum Libellus (ed. Schmid, 1714), etc. See Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Hildrop, JOHN, D.D., an English clergyman, was rector of Wath, near Rippon, Yorkshire. He died in 1756, leaving a number of sermons, theological treatises, etc. (1711-52). His miscellaneous works appeared in 1754. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hile, (1) an old English word, signifying to put on a roof or cover. In old documents it is sometimes spelled "helye," "hyll," and "hyle;" (2) the covering of a church roof.

Hilgers, BERNHARD JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic divine of Germany, was born in 1803. In 1827 he took holy orders, was pastor at Sieburg in 1828, took the degree as doctor of theology at Münster in 1834, commenced his academical career at Bonn in 1835, and died Feb. 7, 1874. He published, Ueber das Verhältniss zwischen Leib und Seele im Menschen (Bonn, 1834);—Symbolische Theologie (1841);—Kritische Darstellung der Häresien, etc. (1837);—Homilien (published after his death, 1874). Hilgod (or Hilgot), a French prelate, was at first canon of St. Genevieve, and afterwards bishop of Soissons in 1065. But grave difficulties arose against his appointment, in consequence of which he resigned about the year 1087, and retired to the monastery of Marmoutier. He died Aug. 4, 1104. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hill, Benjamin M., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Newport, R. I., April 5, 1793. He entered the preparatory department of Pennsylvania University, but was soon called to New Orleans as a clerk; and subsequently studied medicine for a time in Philadelphia. He was converted in 1812; licensed in February, 1815; for two years preached in Leicester and Spencer, Mass.; in 1818 was ordained in Stafford, Conn., where he remained three years, and was then called to the pastorate of the First Church in New Haven, where he continued from 1821 to 1829. The next ten years of his ministry were with the First Church in

Troy, N. Y. In 1840 he became corresponding secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, which position he held for twenty-two years. He died in New Haven, Jan. 15, 1881. See Christian Secretary, Jan. 19, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Hill, Charles, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Kings County, Ireland, Jan. 6, 1800. In 1822 he became a student in Horton College, completing the course in two years, and then became pastor of the Church at Middleton. In 1834 he was appointed secretary of the Home Mission Society; in 1842 he became pastor of the Heneage Street Church, Birmingham, where he remained until 1851, when he removed to the United States; was pastor in Belvidere, Ill.; chaplain, for a time, in the Federal army; connected for a short period with the University of Chicago, and finally took up his residence in Belvidere, where he died in 1872. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1873, p. 273. (J. C. S.)

Hill, William, D.D., an English divine, was born at Cudworth, in Warwickshire, in 1619, and educated at Merton College, Oxford. He died in 1677. He published, Diomyai Orbis Descriptio (1658, 1659, 1663, 1678, 1688);—Woman's Looking-glass (1660). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hill, William Wallace, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Bath County, Ky., Jan. 26, 1815. He prepared for college at Mt. Sterling and Paris; graduated from Centre College in 1835; entered Princeton Theological Seminary the same year, and remained two years. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, April 24, 1838, ordained by the Presbytery of Louisville, Oct. 8 following, and installed pastor at Shelbyville, where he served four years. He then took charge of The Protestant Herald, published at Bardonia, but removed it to Frankfort, as a more central place of publication. In November, 1844, he again removed with his paper to Louisville, and its name was changed to The Presbyterian Herald. As a religious newspaper it had few equals in the land. Its publication ceased in 1862, on account of the war. From 1845 to 1860 he was also corresponding secretary of the Western Executive Committee of the Board of Domestic Missions. He then founded Bellewood Female Seminary, near Louisville, and was its principal from 1862 to 1874. During these years he also preached more or less regularly at Plumb Creek, Middletown, and Anchorage. In 1874 he accepted the charge of the Synodical Female College at Fulton, Mo., and supplied the Presbyterian Church of that place. He left Fulton in 1877, and went to Sherman, Texas, where he commenced teaching in Austin College, preaching for the Church there at the same time. He died May 1, 1878. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 39.

Hille, WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 16, 1803. He studied at Göttingen, was from 1824 to 1833 teacher at the gymnasia in Wolfenbüttel and Helmstadt, in 1833 pastor at Marienthal, in 1834 superintendent, in 1840 general superintendent and pastor primarius at Helmstadt, and in 1845 member of consistory. In 1875 he retired from his many positions, and died Oct. 2, 1880. As Christianity had become a reality in Hille, who had freed himself from the fetters of rationalism, he became to many a leader to Christ. He published, Oratiunculae Synodales (Helmstadt, 1844);—Das Kirchenjahr (Berlin, 1858);—Zeugnisse von Christo (1859). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 557. (B. P.)

Hillel Manuscript. Of the ancient Hebrew MSS., now no more extant, the most famous is the co-dex Hillel. As to this name there is a difference of opinion. From Jewish history we know that there were two rabbis by the name of Hillel, one who lived in the first century before Christ, called Hillel I, the Great, the other who lived in the fourth century after

Christ, called Hillel II. Some, as Schickhard (Jus Regium Hebræorum, ed. Carpov, Leipsic, 1674, p. 39) and Cuneus (De Republ. Hebr. p. 159), attributed this codex to the older Hillel; others, as David Gans, in his Tzemach David, Buxtorf, in Tractatus de Punctorum Vocalium, etc. (Basle, 1648), p. 353, attributed it to the younger Hillel. A third opinion is that this codex derives its name from the fact that it was written at Hilla, a town built near the ruins of ancient Babylon, so Fürst (Gesch. des Karäerthums, p. 22 sq., 138, note 14), and Ginsburg (Levi's Massoreth ha-Massoreth, p. 260, note 40). But none of these opinions seems to be correct. Against the first two we have the express testimony of Abraham ben-Samuel Sukkuto (q. v.), who, in his Book of Genealogies, entitled Sepher Yuchasin, says that when he saw the remainder of the codex (circa A.D. 1500) it was 900 years old. His words are these: "In the year 4956, on the 28th day of Ab (i. e. in 1196, better 1197), there was a great persecution of the Jews in the kingdom of Leon from the two kingdoms which came to besiege it. It was then that the twenty-four sacred books, which were written long ago, about the year 600, by rabbi Moses ben-Hillel, in an exceedingly correct manner, and after which all copies were corrected, were taken away. I saw the remaining two portions of the same, viz. the earlier prophets (i. e. Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings), and the later prophets (i. e. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve minor prophets), written in large and beautiful characters, which were brought to Portugal and sold in Africa, where they still are, having been written 900 years ago." Kimchi, in his grammar on Numb. xv, 4, says that the Pentateuch of this codex was extant in Toletola (בְּטוֹלֵטוֹלָה, Yuchasin, ed. Filipowski, Lond. 1857, p. 220, col. 2). From this statement it may be deduced that this codex was written about the 7th century. As to the third opinion, deriving the name from Hilla, a town near Babel, we may dismiss it as merely ingenious. A better opinion seems to be that of Strack (Prolegomena, p. 16), who says, "Fortasse tamen recte cogitamus esse e numero טַעֲמֵי סְפָרִים in Hispania fuisse." This is also the opinion of the famous critic Jedidja Norzi (q. v.), who remarks, on Gen. i, 5: "He was a very good Masoretic scholar, and a scribe in the city of Toletola." Whatever uncertainty may be about the derivation of its name, certain it is that this codex is very important for the criticism of the Old Test. Hebrew text, as the many quotations which we find in Norzi's critical commentary, entitled סִפְרוֹת שֵׁנִי, published at Mantua, 1742-44, Vienna, 1818, Warsaw, 1860-66, and in Lonzano's critical work, entitled אור חֵרֶה, indicate. In the 12th century this codex was perused by the Jewish grammarian, Jacob ben-Eleazar, as David Kimchi testifies in his grammatical work, Michlul (ed. Fürst, 1798, fol. 78, col. 2), and rabbi Jacob ben-Eleazar writes that in the codex Hillel, which is at Toletola, he found that the dath in דָּתָרָה was raphe (Deut. xii, 1); and fol. 127, col. 2, in fine, he writes: "In the codex Hillel, which is at Toletola, the word חַמֶּשֶׁת (Lev. vi, 10) is written with a tsere, חֶמֶשֶׁת, and not חֲמֶשֶׁת, as our present text has." We subjoin some readings of the codex Hillel:

Gen. iv, 8: In some editions of the Old Test. there is a space left between אָחִי and וַיִּרְי, and is marked in the margin by פְּסָקָה, i. e. space. The LXX, Sam., Syr., Vul., and Jeron. Targum add, "let us go into the field." The space we have referred to is found in the editions of Buxtorf, Meunesschen ben-Israel, Walton, Nissel, Hutter, Clodius, Van der Hooght. But, says Lonzano, the plaka is a mistake of the printer, for in the MSS. which he consulted, and in codex Hillel, there is no space. The addition "let us go into the field," is not found by Symmachus, Theodotion, and Onkelos. Even Origen remarks ἀλλ' οὐ μὲν εἰς τὸ πῶς ἐν τῷ ἑβραϊκῷ οὐ γράσσεται (tom. ii, 30).

Gen. ix, 29: A great many codd. and edd. read וַיִּרְי but codex Hillel וַיִּרְי.

Gen. xix, 16: וַיִּחַרְקֶהָ, here Lonzano remarks that the second mem is written with tsamets in codd. and in cod. Hillel. In the edition of Bär and Delltsch the word is thus written, וַיִּחַרְקֶהָ.

Gen. xix, 20: אֶשְׁלֶחָהּ. Lonzano says that ש is raphe, but in cod. Hillel it is written with a dagesh. In Bär and Delltsch's Genesis it is written raphe.

Gen. xxvii, 25: וַיִּבְרָא לֹךְ. In cod. Hillel, says Lonzano, the accent darga is in the god. In our editions it is in, or rather under, the beth; Bär and Delltsch follow the cod. Hillel, and write וַיִּבְרָא.

Gen. xxxix, 6: מִרְאֵה. Norzi remarks that the codex Hillel writes with tsere מִרְאֵה.

Gen. xlii, 16: וְהָאֵסֶרֶי. In the margin of an old codex, belonging now to Dr. S. Bär, the editor of the new edition of the Old Test., in connection with professor Delltsch, it is written וְהָאֵסֶרֶי, i. e. in the codex Hillel, the reading is with argol, וְהָאֵסֶרֶי.

Gen. xlii, 18: וְהָאֵסֶרֶי. On this word Lonzano remarks that in Hillel and other codd. the tsav is raphe, i. e. וְהָאֵסֶרֶי.

Exod. x, 9: וְהָאֵסֶרֶי. In Hillel, remarks Lonzano, it is written וְהָאֵסֶרֶי, i. e. plene וְהָאֵסֶרֶי.

Exod. xxxvii, 8: כְּרִיב. In Hillel and in some other codd., remarks Lonzano, it is written with a makkeph.

Joel. xxi, 35, 36: Cod. Kennic. No. 367, reads in the margin לֹא מִצִּינֵי אֱלֹהֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם פְּסוּקִים בְּחֻלְלֵי, i. e. these two verses are not found in the codex Hillel. Similar is the remark in a MS. formerly belonging to H. Lotze, of Leipsic.

Prov. viii, 16: A great many codd., editions, and ancient versions, as Syriac, Vulgate, Targum, and even the Græcus Venetus, read here שֹׁפֵט צֶדֶק, while the Complutensian text and other codd. read שֹׁפֵט אֲרֶץ, which is also supported by codex Hillel, and is adopted in Bär's ed. of Proverbs.

These few examples will show the importance of the codex Hillel for the text of the Old Test. (B. P.)

Hilliger, JOHANN ZACHARIAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 1, 1693, at Chemnitz. He studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg, was in 1717 adjunct to the philosophical faculty at the latter place, in 1724 professor of philosophy, in 1725 superintendent at Sayda, in Saxony, and died Jan. 16, 1770. He wrote, De Libro Recti ad Joa. x, 16 (Leipsic, 1714):—De ἀληθείᾳ ad Matth. ix, 28 (1717):—De Vita, Fama, et Scriptis Vul. Weigelii (1721):—De Plagis Magnis Pharaonis ad Gen. xii, 17 (1724):—De Cæmonica Libri Esther Auctoritate (Wittenberg, 1729):—De Augustana Confessione Nomini Concilio Sacrarum Secundaria (1733). Hindustani Version of the Scriptures. Hindustani (or Urdu), the language of "Hindu-stan," or "country of Hind," is a mixed language, and owes its formation to the intercourse of the Mohammedan invaders with the conquered natives of India. At the time of the first Mohammedan invasions, which date from the 10th century, Hinduwi, or Hindi, was the prevailing dialect in Northern India. On their permanent settlement in India the Mohammedans adopted this dialect as the medium of communication with the natives, but they greatly altered it by the introduction of words and idioms from the Persian and Arabic, their own vernacular and liturgic languages. The new dialect thence arising was called Urdu (camp), or Urdu Zuban (camp language), because the language of the Mohammedan camp and court; it was also called "Hindustani," from the geographical region through which it ultimately became diffused.

The first translation of any portion of Scripture into Hindustani seems to have been made by B. Schulze, a Danish missionary. His version of the Psalms was published by Callenberg at Halle in 1746, and the New Test. in 1758. But the most important translation that has been made into this language is that of the New Test. by the Rev. Henry Martyn, which appeared, after much delay, at Serampore in 1814. This version soon obtained such a high reputation that it led to a demand for an edition in the Devanagari (or regular Sanscrit) character, for the benefit of the Hindus in the upper provinces. An edition in this character was published in 1817 by the Calcutta Bible Society. No subsequent editions of the Hindustani Scriptures were, however, issued in this dress, for it was found by experience that the Scriptures in the Hinduwi dialect (q. v.) were far more acceptable than in the Hindustani to the numerous class of natives who employ the Devanagari characters. For their use, as we shall have occasion to mention (see HINDUWI VERSION), Martyn's New Test. was eventually divested of its Persian and Arabic terms, and transferred into the Hinduwi idiom by Mr. Bowley.

While these editions were issued by the Calcutta Auxiliary, the publication of an edition in London had been contemplated by the British and Foreign Bible Society since the year 1815, and was published in 1819, under the superintendence of professor Lee. Four thousand copies of this edition were sent to Calcutta. The committee at the latter place now turned their attention to the publication of a Hindustani version of the Old Test. The first portion of the work published was the Pentateuch, which appeared in 1823, and in 1844 the Old Test. was completed, and editions, both in Arabic and Roman characters, were distributed. The Hindustani version of the Scriptures has undergone subsequent revision at the hands of a committee appointed for the purpose, and later editions, both of the Old and New Test., have appeared. Some of these have been printed in the Arabic, and others in the Roman character. At present there exist four different versions in Hindustani, one by Martyn, the second by Thomassen and others, the third Yates's version, and the fourth the Benares' version, so called from the place where it was made. See Bible of Every Land, p. 94.

Hinduwi Version of the Scriptures. Hinduwi (called Hindi by the Serampore translators), with its various dialects, is spoken in all the upper provinces of India. Its affinity to the Sanscrit is very remarkable, and about nine tenths of its words may be traced to that language. In idiom and construction Hinduwi resembles Hindustani; the chief difference between the two dialects consists in this, that while Persian and Arabic words and phrases predominate in Hindustani, the Hinduwi is entirely free from foreign admixture, and the proper mode of writing it is in the Devanagari or regular Sanscrit characters. Beside these, the Kythi, or Kaithi, or writer's character, an imperfect imitation, and in some respects an alteration, of the Devanagari, is also used in writing and printing Hinduwi, particularly by the trading community, and it is said that of the lower class of natives there are ten who read and write in the Kythi for one who transacts business in the Devanagari.

A version into the Hinduwi language was commenced in 1802, and in 1807 the whole of the New and parts of the Old Test. were completed and ready for revision. It is one of the versions made by the late Dr. Carey. In 1811 the New Test. was published at Serampore, followed in 1813 by a second edition. A third was soon needed, and the Serampore missionaries determined to publish the version executed by the Rev. John Chamberlain. In 1819 the gospels in the Devanagari character were published, and in the following year another edition appeared in the Kaithi character. The further publication of this version was interrupted by the death of Mr. Chamberlain, and the Rev. J. T. Thompson, a Baptist missionary, long resident at Delhi, then undertook the revision of the New Test. and of the Psalms, and under his superintendence the gospels were printed in 1824. The Old Test., in Dr. Carey's translation, appeared in 1818. From time to time new editions were published in both characters by the Serampore missionary societies, each edition having been subjected to a careful revision.

There also exists another Hinduwi version of the entire Bible, known as the Bowley translation, so called from its author, the Rev. William Bowley, for many years missionary at Benares. His New Test. was completed in 1826, but the version is not a new or independent translation, but is throughout substantially the same as Martyn's Hindustani version, from which it differs chiefly in the substitution of Sanscrit for Persian and Arabic terms. Martyn's Testament was thus adapted to the use of persons speaking the Hinduwi dialect, by Mr. Bowley, agent of the Church Missionary Society at Chunar. Being unacquainted with the original languages of Scripture, he consulted the English A. V. in all passages where the Hinduwi idiom required him to alter Martyn's renderings, referring at the same time to the best commentators on Scripture. In the same manner he undertook the transference of the Hindustani version of the Old Test. into the Hinduwi dialect, following in his translation of Isaiah the one made by bishop Lowth. The idiom of the version was excellent. After all, it was felt that a revision for the purpose of conforming his version to the originals, and correcting the misapprehension of Old English idiom, was exceedingly desirable. After the formation of the North India Bible Society in 1845, this matter was taken in hand, and a revision of the New Test. undertaken. The committee consisted of Messrs. Leupoldt, Kennedy, and Schneider, and the work was carried through the press at Secundra, under the superintendence of Mr. Schneider, in 1850 and 1851. These copies of the New Test. were destroyed during the mutiny in 1857. The Rev. J. Ullmann was then sent to England to bring out a new edition, which included a revision, and the whole was completed in 1860. Soon after the revision of the New Test. a committee, consisting of Messrs. Schneider, Leupoldt, Kennedy, and Owen, was appointed to revise the Old Test. This was brought out in two volumes at the Allahabad Mission Press in 1852 and 1855. These copies, too, were destroyed in the mutiny, and another revised edition was completed under the superintendence of the former editor; of this the first volume was issued in 1866, and the second in the beginning of 1869. At present the Hinduwi version is undergoing a thorough revision. See Bible of Every Land, p. 100.

HINDUWI, DIALECTS OF THE, AND OF CENTRAL INDIA, VERSIONS IN. The Hinduwi comprehends

many dialects, strictly local and provincial, which differ from each other chiefly in the different proportions of Sanscrit, Arabic, or Persian terms entering into their composition. At a very early period translations into these different dialects were executed by the Serampore missionaries, but these translations were not afterwards reprinted; some have been practically discontinued. See Bible of Every Land, p. 108.

1. Brāj, or Brij-bhūsa. This dialect is spoken throughout the province of Agra. In 1811 the Rev. John Chamberlain, then stationed at Agra, commenced a translation of the New Test. in this dialect, and in 1813 he had finished the translation of the gospels. After much delay the New Test. was completed at press in the year 1832.

2. Bughelcundi. This dialect is spoken in a district between the province of Bundelcund and the sources of the Nerbudda River. A translation of the New Test. was commenced in 1814, and was published at Serampore in 1821.

3. Canaj, or Canyacubja. This dialect is spoken in the Doab of the Ganges and Jumna. A version of the New Test. was commenced in 1815 at Serampore, and completed at press in 1822.

4. Kousulu, or Koshala. This dialect is spoken in the western part of Oude. In 1820 the gospel of Matthew was printed, and nothing more since.

In addition to the Hinduwi dialects, strictly so called, there are several other Indian dialects, supposed to be corruptions of the general Hinduwi stock:

1. Bikaneera. This dialect is spoken in the province of Bikaneer, north of Marwar. The New Test. was printed at Serampore in 1823.

2. Buttaneer, or Virat. This is spoken in the province of Buttaneer, west of Delhi, and a New Test. printed in 1824 at Serampore is extant in that dialect.

3. Harroti. This dialect is spoken in Harroti, a province west of Bundelcund. A version of the New Test. was printed at Serampore in 1822.

4. Juyupoor. This is spoken in the province of Juyupoor, east of Marwar and west of Agra. Only the gospel of Matthew was published at Serampore in 1815.

5. Marwari. This dialect is spoken in the province of Juyupoor, or Marwar, north of Mewar. In this dialect the New Test. is extant since 1821.

6. Oodeypoor. This dialect is vernacular in the province of Mewar, or Oodeypoor. Only the gospel of Matthew has been published at Serampore in 1815.

7. Onjein, or Onjuyuni. This dialect is vernacular in the province of Malwah of Central India. A version of the New Test. was published at Serampore in 1824. (B. P.)

Hingnoh, in the mythology of the Hottentots, is the name of the first woman, not born, but created. She is worshipped as their chief protecting goddess.

Hinton, JOHN HOWARD, an eminent English Baptist minister, was born at Oxford, March 24, 1791. He received his collegiate education at the University of Edinburgh, and having decided to enter the ministry in the Baptist denomination, began his labors at Haverford-West, where he remained for some time, and then removed to Reading. Subsequently he accepted a call to become the pastor of a large congregation worshipping in Devonshire Square, Bishopsgate, London. In 1881 he visited America. Returning to England, he once more took up his residence in Reading, where he became again a pastor, though not of the same church with which he had before been connected. Here for several years he continued to reside, until he retired from the pastorate and removed to Bristol. He died there, Dec. 17, 1878. Mr. Hinton was a somewhat voluminous writer. Among the works which he published were his Memoirs of William Kniff, a distinguished Baptist missionary to the West Indies;—A History of the United States (2 vols. 4to), of which several editions have been published;—Theology;—Elements of Natural History, besides many smaller productions on the voluntary principle in education and religion. His works have been collected in seven volumes. (J. C. S.)

Hipparchus, a martyr at Samosata, with several others, A.D. 297, under Galerius, variously commemorated March 15 and Dec. 9.

Hippocratia, a festival held by the Arcadians in honor of Poseidon (q. v.), in course of which it was customary to lead horses and mules in procession gayly caparisoned.

Hippogriff, in the mythology of the Middle Ages, was a fabulous animal, half horse, half griffin, which cleaves the air with preternatural swiftness. The Italian poet, Bojardo, seems to have invented it. Modern German poets use the name frequently for the muse's steed, Pegasus (q. v.).

Hirmologium (εἰρημολόγιον), an office-book in the Greek Church, consisting mainly of a collection of the Hirmoi, but containing also a few other forms.

Hirmus (εἰρημός). The Canons, which form so important a part of the Greek offices, are divided into nine odes, or practically into eight, as the second is always omitted. Each ode consists of a varying number (three, four, or five are the numbers most frequently found) of troparia, or short rhythmical strophes, each formed on the model of one which precedes the ode, and which is called the Hirmus. The Hirmus is usually independent of the ode, though containing a reference to the subject-matter of it; sometimes, however, the first troparion of an ode is called the Hirmus. It is distinguished by inverted commas (" ") in the office-books. Sometimes the first words alone of a Hirmus are given, and it is not unfrequently placed at the end of the ode to which it belongs.

Hirsch (or Hirs), a name common to many Jewish writers, of whom we mention the following:

1. BEN-JONATHAN ha-Levi, who flourished in the 18th century, is the author of חִירֵב וְהִירֵב, a commentary on the Pentateuch, allegorical and homiletical (Dyhernfurt, 1712): שְׁבִיל הַיֶּשֶׁר, glosses on Talmudic treatises (1718).

2. BEN-NISSAN, who flourished in the 18th century, wrote חִירֵב וְהִירֵב, novellas on the Pentateuch (Amsterdam, 1755).

3. SAMUEL ben-Samuel, wrote a cabalistical commentary on the Pentateuch, entitled, מִנְיָנֵי חִירֵב וְהִירֵב (1788). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 895 sq. (B. P.)

Hirsch, Paul Wilhelm, a Jewish convert of Germany in the 18th century, who joined the Church in 1717, is the author of, בְּנֵי חִירֵב וְהִירֵב, or Entdeckung der Tekufot oder das schädliche Blut (Berlin, 1717): בְּנֵי חִירֵב וְהִירֵב, or Das von Gott den Christen aufs neue gewordene Jubel-Geschenk (1718): Beschreibung des jüdischen Weihnachts-Festes (1725): Der Juden lächerliche Zerstörung zum Sabbat (1722): Beschreibung des betribten Endes Rabban Jochanan's (1728): Nachricht von der Bedeutung der beiden Redensarten: Kapore werden und Krie reissen (1780). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 398; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. iii, 907 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hirsch, Theodor, a Protestant theologian and historian of Germany, was born Dec. 17, 1806, at Dantzig. He studied at Berlin, was for some time professor at the Friedrich-Wilhelms gymnasium there, and in 1833 at Dantzig. In 1865 he was called as professor of history and librarian to Greifswalde, and died Feb. 17, 1881. He published, Beitrag zur Reformationsgeschichte Danzigs (Dantzig, 1842): Die Ober-Pfarrkirche von St. Marien in Danzig (1843): Danzigs Handels- und Gewerbe-geschichte unter der Herrschaft des Deutschen Ordens (Leipzig, 1858). He also edited, with Strehle and Töppen, Scriptores Rerum Prussicarum (1868 sq.). (B. P.)

Hirschel, Solomon, a Jewish rabbi, was born in England in 1762. He was educated in Germany and Poland, and was for some time preacher at Prenzlau, in Prussia. In 1802 he was called to London as rabbi of the synagogue in Duke's Place, but gradually his jurisdiction was extended over all the Jews of the Ashkenazi Minhag (i. e. German rite) in London, and indeed in England. It was during his time that the scattered elements formed by the English Jews were gathered into one compact mass, and the Spanish and Portuguese Jews, and the German Jews, who were formerly spoken of as two distinct "nations," became closely connected together as members of the same creed. He died Oct. 31, 1842. (B. P.)

Hirschfeld, Hermann T., a Jewish rabbi and writer, who died at Charlottenburg, Prussia, June 10, 1884, at the age of seventy, is the author of, De Literatura Deperdita Hebræorum; Molochglutube und Religions-schändung (1842): Tractatus Maccoth cum Scholâ Hermeneuticis et Glossario nec non Indicibus (Berlin, 1842): Wünsche eines Juden (Posen, 1846): Der Geist der talmudischen Auslegung der Bibel (Berlin, 1847): Untersuchungen über die Religion (Breslau, 1856): Ueber die Lehre von der Unsterblichkeit der Seele bei den verschiedenen Völkern (1868). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 400; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 561. (B. P.)

Hirt, Aloisius Ludwig, a Roman Catholic divine, professor of archaeology at Berlin, was born June 27, 1759, at Donaueschingen, Baden, and died June 29, 1836. He is the author of Der Tempel Salomonis (Berlin, 1809). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 189; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 400. (B. P.)

Hirzel, Heinrich, a Swiss theologian, was born at Zurich, April 17, 1818. He studied at his native place and at Tübingen, and died at Zurich, April 17, 1871, where he had been laboring since 1857. Hirzel belonged to the so-called Protestanten-Verein. See Lang, Protestantische Kirchenseitung (May 20 and 27, 1871); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Hirzel, Ludwig, son of Bernhard (q. v.), was born at Zurich, Aug. 27, 1801, and died April 13, 1841, professor of theology. He is the author of, De Pentateuchi Versionis Syriacæ quam Peschito Vocant Indole (Leipsic, 1825): De Chaldaismi Biblici Origine et Auctoritate Critica (1830): Das Buch Hiob erklärt (1839; 3d. ed. by Dillmann, 1869). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 56, 124; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 402; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 562. (B. P.)

Hita, Ruiz. See RUIZ.

Hitchcock, Calvin, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Westminster, Vt., Oct. 25, 1787, graduated from Middlebury College in 1811, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1814. His first settlement was at Newport, R. I., where he was ordained Aug. 15, 1815. This pastorate was finished Oct. 1, 1820, and he was installed at Randolph, Mass., Feb. 28 following, and remained there for more than thirty years, the date of his dismissal being June, 1851. His residence thereafter was at Wrentham, where he died, Dec. 8, 1867. He made frequent contributions to the Boston Recorder, and published some Sermons. See Cong. Quarterly, 1868, p. 286.

Hitchcock, Henry L., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Benton, O., Oct. 31, 1818. He studied at the Benton Academy, graduated from Yale College in 1832, and spent some time as a student in the Lane Theological Seminary. He was licensed to preach in 1837, and installed at Morgan, O., the same year. In 1840 he began to preach at Columbus, and the next year was installed pastor there. In 1855 he was elected president of Western Reserve College, after leaving which position he lived in retirement until his death at Hudson, O., July 6, 1873. See Nevin, Presb. Encyclop. s. v.

Hitchcock, Samuel Austin, a philanthropic layman of the Congregational Church, was born at Brimfield, Mass., Jan. 9, 1794. On March 23, 1812, he left home in search of employment, which he found with a merchant of Dudley. In 1820 he went to Boston and entered a dry-goods firm, established for the sale of goods manufactured by the different cotton-mills—the first in New England. In 1831 he went to Southbridge as agent of the Hamilton Woollen Company. He united with the Old South Church, in Boston, June 23, 1827, and was afterwards connected with the Church in Brimfield. In 1840 he gave $10,000 to Amherst College, and this was followed by other amounts until the aggregate reached $175,000. To Andover Theological Seminary his donations amounted to $120,000. To the town of Brimfield he gave $10,000, in 1855, to establish a free school, and subsequent donations increased this to $20,000, and it was called the Hitchcock Free High-School. In 1871 he gave $50,000 to Illinois College. These are only samples of his munificence. His donations aggregated about $650,000. Mr. Hitchcock was withal a humble Christian, seeking no notoriety in the bestowal of his wealth. He died in Boston, Nov. 23, 1873. See Cong. Quarterly, 1874, p. 517.

Hitopadesa (good advice), in Hindû literature, is a famous collection of ethical tales and fables, compiled from the larger and older work called Pancha-tantra. It has often been printed in the original, and translated into various languages.

Hittites. All that is known concerning this important Canaanitish people, whose history is often referred to on the Egyptian and Assyrian monuments under the name Khetu, has been collected by Wright, Empire of the Hittites (Lond. 1884, 8vo).

Hittorff, Jacques Inack, a French architect, was born at Cologne, Aug. 20, 1798. He entered the School of Fine Arts in Paris in 1810, and became architect to the government in 1818. He made a study of the remains of Greek architecture in Sicily, and followed the Greek artists in applying colors to most of his architectural designs. From 1824 he was engaged in the construction of important public buildings, of which the Church of St. Vincent de Paul is regarded as his masterpiece. He was elected to the Academy of Fine Arts in 1853, and died in Paris, March 25, 1867. His principal productions are, Architecture Antique de la Sicile (Paris, 1826-30, 3 vols.);—Architecture Polychrome chez les Grecs (1831);—Mémoire sur Pompéi et Pétra (1866).

Hitzig, Ferdinand, a German exegetical scholar, was born at Hauingen, in Baden, June 23, 1807. He studied at Heidelberg and Halle, commenced his academic career at the former place in 1830, accepted a call to Zurich in 1832, went again in 1861 to Heidelberg as Umbreit's successor, and died Jan. 22, 1875. At Zurich Hitzig publicly announced himself in favor of calling Strauss. Though on the one hand a man without fear or hypocrisy, and on the other of a polemic temperament and caustic wit, which seemed to exclude personal piety and gentleness, yet Hitzig was of a pious nature, and not only loved the Old Test., but sought to serve the kingdom of God by his investigations. He enjoyed the esteem of his colleagues and friends, and even of his opponents. We can adopt the words of Keim, in the dedication of his History of Jesus (2d ed. Jan. 1875): "To the memory of F. Hitzig, the honest man without fear, the faithful friend without deceit, the pride of Zurich and Heidelberg, the bold, restless architect of Biblical science." Hitzig's earliest and by far the best work is his Uebersetzung und Auslegung des Propheten Jesaja (Heidelberg, 1833); his other works are, Die Psalmen, historischer und kritischer Commentar (1835-36, 2 vols.; new ed. 1863-65);—Ueber Johannes Markus und seine Schriften (Zurich, 1843);—Urgeschichte und Mythologie der Philistæer (Leipzig, 1845);—Die Sprüche Salomo's (Zurich, 1858);—Die zwölf kleinen Propheten (3d ed. 1863);—Jeremiah

(1841; 2d ed. 1866);—Ezechiel (1847);—Ecclésiastes (eod.);—Daniel (1850);—Das Hohelied (1856);—Hieb (1874);—Geschichte des Volkes Israel (Leipzig, 1869). As to the value of Hitzig's commentaries and history, says Kamphausen, "If I am not mistaken, it was a want of common-sense which prevented this gifted and truth-loving investigator to such a remarkable degree from becoming an exemplary exegete and a trustworthy historian. Ewald was fully justified when he complained that Hitzig made that which was beautiful and tender in Solomon's song disagreeable and repulsive; that he, in an almost incredible manner, declared the first nine chapters of the Proverbs to have been the last composed, etc. But, in spite of this, Hitzig will always have a place of prominence among his contemporaries, and his works will for a long time remain a fountain of instruction and quickening to many." Hitzig also contributed to Schenkel's Bibel-Lexikon, to the Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft, and other periodicals. See Kneucker, in Protestantische Kirchenzeitung (1875, col. 181-188); Weech, in Badische Biographien, i, 377-380 (Heidelberg, 1875); Diestel, Geschichte des Alten Testaments in der christl. Kirche (Jena, 1869); Kamphausen, in Plitt-Herzog's Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Hoadly (or Hoadley), JOHN, D.D., an Irish prelate, was born at Tottenham, Sept. 27, 1678, and was brother to the celebrated Benjamin Hoadly, bishop of Winchester. John Hoadly was chaplain to bishop Burnet, and by him installed chancellor and canon residentiary of the Church of Salisbury, archdeacon of Sarum, and rector of St. Edmund's, and was afterwards made canon of Hereford by his brother, when bishop of that see. He was advanced, June 8, 1727, to the sees of Leighlin and Ferns. He was translated to the see of Dublin, Jan. 18, 1729. In November, 1789, Dr. Hoadly was of the privy council, when the proclamation was issued requiring all justices, magistrates, etc., to search and seize arms in possession of any papist, and to prosecute any papist who should presume to carry arms contrary to the intent of the proclamation. Dr. Hoadly adopted the system of his predecessor, and what was then styled the English interest in the country. He died at Rathfarnham, July 19, 1746. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 830.

Hobal, an idol of the ancient Arabians, was demolished by Mohammed after he had taken possession of Mecca. It was surrounded by three hundred and sixty smaller idols, each of which presided over one day of the lunar year.

Hoby, James, D.D., an English Baptist minister, was born in 1788. In his youth he enjoyed the friendship and counsel of the Rev. Joseph Ivimey, and in 1813 became co-pastor at Maze Pond, Southwark. In 1824 he resigned his pastoral work, and devoted his long life to the advocacy of the several Baptist funds which go to the support of the aged ministers and poorly paid pastors. He paid special attention to the claims of churches in debt, and resided successively in Birmingham, Weymouth, and Twickenham, in order to assist poor churches around each of those places. He took great interest in young ministers, and in the Foreign Missionary Society, and visited America in its behalf. He was widely esteemed and greatly beloved. He died at Caterham, Surrey, Nov. 20, 1871. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1872.

Hoc agè (do this), a form of words solemnly pronounced by a herald when the ancient Romans were about to engage in a public sacrifice. It implied that the whole attention of the people was to be fixed on the service in hand.

Ho-Chang, a name given in China to the priests of Fo or Buddha. They strongly inculcated on their followers the worship of the three gems. See GRAN, THE THREE SACRED.

Höck, Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hamburg, Oct. 18, 1700. He studied at Giessen and Wittenberg, and died at his native place, April 26, 1779, pastor of Trinity Church. He wrote, Das Evangelium aus den Evangeliiis (Hamburg, 1734-40, 4 parts); — Das Siegel der Propheten in den Leiden Jesu (1739, 1743, 2 parts); — Beiträge zum richtigen und erbaulichen Verstande einiger Schriftstellen (1749-52, 3 parts). See Neubauer, Thatslebende Theologen; Thies, Hamburg. Gelehrten-Geschichte; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Höcker, Jonas, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1581. He studied at different universities, was in 1609 deacon at Tübingen, in 1614 superintendent, and died June 7, 1617. He wrote, Sylloge Utilissimorum Articulorum inter Augustana Confessionis Theologos et Pontificios ut et Calvinianos Controversarum; — Clavis Theologico-Philosophica; — Quæstiones Aliquot de Dignitate S. Scripturæ, de Transsubstantiatione. See Fischlin, Memoria Theologorum Württembergensium; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Hodamo, the priest of the inhabitants of the island of Socotra, in the Indian Ocean, off the eastern coast of Africa, who worshipped the moon, for which purpose they had temples called Moqamos. The hodamo was chosen annually, and presented with a staff and a cross as the emblems of his office.

Hodge, Charles, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Presbyterian divine, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 27, 1797, his father, Dr. Hugh Hodge, being an eminent physician of that city. Charles was fitted for college first at Somerville Academy, N. J., and at the age of fourteen entered Princeton, one year in advance, graduating with the highest honors in 1815. After another year of classical study, he entered the Theological Seminary at Princeton, and graduated in 1819. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1819, and during the following winter preached at the Falls of Schuylkill, the Philadelphia Arsenal, and Woodbury, N. J. Being received as a licentiate from the Presbytery of Philadelphia by that of New Brunswick, July 5, 1820, he was appointed the same year to supply the churches of Georgetown and Lambertville for a number of Sabbaths during the following winter, and the next year "for Georgetown, as stated supply for one half his time during the ensuing six months;" also to supply Lambertville and Trenton First Church during parts of the years from 1820 to 1823. In May, 1820, he became assistant instructor in the original languages of Scripture in the seminary, which position he held until 1822, and was then elected by the General Assembly to the professorship of Oriental and Biblical literature. At this time he founded the Biblical Repository, to which was added the title of Princeton Review, in 1829. In 1825 he went to Europe, and spent three years in the universities of Paris, Halle, and Berlin, returning in 1829. Dr. Hodge, after this, devoted all his hours not required in seminary duties to the conduct of his magazine, which was already beginning to take rank among American periodicals, and also to studies and researches for A Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, which was published in 1835. This work was abridged in 1836, and then rewritten and enlarged in 1866. In 1840 he published A Constitutional History of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, in two volumes. In the same year he was transferred from the chair which he had filled for eighteen years, to that of exegetic and didactic theology, to which was united that of polemic theology, in 1851, when the incumbent, Dr. Alexander, died. In April, 1872, his friends and pupils commemorated his semi-centennial as professor in Princeton Seminary. Dr. Hodge was chosen moderator of the General Assembly—Old School—in 1846. He died in Princeton, N. J., June 19, 1878. His works, published in addition to the above, were, Questions to the Epistle to the Romans (1842, 18mo); —

The May of Life (18mo, published by the American Sunday-school Union; republished by the London Religious Tract Society, 1842); — What is Presbyterianism? (1856); — Commentary on Ephesians (N. Y. 1856, 8vo); — Commentary on First Corinthians (1857); — Commentary on Second Corinthians (1859); — Reviews and Essays Selected from the Princeton Review (ibid. 1857, 8vo); — Selections from the Biblical Repository and Princeton Review (ibid. 8vo); — What is Durcism? (1874). During this time he was busily engaged in collecting materials for his Systematic Theology, and also in conducting the Review. It is said he contributed one fifth of all the articles published in that periodical. In 1872 the Review was united with the Presbyterian Quarterly and American Theological Review. The Systematic Theology, in three volumes, large octavo, is the work of his life, and by this his power is best demonstrated, and will be transmitted to posterity. It is published in Scotland and Germany, and in all the world where Christian theology is a subject of study this work is held in the highest esteem, as the best exhibition of that system of Calvinistic doctrine known as Princeton theology. As a writer on theological, ethical, and ecclesiastical subjects, Dr. Hodge was easily at the head of all his contemporaries, and the distinguishing grace of his writings was their exquisite clearness. No one was at a loss to know what he believed and what he intended to teach, and the authority on which he relied. His theology was Biblical. In the profoundest discussions, a text of Holy Scripture is a rock on which his structure of argument rests. Therefore the rationalism of modern schools, infusing itself into his own Church and the literature of the day, was to him a shame as well as a sin, and he resented and resisted it with tremendous energy and effect; his blows were those of a giant. No man has been more persistently abused than Dr. Hodge. He has been represented as the incarnation of bigotry. Those who could not answer his arguments or detect a flaw in his logic had to fall back on the only weapon left in their artillery. No man was farther removed from intolerance, bigotry, and persecution, as all who knew him while living, and now revere and venerate him dead, know. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 9; Memorial Discourses, by Drs. Paxton and Boardman; Life, by Dr. A. A. Hodge (1880).

Hodge, John, D.D., a learned and respected English Presbyterian clergyman, was educated at Taunton for the ministry, and had his first pastoral charge at Deal, Kent. He removed to Gloucester, where he preached for some years. In 1749 he accepted a call to the church at Crosby Square, London. His energies became enfeebled with age, church members died, and he resigned in 1762 and lived in retirement, preaching occasionally till he died, Aug. 18, 1767. He bequeathed his valuable library to the Taunton Academy, where he was educated. He published a volume on The Evidences of Christianity, and several single Sermons. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 354.

Hodges, Richmond E., a minister of the Church of England, was born in 1836. When an apprentice in London, Mr. Hodges found an old Hebrew grammar, which fascinated his mind, and made him determine to become a Shemitic scholar. The result was that, after acting as scripture-reader for a short time, he was sent, by the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, first to Palestine, then to Algeria, where he stayed until 1865. A few years afterwards he resigned his connection with the society, in order to devote himself more fully to linguistic studies. For some time he was a minister of the Reformed Episcopal Church, but a few years before his death he was ordained a clergyman of the Established Church of England. He died May 9, 1881. Mr. Hodges published Ancient Egypt (1861); in 1863 he brought out a new and revised edition of Craik's Principia Hebraica; in 1876 he published a new edition of Cory's Ancient Fragments, and at the time of his death he was engaged upon An English Version of the Armenian History of Moses of Khorene. He also assisted in the Old-Test. portion of the work known as The Holy Bible in Paragraphs and Sections, with Emendations of the Text, and contributed largely to the Encyclopædia Britannica, and to the supplement to the English Encyclopædia. Hodgson, FRANCIS, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born of Wesleyan parents, in Driffield, England, Feb. 13, 1805. He sailed to the United States in his youth, and with his parents settled in West Chester, Pa., where he developed a noble manhood. He entered the Philadelphia Conference in 1828, and served consecutively, Dauphin Circuit; Elkton, Md.; St. George's, Philadelphia; Harrisburg Circuit; and Columbia. In 1836 he was transferred to the New York Conference, and stationed at Vestry Street charge; afterwards at Mulberry Street, Middletown; Hartford; and New Haven. In 1845 he received a retransfer to the Philadelphia Conference, and was sent to Trinity charge, Philadelphia; afterwards at Salem, Pa.; Harrisburg; St. Paul's, Wilmington, Del.; St. George's, Philadelphia; Union; Lancaster, Pa.; South Philadelphia District; Fifth Street, Philadelphia; and Salem, Pa. He was transferred to the Central Pennsylvania Conference in 1868, and stationed successively at Danville, Lewisburg, and Chambersburg. A superannuated relation was granted him in 1876 with the Philadelphia Conference, and he retired to that city, where he died, April 16, 1877. Dr. Hodgson was a persuasive orator, a successful preacher, a profound theologian, and a skilful polemic, as well as a man of deep piety and unwavering devotedness to the Church. Hodur (or Hoeder), in Norse mythology, was a very powerful god of the Asas, but blind; the son of Odin and Frigga, therefore Baldur's brother. The latter having been made invulnerable by his mother, Loke showed the blind Hodur the small plant mistletoe, which the latter threw at Baldur, who died and was taken to Hel in the infernal regions. A third son of Odin avenged Baldur's death, by slaying Hodur and sending him to Hel. Hodur and Baldur remain good friends, because the former committed the injury involuntarily.

Hoek, JAN VAN, an eminent Flemish painter, born at Antwerp in 1597, was instructed in the school of Rubens, and became one of his most distinguished scholars. On returning to Flanders he was invited to Vienna by Ferdinand II, and painted the portraits of the imperial family, and some historical works for the churches and public edifices. Among his historical works is a picture of the Deposition from the Cross, in the Church of Our Lady, at Mechlin, highly commended. He died at Antwerp in 1650. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Hoeka, PETER VAN, a Protestant preacher at Leyden, who lived at the beginning of the 18th century, is the author of, Uytlegging van het Breef an de Hebrejen (Leyden, 1693);—Uytlegging van het Boeck Job (1697);—Uytlegging over de Propheten Nahum, Habakuk, Zephania, Haggai, Zacharia en Malachia (1709);—Lucubrations in Catechismum Palatinum (1711);—Straets der goddelike Waerheden (1718). Hoff, LUDWIG JOHANNES, a Lutheran minister, was born Dec. 29, 1795, at Laage, Mecklenburg-Schwerin. In 1819 he entered the missionary college of Rev. J. Jänicke, at Berlin, and in 1821 connected himself with the London Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Jews. In 1822 he was sent as missionary to Poland, and was ordained in 1824. In 1841 Hoff was stationed at Cracow, and died April 28, 1851, a faithful servant, who for nearly thirty-two years had been an active and most laborious missionary among the Jews. (B. P.)

Hoffmanists. See HOFFMANN, DANIEL.

Hoffmann, August Heinrich (better known as Hoffmann von Fallersleben), a German theologian, was born at Fallersleben, Lüneburg, April 2, 1798. After studying at Göttingen and Bonn, he devoted himself at first to theology, but afterwards betook himself entirely to the history of literature. He died Jan. 20, 1874. Hoffmann edited, in connection with Endlicher, Fragmenta Theotisca Versionis Antiquissimæ Er. S. Matthæi et Aliquot Homiliarum (Vienna, 1834);—William's Uebersetzung und Auslegung des Hohenliedes (Breslau, 1827);—Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes bis auf Luther's Zeit (1832; 3d ed. 1861);—Ringwaldt und Benj. Schmolcke (1833). See Winer, Handbuch der deutschen Lit. i, 67; ii, 287, 288; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 569. (B. P.)

Hoffmann, Franz, a Roman Catholic philosopher of Germany, was born at Aschaffenburg, Jan. 19, 1804. He studied at Munich, was in 1834 professor of philosophy at Amberg, in 1835 at Würzburg, and died Oct. 22, 1881. He published, Vorhalle zur spekulationen Lehre Runder's (Aschaffenburg, 1836);—Spekulative Entwicklung der ewigen Selbsterzeugung Gottes, aus Franz von Baader's sämtlichen Schriften zusammengestellt (Amberg, 1835);—Baader's sämtliche Werke (Leipzig, 1851-60, 16 vols.);—Grundriss der allgemeinen reinen Logik (2d ed. Würzburg, 1855);—Baader's Blitzstrahl wider Rom (2d ed. 1871);—Kirche und Staat (1872);—Philosophische Schriften (Erlangen, 1867-81, 8 vols.). Hoffmann, as a former pupil of Baader, contributed greatly towards propagating his master's philosophy. (B. P.)

Hoffmann, Ludwig Friedrich Wilhelm, general superintendent of Brandenburg, was born Oct. 30, 1806, in Leonberg, Württemberg. His father was the founder of the religious colony at Kornthal (1819), and his brother, Christoph, was the originator of a movement for the colonization of Palestine. Hoffmann studied at Tübingen, where David Strauss was his fellow-student; was in 1829 vicar at Heumaden, near Stuttgart, in 1834 at Stuttgart, and accepted, in 1839, a call to Basle as inspector of the Mission Institute. He remained there for twelve years, giving himself up with great enthusiasm to his duties and to the study of the history of missions. During this period he published, Missionstuden und Vorträge (Stuttgart, 1847, 1851, 1858);—Missionsfragen (Heidelberg, 1847);—Die Epochen der Kirchengeschichte Indiens (1853);—Die christl. Literatur als Werkzeug der Mission (ed.). From Basle he passed to Tübingen as professor; and, in 1852, he accepted the call of Frederick William IV as court-preacher to Berlin. He exerted a greater influence over the king of Prussia than any other man, in favor of ecclesiastical union. Hoffmann was an indefatigable worker, and was very influential as an evangelical preacher, sympathizing with the theology of Bengel. He died Aug. 28, 1878. He published a number of volumes of sermons under the title, Ruf zum Herrn (Berlin, 1854-58, 8 vols.), and Ein Jahr der Gnade in Christo (1864);—Die Posseme Deutschlands (1861-63);—Die göttliche Stufenordnung im Alten Testament (1864). He also contributed largely to the first edition of Herzog, etc. See Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 572 sq.; Leben und Wirken des Dr. L. Fr. W. Hoffmann (Berlin, 1878, written by his son Karl). (B. P.)

Hofmann, Johann Christian Konrad (afterwards honored by Bavaria with the title von Hofmann), a German theologian, was born Dec. 21, 1810, at Nuremberg. He studied at Erlangen, where the Reformed theologian, Kraft, exercised a lasting influence on Hofmann. From Erlangen he went to Berlin in 1829, at a time when Hegel, Schleiermacher, Neander, and Hengstenberg were lecturing. After teaching several years at the gymnasium in Erlangen, he became repentant at the university, and now devoted himself exclusively to theology. Thus he writes in 1835, "The more I occupy myself with Scripture exegesis, the more powerfully am I convinced of the certainty that the divine Word is one single work, and the more am I stimulated with the glad hope that our generation will witness the victory of the truth of inspiration. It is especially the wonderful unity of history and doctrine, which becomes clearer and clearer to me. The whole Old-Test. prophecy is but a seeing of the deepest signification of historical events and conditions. . . . It is a sheer impossibility that the prophecies of the prophets and apostles are false, while their doctrines are true; for here form and contents, fact and doctrine, are one, which is the distinguishing characteristic of revealed truth. . . . I pray God to permit me to see the Christ, now crucified by his enemies, lifted up by himself, that I may place my hands in the print of the nails, and may know him in the glory of his victory, whom I have heretofore loved in the humility of his conflict and suffering." In 1838 he commenced his academical career, and presented as his dissertation, De Argumento Paulini Centesimi Decimi, in which he makes David the author of that psalm, but denies the common Messianic interpretation, by referring the psalm to the angel of Jehovah. In the year 1841 he was made professor, and published the first part of his famous work, Weissagung und Erfüllung. In 1842 he accepted a call to Rostock, but returned to Erlangen in 1845. His return to the latter place marked a new period of prosperity for the university, to which he devoted all his energies. He died Dec. 20, 1877. Hofmann took not only a deep interest in ecclesiastical matters, but also in political affairs, and was for several sessions a member of the Bavarian Parliament. Among Hofmann's first publications were some historical works, Geschichte des Aufbruchs in den Seemmen unter Ludw. XIV (1837); — Lehrbuch der Weltgeschichte für Gymnasien (1839; 2d ed. 1843); — De Bellis ab Antiocho Epiphanes Adversus Ptolemeos Gentis (1835). His first effort in theology was Die siebenzig Jahre des Jeremias und die siebenzig Jahrwochen des Daniel (Nuremberg, 1836). Concerning this latter work he wrote to a friend: "If I am correct, I cause a great revolution in the Assyrian, Chaldaean, Egyptian, and Israelitish chronology. Jerusalem was destroyed in 605 B.C.; the seventy years of the Captivity go from 605 to 535, the sixty-two weeks of Daniel ($7 \times 62 = 434$) from 605 to 171, the sixty-third from 171 to 164. Thus the results of both investigations which I made independently from each other, agree most harmoniously with each other." Weissagung und Erfüllung im alten und neuen Testament (1841-44) appeared at a time when two views of prophecy prevailed; criticism explained it away as presentiment, Hengstenberg petrified it into simple prediction. Hofmann brought prophecy into closest connection with history, and treated it as an organic whole. History itself is prophecy; each period contains the germ of the future, and prefigures it. Thus the entire sacred history, in all its essential developments, is a prophecy of the final and eternal relation between God and man. The incarnation of Christ marks the beginning of the essential fulfilment; for the head is only the realization of the intended perfect communion with God, when it is joined with the body of believers. The word of prophecy connects itself with prophetic history, both corresponding with each other. Each event in the course of history is followed by a progress of prophecy. When God gives divers forms to the history of the Old Test., he thus exhibits the different sides which are comprehended and united in the person of Christ. Prophecy in the course of history becomes ever richer and richer in its forms, but points only to one goal—the God-man. He is then again the starting-point for new prophecy and new hope, for his appearance is the prefigurement of the final glorification of the congregation of believers. The permanent value of this work consists in the proof that the Old and New Test. are parts of a single history of salvation; displaying the gradual realization, by divine interpositions, of redemption for the race. Between 1852 and 1856 Hofmann published his second great work, Schriftbeweis (2 vols.; 2d ed. 1857-60). In this work he attempted to prove the authenticity and divine origin of Christianity from its records. He lamented the usual method of doing this from single passages of Scripture, and himself sought to use the Biblical record in its entirety as one organic whole. He started from the idea that, to understand Christianity, it was not necessary to describe religious experiences, nor rehearse the doctrines of the Scriptures and the Church, but to develop the simple fact that makes us Christians, or the communion of God with man, mediated by Christ. Herein he differs fundamentally from Schleiermacher, who starts out from the sense of absolute dependence in the Christian's experience. Hofmann starts with the new birth. The results at which they arrive in their systems are therefore so entirely different. With Hofmann all is historical, with Schleiermacher, nothing. This work aroused opposition. The author had combated the doctrine of vicarious atonement, and the charge was made against him of denying the atonement altogether. Hofmann had expected opposition. For a time he kept quiet, but finally he replied in Schutzschriften für eine neue Weise, alle Wahrheit zu lehren (1856-59). Without continuing the controversy, Hofmann wrote his last great work, Die heilige Schrift des neuen Testaments zusammenhängend untersucht (1862 sq.), in which he endeavored to prove scientifically the inspiration of the Scripture and the integrity of the canon. After Hofmann's death there were published, Theologische Ethik (1878): — Encyclopädie der Theologie (edited by Bestmann, 1879): — Biblische Hermeneutik (edited by Volk, 1880). See Stählin, J. Chr. K. v. Hofmann, in Luthardt's Allgemeine Lutherische Kirchenzeitung (1878); Grau, *Erinnerungen an J. Chr. K. v. Hofmann, Leonhard, professor of Oriental languages at Jena, who died Dec. 14, 1837, is the author of, De Ancilla Ebraea ad Ezek. xxi, 7 (Jena, 1712): — Disp. ad Psal. ii, 7 (1726): — De Singulari Hebraeorum cura Sepeliendi Mortuos, ad Matt. viii, 22 (eod.) — De Summo Hebraeorum Sacerdote ante diem Expirationis Adjurato (1730). Hofstätter, HEINRICH VON, a German prelate, was born in 1805 at Aindling, in Upper Bavaria. He studied at first jurisprudence, and was already promoted in 1829 as "doctor utriusque juris," when he betook himself to the study of theology, received holy orders in 1833, and was in 1836 appointed cathedral-dean at Munich. In 1839 he was made bishop of Passau, and died May 12, 1875. (B. P.)

Hofstede de Groot, Peter, a distinguished Dutch theologian, was born Oct. 8, 1802, at Leer, in East Frisia. In 1826 he was preacher in the Reformed Church, in 1829 professor at the university in Groningen, but resigned his professorship in 1872. He died Aug. 27, 1884. Hofstede was the head of the so-called "Groningen school," the adherents of which called themselves the "Evangelicals." They represent the theologico-ecclesiastical middle-party, between the "Liberals" and the "Orthodox," and their organ, Waarheid in Liefde, edited by Hofstede de Groot, Pareau, and Van Oordt (1837-72), is the best exponent of this school. With Pareau, de Groot published, Encyclopaedia Theologi Christiani (1840; 8d ed. 1861), and Dogmatica et Apologetica Christiana (1845). His own works are, Theologia Naturalis (1834; 4th ed. 1861): — Institutiones Historiae Ecclesiae Christi (1835): — Oproo- ding der Menschheid (1847):—Kort Overzicht van de Leer der Zonde (1856):—Over de evangelisch-catholieke Godgeleerdheid als de Godgeleerdheid der Toekomst (eod.):—Het Evangelie der Apostelen tegenover de Twijfelingen en de Wijsheid der Wereld (1861):—Basilides, als eerste Zeuge für alter und Autorität neutestamentlicher Schriften (1868):—Oud-catholische Beweging in het Licht der Kerkgeschiedenis (1877). Hogan, WILLIAM, of some notoriety in Catholic controversies, a young priest of inferior education but good natural parts, who had been dismissed from Maynooth for a breach of discipline, left the diocese of Limerick in 1818 or 1819 for New York. He was first employed in the ministry in Albany, but left that city, against the wish of Dr. Connolly, then bishop of New York, and was temporarily installed by Rev. Dr. De Barth, administrator of the see of Philadelphia, Pa., as pastor of St. Mary's Church in that city. In December, 1820, bishop Conwell took possession of the see, and having reason to suspect Hogan's conduct in Ireland and elsewhere, withdrew his faculties. Hogan continued to officiate at St. Mary's in spite of the censure of his bishop and the refusal of the archbishop of Baltimore to entertain his appeal, the trustees of the church supporting Hogan. On Feb. 11, 1821, Conwell excommunicated Hogan, appointed other pastors, occupied the church for some months, but in the summer of that year Hogan and his party took possession of the church. Bishop England of Charleston, visiting Philadelphia, and having promised Hogan a mission in his diocese, induced Conwell to grant him power to absolve the troublesome ecclesiastic on proper submission. On Oct. 18, 1821, England absolved him; but the next day Hogan, hearkening to the advice of his trustees, retracted, said mass at St. Mary's, and resumed his functions as pastor. England then re-excommunicated him. Many of the members now deserted the interdicted church and went to St. Joseph's, where the bishop had installed William V. Harold, former pastor at St. Mary's. The two parties became more and more exasperated; the orthodox (as De Courcy and Shea term the party who went with the bishop) hoped to defeat the schismatics by electing a new board of trustees. Every male occupant of a seat was an elector. The election took place in the church on Easter Tuesday, 1822, and led to sad results. The disorder was frightful; blood was shed; and the schismatics triumphed, preserving Hogan as pastor. At the close of the year the archbishop of Baltimore (Maréchal) returned from Rome, bringing a papal brief (Aug. 2, 1822), which solemnly condemned the schismatics of St. Mary's. On Dec. 10, 1822, Hogan submitted, and received from Conwell his exeat and removal of censures. On the 14th of the same month the unhappy priest, circumvented by the trustees (it is said), objected that the authenticity of the brief had not been shown, and continued to officiate and preach at St. Mary's. He published violent pamphlets against his diocesan and bishop England, whom he sought to compromise. Hogan at length grew tired of his rebellion, left Philadelphia for the South, married, became a custom-house officer in Boston, went into the pay of the enemies of Romanism, published some books to stimulate the Know-Nothing movement (Popery as it Was and Is, Boston and New York, 1845:—Numeries and Auricular Confession, recently reprinted at Hartford), and died in 1851 or 1852. The above account is from the standpoint of the opponents of Hogan. The historians of the Roman Catholic Church think the troubles of which Hogan was the victim were due largely to the trustee system, whose influence in the Catholic Church they deem pernicious, and it has caused many local schisms, of which this of St. Mary's was the most celebrated and scandalous, and was not healed for many years. For an account of this schism, and voluminous documents, see bishop England's Works, v, 109-232; De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of Cath. Church in U. S. p. 217.

Hogarth, WILLIAM, a celebrated painter, was born at London in 1697 or 1698, apprenticed to an engraver at an early age, and at the expiration of his apprenticeship entered the Academy of St. Martin's Lane. His first painting was a representation of Wanstead Assembly. In 1725 he engraved some prints for Beaver's Military Punishments of the Ancients. As a painter, he had a great facility in catching a likeness, and adopted a novel method of grouping families. He therefore devoted himself to the delineation of the calamities and crimes of private life, and the vices and follies of the age. His series of, The Harlot's Progress; The Rake's Progress, gained him great reputation. He was an eccentric genius, and his talents were eminently in burlesque and satire. He did not excel in historical painting, but among his principal plates there are some good works by him, representing The Good Samaritan; The Pool of Bethesda; Paul Before Felix; Moses Brought to Pharaoh's Daughter. He died Oct. 26, 1764.

Hoheisel, CARL LUDWIG, a German professor of Greek and Oriental languages, was born at Dantzig, Sept. 18, 1692. He studied at different universities, and died at his native place, April 7, 1732. He wrote, Observationes Philolog.-Eergeticae, Quibus Nomenclatura dvavóntra Essae Loca Illustrantur (Dantzig, 1729):—Diss. I, II de Vasculo Mannæ (Jena, 1715). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 217; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 404; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Holbein, HANS, an eminent Swiss painter, designer, and wood-engraver, was born at Basle in 1498, although some think he was a native of Augsburg. He was the son and scholar of John Holbein, who settled at Basle, and resided there during the rest of his life. At the age of fifteen Hans manifested great abilities, and painted portraits of himself and his father, which were engraved in 1512. He was invited by an English nobleman to visit England, but declined the invitation. Several years afterwards he formed an intimacy with Erasmus, and painted his portrait. The latter persuaded him to go to England, and gave him a letter to Sir Thomas More. On arriving in London he sought out that nobleman, who received him with kindness, giving him apartments in his house. One day Holbein, happening to mention the nobleman who some years before had invited him to England, Sir Thomas was desirous of knowing who it was. Holbein replied that he had forgotten the title, but thought he could draw his likeness from memory; and this he did so strongly that it was immediately recognised. This peer was either the earl of Arundel or the earl of Surrey. Holbein was introduced by Sir Thomas to Henry VIII, who immediately took him into his service, assigning him apartments in the palace, with a liberal pension. On the death of Jane Seymour, Holbein was sent to Flanders to draw the portrait of Christiana, duchess dowager of Milan. He painted in oil, distemper, and water-colors. He had never practiced the last until he went to England, where he acquired the art from Lucas Cornelii. There are but a few historical works by Holbein in England. The most important is that in the Surgeons' Hall, of Henry VIII Granting the Charter to the Company of Surgeons. At Basle are eight pictures of the Passion of Christ; and in the library of the University a Dead Christ, painted on a panel, in 1521. "It has been doubted whether the celebrated Dance of Death was originally designed by Holbein; but this has been occasioned by confounding the sets of prints of the Dance of Death engraved by Matthew Merian with the wooden cuts by Holbein, after his own designs, the originals of which are preserved in the public library at Basle." As a wood-engraver, Holbein is said to have executed some works as early as 1511, and he engraved a great many wood-cuts for the publishers of Basle, Zurich, Lyons, and Leyden. The most important of these are a set of wood-cuts, entitled, The Dance of Death, which, complete, consists of fifty-three small upright plates, but is seldom found above forty-six. There are also, by Holbein, a set of ninety small cuts of subjects from the Old Test., which were published at Lyons in 1539. He made a number of designs from the Bible, which were engraved and published at Leyden in 1547. Holbein died at London in 1554. For a list of his works, see Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Holcomb, FREDERICK, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, officiated for many years in Trinity Church, Northfield, Conn., until 1861, when he became the minister of Christ Church, Bethlehem. In 1865 he was residing in Watertown without regular pastoral work. In 1868 he officiated in Christ Church, Harwinton, in the neighborhood of Watertown, and continued in this work until his death, May 26, 1872, at the age of eighty-five years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1873, p. 133.

Holda (or Holla), in German mythology, was originally a friendly goddess of the ancient heathen Germans, probably the one mentioned by Tacitus, and compared with Isis. The name is derived from the German hold, or huld, "mild." After the introduction of Christianity the goddess became a spectre, but still with friendly rather than threatening attributes. The myths about her are nowhere so spread as in Hesse and Thuringia. The popular belief in Holda (Frau Holle) is spread over the Rhine into Northern France and Lower Saxony. She is represented as a heavenly being, encircling the earth; when it snows she makes her bed so that the feathers fly. She enjoys seas and wells; at noon she is seen bathing and disappearing in the stream. Mortals reach her dwelling through a well. Her yearly procession on Christmas is supposed to bring fruitfulness to the country, but she also rides with the furious army, or leads it. She loves music, but her song has a sorrowful tone.

Holder, WILLIAM, D.D., a learned English divine, was born in Nottinghamshire, and educated in Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. In 1642 he became rector of Blechingdon, Oxfordshire. He was canon of Ely, and of St. Paul's. He died at Amen Corner, London, Jan. 24, 1696, leaving, Elements of Speech (1669):—Discourse on Time (1691):—Principles of Harmony (1694). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Holebeck, LAURENCE, an English scholar, probably a native of Lincolnshire, was bred a monk in the abbey of Ramsey, and was one of the first Hebrew scholars of his age, a language then so unknown, even to the priests, that in the reign of Henry VIII, Erasmus, with his keen wit, says, "they counted all things Hebrew which they did not understand" (Dial. per Relig. Er.). Holebeck made a Hebrew dictionary, counted exact in those days. Pits complains that Robert Wakefield, the first Hebrew professor at Cambridge, purloined this dictionary to his private use. Holebeck died in 1410. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 290.

Holiness, BEAUTY OF, is a phrase occurring several times in the English Bible (always as a translation of the Heb. hadrath' ko'desh, הדרת קודש, ornament of sanctity, 1 Chron. xv, 29; 2 Chron. xx, 21; Psa. xxix, 2; cxvi, 9; in the plur. of the cognate term הדר, huddr, Psa. cx, 3), which simply denotes splendid garments, such as are worn on festive occasions, i. q. "holiday suit," not necessarily the sacred priestly vestments, since it is usually, if not exclusively, applied to non-sacerdotal persons.

Holl, FRANCIS XAVER, a German Jesuit, was born at Schwandorf, Nov. 22, 1720, and died March 6, 1784, professor at Heidelberg. He published, Statistica Ecclesie Germanicæ (Heidelberg, 1779):—Dis. Harmonia Juris Naturæ, Canonici, Civilis et Publici Germanicæ (1782). See Weidlich, Biographische Notizen, iii; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 779. (B. P.)

Hollar, WENTZEL, an eminent Bohemian engraver, was born at Prague in 1607, studied at Frankfort under Matthew Merian, and at the age of eighteen published his first plates, an Ecce Homo, and the Virgin and Infant. He made the tour of Germany. At Cologne he formed an acquaintance with the earl of Arundel, who took him into his employment. About this time the civil war broke out, in which Hollar became involved on the side of the royalists, and was made a prisoner by the opposite party in 1645. On obtaining his liberty he went to Flanders, and settled at Antwerp. In 1652 he returned to England, but gained little encouragement. He died March 28, 1677. There are about two thousand four hundred prints by this artist, and some of them possess considerable merit. The following are only a few of his sacred subjects: The Virgin Suckling the Infant Jesus and Curesing St. John; The Holy Family; The Ecce Homo, with many figures; The Queen of Sheba Visiting Solomon; The Magdalen in the Desert Kneeling before a Crucifix. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Representation of Holda.

Holley, HORACE, LL.D., a Unitarian minister, was born at Salisbury, Conn., Feb. 12, 1781. He was fitted for college at Williamstown, Mass.; graduated from Yale in 1803; studied law for a few months; and then commenced the study of divinity under president Dwight. He was licensed to preach in December, 1804, and was ordained and installed minister of the congregation in Greenfield, Sept. 13, 1805. He resigned this charge Sept. 13, 1808, and was installed as pastor of the Hollis Street Church, Boston, March 8, 1809. He accepted an invitation to the presidency of Transylvania University in 1818, and held that office till 1827, when he resigned it, with a view to taking charge of a seminary in Louisiana, but was attacked with yellow fever in New Orleans, and died July 31, 1827. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 265.

Holliday, WILLIAM HARRISON, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Berkeley County, W. Va., Aug. 31, 1835. He was converted at the age of eleven, preached his first sermon at sixteen, entered Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., in 1853, and in 1855 was admitted to the Baltimore Conference. He served as junior preacher successively on Winchester, Hillsborough, and Warrenton circuits. In 1858 he was sent to Summerfield Circuit, late in that year was transferred to the Iowa Conference, and appointed to Cascade; returned a year later to the Baltimore Conference, and successively served Baltimore, South River, and Montgomery circuits, South Baltimore Station, East Washington, Winchester District, Eutaw Street, and Harford Avenue. He died March 23, 1879. Dr. Holliday was a self-sacrificing, warm-hearted, heroic, successful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 15.

Hollingworth, RICHARD, D.D., an English clergyman, was vicar of Weatham, and rector of St. Botolph's, Aldgate. He published six Sermons (1673-93), and several treatises upon the famous Eikon-Basiliké controversy. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Holmboe, KRISTOFFER ANDREAS, a Norwegian Orientalist, was born March 19, 1796. In 1825 he was professor at Christiania, resigned his office in 1876, and died April 2, 1882. He is the author of, Traces du Budhisme en Norvège Avant l'Introduction de Christianisme (1857);—Bibelak Real-Ordbog (1868). (B. P.)

Holme, JOHN STANFORD, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Philadelphia, March 4, 1822, and was a descendant of John Holme, one of the first Baptists of Pennsylvania. John S. prepared for college at New Hampton, N. H.; first studied law in Philadelphia; but afterwards graduated at Madison University in 1850, and became pastor of a church in Watertown, N. Y. Four years later he was called to the pastorate of the Pierpont Street Baptist Church, now the First, of Brooklyn, where he remained for some years, and then organized Trinity Baptist Church of New York, and was its pastor for fourteen years. He resigned that pastorate to accept that of the Riverside Baptist Church, at Eighty-sixth Street and the Boulevard, but, his health failing, he passed much of his time resting in Europe. He died at Clifton Springs, N. Y., Aug. 26, 1884. Dr. Holme was known for his literary attainments, having prepared the Plymouth Collection of Hymns for the Baptist churches, and compiled a popular work, entitled Light at Evening Time. For some time he had been a member of the staff of The Homiletic Monthly. See Cathcart, Bapt. Encyclop. s. v.

Holmes, David, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Newburgh, N. Y., March 16, 1810. He was converted in his youth, and in 1834 entered the Oneida Conference, filling many of its best stations till 1855, when he was transferred to the Southern Illinois Conference. After effective labors in it of five years he was transferred to the North-west Indiana Conference, wherein he served La Porte, Delphi, and Pittsburgh. From 1861 to 1866 he was principal of Battle Ground Collegiate Institute, and in 1867 principal of North-western Indiana College. In 1868 he re-entered the regular work, and served successively Simpson Chapel, Greencastle; Brookstown; Monticello, and Battle Ground, Mich. He died Nov. 14, 1873. Dr. Holmes was a ripe scholar, an excellent logician, a thorough educator, an able preacher, and an author of merited repute. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 93; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Holmes, Obadiah, a Baptist minister, was born at Preston, Lancashire, England, in 1606, and was educated at Oxford. He arrived in America in 1639, and continued a communicant with the Congregationalists, first at Salem, and then at Rehoboth eleven years, when he became a Baptist, and joined the Baptist Church in Newport, R. I. In 1652, when the minister, Mr. Clark, sailed for England, Mr. Holmes took charge of the church in Newport, and this relation he held till his death, Oct. 15, 1682. Mr. Holmes underwent great persecution for his religious principles, being imprisoned for several months, and publicly whipped by the Puritan authorities in 1661. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 23.

Holobolus, MANUEL (Μανουήλ 'Ολόβωλος), a Byzantine prelate and philologist, who lived in the latter part of the 13th century. From his infancy he was attached to John Lascaris, who was placed upon the throne at nine years of age, and shared with Michael Palæologus the title of emperor. When Michael ordered the young prince to be blinded and sent into exile, Holobolus, who then was still a student, could not conceal his indignation, and for this imprudence the emperor ordered that his nose and lips should be cut off. He was then imprisoned in a monastery, where he pursued his studies with so much success that he was put in charge of the younger monks in 1267. Shortly afterwards the emperor was reconciled to Holobolus, and conferred upon him the dignity of a rhetor, or lecturer on the Holy Scriptures. During the discussions which were taking place between the Greek and Latin churches, on the subject of a reunion, he opposed energetically the proposition of Michael Palæologus. He was consigned to a monastery at Nicaea in 1273. The emperor soon after brought him back to Constantinople with a cord around his neck. A long captivity did not change at all the sentiments of Holobolus, for he took part, in 1283, in the deposition of the patriarch John Vexzus, a partisan of the Latin union. Holobolus left Political Verses on Michael Palæologus, which are cited in the Glossarium of Du Cange, under 'Ρήτωρ and 'Ερμηνεία. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Holocaust (ὁλόκαυστος, wholly burned), a kind of sacrifice wherein the whole offering was burned or consumed by fire, nothing being left for the feast. Among the heathen it was analogous to the Scripture burnt-offering.

Holon of JUDAH. For this place Lieut. Conder conjecturally proposes (Tent Work, ii, 387) Beit 'Alām, a large ruin nine and a half miles west of Halhul, containing "foundations, caves, cistern, with heaps of stones and remains of an ancient road" (Memoirs of Ordnance Survey, iii, 321); and Trelawney Saunders (O. T. Map) locates it at Khurbet Hanān, two miles south-west of Hebron. The latter position is possible, but the former is not within the required group of towns.

Holtzfus, BARTHOLOMÄUS, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Rügenwalde, Pomerania, Dec. 11, 1659. In 1685 he was professor of philosophy at Frankfurt, in 1686 court-preacher at Stolpe, in 1696 professor, and in 1698 doctor of theology at Frankfurt, and died in 1717. He wrote De Prædestinatione, Electione et Reprobatione, and a great many theological treatises, which were published in one volume in 1714. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Holtzhalb, DAVID, a Swiss theologian, was born at Zurich, April 25, 1677. He studied at his native place and at Leyden, was in 1702 professor of biblical literature at Zurich, and died Aug. 4, 1731. He wrote, Exegesis Philologica-Theologica Pauli xvi:—De Dependencia Creaturae Deo in Esse, Fieri et Operari:—Exercitatio Bibl. ad Jac. iv. 5:—De Sacra Pauli Mathematica ad Eph. iii. 18:—De Statutis non Bonis ad Ezek. xx. 25:—Typus Theologiae Naturalis. Holtzmann, CARL JULIUS, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Karlsruhe, May 6, 1804. He studied at Tübingen, was professor at the lyceum in his native place, from 1841 to 1861 preacher, and at the same time teacher in the theological seminary at Heidelberg. In 1861 he was made a prelate and a member of the higher ecclesiastical court. He was a member of the general synods held in 1861, 1867, 1871, and 1876. He died doctor of theology, Feb. 23, 1877, at Karlsruhe. (B. P.)

Holwell, WILLIAM, an English clergyman, was prebendary of Exeter in 1776, and died Feb. 13, 1798. Some of his publications are, Beauties of Homer (1775):—Extracts from Pope's Translation of the Iliad (1776):—A Mythological, Etymological, and Historical Dictionary (1798). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Holyday, BARTEN, D.D., a learned English divine, was born in the parish of All-Saints about 1593, and educated at Christchurch College, Oxford. He was chaplain to Charles I, and archdeacon of Oxford. He died in 1661. His best known works are a Translation of Juvenal and Persius (1673):—Survey of the World (1661):—Twenty Sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Holyman, JOHN, an English prelate of the 16th century, was born at Codrington, Buckinghamshire, educated at New College, Oxford, became a Benedictine at Reading until that monastery was dissolved, and was preferred by queen Mary bishop of Bristol in 1554. Holyman lived peaceably, not imbruing his hands in the blood of Protestants. He died Dec. 20, 1558. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 197.

Holzappel, JOHANN TOBIAS GOTTLIKE, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 24, 1773, at Marburg. In 1798 he was pastor and professor of Oriental languages at Rinteln, and died May 9, 1812. He wrote, Disquis. Quinam Ies. xi Intelligendus sit Rex Etatem Auream Restitutus (Rinteln, 1808):—Obudiah neu über- setzt und erläutert (1798):—S. F. N. Morus: Praelect. in Epist. Pauli ad Romanos (ed. 1794). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 406; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 218, 226, 256. (B. P.)

Holzy, in Slavonic mythology (changed by the ancient chroniclers into Alcis, Alees, and Aluchis), were idols of the Wends and Slavs, represented as two brothers. The giant-range of mountains seems to have been the seat of their worship. The priest who served them lived in a sacred wood, which at the same time was the dwelling-place of the gods. The Romans affirmed that the Holzy were Castor and Pollux, and that the priests wore women's dresses.

Homburg, HERZ, a Jewish writer and teacher, who died at Prague, Aug. 24, 1841, is the author of, באור לס' דברים, a commentary on Deuteronomy, prepared for and printed in Men-

Home, HENRY, lord Kames, a Scotch lawyer and philosopher, was born in 1696 at Kames, Berwickshire. He studied law at the University of Edinburgh, and became advocate in 1724. By a large number of publications on the subject of jurisprudence, he obtained from the beginning a large clientship; then, in 1752, he secured the post of judge at the court of sessions, and finally, in 1763, the dignity of a justice of the high court of Scotland. His taste for agriculture and metaphysics gave rise to some of his finest works. There are, among others, Essays on the Principles of Morality and Natural Religion (1751), in which he attempts to prove that the laws which prevail in the conduct of man have their foundation in the constitution of the human being, and are as certain and immutable as the physical laws which govern the whole system of the world:—Elements of Criticism (1762), in which the author tries to connect literary criticism with the principles of philosophy, very much admired, and still read:—Sketches of the History of Man (1773):—The Gentleman Farmer (1777), being an attempt to improve agriculture by subjecting it to the test of rational principles:—Loose Hints upon Education (1781), chiefly concerning the culture of the heart. Home died Dec. 27, 1782.

Hominiolæ (from homo, "man," and colo, "to worship"), a term of reproach, applied by the Apollinarians (q. v.) and others, to those who worshipped Jesus Christ.

Hommel, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 13, 1685, at Weissenfels. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1712 bachelor of theology, in 1729 superintendent at Neustadt, and died Oct. 17, 1746, member of consistory, first court-preacher, and general superintendent of the duchy of Hildburghausen. He wrote, Disp. in Matth. xxiv. 29 (Leipsic, 1712):—De Fidelibus Veteris Testamenti Extra Ecclesiam Judaicam Visibilem Dispersis:—De Consequentiis Evangelico-Lutheranae Ecclesiae ab Adversariis Falso Imputatis:—*De Prærogativis Judaorum Vet. Honor Cathedræ, an expression used in Spain in the 6th century, to denote the honorary acknowledgment which the bishops received in their parochial visitations.

Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, was a Roman by birth, and was distinguished among his contemporaries for having been a pupil of Gregory the Great. He was chosen as the successor of Justus, to occupy the see of Canterbury. His consecration probably occurred in 627. His reign was one of long duration. He did much for England in the way of prospering her Church. The music of Canterbury, introduced by Honorius, was imitated even in the Celtic churches, and the tendency it had to promote civilization in England cannot be denied. He died at a good old age, greatly lamented by his people, and was buried at St. Augustine, Sept. 30, 653. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i, 111 sq.

Honthorst, GERARD (called Gherardo dalle Notti), an eminent Dutch painter, was born at Utrecht in 1592. After studying under Abraham Bloemaert he visited Rome, and applied himself to the study of the works of Michael Angelo Caravaggio. He was patronized by prince Giustiniani, for whom he painted some of his best works, among which are two fine pictures of St. Peter Delivered from Prison, and Christ before Pilate. There is a torch-light scene by Honthorst, in the Church of the Madonna della Scala, at Rome, representing the Beheading of St. John. He died in 1660. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Honyman, ANDREW, a Scotch prelate, was arch-deacon of St. Andrews, author of the Seasonable Case, and Survey of Naphtali. He was made bishop of Orkney in 1664, and died in February, 1676. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 228.

Hook, WALTER FARQUHAR, D.D., an eminent Anglican divine, son of Dr. James Hook (1771-1828), dean of Worcester, grandson of James Hook (1746-1827), organist at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and nephew of Theodore Edward Hook (1788-1841), an eminent English author, was born in London, March 13, 1798. He graduated at Christchurch College, Oxford, in 1821, and was successively curate at Wappingham, Isle of Wight, and in Birmingham, and vicar of Trinity Church, Coventry, till 1837, when he was made vicar of Leeds. Here, during his incumbency of twenty-two years, 21 new churches, 32 parsonages, and more than 60 schools were erected in his parish, chiefly through his instrumentality. He was especially popular among the working classes. In 1859 he became dean of Chichester, and in 1862 a Fellow of the Royal Society. He was appointed chaplain in ordinary to George IV, in 1827, and retained the office under William IV and Victoria, preaching on the accession of the latter his celebrated sermon on Hear the Church, of which more than 100,000 copies were sold. He died Oct. 20, 1875. Dean Hook was eminently conservative in theology, and a High-Churchman. His publications are, Church Dictionary (7th ed. 1854, 8vo):—Eccles. Biography (1845-52, vols. i-viii, 12mo):—Sermons on the Miracles (1847-48, 2 vols. 8vo):—Sermons on Various Subjects (2d ed. 1844, 8vo):—Sermons before the University of Oxford (1847, 12mo):—The Rights of Presbyters Asserted (anonymous):—Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, from the Anglo-Saxon period to Juxon (Lond. 1860-77, 12 vols. 8vo):—Disestablished Church in the United States (Lond. 1869, 8vo). Dr. Hook's wife, a model of a saintly and beautiful character, was the author (anon.) of Meditations for Every Day of the Year, and The Cross of Christ. She died in 1871. See Hooker, Edward William, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Asahel Hooker, was born at Goshen, Conn., Nov. 24, 1794. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1814, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1817; was ordained at Green Farms, Aug. 15, 1821, over which church he remained pastor until 1829, when he became associate general agent of the American Temperance Society, and was also editor of the Journal of Humanity. He was installed pastor of the Church at Bennington, Vt., Feb. 22, 1832, and was dismissed in the spring of 1844. From Aug. 25 of the latter year, for four years, he was professor of sacred rhetoric and ecclesiastical history in the Theological Institute of Connecticut, at East Windsor Hill. From 1849 to 1856 he was the regular pastor of the church at South Windsor; after which, until 1862, he served in the same relation at Fair Haven, Vt. He died at Fort Atkinson, Wis., March 31, 1875. Dr. Hooker was a trustee of Middlebury College from 1834 to 1844, and was a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions from 1840. Among his published works are, Life of Thomas Hooker:—Early Conversions:—Elihu Lewis, etc.; also several pamphlets, among them, Marks of Spiritual Declension:—Plea for Sacred Music:—Believing the Truth:—Character and Office of the Holy Spirit, etc., with various addresses and sermons. He was also a writer for various magazines and other periodicals. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 427.

Hooker, Henry Brown, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of Dr. Thomas Hooker, was born at Rutland, Vt., Aug. 31, 1802. After attending the Castleton Academy, he entered Middlebury College, from which he graduated in 1821. Four years afterwards he graduated from Andover Theological Seminary. He was ordained an evangelist, Oct. 10, 1825, and for one year was a home missionary in South Carolina. From May 2, 1827, to May 17, 1836, he was pastor in Lanesboro', Mass.; from February, 1837, to June, 1858, was pastor in Falmouth; from 1857 to 1873 was secretary of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, and continued to assist in the office of that society until his death, July 4, 1881. From 1844 to 1851 he was a member of the Massachusetts Board of Education; from 1845 he was a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The American Tract Society published eight tracts from his pen; and he also wrote three tracts for the Tract Society of Boston. He was also the author of two Sunday-school books: Plea for the Heathen, and Put Off and Put On. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 33.

Hooker, Herman, D.D., an Episcopal clergyman, was born at Poughkeepsie, N.Y., about 1806. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1825, studied two years in Princeton Theological Seminary, and subsequently took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church: but on losing his health became a bookseller in Philadelphia, Pa., where he died, July 25, 1865. He is the author of, The Portion of the Soul (1835):—Popular Infidelity:—Uses of Adversity:—Maxims:—The Christian Life.

Hooker, Horace, D.D., a Congregational minister and author, was born in 1793. He was a graduate of Yale College, and was remarkable for the elegance and purity of his style as a writer. He early, in connection with Rev. Thomas H. Gallaudet, LL.D., undertook the preparation of religious books for the young. Among them are, The Youth's Book of Natural Theology, in two parts, and a series of twelve volumes of Bible History; also a popular spelling-book and definer. For a period of more than twenty years he was secretary of the Connecticut Missionary Society; also for several years chaplain of the insane retreat at Hartford, where he died, Dec. 17, 1864. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1864, p. 623.

Hoole, Eltjah, D.D., an eminent Wesleyan missionary, was appointed in 1819 to Bangalore, in the Mysore country, to which, in 1823, Seringapatam was added. "He rapidly acquired an accurate knowledge of the Tamil, one of the first-fruits of which was a translation of the Methodist Hymns. It was thus that he laid the foundation of that proficiency as an Oriental scholar which was afterwards duly acknowledged by the Royal Asiatic Society and other learned bodies; at the same time travelling widely and laboring with unwearied diligence in his evangelical efforts, and enduring hardship as a good soldier of Christ." After nine years he returned to England sick, and was never afterwards free from pain. From 1830 to 1835 he was superintendent of schools in Ireland. Removing to London, he was, in 1834, appointed assistant secretary, and in 1836 one of the general secretaries of the Missionary Society, a position he held to the end of his life. In the administration of missionary affairs his punctuality, suavity, and diligence rendered him singularly efficient, and his unobtrusive services became more and more valuable every year. He was also honorary secretary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, and also for the Home of the Asiatics, in London. Gentle, uniformly cheerful, Dr. Hoole was to the end of life a diligent student. He died in London, June 17, 1872, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. Dr. Hoole wrote, Madras, Mysore, and the South of India: A Narrative of a Mission to those Countries, from 1820 to 1828 (2d ed. Lond. 1844, 12mo):—The Year-Book of Missions (Lond. 1847, 8vo):—The Missionary, a poem from the Swedish, edited by Dr. Hoole (1851, 24mo):—Byrom and the Wesleys (1864):—Ladies' Tamil Book (1860). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1872, p. 32; Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 346; Osborn, Meth. Bibliography, p. 117.

Hooper, William, D.D., LL.D., a distinguished Baptist minister, was born near Wilmington, N. C., Aug. 31, 1792, being a grandson of William Hooper, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He graduated from the University of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill, in 1808; studied theology one year at Princeton; was appointed professor of ancient languages in his alma mater in 1817; took orders in the Episcopal Church in 1818; was rector of a church in Fayetteville from 1822 to 1824; changed his sentiments on baptism, and joined a Baptist Church; returned to the University of North Carolina, first as professor of rhetoric, and then resumed his former chair as professor of ancient languages. In 1838 he was called to South Carolina, where, for eight years, he was in the department of instruction in the Furman Institute. He was then chosen president of Wake Forest College, N. C., and held this office for six years. He was pastor in Newbern, then president of the Chowan Female Institute, and for the last years of his life was engaged in teaching at Fayetteville and Wilson. He died at Chapel Hill, Aug. 19, 1876. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 15. (J. C. S.)

Höpfner, JOHANN GEORG CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 4, 1765, at Leipsic, and died there, Dec. 20, 1827, doctor of theology and professor of philosophy. He wrote, In LXX Versionem Jonas Spec. 1-3 (Leipsic, 1787, 1788):—De Origine Dogmatis Rom.-Pontif. de Purgatorio Nonnulla (Halle, 1792):—Historia Tobie (1802):—Ueber das Leben und die Verdienste des ewigen Morus (1793). Hopkins, Henry Harvey, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Chester County, Pa., Nov. 12, 1804. He graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1832; was licensed by the Presbytery of New Castle the same year; obtained permission to labor without the bounds of the presbytery, and at once proceeded to Clinton, La. After this he went to Big Spring and Taylorsville, Ky., and served as pastor. This relation continued about nine years, and was dissolved April 2, 1844. Dr. Hopkins next took charge of two churches at Cane Run and Plum Creek, in Shelby County, and subsequently of a church at Owensboro. He died April 19, 1877. He was a devoted pastor, a wise counsellor, practical, judicious, and of large Christian experience. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1878, p. 28.

Hopkins, John, an American philanthropist, a member of the Society of Friends, was born in Anne Arundel County, Md., May 19, 1795. He received a liberal education, and engaged in the wholesale grocery business, from which he retired in 1847 with an ample fortune. He then became president of the Merchants' Bank, and a director of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. He died in Baltimore, Dec. 24, 1873. Mr. Hopkins' benefactions amount in the aggregate to over $8,000,000. In 1873 he founded the Hopkins Free Hospital of Baltimore, at a cost of about $4,000,000. He also founded an orphanage for colored youth, a convalescent hospital, and the Johns Hopkins University. This institution is located at Clifton, near Baltimore, and has four hundred acres of land and an endowment of $3,000,000. Poor and deserving youth of Maryland and Virginia receive free scholarships.

Hopkins, Josiah, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Pittsford, Vt., April 26, 1785. He never attended college, though he had a good academical education. He was licensed by the Paulet Congregational Association in 1809, and was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church in New Haven, Vt., in 1811. He subsequently became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Auburn, N. Y. He died at Geneva, June 27, 1862. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 298.

Hopkins, Samuel, Sen., a Congregational minister, son of John Hopkins, of Waterbury, Conn., graduated from Yale College in 1718; was ordained pastor in West Springfield, Mass., June 1, 1720, and died suddenly in October, 1755, in the sixty-second year of his age. He published Historical Memoirs Relating to the Housatonic Indians (1753). See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 519.

Hopkins, Samuel, Jun., D.D., a Congregational minister, son of the foregoing, was born in West Springfield, Mass., Oct. 31, 1729. He graduated from Yale College in 1749, and was a tutor there from 1751 to 1754; was ordained pastor at Hadley, in February, 1755, and died there, March 8, 1811. A volume of sermons was published by him in 1799. In many respects he was a remarkable man, distinguished for his good-humor, and his Calvinism was of a type opposed to Hopkinsianism. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 520.

Hopkins, Theodore Asa, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Hartford, Conn., July 25, 1805. He graduated from Yale College in 1824; studied theology privately, and was licensed by the Cayuga Presbytery, June 19, 1828. In 1829 he accepted a call from the Congregational Church at Pawtucket, Mass. His ministry there was successful and very acceptable. In 1836 he accepted a call from the First Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, where he remained until his death, Nov. 18, 1847. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 741.

Hoppenstedt, August Friedrich Ludwig, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 22, 1763. In 1789 he was inspector of the Teachers' Seminary at Hanover, in 1792 court-chaplain, in 1796 superintendent, in 1805 general superintendent at Harburg, in 1815 at Celle, and died April 24, 1830, doctor of theology, abbot of Loccum, and director of consistory at Hanover. He published, Predigten (Hanover, 1818-19, 8 vols.) :—Lieder für Volksschulen (1798; 4th ed. 1814). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 864; ii, 99, 171, 265, 385; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 585. (B. P.)

Hopper, CHRISTOPHER, one of the most efficient early Methodist preachers, was born at Low-Coalburne, Ryton Parish, Durham County, England, Dec. 25, 1722. In his Autobiography (in Jackson's Lives) he gives an interesting account of his conversion under Methodist preaching, about 1743, and of his subsequent labors after 1749. For fifty years he preached throughout the land, in churches, ale-houses, cock-pits, now before a conference, then before a mob, now amid the prayers and tears of the people, then amid rotten eggs, the sound of horns and bells, brickbats, blows, and bludgeons. Four times he visited Ireland (1750, 1752, 1756, 1776, the first time with Wesley). In 1751 he and Wesley visited Scotland, the latter returning in a few days, but Hopper pressing on, and in 1759 introducing Methodism as far as Old Aberdeen and Peterhead, thus planting Methodism in North Britain. Wesley being absent from the conference at Bristol in 1780, Hopper was elected president. After 1790 he resided chiefly at Bolton, preaching till January, 1802. He died March 5 following. Hopper played an important part in British Methodism, and not merely in extending its borders. He was one of the men who gave to it Bramwell and Benson, and his melting prayers contributed to its peace and union during the critical conferences of the last decade of the 18th century (see Entwistle's Memoirs). He was of an original turn of mind, had fine natural abilities, was a diligent student, a pioneer preacher, and a soul-saver. See Jackson, Early Methodist Preachers, i, 179; Crowther, Portraiture of Methodism, p. 350; Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, i, iii (see index); Smith, Hist. of West. Methodism, i, iii (see index); West. Meth. Magazine, Sept. 1803; Everett, Keen and Able Little Sketch; Wesleyan Centenary Takings (8d ed. Lond. 1841), i, 332.

Hoppus, JOHN, LL.D., an English Congregational minister, was born in London in 1789. He studied theology at Rotherham and Dunbar, then proceeded to the University of Glasgow, where he took his degree of M.A., and was the most distinguished pupil of his year. Thence he returned to London and took the ministerial charge of the Carter Lane Chapel, where he labored two years. He next became professor of mental and moral philosophy and logic in University College, London, which chair he occupied for thirty-six years, preaching frequently and writing extensively. He died in London, Jan. 29, 1875. The life of Dr. Hoppus was an exemplification of his oft-repeated assertion that "No service a man can render his generation is greater than this, to try to 'justify the ways of God to men.'" He wrote a masterly exposition of Bacon's Novum Organon, and many other treatises for the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge:—a prize essay on Schism as Opposed to the Unity of the Church:—a valuable pamphlet on The Crisis of Popular Education, as well as contributing largely to the Psychological Journal and Eclectic. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 341; (Lond.) Evangelical Magazine, 1875, p. 281.

Hordicalia (or Hordicidia), an ancient Roman festival, celebrated April 15, in honor of the goddess Tellus. On these occasions thirty pregnant cows were sacrificed.

Horem. The Hurak, which is accepted by Conder (Tent Work, ii, 337) and Tristram (Bible Places, p. 274), but not by Saunders (O. T. Map), as the representative of this ancient site, is written Khurbet el-Kûrah on the Ordnance Map, three and a half miles north-west from Yârûn (Iron), and so in the accompanying Memoirs (i, 242), "heaps of stones and cisterns, on a small tell [mound]; a birkeh [pool] in the valley." This last authority suggests (i, 205) "the present ruin Hârah," which is laid down at two miles south-east of Tibnîn, and described (ibid. 118) as "heaps of small unheven stones, with two olive-presses and a spring at the ruin;" an identification not adopted by Saunders.

Horey, in the mythology of the negroes in East Africa, was a dæmon, having a resemblance to the devil, whose image probably reached Abyssinia through the Christians. Those people practise circumcision in the thirteenth or fourteenth year. Before the youths are thus dedicated they are exposed to the persecution of this evil spirit, who manifests his presence by a dull, deep howl or cry. As soon as this cry is heard, victims are prepared and placed under a tree. They are always found to have been eaten. If the food does not suffice, Horey steals a boy and devours him, keeping him in his stomach until more food is brought, whereupon he gives him up again. Many negroes affirm that they have been ten or twelve days in the stomach of this monster.

Horman (or Horeman), WILLIAM, an English author, was born at Salisbury, Wiltshire, about 1470. He was educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge, was made vice-provost of Eton, where he spent the remainder of his days, and died April 12, 1535. He was one of the most general scholars of his age. He wrote on Orthography:—On the Quantities of Psephimatic Syllables:—A Chronicle, Commentaries, and Indexes to the Chronicles of Others:—Commentaries on Gabriel Biel's Divinity:—On the Divorce of Henry VIII:—On Cato, Varro, Columella, Palladius, De Re Rustica. Other books he left unfinished. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 335; Lowndes, Bibl. Manual, p. 1119.

Hornblower, WILLIAM HENRY, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Newark, N. J., March 21, 1820. He graduated from Princeton College in 1838; studied law one year; graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1842; became a missionary to "the Pines" in 1843; was ordained pastor at Paterson in 1844, and labored there with great success and usefulness until 1877, when he was elected by the General Assembly professor of homiletics, pastoral theology, sacred rhetoric, and Church government in the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, Pa. He died there, July 16, 1883. See N. Y. Observer, July 19, 1883; Nevins, Presb. Encyclop. s. v.; Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1884, p. 28. (W. P. S.)

Hornby, JOHN, D.D., a native of Lincolnshire, bred a Carmelite, received his degree at Cambridge, flourished in 1874, and was buried at his convent in Boston. He participated in a great controversy over the priority of the Dominican and Carmelite orders, John Stock pleading for the precedence of the former, and Hornby preaching and writing for that of the latter. The judges were John Donwick, the chancellor, and the doctors of the university, and they confirmed the opinion of Hornby, under the seal of the university. Henry VIII made them friends by thrusting both out of the land. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 288.

Horne, Robert, an English prelate of the 16th century, was born in Durham, educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, advanced dean of Durham in 1551, and prebend of York in 1552, but in the persecution under Mary he fled to Germany, and, fixing his residence at Frankfort, became the head of the episcopal party. On returning to England he was made bishop of Winchester, Feb. 16, 1560. He was a worthy man, but ground between the papists and sectaries, who sported with his name, and twitted his person as dwarfish and deformed, apparently having no worthy cause for their opposition. He died in Southwark, June 1, 1580. He published an answer to Fuckenham's Declaration of Scruples of Conscience (1566), touching the oaths of supremacy. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 482.

Horne, Thomas Hartwell, D.D., a minister of the Church of England, was born in London, Oct. 20, 1780. He was a scholar at Christ's Hospital, but did not attend the university. He was a barrister's clerk for many years; was ordained in 1819, and did parochial duty in London, chiefly at St. James's Church, Westminster, Marylebone; held an important literary appointment in the British Museum for a long time; and in 1833 the archbishop of Canterbury appointed him to his city rectory, a position which he held at the time of his death, Jan. 27, 1862. Dr. Horne was an author and editor of considerable celebrity. Among his works may be mentioned, An Introduction to the Critical Study of the Holy Scriptures, by which he is chiefly known (see INTRODUCTIONS):—A Compendium of the Admiralty Laws and Regulations of the Court of Admiralty:—An Illustrated Record of Important Events (in conjunction with Dr. Gillies and professor Shakespeare):—Deism Refuted:—Willis's Itinerary:—Jewish and Christian Privileges Compared:—Potts's Law Dictionary:—Murphy's Arabian Antiquities of Spain:—Crosby's Gazetteer:—Van Leenwen's Commentaries on the Dutch Law. Hornemann, CLAUDIUS FREES von, a Danish theologian, born in 1751, was in 1801 professor of theology at Copenhagen, and died in 1830. He wrote, Specimen Exercitationum Crit. in Versum. LXX Interpr. ex Philone (i–iii, Göttingen, 1778–78):—Observationes ad Illustrationem Doctrinæ de Canone Vet. Test. ex Philone (Copenhagen, 1775):—Sylloge Lectionum Variorum LXX (1773):—Observationes de Harmonia Linguarum Orientalium, Ebraicæ, Chaldaicæ, Syriacæ et Arabicæ (1826–29):—Scripta Genuina Græc. Patrum Apostolicorum, Græce et Latine, Edidit (1828, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 51, 77, 882; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 407 sq. (B. P.)

Horner, JAMES, D.D., a minister of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland. He was Dr. McDowell's colleague in Mary's Abbey, Dublin, ordained co-pastor in 1791, and died in January, 1843. He was intrusted by the synod of Ulster with the management of much of its public business, "and was remarkable for his tact and shrewdness." He was one of the first missionary agents of the synod, and was also appointed by it on the committee for the preparation of a code of discipline. See Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland.

Horning, FRIEDRICH THEODOR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1809 in Alsace. In 1835 he was pastor at Grafensteden, in 1845 at Strassburg, and died there in 1882, president of the consistory. Horning was a strict Lutheran, and founded, in 1849, the Lutheran Missionary Society. He wrote, Evangelisch-lutherische Kirche:—and with Rittelmeyer he published, in 1863, Gesangbuch für Christen Augsburgischer Confession. He also edited Kirchenblatt für die Kirche Augsburgischer Confession. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Horror, a passion excited by an object which causes a high degree of fear and detestation. It is a compound of wonder and fear. Sometimes it has a mixture of pleasure, from which, if predominant, it is denominated a pleasing horror. Such a horror seizes us at the view of vast and hanging precipices, a tempestuous ocean, or wild and solitary places. This passion is the original of superstition, as a wise and well-tempered awe is of religion. Horror and terror seem almost to be synonymous; but the former refers more to what disgusts, the latter to that which alarms us.

Horse-sacrifice, a ceremony celebrated by various ancient nations, in which a horse was offered in sacrifice to a deity, usually the sun. The Massagetae, a great and powerful nation, whose territories extended beyond the Araxes to the extreme parts of the East, sacrificed horses to the sun. The practice prevailed in Persia in the time of Cyrus, and may have been anterior to that sovereign. Horses were sacrificed to Neptune and the deities of the rivers, being precipitated into the sea or into the rivers. The Lacedæmonians sacrificed a horse to the winds, which, by their force, carried the ashes of the victim to a distance. Among the ancient Romans a horse was sacrificed annually to Mars in the Campus Martius, in the month of October. The blood that dropped from the tail of the October horse, as it was called, was carefully preserved by the vestal virgins in the temple of Vesta, for the purpose of being used at the Palilia or shepherd festival. In the Rig Veda are two hymns in honor of the horse-sacrifice, called Aswamedha, which describe the horse as "bathed, and decorated with rich trappings, the variously-colored goat going before him." The horse is led three times round the sacrificial fire; he is then bound to a post and slaughtered with an ax; and the flesh is roasted on a spit, boiled, made into balls, and eaten; and finally "The horse proceeds to that assembly which is most excellent; to the presence of his father and his mother (heaven and earth). Go, horse, to-day, rejoicing to the gods, that (the sacrifice) may yield blessings to the donor." The horse-sacrifice at this day is one of the great annual ceremonies of the Hindûs.

Horsley, JOHN, an eminent English clergyman and antiquary, was born in 1685, at Mid-Lothian, and was pastor of a dissenting congregation at Morpeth. He died in December, 1781. He wrote Roman Antiquities of Britain (published posthumously, 1732). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Horst, GEORG CONRAD, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born June 26, 1767, and died Jan. 26, 1832, doctor of theology. He wrote, Die Visionen Habakuks (Gotha, 1798):—Theurgie (Mayence, 1820):—Das heilige Abendmahl (1815):—Dämonologie (1818, 2 vols.):—Mysteriosophie (1816, 2 vols.):—Siona (4th ed. 1833, 2 vols.):—Eusebia (2d ed. 1822). Horton, WILLIAM, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Newburyport, Mass., March 14, 1804. He graduated from Harvard College in 1824; from Andover Theological Seminary in 1827; was ordained deacon in November of that year, and presbyter Oct. 15, 1830. He was pastor at St. Paul's Church, Windsor, Vt.; in 1835 of Trinity Church, Saco, Me.; at St. Thomas's Church, Dover, N. H. (1839–47); at St. Paul's Church, Brookline, Mass. (1849); at St. Paul's Church, Newburyport (1853). He died there, Oct. 29, 1863. See Trien. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 75; Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1864, p. 668.

Hosah. For this place Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 337) the present 'Ozziyeh, meaning apparently (see Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, i, 51) el-Ezziyeh, laid down at six and three quarter miles south-east of Tyre, and described (ibid. p. 48) as "a village built of stone, containing seventy Druses; situated on a ridge, with two cisterns. There are two caves to the north of it." The identification is not noted by Saunders.

Höschke, REUBEN hak-Kohen, a Jewish rabbi of Prague, who died in 1673, is the author of ילקוט ראובני, a kind of midrashic collectaneum (Prague, 1660):—ילקוט ראובני הגדול, a cabalistic midrash on the Pentateuch, with extracts from Mechilta, Pesikta, Zohar, etc. (Wilmsdorf, 1681). This latter work, without any value, must be distinguished from the famous midrashic work entitled Yalkut Shimeoni. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 412 sq. (B. P.)

Hosmann, GUSTAV CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born May 16, 1695. He studied at Leipzig and Kiel, was deacon in 1721, and professor of theology at Kiel in 1730. In 1734 he was appointed first court-preacher, in 1749 general superintendent, and died July 10, 1766. He wrote, Disp. Exeg. ad Gal. iii, 19 (Kiel, 1720):—Hypotyposis Chro- nologia Sacra (Hamburg, 1727):—Annotationes ad Hypotyposin Chronologia Sacra (1729):—De Resurrectione Mortuorum a Christo Demonstrata Luc. ii, 37, 38:—De Baptismo Apostolorum hoc de Mysterio Sententiam Evolvens (1732):—Principia Theologiae Comparativæ (eod.):—*Chronologia Sacra Librorum V. Hospitium, a place sometimes attached to monasteries in former times, with the view of affording temporary relief to travellers, and in which a certain number of the poor were relieved by a daily alms. It was also called a Xenodochium.

Hossein, the second son of Ali and Fatima, and the third of the twelve Imâms, was born A.D. 625. He endeavored to dissuade his brother Hassan (q. v.) from resigning the caliphate in favor of Moawiyah, but on finding his remonstrances unavailing, he entered heartily into the support of the new caliph, and even served in his army when the Saracens first attacked Constantinople. On the death of Moawiyah, in 679, his son Yezid succeeded, but Hossein contested the caliphate with him, having been deceived by the promise of powerful support from the professed adherents of the house of Ali. Overpowered by numbers, and deserted by many of his followers, he fell by the hand of one of Yezid's soldiers, on the 10th of the Mohammedan month Mohanem, A.D. 680. A splendid mosque was erected over the place of his burial. The place, which was named Mesched Hossein (the place of Hossein's martyrdom), is a favorite resort of pilgrims to this day.

Hossein's Martyrdom, ANNIVERSARY OF, a religious solemnity observed both in Persia and India with extraordinary splendor. It lasts for ten days, during which the Shiites keep up continual mourning for the martyr's fate, giving themselves up to sighs and groans, fastings and tears. They abstain from shaving their heads, from bathing, and even from changing their clothes. The observances consist of a series of representations of the successive scenes in the life of Hossein, from the date of his flight from Medina to his martyrdom on the plains of Kerbela; and the exhibition of each day is preceded by the reading in a plaintive tone a portion of the history of Hossein.

Hostia, an animal among the ancient Romans which was destined for sacrifice. Sometimes the whole victim was consumed upon the altar, and at other times only the legs and intestines were burned. It was the smoke ascending from the sacrifice that was considered pleasing to the gods, hence the more numerous the animals the more pleasing the sacrifice. This was, no doubt, the reason for offering a hecatomb. The animal selected for sacrifice must be free from all blemishes and diseases. If it was of the larger sort of beasts the horns were marked with gold; if of the smaller sort it was crowned with the leaves of that tree which the deity for whom the sacrifice was designed was thought most to delight in.

Hotchkiss, VELONA R., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Spafford, Onondaga Co., N. Y., June 5, 1815, and graduated from Madison University in 1838. His pastorates were in Poultney, Vt. (1839); Rochester, N. Y.; Buffalo (1843–54), also, subsequently, from 1865 until his death, and in Fall River, Mass. From 1854 to 1865 he was a professor in Rochester Theological Seminary. Dr. Hotchkiss ranked very high as a scholar and an able preacher, and was regarded as one of the strongest men in his denomination. He died in Buffalo, Jan. 4, 1882. (J. C. S.)

Hothum, WILLIAM DE, D.D., an Irish prelate, was born in England, but educated at Paris. In 1280 he became a Dominican friar, and was twice provincial of that order in England. He was appointed to the see of Dublin, Dec. 8, 1297; consecrated at Rome in 1298 by the pope, and died on his return, at Dijon, Aug. 27 of the same year. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 110.

Houghton, DANIEL CLAY, D.D., a Presbyterian minister (N. S.), was born at Lynton, Vt., in 1814. He graduated at the University of Vermont in 1840, subsequently taught a few years in Western New York, and then entered the ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was one of the founders of Genesee College, in Lima, N. Y.; was for some years professor of moral and intellectual philosophy in the college, and at the same time acted as financial agent. In 1853 he joined the Presbyterian Church, and in 1854 was appointed editor of the Genesee Evangelist. He died July 8, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 160.

House, ERWIN, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Worthington, O., Feb. 17, 1824. He was converted at the age of thirteen; graduated at Woodward College, Cincinnati, in 1846; received license to preach in 1849, and in 1865 entered the Cincinnati Conference, of which he continued a member till his death, May 20, 1875. Mr. House commenced contributing to the press as early as 1837; in 1847 was employed as assistant editor of the Ladies' Repository, and from March, 1851, to December, 1852, had sole editorial charge of the magazine. He published, Sketches for the Young (1847):—The Missionary in Many Lands:—The Homilist:—Scripture Cabinet:—The Sunday-school Handbook. He was a hearty advocate of temperance. As a speaker to children he had very few equals. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 115; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Hoven, JAN DANIEL VAN, a Dutch theologian, was born Aug. 20, 1705, at Hanau. He studied at Marburg and Utrecht, was in 1728 professor at Lingin, in Westphalia, in 1739 member of consistory, in 1758 professor at Campen, and died in 1793. He wrote, Specimen Historiæ Analyticæ (Lingen, 1732; Amsterdam, 1734):—Historia Ecclesiastica Pragmatica Specimen i–iii (1747–52):—Disp. de Vera Ætate Legitimitis Athenagoræ pro Christianis (1752):—Antiquitates Evangelicæ (1758):—Antiquitates Romanæ (1759):—De Vera Ætate, Dignitate et Patria Minucii Felicis (1762), etc. See Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Hovey, EDMUND OTIS, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in East Hanover, N. H., July 15, 1801. At twenty-one years of age he began his preparation for preaching the gospel, at Thetford Academy; in 1828 graduated from Dartmouth College, and in 1831 from Andover Theological Seminary. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Newburyport the same year, and sent as a missionary to Wabash, Ia. His great work was in founding and building up Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Ind., of which, in 1834, he was appointed financial agent and professor of rhetoric. Subsequently he was made professor of chemistry, mineralogy, and geology. He was also treasurer and librarian. He died there, March 10, 1877. See (N. Y.) Evangelist, March 29, 1877. (W. P. S.)

Howard, Bezaleel, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born at Bridgewater, Mass., Nov. 22, 1753. He graduated from Harvard College in 1781; immediately engaged in teaching at Hingham, and at the same time pursued a course of theology under the direction of Dr. Gay. He preached his first sermon in 1783; was appointed to a tutorship at Cambridge, and during this time filled vacant pulpits in the neighborhood on the Sabbath. He accepted a call to the First Church in Springfield in November, 1784, and was ordained April 27, 1785. He resigned this charge on account of ill-health, Jan. 25, 1809. In 1819 he became pastor of a new Unitarian Church in the first parish of Springfield. He remained there until his death, Jan. 23, 1837. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 181.

Howard, Leland, A.M., a leading Baptist minister, was born at Jamaica, Windham Co., Vt., Oct. 13, 1793. He was converted about 1810, and commenced to preach in 1812. He was a "born preacher," but placed himself under the tuition of Rev. Joshua Bradley, of the Baptist Church in Windsor, for one year, and then pursued his studies under the direction of Rev. James M. Winchell, of the First Baptist Church in Boston, Mass. He was ordained pastor in Windsor, Vt., Nov. 16, 1817, where he remained seven years, and then of the First Baptist Church in Troy, N. Y., five years, when he returned to his former pastorate in Windsor, Vt., and had charge five years. His other pastorates were Brooklyn, N. Y., Newport, R. I., Norwich, N. Y., Fifth Street Church, Troy, N. Y., Hartford, Conn., and, in 1852, he went to Rutland, Vt., and was pastor ten years. He died there, May 5, 1870. He was chaplain of the House, in the legislature of Vermont, in 1831, and of the Senate in 1861. (J. C. S.)

Howard, Leonard, D.D., an English clergyman, was rector of St. George's, Southwark, London. He died in 1767, leaving a number of Sermons (1736-61), and a collection of Letters and State Papers (1753-56). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Howard, Robert, an Irish Catholic prelate, was born in 1661, became bishop of Killala in 1726, of Elphin in 1729, and died about 1740. He published some Sermons (1738). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Howard, Roger S., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was employed, in 1857, as a teacher in Bangor, Me., and remained there until 1859, when he became rector of St. Stephen's Church, Portland. In 1861 he removed to Vermont; in 1862 became rector of Trinity Church, Rutland; in 1867 of St. James's Church, Woodstock; in 1870 president of Norwich University, and rector of St. Mary's Church, Northfield; in 1872 was called to the rectorship of the Church of the Reconciliation, Webster, Mass.; in 1879 he removed to Greenfield, where he died, April 16, 1880, aged seventy-two years. See Whittaker, Almanac and Directory, 1881, p. 173.

Howard, Solomon, D.D., LL.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Nov. 14, 1811. He joined the Church in 1828, graduated from Augusta College, Ky., in 1833, and entered the Ohio Conference in 1835. After eight years of successful work in the pastorate, he was for two years principal of the Ohio Wesleyan University. From 1845 to 1852 he was in educational work in Springfield, O. In 1852 he was elected president of the Ohio University, at Athens, where he remained for twenty years. He died Aug. 11, 1873, at San José, Cal. He was a delegate to the General Conference of 1856. He was emphatically an educator, and many a poor young man will remember his sympathy for him in his struggles for an education. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873.

Howard, William D., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., July 28, 1814. He was among the early graduates of Lafayette College, and in 1833 became a student of theology with Dr. William Neill. He was licensed to preach in 1837, and the next year ordained pastor of the Frankford Church, now in the bounds of Philadelphia. In 1849 he removed to Pittsburgh, to take charge of the Second Presbyterian Church, where he continued to labor faithfully until his death, Sept. 22, 1876. He published occasional Sermons. See Presbyterian, Sept. 30, 1876. (W. P. S.)

Howe, George, D.D., a distinguished minister of the Southern Presbyterian Church, was born in 1802. In 1833 he was elected by the General Assembly a professor in the theological seminary at Charleston, S. C., and subsequently became president of that institution, which position he retained until his sudden death, April 15, 1883. For half a century his life had been devoted to the great work of training young men for the ministry, and though dead he yet speaks through the living lips of hundreds who went out from this school of the prophets. See (N. Y.) Observer, April 19, 1883. (W. P. S.)

Howe, Obadiah, D.D., an English clergyman, was vicar of Boston, Lincolnshire. He died in 1682, leaving The Universalist Examined and Criticized (1648);—Sermons (1664). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Howell, Thomas, an English prelate, was born at Naugamarch, Brecknockshire, educated a fellow of Jesus College, Oxford, was made canon of Windsor in 1636, bishop of Bristol in 1644, and died in 1646. He was a meek man and a most excellent preacher. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 515.

Howley, William, D.D., an English prelate, son of William Howley, D.D., was born Feb. 12, 1765. In his youth he attended the Winchester School, from which he went to the University of Oxford, obtaining a fellowship at New College. In 1794 he was elected fellow of Winchester College; in 1809 was appointed regius professor of divinity; and in September, 1813, succeeded Dr. Randolph as bishop of London. On the decease of Dr. Manners Sutton, in 1828, he became archbishop of Canterbury. He died Feb. 11, 1848. Besides being president of many charitable institutions, he was a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and a member of the Royal Society of Literature. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1848, p. 149.

Howman, John, an English Catholic divine, was born at Feckenham, Worcestershire, about 1516, of poor parentage. He was educated by the Benedictines of Evesham, and afterwards at Gloucester College, Oxford; became chaplain to the bishop of Worcester, afterwards to Bonner, and vigorously opposed the Reformation in England. In 1549 he was imprisoned in the Tower, but was released on the accession of Mary, who made him dean of Westminster. Elizabeth offered him the archbishopric of Canterbury on condition of becoming a Protestant, but he refused, and was again imprisoned in 1560. Being released in 1563, he finally retired to the Isle of Ely, and died at Wisbeach in 1585, leaving an account of his Conference with Jane Grey (Lond. 1554, 1626), besides some Sermons and a few controversial pieces.

Hoyer, Franz Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in Holstein, July 20, 1639. He studied at Helmstädt and Giessen, and in 1665 third preacher at Norden, East Frisia, in 1683 pastor primarius, and died May 20, 1699, leaving De Usu Logices in Theologia (Giessen, 1660);—De Usu Metaphysica in Theologia (eod.);—De Principio Theologia (eod.);—De Deo (eod.);—De Quæstione Ubi nam Ecclesia Lutheri fuerit ante Lutherum (1664), besides writing numerous ascetical works. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hoyt, Nathan, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Gilmanton, Belknap Co., N. H., Feb. 27, 1793. He was educated at Cambridge, Mass., but did not enter college on account of ill-health. He was licensed by Albany Presbytery in 1823, and ordained by the same presbytery in 1826. He first labored in Troy, N. Y., as a city missionary, and on his removal to South Carolina became pastor of the Beech Island Church. His next pastorate was in Washington, Ga., and his third and last was in Athens, where he labored with much zeal and efficiency for nearly thirty-six years. He died July 12, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 437.

Hoyt, Ova Phelps, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Haven, Vt., May 26, 1800. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1821, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1824. Soon after he was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Potsdam, N. Y., where he remained until 1830, then took the agency of the American Home Missionary Society, and resided in Utica. While there he was editor of the Western Recorder for a year and a half. He was stated supply at Cambridge in 1835; at Detroit, Mich., in 1839; at Kalamazoo, in 1840; district secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, in 1852; supply at Elkhart, Ia., in 1860; and from 1863 resided in Kalamazoo, Mich., until his death, Feb. 11, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 299.

Hreidmar, in Norse mythology. When the Asas journeyed through the world, Odin, Hæner, and Loke came to a river with a waterfall. There they found a viper, devouring a salmon. Loke killed the viper, and it was brought to the village, where they sought a night's lodging of the rustic Hreidmar, who was a powerful sorcerer. Hardly had he seen the viper, when he called his two sons, Tofner and Reigen, and told them that the strangers had killed Otter (viper), their brother. Hreidmar immediately went to the Asas, who promised to pay him as much money in reparation as he desired. The sorcerer tore off the skin from the killed viper, and ordered it to be filled with red gold. Odin sent Loke into the land of the black elves to seek gold. There he found the dwarf Andwari, who gave him all the money he had in his possession. But the elf still had a small ring on his hand, which Loke ordered him to deliver with the gold. Andwari obeyed, saying, "The ring will be the death of its possessor." The hide was filled, and the ring laid on top, and thus the Asas were free from all debt. Hreidmar's sons wanted a share of the gold, but he refused them. They consulted with each other and slew their father. Now Reigen thought he might take one half, but Tofnir forbid him, ordering him to go off, or the same fate should befall him which came upon his father. Reigen fled to king Hialfrek, and became his smith. Tofnir changed himself into a snake, and guarded the gold. The smith found an avenger in Sigurd. He told the latter where Tofnir was. Sigurd dug a ditch near by where Tofnir was accustomed to get water, and waited there for him, and finally slew him. Sigurd then went to Reigen and killed him. Next he rode to Tofnir's dwelling, and took all the gold along with him. Sigurd then came to the Hinderalps; there he found a beautiful woman, who called herself Hildur, but whose real name was Brynhildur. He married her and rode to king Giuki, who had two sons, Gunnar and Högni, and one daughter, Gudrun; the latter he married, and entirely forgot Hildur. She incited Gunnar and Högni to murder Sigurd; but they, being bound together by an oath, could not become traitors to him; so the third brother, Guttorm, killed him while asleep, with a sword. King Atli, the brother of Brynhildur, married Gudrun, the widow of Sigurd. He invited Gunnar and Högni, but was anxious for their money. They hid it, whereupon he made war upon them, caught them, and killed both. Shortly after, Gudrun, to avenge the murder of her brothers, killed two of Atli's children, and gave the king some nectar to drink from the skulls of his own children. Thus eventually the whole generation of Nidlungar was annihilated.

Hrugner, in Norse mythology. Thor, the mightiest of the Asas, had gone on a journey to kill magicians and giants. Odin rode on his wonderful horse Sleipner to Jotunheim, and thus came to the mightiest and most frightful of giants, Hrugner. Odin began to boast of his horse, and Hrugner, to punish him, pursued him on his own horse, Guldfaxi. Odin, however, had such a start of Hrugner that the latter could not overtake him, although he followed him to the walls of Asgard. Here the gods invited him to their drinking-bout, which invitation he accepted. He became drunk, and began to tell what wondrous things he intended to do. The Asas, tired of his boasting, mentioned Thor's name, and suddenly the mighty hero appeared, raised his frightful mǫlner, and inquired who had invited the boasting giant. Hrugner argued with Thor that it would be small honor to him to kill him unarmed, and challenged Thor to a duel on the boundary of Griotunagarder. This Thor accepted. The giants in Jotunheim now made a monstrous man of clay, and not finding a heart strong enough, they took out that of a horse, and called him Mokkurkalfi. Hrugner also armed himself. His head, heart, and club were all of stone. Thus armed, he waited for Thor. Thor came with thunder and lightning, and threw his hammer at the giant. The latter threw his club at Thor. The two frightful weapons struck each other in the air. The stone club burst, a part falling on the earth, the other striking Thor on his head and stunning him. The hammer of Thor shattered the head of Hrugner so that he fell, his monstrous foot resting on Thor's neck. The huge man of clay fell at Thialfi's hand. None of the Asas could remove Hrugner's foot from Thor's neck until Magni, a son of Thor, came and lifted off the foot without any exertion. Thor presented him with the giant's horse, Guldfaxi.

Hu, in the mythology of the Celts, was the supreme god in Britain. He seems to have been thought very noble, for the attributes given him point to a being such as can be represented only by a pure religion. The Celts have a myth that, at the flood, he pulled the monster who caused the flood out of the water, and thus dried the earth.

Hubbard, Bela, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born in Guilford, Conn., Aug. 27, 1739. In 1758 he graduated from Yale College, and afterwards studied theology at King's College, New York city. On Feb. 5, 1764, he was ordained deacon in the King's Chapel, London, and presbyter in St. James's Church on the 19th of the same month. Returning to America, he officiated at Guilford and Killingworth until 1767, when the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts appointed him missionary to New Haven and West Haven, Conn. Between these places he divided his labors equally until the Revolution; after that, until 1791, he gave only one fourth of his time to West Haven, and from that time onward his services were confined almost entirely to New Haven. Although a royalist during the Revolution, he exercised so much discretion that he was not seriously embarrassed in performing his duties. Until peace was declared, in 1783, he continued to receive a salary of £60 yearly from the society which employed him, but after that time he became entirely dependent upon his parishes. Rev. Henry Whitlock became his assistant minister in 1811—Trinity Church being the name of his parish. Dr. Hubbard died in New Haven, Dec. 6, 1812. He was not considered a brilliant man, but was distinguished for sound judgment. His style of preaching, though not animated, was earnest. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 234.

Hubbard, Benjamin H., D.D., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in 1815. He was converted in early youth, licensed to preach in 1835, and shortly afterwards entered the Memphis Conference. His appointments were, Hatchie Circuit, Gallatin and Cairo, Huntsville, Ala.; Columbia, Tenn.; Trenton, Jackson, Somerville, and Athens, Ala. At the last-mentioned place he was connected with the Ten-ness Conference Female Institute as president till 1852, when he was transferred to Jackson, Tenn., in connection with the Jackson Female Institute, where he died, May 2, 1853. He was a fine scholar and excellent preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1853, p. 462.

Hubbard, Isaac G., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, for many years was rector of the church in Manchester (St. Michael's), Conn., until 1866, when he removed to Claremont, N. H., and subsequently became rector of Trinity Church in that town. At the time of his death, March 30, 1879, he had in charge Union Church, West Claremont. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 171.

Hüber, Fortunatus, general definitor of the order of the Franciscans and provincial in Bavaria, who died at Munich, Feb. 12, 1706, is the author of, Menologium Franciscanum (Munich, 1698, 2 vols. fol.):—Chronicon Triplez Trium Ordinum S. Francisci per Germaniam. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 718; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Huber, Johann Nepomuk, a Roman Catholic theologian and philosopher of Germany, was born Aug. 18, 1830, at Munich, where he also studied theology and philosophy. In 1859 he was appointed professor in extraordinary and in 1864 ordinary professor of philosophy and pedagogics. His first important theological work, Philosophie der Kirchenräter (Munich, 1859), was placed on the Index, and as he did not recant, and occasionally spoke for the right of free investigation, the ultramontane party prevented his influence among the students of theology. He now betook himself to speak and to write against ultramontanism. The famous work against infallibility, Janus, der Papat und der Concil (Leipzig, 1869), Engl. transl. Janus, the Pope and the Council (Boston, 1869), is as much his work as that of Döllinger. Under the name of Quirin, he published, from 1869, in the Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung, his Römische Briefe vom Concil. Against Hergenröther's Antijanus, he wrote Das Papatthum und der Staat. The most important work of this period is his Darstellung des Jesuitenordens nach seiner Verfassung und Doctrin, Wirklichkeit u. Geschichte (Berlin, 1873). He also defended the principles of Christianity against materialism and the destructive tendencies related to it. Thus he wrote in 1870 a criticism on Darwin's theory, and in 1875 against Häckel, in his Zur Kritik moderner Schöpfungsgeschichte. The Alte und Neue Glaube of Strauss found in him a severe philosophical critic in 1873, as did Hartmann the philosopher, Des Unbewussten, against whom he wrote Die religiöse Frage (1875), and Der Pessimismus (1876). Huber died March 19, 1879, at Munich, to the great sorrow of the Old Catholics, whose most gifted leader he was. Besides the writings already mentioned, he published, Die cartesianischen Beweise vom Dasein Gottes (Augsburg, 1854):—Johannes Scotus Eriyena (Munich, 1861). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 590; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zieringiebl, Johannes Huber (Gotha, 1881). (B. P.)

Hübner, JOHANNES, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 17, 1668, at Tyrgau, Upper Lusatia. He studied at Leipzig, was in 1694 rector at Merseburg, in 1711 at Hamburg, and died May 21, 1731. He is best known as the author of Zwimal 52 auserlesene biblische Historien, which were published in more than one hundred editions, and were translated into other languages. This biblical history is also largely used in German parochial and Sabbath schools. (B. P.)

Hübsch, ABRAHAM, a Jewish rabbi, was born in Hungary in 1831. He studied at Prague, where he also acted for some time as rabbi-preacher of the Melitz synagogue. In 1866 he was called to New York by the congregation Ahavath-Chesed, and died in October, 1884. Hübsch is known as the author of חמשת מגילות עם הרמב"ם, i. e. Die fünf Megillot, etc. (Prague, 1866). (B. P.)

Huddesford, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, who died in 1772, was principal of Trinity College, Oxford. He published Catalogus Librorum Manuscriptorum Viri Clarissimi Antonio a Wood (1761). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hueiteoquixqui, in Mexican mythology, was the high-priest. His word was not only advisory, but decisive. He also crowned the king. He opened the breast of the sacrifice, and tore out its heart.

Hueitequilhuilitl, in Mexican religion, was one of the three great festivals, celebrated by human sacrifices, in honor of the great mother of the earth, Centeotl. It took place on the last day of the eighth month.

Huematsin, a Mexican sage, lived at Tezcuco in the 7th century, and was considered a doctor by excellence of that Athens of the New World. To him has been attributed the composition of Teomaztli (the divine book), a sort of encyclopædia, which gave information, it is said, of the emigrations of the race of the Aztecs after their departure from the borders of Asia until their arrival upon the plateau of Anahuac, specifying the various halts which the invading nation was obliged to make on the borders of the Rio Gila. It has been affirmed that the Teomaztli was among the Aztec books that were condemned to the fire, without being examined, by the bishop of Mexico, Zumarraga. It is possible that, in point of mythology and history, the importance of these hieroglyphic collections has been exaggerated, and so it is hardly possible now to estimate the extent of the literary losses which Mexico suffered. If the work of Huematsin had been preserved to our time, we might have some information to establish the real signification of the Mexican hieroglyphics. When we remember that the palace of Tezcuco embraced certain departments intended only for the doctors who occupied themselves with special studies, and recall what has been told of the great treasures which were stored up both at Mexico and at Tezcuco, and consecrated exclusively to the study of the kingdom of nature, it is difficult to limit the office of Huematsin to that of a simple theorist, who developed barbarian traditions and fantastic ideas. This learned Aztec seems to have derived his learning from close observation. See Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hughes, John, a Wesleyan Methodist minister, nephew of John Thomas, vicar of Caerleon, Monmouthshire, was born at Brecon, County Brecon, May 18, 1776. He was educated at the grammar-school at Brecon, under the care of Rev. David Griffiths. Dr. Coke and other distinguished persons received their education at the same place and under the same master. In 1790 Hughes was converted under a sermon by John McKersy, and joined the Methodist Society. His parents designed him for the Established Church, but young Hughes could not conscientiously enter its ministry. In 1793 he became a resident with his uncle at Caerleon. In 1796 he was appointed by the Conference to the Cardiff Circuit. In 1800 he and Owen Davies were appointed the first missionaries in North Wales. In 1805 he was superintendent of the Welsh Mission in Liverpool. His remaining circuits were, Swansea, Bristol, Glasgow, Northwich and Warrington, Macclesfield, Newcastle-under-Lyne, etc. In 1832 he became a supernumerary at Knutsford, Cheshire. He died May 15, 1843. Hughes deliberately declined a life of ease and honor, and, contrary to the wishes of his friends, chose the toils and privations of the Methodist ministry. From this course he never swerved. He was a most diligent worker, producing, amid the pressing duties of his itinerancy, works of great and lasting value. In 1803 he published a new edition of the Welsh Hymn-Book; he translated part of Dr. Coke's Commentary on the New Testament (1809); while at Macclesfield, 1813, he wrote A Plea for Religious Liberty, a reply to Joseph Cook's ("Civis") The Danger of Schism, pamphlets which were the result of a controversy respecting the Sunday-schools originated by David Simpson, and which were now carried on by the Methodists; Horæ Britannicæ, or Studies in Early British History (Lond. 1818, 2 vols. 8vo), a work which received the encomiums of Dr. Thomas Burgess, bishop of Salisbury, then bishop of St. David's, of Sharon Turner, in a letter to the author, of Price, of David M'Nicoll, and of the Eclectic Review. It embodied the results of many years' antiquarian research, and is a work of great value. Hughes also wrote, but did not publish, a work entitled Historical Triads; Consisting of Memorials of Remarkable Persons and Occurrences among the Cymry, translated from the Welsh, with notes and illustrations. The manuscript has been deposited in the British Museum. He received several prizes, premiums, and medals from the Cambrian Society for his literary productions. His last work was the Memoir and Remains of Fussell, which he finished in 1839. See Robert Jackson, Memoir in Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, March, 1847, p. 209 sq.; Minutes of the British Conference, 1843; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, Sept. 1834, p. 669; Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Methodism, ii, 359, 361, 393 sq.

Hughes, Obadiah, D.D., an English Presbyterian clergyman, descended from a distinguished Puritan family, was born at Canterbury in 1695. He completed a liberal education in Scotland. He was first assistant minister, then co-pastor at Maid Lane, Southwark, and lecturer at Old Jewry. In 1721 he married the sister of the lord mayor of London, and used the riches she brought him in doing good. He was one of the preachers at Salters' Hall in 1734 against popery. He preached the funeral sermon on the death of Rev. Samuel Say, in 1743, at Westminster, and the church there called him to succeed Mr. Say in the pastorate. He suffered much from the death of friends, and himself died Dec. 10, 1751. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iv, 96.

Hugo (or Hew), a Scotch prelate, was a monk of Arbroath, and bishop of Dunkeld in the tenth year of king Alexander II. He was witness to a charter by king William, dated at Forfar. He died in January, 1214. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 78.

Hugo, a cardinal, bishop of OSTIA, was born in France, and probably, as the authors of the Histoire Littéraire assert, in the diocese of Beauvais. He became at first a Cistercian monk, then abbot of Trois Fontaines, in the diocese of Châlons. Pope Eugenius made him cardinal about 1151, in spite of the opposition of St. Bernard, who was sorry to lose such a man. Hugo died in 1158. To him are attributed some commentaries on the Old and New Test., also a book on the miracles of pope Eugenius. But these indications seem to be conjectural, and it may even be supposed that they are erroneous. However, there is one of his letters which has been written on occasion of the death of Eugenius. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hugues, THEODOR, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died at Celle, July 22, 1878, doctor of theology, is the author of, Erbauliche und belehrende Betrachtungen über das Gebet des Herrn (Celle, 1832);—Das Verfahren der reformirten Synode Niedersachsens, etc. (Hamburg, eod.);—Unionsgedanken (1843);—Entwurf einer vollständigen gottesdienstlichen Ordnung zum Gebrauch für evangelisch-reformirte Gemeinden (1846);—Die Conföderation der reformirten Kirchen in Niedersachsen, Geschichte und Urkunden (1873). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 593. (B. P.)

Huitzilopochtli (also Mexitli), in Mexican mythology, is the supreme deity of the nation, the blood-thirsty god of war. The two sons of a widow, Coatlicue, observing that their mother was pregnant, and being afraid of the disgrace of an illegitimate birth, resolved to murder her. Just as they were in the act of doing so, Huitzilopochtli sprang out of her body, a god of war, carrying in his left hand a shield, and in his right a spear. He soon conquered his mother's murderers, and pillaged their houses. When the Aztecs left their dwelling-places, travelling for one hundred and sixty-five days, to find a more southern country, they were directed by this god, whose idol they carried before them, to the valley of Mexico. Here they built a wooden temple, which later became the site of one of stone. In this temple his image stood, frightful and terrible. The most horrible sacrifices were made in honor of this god. Hundreds of slaves and prisoners were offered to him. At the dedication of his temple, seventy thousand human beings were sacrificed, by opening the breast when yet alive, tearing out the heart, and offering it to the idol on a golden spoon. See MEXICAN RELIGION.

Hujukhu, in the mythology of the Caribbeans, is the heaven which lies above the visible heaven. There are all earthly joys in tenfold greater measure. The trees bear better fruit, the fields flowers more beautiful. Fishing is easier and less dangerous. Every man has many wives who care for him. Sickness and death are not known there.

Hukkuk. Yakuk, the modern representation of this site, is laid down on the Ordnance Map three and three quarter miles north-west of the shore of the Sea of Galilee (from Khan Minyeh), and is described in the accompanying Memoirs (i, 364, 420) as a "stone-built village, containing about two hundred Moslems; surrounded by arable land, and situated at the foot of a hill. There is a good spring, and many cisterns are found in the village. Guérin says that, in 1875, the village was reduced to about twenty houses. There are traces of ancient remains at this village, and a rock-cut birkeh [pool] with steps leading down to it, also cut out of the rock."

Huldrer, in Norse mythology, are the mild, womanly elves, or women of the woods, who are supposed to be seen in the mountains of snow in Norway. See HOLDA.

Huller, GEORG, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1812. He took holy orders in 1836, was sub-regent at Aschaffenburg in 1839, in 1865 cathedral-dean at Würzburg, and died June 22, 1870. He published Die Idee des Göttlichen in der Wissenschaft und die sogenannte freie Wissenschaft (Würzburg, 1867). After his death were published three volumes of his Volkspredigten, edited by Joseph Huller (Augsburg, 1871-73). (B. P.)

Hülsemann, WILHELM, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born March 7, 1781, in Westphalia, and died at Iserlohn, Feb. 1, 1865, superintendent and doctor of philosophy. He published, Die preussische Kirchen-agende in Hinsicht auf die evangelische Kirche überhaupt (Essen, 1825);—Evangelische Hauspostille (Düsseldorf, 1827, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1844);—Die Geschichte der Auferweckung des Lazarus (Leipzig, 1835);—Christus und die Sünderin am Jacobbrunnen (1837);—Predigten und Gesänge über die Episteln der Sonn- und Festtage des Kirchenjahres (1838, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 275, 338, 358; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 594; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 66 sq. (B. P.)

Hulsius, ANTON, a Dutch divine, was born in 1615, at Kilda, in the duchy of Bergen. In 1644 he was preacher and professor of Hebrew at Breda, afterwards professor of theology and of Hebrew at Leyden, and died Feb. 27, 1685. He wrote, Disputatio Epistolica cum Jacobo Abendana super Haggai ii, 9 (Leyden, 1666);—Abrabanelis Comm. in LXX Heptomachibus Danielis cum Consultatione (1653);—*Authentia Codicis Ebraei Sacri Contra Criminationes Ia. Hulsius, Heinrich, a Reformed theologian of Holland, was born Oct. 10, 1654. He studied at different universities, was in 1670 doctor of theology, in 1681 professor at Duisburg, and died March 29, 1723. He wrote, Summa Theologiae, seu Liber de Molitione et Opere et Sabbatho Dei (Leyden, 1683):—Vita Ithiel, Uchal et Samuel sive in Ultima Pursemitas Salomonis Capita Commentarius Propheticus (1693):—De Vallibus Prophetarum Sacris (Amsterdam, 1701):—*Comment. in Israelis Privilegiis ac bona sub V. Humphrey, Heman, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Simsbury, Conn., March 26, 1779. He graduated from Yale College in 1805; was pastor of the Congregational Church in Fairfield from 1807 to 1817; in Pittsfield, Mass., from 1817 to 1823; president of Amherst College from 1823 to 1845; and then retired to Pittsfield, where he died, April 13, 1861. Dr. Humphrey was the author of, Tour in France, etc. (2 vols.):—Domestic Education:—Letters of a Son in the Ministry:—Life and Writings of Professor W. Fiske:—Life of T. H. Gollaudet:—Sketches of the History of Revivals. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1861, p. 542.

Humphrey, Zephaniah Moore, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, son of Rev. Heman Humphrey, D.D., was born at Amherst, Mass., Aug. 30, 1824. He graduated from Amherst College in 1843; studied at Union Theological Seminary in 1846 and 1847; graduated from Andover Theological Seminary in 1849; preached in Milwaukee, Wis., one year thereafter; was ordained in October, 1850, pastor at Racine; became pastor of the Congregational Church in Milwaukee in 1856; of a Presbyterian Church in Chicago, Ill., in 1859; of Calvary Church, Philadelphia, Pa., in 1868; professor in Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati, O., in 1875; and died there, Nov. 13, 1881. He was moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in 1871. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 55; Trien. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 180.

Humphreys, Hector, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Canton, Conn., June 8, 1797. He pursued his studies at the academy in Westfield, and graduated in 1818 from Yale College. His purpose was to enter the ministry of the Congregational Church; but, having abandoned this project, he joined the Protestant Episcopal communion, and was admitted, after due preparation, to the bar. When Washington College was established, he was elected its first professor of ancient languages. His predilection for the ministry led him to ordination, but he continued to discharge the duties of his professorship until 1831, when he was appointed president of St. John's College, Annapolis, Md. He died there, Jan. 25, 1857. Although familiar with all branches of literature, he devoted himself particularly to natural science, and he published many articles urging the application of chemistry to agriculture. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1857, p. 146.

Hundeiker, Johann Peter, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1751, and died Jan. 28, 1836. He published, Häusliche Gottesverehrung für christliche Familien (Hildesheim, 1784, and later):—Strahlen des Lichts aus den heiligen Hallen des Tempels der Wahrheit und Erkenntnis (Leipzig, 1824):—Häusliches Festbuch für gebildete Genossen des heiligen Abendmahls (1821, 2 vols.):—Weihgeschenk. Erweckungen zur Andacht in den heiligen Tugen der Einsegnung und der ersten Abendmahlsfeier (1823; 2d ed. 1844). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 330, 332, 335, 367, 375; Zuchold, *Bibl. Hundeshausen, Karl Bernhard, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 10, 1810, at Friedewald, Hesse. He studied at Giessen and Halle, commenced his academical career at the former place in 1830, and accepted a call in 1834 as professor in the newly founded university of Berne. In 1846 his anonymous work, Der deutsche Protestantismus, seine Vergangenheit und seine heutigen Lebensfragen, appeared, and fell like a flash of lightning in that troubled period. "This remarkable work," says Schaff (in his Germany, its Universities, Theology, and Religion, Philadelphia, 1857, p. 401), "is a manly and bold, yet well-meant and patriotic exposure of the religious, political, and social diseases of modern Germany, and represents, almost prophetically, the peculiar crisis which preceded the outbreak of the political earthquake of 1848. The author develops, first, the nature and object of Protestantism in its original form, then he traces the rise and power of recent anti-Christianity in Germany, its causes and effects, following it out even to the moral destitution of German emigrants in foreign countries; and finally he discusses the movements and questions which agitated the country in the last ten years before the revolution. He accounts for the development of modern infidelity in the bosom of German Protestantism, to a considerable extent, by the political reaction since the Congress of Vienna, which crippled the free motion of national life, violently suppressed all political discontent, and indirectly forced the bitter hostility to the existing order of things to vent itself intellectually upon the Church and Christianity. He thinks that a healthy religious life of a nation can only unfold itself on the soil of rational political freedom, as the example of England and the United States prove better than all arguments." This work made Hundeshagen's reputation, and he was at once called to Heidelberg as professor of New Testament exegesis and Church history, where he continued to labor for twenty years (1847-67). In 1867 he accepted a call to Bonn, where he spent his last years in peaceful and friendly relations with his colleagues, although a great sufferer in body. He rejoined in the restoration of the German empire in 1870, and greeted the hour of his departure with Christian fortitude and joyfulness. He died June 2, 1873. Hundeshagen was one of the most prominent and original theologians which the Reformed Church of Germany has given in this century to the service of the Evangelical Church. His peculiar importance consisted in this, that in his own way he showed how certain features of the Reformed Church might be advantageously applied to the living Christianity of the day. He emphasized the ethical principle in Protestantism over against a mere dogmatic or critical intellectualism, and laid stress upon the social element in the Church, which was languishing by reason of its amalgamation with the State. Besides the work mentioned above, Hundeshagen published, De Agobardi Archiepiscopi Lugdunensis Vita et Scriptis (Giessen, 1831):—Epistolas Aliquot Ineditas Martini Bucerii, Joannis Calvini, Theodori Bezae Aliorumque ad Historiam Ecclesiasticam Magnas Britannias, Edidit (Berne, 1840):—Ueber den Einfluss des Calvinismus auf die Ideen von Staat und staatsbürgerlicher Freiheit (1842):—Die Konflikte des Zwinglianismus, Lutherthums und Calvinismus in der bernischen Landeskirche von 1522-1558 (1843):—Die Bekenntnis-Grundlage der vereinigten evangelischen Kirche in Baden (1851):—Ueber die Natur und die geschichtliche Entwicklung der Humanitätsidee in ihrem Verhältniss zu Staat und Kirche (1853):—Der Weg zu Christo (end.). A collection of his essays and shorter writings was published by professor Christlieb (Gotha, 1874, 2 vols.). See Christlieb, K. B. Hundeshagen, eine Lebensskizze (Gotha, 1873); Riehm, in *Theolog. Hungari, ANTON, a Roman Catholic priest and writer of Germany, was born at Mayence in 1809, and died Dec. 17, 1881, at Rödelheim, near Frankfort-on-the-Main. He published, Christliche Reden an Sonn- und Festtagen (Mayence, 1838):—Festtagspredigten (Frankfort, 1841):—Christodora (1840):—Gute Aussaat, Erzählungen für katholische Christen (1867):—Marien-Preis, erbauliche Unterhaltungen (1866):—Tempel der Heiligen zur Ehre Gottes (7th ed. 1867):—Muster-Predigten der katholischen Kanzel-Beredamkeit (1873-79, 12 parts). Hungarian Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. The Benedictine missionaries, who, at the beginning of the 11th century, brought Christianity to the Magyars, transmitted to them also a translation of the Psalms, the gospels and epistles, as essential parts for the divine service. In the life of Margareth, daughter of king Bela IV, who died in 1271, we are told that she read the Psalms and the history of the passion of the Saviour in the Hungarian dialect—Hungarico idiomate (see Pray, Vita S. Elisabethæ et B. Margar. 1770). In consequence of the many invasions made into Hungary, only fragments of a later time have been preserved. Thus we find parts of the Old Test., translated by the Franciscans Thomas and Valentinus, in a Vienna codex, written between 1336 and 1444 (according to Révany, Antiq. Lit. Hung. Pesth, 1803, in the year 1450). The translation is made from the Vulgate. The four gospels are preserved in a Munich codex. Both were edited by Döbrentei, Régi magyar nyelvemlékek (1838), i, 3 sq.; (1842), iii, 17 sq. Psalms, Song of Solomon, and the gospels are found in a codex of the episcopal library at Stuhlweissenburg (specimens in Toldy, Magyar N. Irodalom Története, Pesth, 1862, i, 247). A second complete translation of the Bible was made by L. Báthory (died 1456); it is supposed that this translation is preserved in the codex Jordánszky at Grau. This codex was written in 1519, and contains Exodus vi-Judges, and all of the New Test. with the exception of the Pauline epistles. The first printed edition of the Pauline epistles, by B. Kornjáthy, was published at Cracow in 1533; the gospels, by Gabriel Pannonius Pesthinus, at Vienna in 1536; the complete New Test., by John Sylvester, was published in 1541; another in 1574. A translation of the entire Bible, from the original, which the Jesuit Stephen Szántó (Latin Arator) prepared towards the end of the 16th century, was never printed, whereas the translation from the Vulgate, made by the Jesuit George Kaldi (Szent Biblia, az egyke Kereszt-tényeiben bevált régi deák betűből, Vienna, 1626), is still in use among the Roman Catholics, and was often reprinted (Tyrnau, 1732; Buda, 1783; Erlau, 1862-65; the latter edition revised in accordance with modern orthography; see Dankó, De S. Scriptura, Ejszq. Interpret. Comm. Vienna, 1867, p. 243 sq.). A revision of Kaldi's New Test. was undertaken by a Reformed pastor in Hungary, in 1869, in behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The first Protestant edition of the whole Bible appeared at Visoly, near Güns, in 1589. This is the present authorized version of Hungary. The translation was made from the originals, compared with the Vulgate and several other Latin versions, by Gaspard Caroli, or Karoli, a Magyar by birth, pastor of the Church at Güns, and dean of the Brethren of the Valley of Kaschau. He had studied at Wittenberg, where he had imbibed the principles of the Reformation. The printing was done at Visoly, where a printing-office was established for that purpose by count Stephen Bathory. The sheets, as they passed through the press, were corrected by Albert Molnar, subsequently regent of the college at Oppenheim. He afterwards subjected the whole to a careful revision, and published an improved edition at Hanau in 1608, under the title, Biblia, az-az: Istenek O és Ujj Testamentomában fog- laltatott egész Szent írás, Magyar nyelvre fordítottatott Károly Gáspár által. Molnar subsequently published other editions of the Bible, and separate editions of the New Test. The edition of 1608 is the more interesting, since it is accompanied with a Magyar translation of the Heidelberg catechism, the liturgy of the Hungarian churches, and a metrical version of the Psalms.

When the different editions were exhausted, another revision of the Hungarian Bible was undertaken by count Stephen Bethlen D'Íktar, brother to prince Gabriel Bethlen. He assembled a number of learned men to prepare the work, and established a printing-press at Warasdin. In 1657 the revision was completed, and printing was commenced; but in 1660, when the city of Warasdin was taken by the Turks, almost half of the copies were lost or destroyed. The remaining copies were saved, and taken to Claudiopolis, or Koloswar, in Transylvania, where the edition was completed in 1661. Another edition (the sixth) of the Bible was published at Amsterdam in 1684-85, by N. K. M. Totfalusi, by whom a separate edition of the New Test. and Psalms was printed during the same year. The seventh edition of the Bible was published at Cassel in 1704, edited by John Ingebrand. In 1730 an edition was published at Utrecht, Szent Biblia, az-az: Istenek O és Ujj Testamentomában foglaltatott egész Szent írás, Magyar nyelvre fordítottatott Károly Gáspár, which was followed by others in 1737 and 1794. In Basle also an edition was published in 1751, and at Leipsic in 1776.

Another revision of the Hungarian Bible, which, perhaps, ought rather to be regarded as a new translation, was executed by Dr. Comarin, pastor of Debreczin, but he died before it could be committed to press, and the MS. was sent for publication to the celebrated Vittinga. Perhaps the edition published in Holland in 1716-17 was from this MS. The Jesuits prevented its circulation, and seized and destroyed 3000 copies.

In 1812 a Bible society was formed in Presburg, but with the exception of an edition of the Bible in 1823, no editions of the Hungarian Scriptures appear to have been published by that society. In 1814 Dr. Pinkerton found at Utrecht upwards of 2000 copies of the authorized Hungarian Bible, belonging to the above-mentioned edition of 1794. These copies were purchased by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and transmitted to Presburg for circulation.

When, in 1837, Hungary became accessible to the operations of the Bible Society, the publication of the Scriptures was commenced in Hungary itself, and the total number of Hungarian Bibles and Testaments printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society up to March 31, 1884, was 561,810.

As Caroli's Bible abounds in archaic expressions, some of which sound rude and coarse to modern ears, the British and Foreign Bible Society has of late made arrangements to secure a faithful revision. A small number of a revised New Test. was published in 1876 with the intention of eliciting the criticisms of Hungarian scholars, with a view to the settlement of the text. As the text has been fixed, the British and Foreign Bible Society published, in 1883, an edition of 10,000 New Testas, as revised by bishop Filo. See Bible of Every Land, p. 825. (B. P.)

Hungarian-Wendish Version. See WENDISH-HUNGARIAN VERSION, s. v.; SLAVONIC VERSIONS. By way of supplement we add that an edition of the New Test. and Psalms has been published in 1882, with a slight revision, limited to orthographical and syntactical errors, made by pastor Berke. (B. P.)

Huns. For a general description of this people and their history see vol. iv. It is the design in this place to pay some attention to particulars which are merely alluded to in the former article, and especially to examine the question of Attila's influence upon Christendom.

The name Huns (Humi, Ὀύννοι, Χοῖνοι) is a comparatively recent one in history, and its derivation is altogether uncertain. The usual theory, that it is only the Chinese Hun-jo transferred into the dialects of the West, is not so well established as to make it impossible, or even unlikely, that Chinese writers may have first found the name used by Byzantine historians, and appropriated it from them. It is evidently a collective name, and designates a people composed of many distinct tribes, which are mentioned in some detail by early writers.

This people belonged to the Turkish family, and can best be accounted for, so far as that portion which enters into European history is concerned, by regarding it as included among the Scythian tribes of which the later classics make mention. An Asiatic branch, whose western limits did not reach beyond the modern Turkestan, is wholly outside the scope of our inquiry. The Huns of history are first discovered as occupants of the district about the Caspian Sea, lying to the north and north-east of the Alans, who occupied the Caucasus and adjoining regions. Emerging thence, they engaged in a bloody struggle with the Alans, whom they defeated and afterward incorporated with their armies; and the allied nations then precipitated themselves on the Goths, whose territories lay beyond and contiguous to those of the Alans, and, by forcing them from their homes, produced the general irruption of barbarians into the Roman empire. In the revolt of the Goths against the empire the Huns crossed the Danube as allies of their recent enemies, and though they were for a time less conspicuous than the Goths, they were yet able to impose a tribute, under their king Rouas, upon the Romans. Bleda and Attila, the sons of Mundzuk and nephews of Rouas, succeeded the latter in 433; and after the death of Bleda, said by some authorities to have been caused by his brother, while others deny the charge, Attila became the acknowledged head of the vast hordes collected under or affiliated with the Hunnish name, and entered on a career of conquest and diplomacy which made him the most noted personage of his age, and under the embellishing hand of legend and myth has secured to him and his followers a notable place in the recollections of the world for all time. Seven hundred thousand warriors, Huns, Alans, Avars, Bulgarians, Acatzirs, and many other tribes are said to have followed him into battle. An expedition into Persia for plunder is assumed by some writers as his first distinct enterprise; but history gives clear evidence of but three campaigns conducted by Attila, all of them European wars.

1. An invasion of the Eastern or Byzantine empire in 441, in which he defeated the emperor Theodosius II in successive battles, ravaged Illyricum, Thrace, and Greece, and after several years of desultory warfare conquered a peace in 447, which gave him possession of a territory in Thrace. Having devastated the country south of the Danube, he accepted an indemnity from the emperor, and renounced all claim to its control. In addition, he exacted, however, an annual tribute and the return of deserters from his army.

2. An incursion into Gaul in 450, during which he took the towns of Treves, Metz, Rheims, Tongres, Arras, Laon, St. Quentin, Strasburg, etc. Orleans, which was the objective point of the campaign, was relieved by the Roman general Ætius when the gates had already been opened to the Huns, and pillage was beginning. Attila thereupon retreated precipitately to Châlons on the Marne, and was there attacked by the united armies of Ætius and Theodoric, the Visigoth king, and defeated in a terrible battle in which historians report a slaughter of from 252,000 to 300,000 men—the last great battle ever fought by the Romans. Returning to his possessions on the Danube, he prepared for a new campaign, which he undertook.

3. In 452. The ostensible reason alleged for his incursion of that year into Italy was the refusal of the emperor Valentinian III to confer upon him the hand of his sister Honoria, accompanied by a dowry of half the empire. He crossed the Julian Alps and laid siege to Aquileia, then the second city in Italy, and at the end of three months overcame its obstinate resistance. A century later the historian Jornandes could scarcely trace the ruins of the place. Other towns were sacked, e. g. Milan, Pavia, Parma, and quite certainly also Verona, Mantua, Brescia, Bergamo, and Cremona. The whole of Lombardy was ravaged, and Attila was preparing to march on Rome when an embassy from that city, headed by Pope Leo the Great, succeeded in persuading him to a peaceful evacuation of Italy. Retiring into Pannonia by way of Augsburg, which he pillaged, he consoled himself by adding a new wife, Ildico, Hilda, or Mycolth, to the large number which he already possessed; but on the morning after this marriage he was found dead, having ruptured a blood-vessel or been foully dealt with, A.D. 453. His kingdom fell to pieces almost as soon as the great king was dead; the different nations which had followed his banner became alienated from each other, and separated, some to serve in the armies of the empire, others to seek alliance with tribes in the north and east, which were of similar race and character with themselves.

The effect of the Hunnish incursions was indirectly beneficial to Christianity. The Burgundians, for example, when threatened by Attila's uncle, Oktar or Ouptar, submitted to be baptized, in the hope that they might thus acquire power to resist the foe. The deliverance of Troyes in the Châlons campaign by the supplications of bishop Lupus, and of Rome in the following year by those of Leo the Great, convinced the mind of that and succeeding ages that piety could accomplish what armies might fail to achieve. The profound impressions wrought upon the mind of Christendom appear most clearly, however, in the legendary histories of Attila, which are preserved in three distinct currents of tradition—the Latin, Germanic, and Hungarian.

The Latin legends originated in the reaction from the panic into which Attila's conquests had thrown the whole of Europe, and sprang from ecclesiastical sources. They seek to explain his successes by exaggerating his power, and both chronology and geography are violated in the attempt to magnify his career. They describe sieges and captures which never took place, make the Hunnish army to sweep over the whole of France, derive the name of the city of Strasburg from the fancy that Attila made four roads through the city walls, and despatch the broken remnants of his army after the battle of Châlons into Spain to fight the Moors. In the title "The Scourge of God," applied to Attila, these Latin legends reach their culmination. A hermit of Champagne says to Attila before Châlons—misplaced in that province by the legend—"Tu es flagellum Dei—but God breaks, when he pleases, the instruments of his vengeance. God will take this sword from thee and give it to another." At Troyes Attila announces himself to St. Lupus as "the king of the Huns, the Scourge of God;" whereupon the bishop responds, "Welcome, then, scourge of the God whom I serve. Enter, and go where thou wilt." The Huns are, however, smitten with supernatural blindness, and see nothing until they have passed through the city and out at the opposite gate. Some of these legends endow Attila with diabolical attributes, sarcasm, pride, and hideous ugliness, joined with a sardonic humor, while others go to the opposite extreme, and describe him as a champion of the pope and extirpator of heresies. Some of the latter sort even represent him as preaching morality, encouraging good marriages, and portioning virtuous maidens. One reports that a great battle was fought by Attila under the walls of Rome, on the conclusion of which the dead rose again and continued the fight with great fury for three days and nights; and the location, with all its details, was afterwards pointed out.

The Germanic legends differ widely from the Latin. In them Attila is a hero, the type of royal majesty, furnished with almost superhuman bravery and strength. He is as wise as Solomon, and richer and more generous than was he. The great Theodoric and Hermanaric are always associated with him, as his inferiors. The oldest of these legends is a fragment of the 8th century at Fulda, which proves that they were circulated in the Frank dialect in Gaul during the Merovingian period. The Germanic form of Attila legend was current in England also at an early period, and receives its fullest development in the Icelandic and Scandinavian handling. The episode of Walter of Aquitaine and the Nibelungenlied are offshoots from the primitive stock of this tradition.

The Hungarian legends associate Attila with all the phases of their early national life. Deriving the Magyar stock from Magog, the son of Japhet and king of Scythia, they trace it down to Attila and his son Arpad, the common patrons of the Magyars and Huns. When the Magyars become Christians, it is because Attila, by his docility under the hand of God, whose scourge he was, has prepared the way for their conversion through his merits. He is the inseparable patron of that people, changing when they change, and living through all the stages of their national existence.

Attila was not only a barbarian, but also a heathen, and while he fought Rome rather than the Church, and even showed regard for the sanctity of its eminent representatives, the success of his arms was universally felt to be destructive to Christianity. In the course of time, accordingly, the minds of writers, saturated with ideas derived from the churchly legends, discovered that so mighty an impersonation of the principle of evil as was Attila could be no other than Antichrist himself; and artists, under the same influence, represented him as having almost diabolical features and goat's horns. See frontispiece to Italian legend of Attila, frequently printed at Venice in the later years of the 15th century.

For the later history of the Huns, down to the time when the name and people became extinct, see the article HUNS in vol. iv.

Literature.—For the early history Ammianus Marcellinus and Priscus, especially the latter, are the principal sources. Sidonius Apollinaris notices the invasion of Gaul. Later authorities are Jornandes, Procopius, Agathius, Gregory of Tours, and Cassiodorus. Jornandes was a Goth, bitterly hostile to the Huns, and open to the charge of excessive credulity; but he is the only authority for certain portions of Attila's history.

Among modern works De Guignes's Histoire des Huns must be assigned the first place, as it furnishes all the speculations upon which the earliest accepted history of the Huns is based. Gibbon's account in the Decline and Fall (Milman's ed. vol. vi) is scarcely more than an abridgment of De Guignes's. See also Creasy, Decisive Battles of the World (Châlons); Neumann, Völker des Südlichen Russlands; Klemm, Attila (1827); J. v. Müller, Attila, der Held des 5. Jahrhunderts (1806); Herbert, Attila, or the Triumph of Christianity (1838); Grimm, Deutsche Heldensagen (Göttingen, 1829); Zeuss, Deutsche u. Nachbarstämme und Ostfinnen. Huntingtonians, a class of Antinomians (q. v.) in England, followers of William Huntington (q. v.), a Calvinistic Methodist preacher of London. Huntington maintained that the elect are justified from all eternity, an act of which their justification in this world by faith is only a manifestation; that God sees no sin in believers, and is never angry with them; that the imputation of our sins to Christ, and of his righteousness to us, was actual, not judicial; that faith, repentance, and holy obedience are covenant conditions on the part of Christ, not on our part; and, finally, that sanctification is no evidence of justification, but rather renders it more obscure. These doctrines still continue to be taught in a number of chapels, especially in Sussex.

Hurd, Carlton, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in New Hampshire in 1795. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1818, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1822; was ordained, Sept. 17, 1823, pastor at Fryeburg, Me., and died there, Dec. 6, 1855. See Trien. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 51.

Hurd, Isaac, D.D., a Unitarian and subsequently a Trinitarian minister, was born at Charlestown, Mass., Dec. 7, 1785. He graduated at Harvard College in 1806; completed his theological studies at Divinity Hall, Edinburgh, Scotland; and preached his first sermon in London. He was ordained pastor of the Unitarian Society in Lynn, Mass., Sept. 15, 1813, and was dismissed May 22, 1816. Although he had so far changed his sentiments as to become an avowed Trinitarian, he was called to be the pastor of the Second (Unitarian) Society in Exeter, N. H., and was installed, Sept. 11, 1817. "Notwithstanding a conscientious difference of opinion on certain important points, he continued to enjoy the cordial respect and affection of his people." In his advanced years his society secured for him the services of colleague pastors. He died at South Reading (now Wakefield), at the residence of his son, Oct. 4, 1856. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 446; Necrology of Harvard College, p. 116. (J. C. S.)

Huret, Grégoire, a reputable French engraver, was born at Lyons in 1610. The following are some of his principal plates: Life and Passion of Our Saviour, a set of thirty-two; The Stoning of Stephen; St. Peter Preaching; Christ Crowned with Thorns; The Holy Family with St. Catharine. He died at Paris in 1670. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Huscanawer, a ceremony formerly practiced by the North American Indians of Virginia when they wished to prepare a candidate for the priesthood, or for enrolment among their great men. The principal men of the place where the ceremony was to be performed selected the handsomest and most vigorous youths for the purpose. They shut them up for several months, giving them no other sustenance than the infusion of certain roots, which strongly affected the nervous system. The result was that they quite lost their memory; they forgot their possessions, parents, friends, and even their language, becoming at length deaf and dumb. The purpose of this strange treatment was alleged to be to free the novices from the dangerous impressions of infancy, and to relieve the mind of all prejudice.

Husseyites, the followers of Joseph Hussey, a learned but eccentric divine, formerly of Cambridge, who held the Antinomian views of Tobias Crisp (q. v.). He maintained also the pre-existence of Christ's human soul, or, rather, of a spiritual or glorious body, in which he appeared to Adam, Abraham, and others; this body being the image of God in which man was created.

Hutangi, an apartment which is generally found in the houses of the wealthy Chinese, and devoted to ancestor-worship (q. v.). The room contains the image of the most illustrious ancestor of the family, and a record of the names of all the members of the family. Twice a year, generally in spring and autumn, the relations hold a meeting in this room, when rich presents of various kinds of meats, wines, and perfumes, with wax tapers, are laid on the table with great ceremony as gifts to their deceased ancestors.

Hutch. (1) A mediæval term for a chest, box, or hoarding-cupboard, found in use in the Vision of Piers Plowman. (2) This word was sometimes applied to an aumbry for the sacred vessels of the altar, as in the Accounts of Louth Spire; or (3) to one for the sacramental oil, baptismal shell, stoles, and towel used in baptism. (4) Any locker for books, church music, sconces, etc.

Hutchins, RICHARD, D.D., a minister of the Church of England, was Hervey's tutor, and a very faithful member of the Oxford Methodist Society. He became a fellow of Lincoln College, Dec. 8, 1720; subrector, Nov. 6, 1739; bursar and librarian, Nov. 6, 1742; rector, July 9, 1755; and died Aug. 10, 1781. His only publication is a Latin sermon, Elucidatio Sexti Capituli Evangelii Secundum Johannem (1847, 8vo, p. 51). "In more respects than one Dr. Hutchins continued an Oxford Methodist long after all his old friends had been dispersed." See Tyerman, The Oxford Methodists, p. 370.

Hutchinson, JOHN RUSSELL, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Columbia County, Pa., Feb. 12, 1807. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1826, and studied two years in Princeton Seminary. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, April 22, 1829, and went to Mississippi the following October. He preached at Rodney, Miss.; Baton Rouge, La.; Vicksburg, Miss.; Bethel Church, Prytanea Street, and Carrollton, New Orleans, La. Jan. 1, 1834, he became connected with the College of Louisiana. In 1842 he was called to occupy the chair of ancient languages in Oakland College, Miss., which he held twelve years, and for a time, in 1851, he was acting president. In 1854 he removed to New Orleans, purchased property, and established a classical school of a high order. In 1860 he took charge of the public academy in Houston, Texas. He died Feb. 24, 1878. He was a preacher for nearly half a century, and in his prime a man of mark. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1878, p. 17.

Huth, Caspar Jacob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, Dec. 25, 1711. He studied at Jena, commenced his academical career in 1735, was professor of theology at Erlangen in 1743, and died Sept. 14, 1760, leaving, Pauperes Spiritu (Erlangen, 1745):—De Schiloh Vaticanum (eod.):—Spes Regnatorum Vira per Resurrectionem Christi (1746):—Fides Matris Vicentium (1748):—Schilo Bethlehemitanus (eod.):—Petrus non Petra (1757):—Questiones Theologicae (1758), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 418 sq. (B. P.)

Huth, Johann Ernest, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Altenburg, Jan. 4, 1873, superintendent, is the author of De Loco Epistolae Pauli ad Galatas iii, 19, 20 (Altenburg, 1854). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 600. (B. P.)

Huther, JOHANN EDUARD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 10, 1807, at Hamburg. He studied at Bonn, Göttingen, and Berlin; was in 1842 religious instructor in the gymnasium at Schwerin; in 1855 pastor at Wittenföörden, near Schwerin; and died March 17, 1880, leaving, Cyprians Lehre von der Kirche (Gotha, 1839):—Commentar über den Brief Pauli an die Colosser (Hamburg, 1841):—Der Religions-Unterricht in den Gymnasien (Rostock, 1848). For Meyer's Commentary he prepared the epistles to Timothy and Titus and the Catholic epistles. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 600. (B. P.)

Hutter, EDWIN W., D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born at Allentown, Pa., Sept. 12, 1813. After attending the village school he entered a printing-office. When seventeen years of age his father died, and he succeeded him as editor and proprietor of two weekly newspapers, one German, the other English. For several years he resided at Washington, D. C., as private secretary to James Buchanan, then secretary of state. Removing to Baltimore, Md., he studied theology under Dr. B. Kurtz, at the same time discharging the duties as office editor of the Oberrer. Subsequently he took charge of St. Matthew's Church, Philadelphia, the only pastorate upon which he ever entered, and which he served with great success for twenty-three years. The Northern Home for Friendless Children was founded largely through his influence. He died in September, 1873. See Fifty Years in the Lutheran Ministry, 1878, p. 194.

Hutton, Mancius Smedes, a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in Troy, N. Y., June 9, 1803. He attended the school of the famous blind teacher, Joseph Nelson, in New York city; graduated from Columbia College in 1823, and from the theological seminary at Princeton in 1826. He was licensed to preach the same year by what was then known as the Second Presbytery of New York, and acted as missionary of the Reformed (Dutch) Church in Ulster County, N. Y., in 1827 and 1828. In the latter year he was called to the Presbyterian Church in German Valley, and remained there until 1834, when he was called to the city of New York to become the colleague of the late Rev. Dr. James M. Matthews, then pastor of the South Reformed Church in Exchange Place, the church which he had attended when a boy and up to the time of leaving the city. After the great fire of Dec. 16, 1835, which destroyed most of the lower part of the city, including the Exchange Place Church, the Church divided, and the pastor went with that portion which built the edifice on the east side of Washington Square. The new church was dedicated in 1841. For many years this was one of the best-known churches in the city. The neighborhood was one of the most fashionable in the metropolis, and the congregation, a very large one, numbered among its members many of the most intelligent and wealthy of the residents of the west side. After the resignation of his colleague Dr. Hutton remained sole pastor until 1876, when the Church disbanded, caused by the removal from time to time of so many of its members to the upper part of the city. Thereafter Dr. Hutton continued without a charge until his death, April 11, 1880. Dr. Hutton was a trustee of Columbia College, a member of the Council of the New York University, president of the Board of Education of the Reformed Church for the education of young men destined for the ministry, and a director in the Bible and tract societies. By virtue of his descent from revolutionary stock, he was a member of the Society of the Cincinnati for the state of New York, and general chaplain of the society in the United States. He published a number of Sermons and Addresses, for which see Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v.; also Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 15.

Hutton, Matthew (1), D.D., an English prelate, was prebend of Ely in 1560, Margaret professor of divinity in Cambridge in 1561, regius professor in 1562, master of Pembroke Hall and prebend of London the same year, dean of York in 1567, bishop of Durham in 1589, archbishop of York in 1595, and died Jan. 15 or 16, 1606.

Hutton, Matthew (2), D.D., an English prelate, was prebend of York in 1734, canon of Windsor in 1736, prebend of Westminster in 1739, bishop of Bangor in 1743, and archbishop of York in 1747. He was translated to Canterbury in 1757. He died March 19, 1758, leaving occasional Sermons (1741, 1744, 1745, 1747). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hwergelmer, in Norse mythology, is the spring in the centre of Helheim and Niflheim, in which the drops collect that fall from the antlers of the reindeer Aikthyrner. There are so many of them that the spring supplies thirty-seven rivers of hell. The spring is inhabited by many snakes, who gnaw at the root of the world ash-tree, Ygdrasil.

Hyacinthia, an ancient festival, celebrated annually at Amyclæ, in Greece. It lasted three days, on the first and last of which sacrifices were offered to the dead, and lamentations were held for the death of Hyacinthus, all the people laying aside their garlands and partaking only of simple cakes, with every sign of grief and mourning. The intermediate day, however, was spent in mirth and rejoicings, peans being sung in honor of Apollo, while the youth spent the day in games of various kinds.

Hyads, a common appellation given to the seven daughters of Atlas by his wife Aethra, viz. Ambrosia, Eudora, Pasithoe, Coronis, Plexaris, Pytho, and Tyche. These virgins bewailed so immoderately the death of their brother Hyas, who was devoured by a lion, that Jupiter, out of compassion, changed them into stars and placed them in the head of Taurus, where they still retain their grief, their rising and setting being attended with extraordinary rains (Hyas, to rain).

Some make them the daughters of Lycurgus, born in the isle of Naxos, and translated to the skies for their care in the education of Bacchus; probably because their rains were of great benefit in forwarding the vintage.

Hyænas, a name applied by Porphyry to the priestesses of Mithras, or the sun.

Hydriaphoria (from ὑδωρ, water, and φέρω, to bear), a ceremony in which the married alien women carried a vessel with water for the married women of Athens as they walked to the temple of Athena in the great procession of the Panathenæia.

Hydromancy (from ὑδωρ, water, and μαντεία, divination), a species of divination, in which, by the aid of certain incantations, the images of the gods were seen in the water. The practice was brought from Persia, and employed by Numa and Pythagoras.

Hydroparastatæ (ὑδροπαράσταται), a Greek term for those who anciently pretended to celebrate the holy communion with water.

Hygea, in Greek mythology, was the goddess of health, the daughter and constant companion of Æsculapius. See HEBE.

Hyneck, LUDWIG, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 4, 1795. He studied theology and philology at Leipsic, and received the degree of doctor of philosophy in 1817, on presenting his Adnotationes in Recentioris Æri Liberos Educandi Rationem. In 1827 he was made licentiate of theology by the Marburg University, for writing Quid sit quod Debeat Religioni

Christianæ Sexus Muliebris Imprimis Honestior Feminarum Pars. In 1856 he published Geschichte des freien adelichen Jungfrauenstiftes Fischbeck und seiner Aebtsinnen, and in 1870 he celebrated his fiftieth anniversary in the ministry, and the Marburg University honored him on that occasion with the diploma of doctor of theology. He died May 10, 1883, at Fischbeck, in the county of Schaumburg. (B. P.)

Hyperboræans, in Greek mythology, were a fabulous people, living north of the Rhipæan mountain-chain, and were said to be very wise and happy, living many hundreds and even thousands of years, and at last dying by leaping into the sea. But Herodotus, Strabo, and Pliny affirm that there is nothing else meant than northern nations, and that these are extravagant accounts of ordinary human beings.

Hyporchêma, the sacred dance around the altar, which, especially among the Dorians, was wont to accompany the songs used in the worship of Apollo. It was practiced by both men and women.

Hyrokian (or Hirrokian), in Norse mythology, was a Jote-woman, a mighty, giant-like sorceress. She was called by the Asas to set the ship afloat upon which Baldur was to be burned. Thor was so angry that this woman excelled him in strength that he would have demolished her with his mîolner had not the Asas interceded for her.

Coin of Nicaea, of the time of the emperor Lucius Verus, representing Hygea and Æsculapius, with Telephorus.

I.

Iacchagōgi, those who were appointed to carry the statue of Iacchus (the mystic Bacchus) in solemn procession at the celebration of the Eleusinian Mysteries (q. v.). Their heads were crowned with myrtle, and they beat drums and brazen instruments, dancing and singing as they marched along.

Iaian Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. The Iaian is a dialect spoken in Uvea, one of the Loyalty islands. A translation of Luke for the twelve hundred Protestants of Uvea, and two tribes in New Caledonia, was prepared by Rev. S. Ella, and printed in 1868. Mr. Ella has continued since, assisted by a native pundit, in the preparation of the New Test., which was printed at Sydney in 1878, and to which were added the Psalms in 1879. (B. P.)

Ibhar (or Ebur; Lat. Iberius), bishop of the isle and of Bergery, in Wexford Harbor, Ireland, where he died in 503, is commemorated April 23, and famous for having driven away the rats from Leinster.

Ibleam. The modern site, Jelameh (or Belameh, as Tristram, Bible Places, p. 221, and Conder, Tent Work, ii, 337, incorrectly write), is thus described in the Me- moirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 84): "It stands in the plain, surrounded with arable land, and is supplied by cisterns. It has a kubbeh (domed place of prayer) on the north side. This place seems not improbably the Kaliuma of the lists of Thothmes, mentioned in the same group with Saanach, Anohareth, and other places on the plain (Quar. Statement of the 'Pal. Explor. Fund,' July, 1876, p. 147)."

Ibn-Al-Athir, an Arabian historian, was born in 1160 at Jazirat Ibn-Omar, in Mesopotamia, and died at Mosul in 1231. He is the author of a large historical work, giving the history of the world to the year 1230, which was edited by Tomberg, under the title, Ibn-el-Athiri Chronicon quod Perfectissimum Inscribitur (Leyden, 1868-71, 12 vols.). Ibo Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. This dialect is spoken by the Ibos on the banks of the Niger, in West Africa. The first part of the New Test., the gospel of Matthew, was published in this dialect in 1859, and since that time other parts were added. Up to date there are published only eight books of the New

Test. In linguistic respects the language has been treated by J. F. Schön, in Oku Ibo, Grammatical Elements of the Ibo Language (1861). (B. P.)

Icheri, in the mythology of the Caribbeans, are the good protecting spirits accompanying fishermen and hunters.

Icoxa, a sect of religionists in Japan, who celebrate the festival of their founder annually in a peculiar manner. Under the impression that he who first sets foot in the temple is entitled to peculiar blessings, they all rush towards the same spot, and persons are often killed in the press.

Idalah. For this site Tristram (Bible Places, p. 242) and Conder (Tent Work, ii, 337) propose ed-Dalieh, on Carmel, eight and a half miles south-east of Haifa, and thus described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 281): "A stone village of moderate size, on a knoll of one of the spurs running out of the main water-shed (or ridge) of Carmel. On the south there is a well, and a few springs on the west. On the north is a little plain, or open valley, cultivated with corn. The inhabitants are all Druses, numbered by consul Rogers in 1859 at 800 souls." But this position is entirely beyond the bounds of Zebulun, and the modern name Dalieh is too indefinite for identification, being likewise applied to another village on the ridge of Carmel, six and a half miles farther south-east. The site Kefr Kireh (proposed by Schwarz) lying one and a quarter miles south by west from Tell Keimûn (Joknean), is described in the Memoirs (ii, 60) as "evidently an ancient site," with traces of ruins and broken pottery on the hill and tombs in the vicinity; a good supply of water, and a small mill. The village of Seida is an entirely different locality, two and a half miles west of Semunieh, and destitute of antiquities (Memoirs, i, 270).

Idaplan (or Idafeld), in Norse mythology, is the dwelling-place of the twelve great judges in Asgard, whom Odin had appointed to judge all things.

Iddera Rabba (אִדְרָא רַבָּא), i. e. the Great Assembly, is the title of one of the many parts which compose the Sohar, the famous thesaurus of Jewish mysticism. It is called "Great Assembly," because it purports to give the discourses which rabbi Simon ben-Jochai (q. v.) delivered to his disciples, who congregated around him in large numbers. Upon the summons of the Sacred Light, his disciples assembled to listen to the secrets and enigmas contained in the Book of Mysteries. Hence it is chiefly occupied with a description of the form and various members of the Deity; a disquisition on the relation of the Deity, in his two aspects of the aged and the young, to the creation and the universe, as well as on the diverse gigantic members of the Deity, such as the head, the beard, the eyes, the nose, etc.; a dissertation on pneumatology, daemonology, etc. It concludes with telling us that three of the disciples died during these discussions. This part of the Sohar is translated in the second volume of Rosenroth's Kabbala Denudata. (B. P.)

Iddera Zutta (אִדְרָא זוּטָא), i. e. the Small Assembly, is, like the Iddera Rabba (q. v.), also one of the component parts of the Sohar. It derives its name from the fact that many of the disciples of rabbi Simon ben-Jochai had died during the course of the cabalistic revelations, and that this portion of the Sohar contains the discourses which the Sacred Light delivered before his death to a small assembly of six pupils, who still survived, and congregated to listen to the profound mysteries. It is to a great extent a recapitulation of the Iddera Rabba, occupying itself with speculations about the Sephiroth, the Deity, etc., and concludes with recording the death of Simon ben-Jochai, the Sacred Light, and the medium through whom God revealed the contents of the Sohar. The Iddera Zutta, too, is translated into Latin by Rosenroth, in the second volume of his Kabbala Denudata. (B. P.)

Ide, George Barton, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Coventry, Vt., in 1806, his father being a well-known Baptist clergyman, Rev. John Ide, who, in 1800, had removed from New York to northern Vermont. His father gave him the best education he could secure for him, and he decided to enter the profession of law, the study of which he commenced, without having taken a collegiate course, at the age of eighteen, in the village of Brandon. He graduated from Middlebury College with the highest honors in 1830; soon after was ordained at Derby, Conn.; was invited, in 1834, to a church in Albany, N. Y.; in 1835 to the Federal Street Baptist Church in Boston, Mass.; in 1838 to the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia, Pa., and in 1852 to Springfield, Mass., where he died, April 16, 1872. Dr. Ide was one of the most distinguished ministers of his denomination. He published several works, among which were Life Sketches of Life Truths, and Bible Pictures. He also wrote several Sunday-school books. See The Watchman, April, 1872. (J. C. S.)

Ide, Jacob, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Attleborough, Mass., March 29, 1785. His pastor, Rev. Nathaniel Holman, assisted him in his preparatory studies, and he graduated from Brown University in 1809, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1812. He was ordained Nov. 2, 1814, over the Church in West Medway, Mass., and died in office, Jan. 5, 1880, although relieved from active service in 1865. Besides numerous sermons and other literary work, he edited the works of Dr. Nathaniel Emmons, in seven volumes. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 26.

Identism (or Identity), the doctrine, advocated by Fichte and Schelling, of the entire identity of God and the universe, or of Creator and creation. This ultimately coincides with Pantheism (q. v.). See Krauth-Fleming, Vocab. of Phil. Sciences.

Idini, the term used by the Kaffirs to denote sacrifice. Sacrifices are offered to their ancestors, and not to God; and these only in cases where they wish to avert some apprehended evil.

Idiomēla (fully στιχηρὰ ἰδιόμελα, i. e. peculiar strophes) are stichera that have no periods the rhythm of which they regularly follow. They are usually said at lauds and vespers on special occasions, sometimes at the burial of a priest. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

Iduna, in Norse mythology, is the loveliest of the Asas, the goddess of eternal youth and immortality; not created or born, but existing from the beginning. She is the wife of the wise Bragi, the god of the poetic art. In her keeping are the apples of rejuvenation, without which even the gods would become aged, therefore they daily eat the same.

Ifaya, the wooden tablets employed by the Japanese, containing inscriptions commemorative of the dead, mentioning the date of his decease, and the name given to him since that event. The ifaya are carried in the funeral procession, along with the body, to the grave, and one of them is placed over it, remaining there seven weeks, when it is removed to make way for the grave-stone. Another is set up in the best apartment of the house during the period of mourning. Sweetmeats, fruits, and tea are placed before it; and morning, noon, and night food is prepared for it as for a living person. The whole household pray before it morning and evening during seven weeks, and other religious ceremonies are observed.

Iglau, TREATY OF, a celebrated compact, ratified at Iglau, in Bohemia, which closed the long-protracted war between the Hussites and the Roman Catholics. It was dated Nov. 30, 1433. See HUSSITES.

Ignispicium, a species of divination practiced by the ancient Romans, consisting of observations made on the flames ascending from the sacrificial altar.

Ijon. As a representative of this Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 337) El-Khiam, four and a half miles north-east from Mimas (at the great angle of the Litany); but this is an entirely modern village of about three hundred Christians and two hundred Druses (Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, i, 88), and the name has little resemblance. Tell Dublin, the more probable representative, is beyond the limits of the Ordnance Survey.

Iko-siu, the sect of the worshippers of Amidas (q. v.), the most numerous and powerful ecclesiastical body in Japan.

Iahi (the divine) of Akbar was a system of philosophic deism introduced by Akbar, the emperor of Delhi, in the latter half of the 16th century. He proposed to found a new creed on the basis of universal toleration, combining in one religious body the Hindûs, Mohammedans, and Christians, along with the followers of Zoroaster. His object in establishing a new creed was both political and religious; he was the only one of the Delhi emperors who regarded India as his country, and who sought to efface from the memory of the Hindûs the fact that they were a conquered people. Iahi, or the divine system, was essentially eclectic in character. The fundamental point on which Akbar insisted was the great doctrine of the Divine Unity, which he declared was but obscurely revealed in the prophets. But while he thus adopted a Mohammedan basis for his creed, he took care at the same time to declare his entire disbelief of the divinity of the Koran. From the time of his rejection of the Koran, the emperor professed himself to be an impartial inquirer after truth, and accordingly he conversed openly with the teachers of every religion. He finally decided upon a system, which was the revival of Zoroastrianism in a modified form. Having acquired sufficient influence over the theologians, doctors of the law, and learned men, to secure their public recognition of him as the sole protector of the faith, Akbar propounded his creed, which was accepted by several Hindûs and Mohammedans. Encouraged by his success, he now ordered the abolition of the old confession of Islam, "There is no God but God, and Mohammed is his prophet," and the substitution of another, "There is no God but God, and Akbar is the vicar of God." He next abrogated the five daily prayers, the ablutions, fasts, alms, and pilgrimages enjoined upon the faithful. He abolished the religious services observed on Fridays, and dismissed the muezzins. He ordered that that should be considered as clean which was declared by the Koran to be unclean. He permitted the sale of wine, and the practice of games of chance. He forbade the marriage of more than one wife, and enjoined the postponement of the circumcision of boys until twelve years of age, and even then the ceremony was to be entirely optional. He finally ordered the era of his own accession to the throne to be used instead of the Hegira. At first he received considerable support from various sections, but his system became more and more unpopular, and, on the accession of his son Jehanghir, the empire returned to Islamism.

Ilicet (for ire licet, "you may go"), a solemn word pronounced at the conclusion of the funeral rites among the ancient Romans. It was uttered by the præficus or some other person at the close of the ceremony, after the bones and ashes of the deceased had been committed to the urn, and the persons present had been thrice sprinkled with pure water from a branch of olive or laurel for the purpose of purification. From the occasion on which the word ilicet was employed, it is sometimes used proverbially among Roman authors to signify all is over.

Ilithyia, in Greek and Roman mythology, is the goddess of birth, the daughter of Jupiter and Juno, born on Crete, in the Amnisian cave, and sister of Hebe, Mars, and Vulcan. Homer speaks of a number of Ilithyias, daughters of Juno, who send the arrow of pain, but help those in childbed. Often Ilithyia is identified with Juno, which is not strange, since Juno is the goddess of marriage. The Greek Ilithyia was also identified with Diana, probably because the latter, being the goddess of the moon, a certain influence over birth might be credited her. She is also called Lucina, or gemititia. Pindar and Ovid make her the daughter of Juno. In a Grecian temple erected to her she was represented as wearing a loose robe, and holding in one hand a flambeau.

Illescas, GUNDISALV DE, abbot of St. Frontes, Spain, who died in 1580, is the author of Historia Pontifical y Catolica (Salamanca, 1574; continued by L. de Bavia, M. de Guadaluara, and J. Banos de Velasco, Madrid, 1678, 6 vols. fol.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 682; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Illinos, in Chaldaic mysticism, was the second of the three primary principles of the Chaldæans, created with Anos and Aos by the uncreated from the two natural forces, the creating and conceiving principles, Asoron and Kisara.

Imarinen, the third of the great deities of the Finns, and the god of earth and of metals.

Imâm, a name applied by way of excellence to each of the chiefs or founders of the four principal sects of the Mohammedans.

Imâmate, the office of an Imâm, or Mohammedan priest. See IMAUM, vol. iv, p. 506.

Imams, THE TWELVE, the twelve Islam chiefs, according to the Persian Mohammedans, who belong to the Shiites. Ali (q. v.) is reckoned the first Imâm, and immediate spiritual successor of the Prophet. Hassan (q. v.) was the second Imâm, being the eldest son of Ali. He was a feeble-minded prince, and surrendered his caliphate to Moawiyah, retaining only the spiritual office. Hossein (q. v.) was the third of the line. He was succeeded by his son Ali, the fourth Imâm, who, from his constancy in prayer, received the names of "the Imâm of the Carpet," and "the glory of pious men." He died in 712, and was succeeded by his son Mohammed, the fifth Imâm, who was a diligent student of magic, and received the name of "the possessor of the secret." The sixth Imâm was Jaafar, the son of Mohammed, who was thought to be equal in wisdom to Solomon. Jaafar nominated his son Ismail his successor, but the heir-apparent having died prematurely, he named his second son Mûsa his heir. Ismail, however, had left children; hence parties arose, some holding to one as the lawful Imâm, others to the other. The two sects were called Ismaïliyah (q. v.) and Assassins (q. v.). The claim of Mûsa to be the seventh Imâm has been generally admitted. Ali, the son of Mûsa, was the eighth Imâm. He is called by the Shiites "the beloved," and his tomb, termed Meshed Ali, is a favorite object of pilgrimage. The ninth Imâm was Mohammed, the son of Ali, who lived in retirement at Bagdad, where he died at an early age, leaving behind him so great a reputation for benevolence that he received the name of "the generous." His son Ali, the tenth Imâm, was but a child when his father died, and having been seized by the caliph Motawakkel, who was a determined enemy of the Shiites, he was confined for life in the city of Asker, from which circumstance he is called "the Askerite." He was poisoned by order of the caliph in 868. His son and successor, Hassan, also perished by poisoning, leaving the sacred office to his son Mohammed, the twelfth and last Imâm, who, at his father's death, was a child only six months old. He was kept in close confinement by the caliph, but at about the age of twelve years he suddenly disappeared; the Sonnites allege that he was drowned in the Tigris, but the Shiites deny the fact of his death, and assert that he is wandering over the earth, and will continue so to wander until the appointed period shall arrive when he shall claim and receive universal empire.

IMMER, ALBERT, a Protestant theologian, was born Aug. 10, 1804, at Unterseen, Switzerland. He studied at Berne, was in 1838 vicar at Burgdorf, in 1840 pastor at Bären, and in 1850 professor of theology at Berne. In 1881 he retired from his professorship, and died March 23, 1894. Besides some theological essays and lectures, he published Hermeneutik des Neuen Testaments (Wittenberg, 1873; Engl. translation by A. H. Newman, Andover, 1877): — Neutestamentliche Theologie (Bonn, 1877). (B. P.)

Impanation (from in pane, "in the bread"), the doctrine that Christ's presence is in the bread in the Lord's supper. It is synonymous with consubstantiation (q. v.).

Inauguratio, the ceremony by which the ancient Romans consecrated a person or thing to the gods. It was performed by the augurs (q. v.), who offered prayer to the gods, asking them to show by signs whether they accepted the consecrated object. If the signs appeared favorable, the consecration was regarded as complete. The kings of Rome were inducted by the augurs as the high priests of the people; but the inauguration of the flamens devolved upon the college of pontiffs.

Incense-boat, a vessel for containing incense, often formed like a boat: hence its name. Examples of these are numerous in old inventories of church furniture. See NAVICULA.

Indagine, JOHANN DE, a Carthusian monk of Germany, who died at Eisenach in 1475, is the author of Commentarius in Quatuor Libros Regum: — De Visione Danielis cap. vii: — De Quatuor Sensibus Scripturæ: — De Potestate Ecclesiastica et de Auctoritate Papæ in Conciliis: — Contra Flagellatores: — Contra Errores Bohemorum: — De Cognitione Futurorum. See Hoffmann, Lexicon Universale: Trithemius, de Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexicon, s. v. (B. P.)

India, MYTHOLOGY OF. See HINDUISM.

Indix Raymi, in Peruvian mythology, is the principal one of the four known festivals of the sun, celebrated yearly in honor of the supreme deity in the Andes. It began when the sun was at its height, and moved towards the equatorial region. At the first ray of the sun all fell on their knees and worshipped the benevolent god. After this festival eight days were spent in unbroken pleasure.

Indo-Portuguese Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. Indo-Portuguese is a dialect spoken by the Portuguese settlers and their descendants in Ceylon and various parts of the Indian seas. A translation of a part of the Scripture into this dialect dates back to the year 1817, when the Wesleyan missionary, Newstead, stationed at Negombo, in Ceylon, commenced a translation of the New Test. for the benefit of this people, which was printed at London in 1826. A second edition appeared at Colombo in 1831, and the Pentateuch and Psalms were printed in 1833. A revised edition of the New Test. was published in 1853. (B. P.)

and Aditi, a deity of the second class, but very much worshipped. He rules over space, and is king of all genii who live in space, or in the superterrestrial paradise. Daily he rides around the earth. He sees and knows everything, for he has a thousand eyes. His wife is called Sachi, by whom he had a son, Jayanta. The mountain Meru, towards the north pole, is his dwelling-place. Amarawati is the name of his celestial city, Wardayanta is his palace, Nandana his garden. Airawat is his first elephant, and Mattala charioteer. He rules over wind and rain.

Induction (Lat. inductio, from inducere, "to infer") is the philosophical name for the process of real inference—in other words, the act or process of reasoning from the known to the unknown, or from the limited to the unlimited. "All things that we do not know by actual trial or ocular demonstration, we know by an inductive operation. Deduction is not real inference in this sense, since the general proposition covers the case that we apply it to; in a proper deduction, the conclusion is more limited than the premises. By the inductive method we obtain a conclusion much larger than the premises; we adventure into the sphere of the unknown, and pronounce upon what we have not yet seen. . . . Accordingly, it is now considered a part of logic to lay down the rules for the right performance of this great operation." One of the greatest problems of inductive inquiry is that peculiar succession denominated cause and effect. Mill, in his Logic, has consequently illustrated in detail the methods to be adopted to ascertain definitely the true causative circumstance that may precede a given effect. They resolve themselves mainly into two. "One is, by comparing together different instances in which the phenomenon occurs. The other is, by comparing instances in which the phenomenon does occur, with instances, in other respects similar, in which it does not. These two methods may be respectively denominated the method of agreement, and the method of difference."

There are many problems growing out of the application of induction to the great variety of natural phenomena. "Thus, the great induction of universal gravity was applied deductively to explain a great many facts besides those that enabled the induction to be made. Not merely the motions of the planets about the sun, and the satellites about the planets, but the remote and previously unexplained phenomena of the tides, the precession of the equinoxes, etc., were found to be inferences from the general principle. This mode of determining causes is called the deductive method. When several agents unite in a compound effect, there is required a process of calculation to find from the effects of the causes acting separately the combined effect due to their concurrent action, as when the path of a projectile is deduced from the laws of gravity and of force. It is the deductive stage of science that enables mathematical calculation to be brought into play with such remarkable success as is seen in astronomy, mechanics, etc.

"The circumstance that phenomena may result from a concurrence of causes, leads to the distinction between ultimate laws and derivative or subordinate laws. Thus, gravity is an ultimate law; the movement of the planets in ellipses is but a subordinate law. These inferior laws may be perfectly true within their own limits, but not necessarily so beyond certain limits, of time, place, and circumstance. A different adjustment of the two forces that determine a planet's motion would cause a circular or a parabolic orbit; and therefore when phenomena result from a combination of ultimate laws acting under a certain arrangement, they are not to be generalized beyond the sphere where that arrangement holds. These inferior laws are sometimes mere inductions that have not been resolved into their constituent laws, and then they go under the name of 'Empirical Laws.' Thus, in the hands of Kepler, the elliptic orbit of the planets was only an empirical generalization, ascertained by the method of agreement; Newton converted it into a derivative law, when he showed that it resulted from the more general laws of gravity, etc. The earlier stages of induction present us with many of those empirical laws; in some subjects, as physiology, medicine, etc., the greater number of inductions are of this character. The cure of disease is especially an example of this: hardly any medicine can have its efficacy traced to ultimate laws of the human system. Hence the uncertainty attending the application of remedies to new cases, and also the want of success that often attends them in circumstances where we think they ought to succeed." Induction applies also to the laws of causation, to the laws of uniformities, and to those of coexistence. See Mill, Logic, especially book iv.

Indulgence. The use of this word by ecclesiastical writers is derived from that of the juriconsulta, who employ it to designate a remission of punishment or of taxes, especially such a general amnesty as was sometimes proclaimed by an emperor on an extraordinary occasion of rejoicing. Hence the word passed into ecclesiastical usage in the sense of a remission of penalties for offences against church discipline and order.

Usually there were four stages or degrees through which offenders had to pass before regaining communion: (1) weepers, (2) hearers, (3) kneelers, (4) bystanders; and usually several years had to be spent in each. Now the bishop, according to St. Gregory, might, in proportion to their conversion, "rescind the period of their penance; making it eight, seven, or even five years instead of nine, in each stage, should their repentance exceed in depth what it had to fulfil in length, and compensate, by its increased zeal, for the much longer time required in others to effect their cure." Eventually this system was greatly extended, until it reached the abuses that provoked the Reformation.

Indulgentia (indulgence), a name sometimes applied to baptism in the early Christian Church, as being attended, when blessed by the Holy Spirit, with absolution or the remission of sins. It was esteemed the most universal absolution and the greatest indulgence in the ministry of the Church.

Infiræ were sacrifices which the ancient Romans offered at the tombs of their deceased relatives at certain periods, consisting of victims, wine, milk, garlands of flowers, etc.

Infirmary, MONASTIC. In his enumeration of Christian duties Benedict (Regula, c. 4) specifies that of visiting the sick; and elsewhere he speaks of it as a duty of primary and paramount obligation for monks, quoting the words of Christ, "I was sick, and ye ministered unto me." Beyond, however, saying that the sick are to have a separate part of the monastery assigned to them, and a separate officer in charge of them, that they are to be allowed meat and the luxury of baths, if necessary, that they are not to be exacting, and that the brethren who wait on them are not to be impatient, he gives no precise directions. Subsequently it was the special duty of the "infirmarius," the "cellerarius" (house-steward), and of the abbot himself, to look after the sick; no other monk might visit them without leave from the abbot or prior. Everything was to be done for their comfort, both in body and soul, that they should not miss the kindly offices of kinsfolk and friends; and, while the rigor of the monastic discipline was to be relaxed, whenever necessary, in their favor, due supervision was to be exercised, lest there should be any abuse of the privileges of the sick-room. The "infirmarius" was to enforce silence at meals, to check conversation in the sick-room at other times, and to discriminate carefully between real and fictitious ailments. The sick were, if possible, to recite the hours daily, and to attend mass at stated times, and if unable to walk to the chapel, they were to be carried thither in the arms of their brethren. The meal in the sick-room was to be three hours earlier than in the common refectory. The abbot might allow a separate kitchen and "buttery" for the use of the sick monks. The rule of Cassarius of Arles ordered that the abbot was to provide good wine for the sick, the ordinary wine of the monastery being often of inferior quality. See HOSPITAL.

Informers. This class of men originated before the Christian æra, and, indeed, before the establishment of the Roman empire. When persecution arose against the Church, the informers naturally sought gain, and probably some credit with the civil authorities, by giving information against those who practiced Christian rites, since the secret assemblies of Christians for worship came under the prohibition of the Lex Julia. Tertullian states (Apol. c. 5) that Tiberius threatened the accusers of the Christians, but the story rests only upon his statement. He also claims M. Aurelius as a protector of Christians. Titus issued an edict, forbidding slaves to inform against their masters or freedmen against their patrons. Nerva, on his accession, republished this edict. "Jewish manners," i. e. probably Christianity, is especially mentioned as one of the subjects on which informations were forbidden. In Pliny's well-known letter to Trajan we find the informers in full work. The Christians who were brought before him were delated, and an anonymous paper was sent in, containing a list of many Christians or supposed Christians. Trajan, in his answer, though he forbade Christians to be sought out (i. e. by government officials), did not attempt to put a stop to the practice of delation; those who were informed against, if they continued in their infatuation, must be punished. In the subsequent persecutions a large part of the suffering arose from unfaithful brethren who betrayed their friends. See DELATORS.

Inge, HUGH, D.D., an Irish prelate, was born at Shepton Mallet, in Somersetshire: educated in William of Wickham's school at Winchester, and made perpetual fellow of New College, Oxford, in 1484. In 1496 he travelled in foreign countries. On his return he was successively prebendary of East Harptree, sub-chancellor of the Church of Wells, warden of Wapulham, in the diocese of Lincoln, of Dutton, in Somersetshire, by the presentation of Richard the Abbot and the convent of Glastonbury, and of Weston. In 1504 he was in Rome, at which time he was one of king Henry's orators, selected to take the renunciation of all prejudicial clauses in the apostolic bulls for the translation of cardinal Hadrian to the see of Bath and Wells, and his oaths of fealty and allegiance to that monarch. In 1512 he was appointed bishop of Meath, where he remained ten years. In 1521 he was promoted to the see of Dublin. In 1527 he was made chancellor of Ireland. He repaired the palace of St. Sepulchre. He died in Dublin, Aug. 3, 1528. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 182.

Ingelram (called also by some Newbigging), a Scotch prelate, was rector of Peebles and archdeacon of the Church of Glasgow, and when in this office he was made chancellor by king David. He was elected and consecrated bishop of the see of Glasgow in 1164. He died Feb. 2, 1174, leaving, Epistolæ ad Diversos:—In Evangelia Dominicalia:—Rationes Regni Administrationis. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 233.

Ingelramne, a German prelate, brought up in the schools of Goze and St. Anold, was made bishop of Metz in 768, being at the same time abbot of Senones. He died in 791. See Hoefel, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ingen, a hero-god of Japan, was a native of China, who lived about 1650. He was a zealous Buddhist, and was looked upon as an illustrious saint. But he was more especially venerated because, in answer to a kuo, or special prayer which he offered, a plentiful rain had fallen in a time of drought.

Ingham, RICHARD, D.D., an English Baptist minister, was born at Stansfield, Yorkshire, in 1810. For some years he was a student at Oxford University, and afterwards in the academy of the celebrated Rev. Daniel Taylor, in London. He was baptized Nov. 20, 1829; ordained deacon of a Baptist Church, Dec. 26, 1832; licensed to preach, April 5, 1833; gave up his secular business in 1835, and pursued a course of theological study at Wisbeach; was ordained April 2, 1839, in Bradford, and remained pastor of the Tetley Street Church till November, 1847, when he removed to Louth. His next pastorate was in Halifax, from 1854 to 1862. After two or three brief pastorates in other places, he returned to Bradford and became pastor of the Infirmary Street Church. His death took place June 1, 1873. He published, in 1865, his Hand-book on Christian Baptism, and in 1871 his Christian Baptism, its Subjects and Modes. He also published his Appeal to Friends, on the subject of baptism. At the time of his death he had completed an extended work on the Church Establishment. Dr. Ingham filled a high place among the scholars and preachers of that branch of English Baptists with which he was identified, the "General Baptists," corresponding in most respects with the Free-will Baptists of the United States. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1874, p. 277. (J. C. S.)

Inglis, Alexander, a Scotch prelate, dean of Dunkeld, archdeacon of St. Andrews, and keeper of the rolls, was chosen bishop of Dunkeld in 1483. But the pope, being displeased because he had not been consulted first, annulled the election. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 91.

Inglis, David, D.D., LL.D., a Reformed (Dutch), and afterwards a Presbyterian minister, son of Rev. David Inglis, was born June 8, 1824. He graduated from the University of Edinburgh in 1841; studied divinity under Drs. Chalmers and John Brown; was licensed by the Presbytery of Carlisle in 1845, and came to America in 1846. He served the Presbyterian Church in the following places: Scotch Church, Detroit, Mich. (1846); stated supply at Washington Heights, New York city; Bedford, N. Y. (1847); St. Gabriel Street, Montreal, Canada, in July, 1852; Hamilton, Ontario (1856); professor of systematic theology in Knox College, Toronto (1871); pastor of Reformed Church, Brooklyn Heights (1872), where he died, Dec. 15, 1877. Dr. Inglis was a powerful and eloquent preacher of the great truths of the gospel. He was prominent in the deliberations to further the union of the different branches of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, in the success and consummation of which he greatly rejoiced. His publications are, Exposition of International Sunday-school Lessons in Sower and Gospel Field (1874-77):—Historical Sermon in Commemoration of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Church on Brooklyn Heights (1875):—many contributions to the press:—Vedder Lectures, in course of preparation at his death. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 8d ed. p. 817.

Inglis, James, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1777. He graduated from Columbia College in 1795; studied theology privately, and was licensed to preach by the New York Presbytery in 1801. In 1802 he accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Baltimore. He died Aug. 15, 1820. He published, A Sermon on Fasting, Humiliation, and Prayer (1808):—A Missionary Sermon, preached in Philadelphia in 1812:—and a Discourse, delivered in the First Presbyterian Church of Baltimore in 1814. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 278.

Inglis, John, a bishop of the Church of England, was born in New York city, Dec. 9, 1777, where his father, Charles Inglis, D.D., was rector of Trinity Church. He received his education at King's College, Windsor. In 1800 he went to England to advance the interests of his alma mater; in 1801 he took orders, and was appointed to the mission of Aylesford. In 1816, Rev. Dr. Stanser, rector of St. Paul's, became bishop of Nova Scotia, and Dr. Inglis succeeded him as rector, and, in 1825, to the bishopric of Nova Scotia, which at that time included New Brunswick, Newfoundland, and Bermuda. He died in London, Oct. 27, 1850. See Amer. Quar. Church. Rev. 1851, p. 154.

Ingnersoit are the spirits of fire among the Greenlanders, and live along the strand. They were formerly human beings, but when the flood came they were changed into spirits of fire.

Ingraham, JOSEPH H., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Portland, Me., in 1809. He entered Yale College, but did not graduate; went to Buenos Ayres, South America, as a commercial clerk; was for several years after his return a teacher; and about 1830 became professor in Jefferson College, near Natchez. While here he was widely known as a writer of novels, etc., as The South-west, by a Yankee:—Lu-fitte:—Burton:—The Quadroon, etc. About 1847 he was confirmed as a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, at Nashville, Tenn., where he established a flourishing seminary for young ladies. He was ordained deacon in 1851, and presbyter in 1852; became missionary at Aberdeen, Miss.; afterwards was rector of St. John's Church, Mobile, Ala.; then at Riverside, Tenn.; removed to Holly Springs, in 1858, where he revived St. Thomas's Hall. He died there, Dec. 18, 1860. Besides various religious pamphlets, Dr. Ingraham was the author of, The Prince of the House of David:—The Pillar of Fire:—and The Throne of David, which were very popular. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1861, p. 186.

Initial Hymn. See INTROIT.

Initiâti, a name applied to the faithful in the early Christian Church, as being initiated, that is, admitted to the use of sacred offices, and to the knowledge of the sacred mysteries of the Christian religion. Hence the fathers, in speaking of any doctrines which were not explained to the catechumens, were accustomed to say, "The initiated know what is said." St. Ambrose addressed a work especially to the Initiati.

Inlaga are a class of spirits whose worship forms the most prominent feature in the superstitious practices of Southern Guinea. They are the spirits of dead men; but whether good or evil, even the natives themselves do not know. The spirits of their ancestors the natives call Abumbo; but the Inlaga are the spirits of strangers, and have come from a distance. Sick, and especially nervous, persons are supposed to be possessed with one or the other of these classes of spirits, and various ceremonies are performed to deliver them from their power. The patient is first tested by the priest, to ascertain which class of spirits has possession of him; he is then exorcised, and when sufficiently recovered, sent about his affairs, but under certain restrictions, lest his disease return.

Innes, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of the see of Moray, Jan. 23, 1407. He died April 25, 1414. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 142.

Innes, John (2), a Scotch prelate, was dean of Ross, and bishop of the see of Caithness about 1447. He died in 1448. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 214.

Intercial dies were days, among the ancient Romans, which were devoted partly to the worship of the gods, and partly to ordinary business.

Invisibility, an attribute ascribed to God in the Scriptures. For example, Paul (1 Tim. i, 17) calls him "the king eternal, immortal, invisible." Jesus says (John i, 18) "No man hath seen God at any time." He is therefore the invisible God.

Ipabog, in Slavonic mythology, was an idol of the Weuids, brought to light by recent antiquaries, probably worshipped on Rügen as a god of hunting.

Iperius, JOANNES (surnamed "the Long"), a Benedictine abbot of St. Bertin, was a native of Ypres, Belgium, and died in 1383. He is the author of a History or Chronicle of his monastery, from the year 590 to 1294. It has been inserted, under the title of Chronica, sive Historia Monasterii S. Bertini, in the Thesaurus Novus Anekdotorum, etc., iii, 446 sq. (1717). He also wrote a life of Erkenbod, published in the Acta Sanctorum, under April 12. See André, *Bibl. Irish Version of the Scriptures. The Irish or Erse language is now little known except as the vernacular of an illiterate population, but it was once the language of literature and science. The Roman letters are often used in Erse compositions, but the Irish have an ancient alphabet of their own, for which they feel a truly national predilection. The origin of this alphabet is very uncertain; it bears some resemblance to the Anglo-Saxon, and it has been questioned whether the Saxons derived their alphabetical system from the Irish, or vice versa. In the dedication of the Irish Prayer-Book of 1608, it is confidently asserted that the Saxons borrowed their letters from Ireland.

The first printed New Test., in the Irish characters, was published in 1602. When bishop Bedell was appointed to the see of Kilmore and Arlagh, in 1629, he undertook the translation of the Old Test. Not being acquainted with the language, he commenced to study the same at the age of fifty-seven. His next measure was to secure the services of native Irish scholars, and with their help the version of the Old Test. was completed in 1640, to remain in MS. till 1681. After due examination and revision it was published in London in 1686, together with the New Test.

More than a century was suffered to roll away before any efficient measures were taken to reprint the Scriptures in Irish, until, in 1809, an edition of 2000

New Testa, conformable to the accredited version of bishop Bedell, was published in Roman characters by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Other editions followed in 1813, 1816, and 1817. In the latter year also a complete Irish Bible was issued, the version of Bedell being employed as the text of the Old Test. In the course of the following year 8000 copies of the New Test., in the Irish character, were published, and in 1828 the entire Irish Bible appeared in the vernacular. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for the year 1881 we learn that a revised edition of the New Test. is to be published. In order to bring about such a revision, twenty-five interleaved New Testa. are to be placed in the hands of competent Irish scholars, and their corrections of archaisms, obsolete words, and orthographical errors will be examined by the chief reviser and editor, the Rev. James Goodman, Canon of Ross, and professor of Irish in the University of Dublin. As the first instalment of this revision the Gospel of Luke was published in 1884. See Bible of Every Land, p. 160. (B. P.)

Irmin (Irmensäule, Irminsul, etc.), in German mythology, seems to have been a principal god of the ancient Saxons. At Eresburg, now Stadtbergen, on the Dimel, the famous pillar Irmin is said to have stood, that was destroyed by Charlemagne in 772, during the Saxon wars. Might, courage, war, were all-important to the Germanic nations; therefore it is quite possible that Irmin was a god of war.

Ir-Nahaah. Deir Nakhkhâs, the probable representative of this site, lying one and a half miles north-east from Beit-Jibrin, is merely described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 275), as "a ruined birkeh [pool], and a cave with two hundred and fifty niches [for burial]."

Iron. The modern representative of this site, Farrâs, located four miles north-west from El-Jish (Ahlab or Gischala), is described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (i, 203), as "a stone village, containing about 200 Metawileh and 200 Christians. It is situated on the edge of a plain, with vineyards and arable lands; to the west rises a basalt top, called el-Burj [the castle], full of cisterns, and supposed to be the site of an ancient castle; there are large stones strewn about; three large birkehs [pools] and many cisterns to supply water; one of the birkehs is ruined." The remains of a large church in the village are described in detail (p. 258).

Iroquois Version of the Scriptures. This version is of very recent date. There are also Iroquois Indians in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario who do not understand the Scriptures in Mohawk published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. For the benefit of these Indians, the Four Gospels were published in 1880 at Montreal. The translation was made by chief Joseph Oncaakeural, revised by Jean Dion and the Rev. T. Laforce. Chief Joseph had all qualifications for the translation, since, in 1865, under the direction of the Roman Catholic missionaries at Oka, and with the approval of the Roman Catholic bishop of Montreal, he prepared a translation into Iroquois of the Gospels and Epistles used in the Missal. (B. P.)

Irpeel is conjectured by Conder (Trav. Work, ii, 337), to be represented by the modern Rafat, as two of the radical letters are the same. This place lies one and a half miles north of el-Jib (Gibeon), and is thus described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 18, also 155): "A small hamlet on a ridge, with a spring to the west, and many rock-cut tombs. . . . Traces of ruins: cisterns cut in rocks, and rough pillar-shafts, with ruins of a modern village and a Mukân.

Isaacs, SAMUEL M., a Jewish rabbi, was born at Leeuwarden, Holland, Jan. 4, 1804. His father having emigrated to England, young Isaacs received his education there. In 1839 he came to New York to take charge of the congregation Benai Jeshurun, then worshipping in Elm Street. In 1857 he commenced the publishing of the Jewish Messenger, which was intended to uphold conservative Judaism against the so-called reformed party. In 1877 Isaacs retired from his ministry of the Shaare Tetila congregation, with which he had been connected since 1845, and died May 19, 1878. He was highly respected, not only by his own coreligionists, but also by Christians. (B. P.)

Ibranki, a sect of Russian dissenters, which arose about the middle of the 16th century. The name which they assumed means the company of the elect, but they were reckoned by the adherents of the established religion among the Raskolniki (q. v.) or Schismatics. The cause of their separation was a difficulty concerning the revision of the church books. These books were printed in 1562, under the czar, John Basilides, from manuscript copies, which, being considered incorrect, were somewhat altered in their printed form. The changes introduced were regarded by some as teaching unsound doctrine, and a sect arose who adhered to the former books, and called themselves Staroverci, or believers in the old faith. These dissenters, however, were comparatively few in number till about the middle of the following century, when, in consequence of a revision of the church books by the patriarch Nikon, the cry of unsound doctrine was again raised, and the number of dissenters increased. This sect was tolerated by the state under Alexander I.

Ise (or Iaje), the name of a central province of Japan, to which the religious sect of the Shiutists requires each of its adherents to make a pilgrimage once a year, or at least once in their life. In Ije is the grand Mia or temple of Teusio-Dai-Jin, which is the model after which all the other temples are built. Ije is a place of no natural attractions. It is rather regarded as a monument of antique poverty and simplicity. The Mia where the pilgrims pay their devotions is a low wooden edifice with a flat thatched roof, and on entering nothing is to be seen but a metallic mirror, which is regarded as a symbol of the deity, and some white paper, which is considered the emblem of purity of heart. The worshippers do not presume to enter this temple, but look through a lattice window from without while they say their prayers.

Ishtar, one of the chief deities of the Assyrians and Babylonians alike, although she was generically one of the deities of the second rank. She was the daughter of the moon-god Sin, and was identified by the Chaldeans with the planet Venus. She was essentially a warlike goddess, and was called the "Goddess of Battles and of Victories," in which attribute she was often represented as giving a bow to the Assyrian king in token of his victories over his foes. She was also, as the goddess of productive nature, the keeper of all the treasures of the earth, and hence was figured as Allat, the "Queen of the Spear or Divining-rod." In another form of the same principle she was the goddess of sensual indulgence. She was the special protectress of Erech, and in her character of Anna, or Nana, of Nineveh, while she was distinguished also at Arbela, another great seat of her worship, as Ishtar of Arbela. Her offices, names, and attributes were very various, and there appears to have been two Ishtars, mother and daughter, one the great nature goddess, the other the heroine of one of the mythical legends, called the "Descent of Ishtar into Hades." There is a considerable amount of confusion yet remaining to be cleared away with regard to the relations of Ishtar to Darcina, Bilit, Ashtaroth, and Izdubar; but generally the mythologies agree in making her the goddess most brought into contact with men and the under world.

Ising, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 24, 1617, in Austria. He studied at Königsberg, and died there, July 4, 1684, cathedral deacon. He wrote Exercitationes Histor. Chronol. Geograph. et Philol. in Pentateuchum et Josuam. See Arnold, Historie der königsbergischen Universität; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. Ismailiyah, the followers of Ismail or Ismael (q. v.).

Isoard, JOACHIM JEAN XAVIER D', a French prelate, was born at Aix, in Provence, Oct. 23, 1766. His family originated in Dauphiné, and was a very ancient one. He lost his father when he was a child, and was placed into the seminary of Aix by his mother. When the Bonapartes took refuge upon the continent, they found some support in the family of Isoard. About that time he departed for Italy, and connected himself, in 1794, with the count of Provence, at Verona. On his return to his native city in the same year he associated himself with a royalist band, and, it is said, was instrumental in saving the life of Lucien Bonaparte. When Pius VII was brought as a captive to France, Isoard followed him. Napoleon proposed to him some high employments, and even a place in the senate, but he refused. After the death of cardinal Fesch, in May, 1839, Isoard was designated to replace him, June 14. He died at Paris, Oct. 8 of the same year. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Generale, s. v.

some followers of Origen, who were charged with maintaining that the apostles were raised to equal glory with their master. They were condemned by a council at Constantinople in 553.

Isolani, GIACOMO, an Italian legislator and cardinal, was born at Bologna. He had obtained a great reputation as a scholar, being well versed both in civil and canonical law, when, after the loss of his wife, he decided to enter the ministry. He soon became distinguished in his new position, and after he had filled several important functions, pope John XIII made him cardinal, in 1414, and left him his vicar at Rome, where he was made prisoner by the troops of Ladislas, king of Naples. Finally he was set at liberty by the efforts of Giacomo Sforza Attendole, and Felipe Maria Visconti made him governor of Genoa. He died at Milan, Feb. 19, 1431, leaving several Consilia and other works on law. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Isparetta was the supreme god of the inhabitants of the coast of Malabar. When the earth was to be created he changed himself into an egg, from which heaven and earth, and all that it contains, sprang.

Israel BEN-MOSES, a Jewish writer of the 16th century, is the author of הספר יחידיו על המלכות, a cabalistic exposition of the Psalms (Lublin, 1592, preceded by an essay on the soul): הספר יחידיו כל משלל, a cabalistic exposition of Proverbs (ibid. eod.). The essay on the soul was published separately, with a Latin translation by Voisin (Paris, 1635). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 149. (B. P.)

Isthmian GAMES, one of the great national festivals among the ancient Greeks, which derived its name from the isthmus of Corinth, where they were celebrated. They were held every third year, in honor of Poseidon, or, as some allege, every fifth year. See GAMES.

Istio, in Teutonic mythology, was one of the three sons of Mannus, and the father of one of the three races of the Germans.

Ithun, in Norse mythology, is held imprisoned under the ash-tree Ygdrasil. Probably this Ithun is identical with Iduna, who guards the rejuvenating apples of the gods.

Itogay, a household god among the Mongol Tartars. He is the guardian of their families, and presides over all the products of the earth. The Tartar does not presume to dine until this god and his family have been first served, by covering the mouths of the idols with grease. When the people have dined they throw out the fragments, expecting them to be devoured by some unknown spirits.

Ittur Sopherim (עֲשֵׂר סֹפְרִים), ablato scribarum denotes the removal of a superfluous י which had crept into the text. The Masorites have noticed five instances of such a superfluous י, which has erroneously been prefixed to סֹפְרִים in Gen. xviii, 5; xxiv, 55; Numb. xxxi, 2; Psa. lxviii, 26, and to the word עֲשֵׂר סֹפְרִים in Psa. xxxvi, 7. Ives, DWIGHT, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in West Springfield, Mass., Sept. 20, 1805. He graduated at Brown University in 1835, and was ordained pastor of the First Baptist Church in Springfield, Mass., soon after. He removed to Alton, Ill., in 1836, to take charge of the Baptist church in that place, where he had a very successful ministry. The climate proving unfavorable to his health, he returned to New England, and became pastor of the Second Baptist Church in Suffield, Conn., in 1889, and continued in office until 1874. His pastorate here was one of great ability, and singularly blessed. He took a deep interest in the establishment of the Connecticut Literary Institution, a seminary of a high order, under the patronage of the Baptists of Connecticut. He resigned his pastorate in April, 1874, and removed to Conway, Mass., where he performed ministerial duties as his health would permit, until his death, Dec. 22, 1875. (J. C. S.)

Ixcuina was the goddess of love and all joys, the Venus of the Mexicans.

Ixion, in Greek mythology, was the son of Antion and Perimela, king in Thessaly. He married Dia, the daughter of Deioneus, but refused to pay the promised wedding presents to her father, wherefore the latter took possession of a number of horses of Ixion as a substitute. Ixion promised to give Deioneus what he wanted, and caused him to fall into a cave of red-hot coals, under the pretence it was a cave of gold. It was so great a crime that no man would purify him. Jupiter did this himself, and was so pleased with Ixion that he fed him at the table of the gods. A new crime sprang up in the heart of the murderer. He longed for the love of Juno. Juno forgave him, and formed Nephele (a cloud), by whom Ixion became father of the Centaurs. Finally, Jupiter's patience becoming exhausted, he threw him into Tartarus, where he remains, tortured by the Furies, along with Sisyphus and Tantalus. His penalty is to turn a wheel which perpetually recoils.

Ixtitlan is the Æsculapius of the Mexicans, the protecting god of the medical art.

Izdubar (or Gizdubar, Mass of Fire) is, according to the newly discovered Izdubar Tablets, an early mythical Assyrian hero, who was probably a form of the solar deity. He was a great chieftain, and delivered the city of Erech when it was assailed by the giants. He had for his wife the goddess Ishtar, who proved unfaithful to him, and sent some monstrous bulls to destroy him. These animals he was enabled to slay by the assistance of his faithful friend and adviser, the deified sage Heabani, who was ultimately killed by an unknown insect or reptile, called a Tambukki. Izdubar afterwards, becoming afflicted with a cutaneous disorder, went by the advice of his boatman, Urhamsi, to seek the sage Adrahasis, who, having survived the Deluge, was supposed to be able to cure him of his malady. Adrahasis complied with his request, and related to him in considerable detail the legend of the flood. Upon returning to Erech, Izdubar set up a monument in memory alike of his cure and of the story related by his benefactor, and then, by the aid of enchantment, had the soul of Heabani raised up to commune with him. Izdubar seems after these events to have become a king, but his history is so mixed up with a mythological series of legends that his real character is uncertain, as also are, of course, his parentage and birth.

Ized, in Persian mythology, is a name of the twenty-eight good genii of the second rank, who recognize Ormuzd and his seven assistants, the Amashaspands, as their ruler. The Izeds are male and female beings of greatest purity and mildness, created by Ormuzd, the representative of the highest, invisible god, and superintend the year, the month, the day, the hour, guide men on life's journey, command the animal and vegetable world, and rule the natural laws and elements, and are in continuous combat with Ahriman and his evil spirits.

Jaabez, Isaac, a Jewish rabbi of Constantinople, who died at the beginning of the 17th century, is the author of חזקוני חסד, a commentary on the Hagiographa, consisting of ten different parts: 1, חזקוני חסד, on the Song of Songs; 2, צמח קדש, on Ruth; 3, צדקה רבים, on Lamentations; 4, שכרי מדע, on Cobelet; 5, זכרון שלום, on Esther; 6, חזקוני יר, on the Psalms; 7, לשונות יר, on Proverbs; 8, יראת שדי, on Job; 9, בית ישרים, on Daniel. 10, חזקוני משה, on Ezra and Nehemiah, reprinted in Moses Frankfurter's Rabbinic Bible (Amsterdam, 1724-27). See De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 183; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 2.

Jaabez, Joseph ben Abraham, a Jewish rabbi of the 16th century, belonged to those exiles who left Spain in 1492. Jaabez settled at Adrianople, where he became rabbi preacher. He wrote מאמר האמונה, or system of Jewish dogmatics (Ferrara, 1554):—יסוד האמונה, or Dogmatics of Judaism, printed with the "system":—אור החיים, or faith triumphant over philosophy (ibid. eod.; Amsterdam, 1781; Przemysl, 1878):—פירוש על תהלים, a commentary on the Psalms (Sabolnik, 1571). Jaafarites, a Mohammedan sect who held in highest reverence the memory of Jaafar, the sixth of the twelve Imams. An unsuccessful attempt was made by Nadir Shah to assimilate the Persian Mohammedanism to that of the Turks, acknowledging Jaafar as the head of the new national faith. See IMAMS, THE TWELVE.

Jaazer. Khurbet Sar, the probable representative of this locality, is laid down at seven miles west of Amman, with notes of a pool, tower, and sarcophagi adjoining, on the reduced Map of the Ordnance Survey in the fragment published east of the Jordan; but the Memoirs containing details have not appeared. It is situated on the road running along the south side of Wady Sir. Tristram says (Bible Places, p. 837): "It consists only of grass-grown mounds and rows of foundations at the very head of the valley, above a marshy spring, the highest source of the Seir." Merrill says (East of the Jordan, p. 405), "Sar we made to be 3400 feet above the sea-level;" the Map indicates 1390 feet.

Jabbok. Wady Zerka, the modern name of this stream (which must be carefully distinguished from the Zerka Main, farther south, near Callirrhoe), has been explored by Dr. Merrill, whose account closes thus (East of the Jordan, p. 381):

"Its winding course is remarkable, making it in this regard unlike any other river of Syria. The Jordan is more crooked, having almost innumerable short bends; but the Jabbok sweeps far out into the desert, then doubles back upon itself, and forces its way through a mountain. The valley is seventy or more miles in length, and is exceedingly fertile. Along its head-waters lived a great and powerful race, which existed from the earliest advent of the Hebrews in this region clear down to a period subsequent to the time of Christ. . . . Its capacities are great, because every acre can be reached by irrigating canals. Even at present it is very extensively cultivated, and contains many fine farms. On the hill-sides there are, at certain points, some tinned canals, of which a few can be traced to a distance of five or eight miles."

Jabme Acoo was a goddess worshipped by the Laplanders, the mother of death. Her dwelling was deep in the bed of the earth, and the departed remained with her, until their destiny was decided by the judges of the infernal regions.

Jabneel OF NAPHTALI is identified by Conder (Tent Work, ii, 387), with Yemma, a modern village with a spring of the same name, four miles south-west of the Sea of Tiberias, but with no special signs of antiquity (Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Map, i, 365).

Jabneh. The modern site Yebnah is located midway (four and a quarter miles) between Akir (Ekron) and the shore, and is thus spoken of in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 441): "The modern village occupies a strong position on a rounded hill, the houses being mostly of mud. The only remains of interest noted were the church in the village and the mosque west of it," which are described in detail.

Jachmann, JOHANN GOTTLIEB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Breslau, Jan. 8, 1727. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1752 corrector of the Magdalene Gymnasium at Breslau, in 1767 provost of St. Mary's and St. George's churches, at Oels, Silesia, and died Feb. 15, 1776. He wrote, De Sabbatho ante Legem Moosaicam Existente (Leipsic, 1748):—Spicilegium Observationum in Matthæi Caput xxiv (1749):—Observatio Exegetica in Ies. xvi, 19 (1749):—*De Beringeri Editione N. Jackson, Abner, D.D., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, graduated from Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., in 1837, and taught there for several years.

In 1858 he was made president of Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., and also held the Startin professorship of the evidences of Christianity. In 1867 he removed to Hartford, Conn., becoming president of Trinity College, where he was also Hobart professor of ethics and metaphysics, and continued in that position until his death, April 19, 1874, aged sixty-three years. In 1878 he was deputy from his diocese to the General Convention, and was one of the standing committee in 1871. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

Jackson, Charles Davis, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 15, 1811. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1833; studied theology two years in Andover Theological Seminary; was engaged in teaching several years; ordained deacon in 1841, and presbyter in 1842; served as rector of St. Stephen's Church one or two years; of St. Luke's, Staten Island, from 1843 to 1847, and thereafter of St. Peter's, Westchester County, N. Y., for more than twenty years. He died June 28, 1871. He was the author of a work on Popular Education, and another on The Relation of Education to Crime, besides Sermons.

Jackson, Henry, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Providence, R. I., June 16, 1798. He graduated from Brown University in 1817, and studied theology at Andover Theological Seminary for over a year (1821); was ordained in 1822; then took charge of a Baptist Church in Charlestown, Mass.; next of the First Baptist Church of Hartford, Conn. (1836); of New Bedford, Mass. (1839); of the Central Church, Newport, R. I. (1847), and continued there till his sudden death, March 2, 1863. See Trien. Cut. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 48.

Jackson, John, D.D., an English prelate, was born in London, Feb. 22, 1811. After studying at the Reading School, under Dr. Richard Valpy, he entered Pembroke College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1833, in the first class in classics. He was appointed to the head-mastership of Islington Grammar-school in 1836. In 1846 he was made rector of St. James's Church, Piccadilly, an appointment which soon made widely known his qualities as a preacher of singularly impressive earnestness and his powers as the administrator of a large and populous district. In 1847 Dr. Jackson was appointed chaplain to the queen, and in 1845, 1850, 1862, and 1866 he was a select preacher at Oxford. In 1852 he was made canon of Bristol. In 1853 he delivered the Boyle lectures in London, and in the same year was made bishop of Lincoln. He was transferred to the see of London, Jan. 4, 1869, and died Jan. 6, 1884. Dr. Jackson published many sermons and charges, and a popular pamphlet on The Sinfulness of Little Sins.

Jackson, Samuel Cram, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Dr. William Jackson, was born at Dorset, Vt., March 13, 1802. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1821, and studied for some time in the law school at New Haven, Conn.; graduated from Andover Theological Seminary in 1826; was ordained June 6 of the following year as pastor of West Church, in Andover, from which he was dismissed in September, 1850, and became assistant secretary of the State Board of Education, also acting librarian of the State Library, which office he held until 1877. He died July 26, 1878. Dr. Jackson published, Blessings of the Year, a sermon at West Andover, Dec. 30, 1827:—Funeral Discourse of Rev. S. G. Pierce, Methuen, May 10, 1839:—Thanksgiving Sermon, Nov. 28, 1839:—The License Law Indicated:—Religious Principle a Source of Public Prosperity:—The Massachusetts Election Sermon (1843). See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 45.

Jackson, Thomas, an eminent Wesleyan Methodist minister and writer, was born at Sancton, Yorkshire, Dec. 10, 1783. He had no educational advantages in youth, but by extraordinary diligence in reading and study, continued with unabated vigor through a long life, he attained to a good degree of learning, though he was never a first-class scholar. He was converted in youth, entered the ministry in 1804, and was soon brought into notice by the wise, spirited, and faithful manner in which he discharged the various duties of a young Wesleyan minister. While at Wakefield he had a sharp contest with a Dissenting minister of Holmfirth, Rev. J. Cockin, about the "Five Points," and his Four Letters to that gentleman were the beginning of his long career as an author (Leeds, 1814-15, 8vo). The Calvinistic Controversy, The Times of Charles the First, The Commonwealth and the Restoration, the writings of Wesley, Fletcher, etc., and The Early History of Methodism were thoroughly studied, so that in these fields Jackson became facile princeps, and his works in these lines have great and enduring value. During his first year at Wakefield (1814), he read through with care nearly sixty volumes, and he never subsequently diminished the amount of his reading. From 1824 to 1843 he was editor of the Magazine and Book-room publications, and during these eighteen years he did an amount of ministerial and literary work that is marvellous. During the centenary year of Methodism (1838) he was made president of the conference, was requested to prepare a volume on the subject of the centenary, describing the rise, progress, and benefits of Wesleyan Methodism, and was appointed to preach the centenary sermon before the conference; yet Jackson went through all this extra work, and the great success of the movement was largely due to his pen, preaching and pleading, his godliness making itself felt through all Methodism. In 1849 he was for the second time elevated to the presidency. For nineteen years (1843-62) he was theological tutor at Richmond, being painstaking, perspicuous, comprehensive, and copious in his lectures, and "unutterably anxious to perpetuate sound doctrine." He became a supernumerary in 1861, taking up his residence in the suburbs of London, and preached and wrote as long as he was able. "His old age was beautiful. Always calm, cheerful, benign, often overflowing with kindness and love, he carried a happy influence wherever he went, and excited universal love and admiration." He died at Shepherd's Bush, near London, March 10, 1873. A list of Mr. Jackson's numerous works, which are largely contributions to Methodist biography and literature, may be found in Osborn, Methodist Bibliography, p. 122. Jacob, Rabbi, is the name of a Jewish teacher who lived in the latter part of the 2d century of our era. We have a recorded maxim of his in the treatise Pirke Aboth: "This world is like a vestibule before the world to come; prepare thyself at the vestibule, that thou mayest be admitted into the hall. Better is one hour of repentance and good works in this world than all the life of the world to come; better is one hour of refreshment of spirit in the world to come than all the life of this world" (ch. iv, 23, 24). Jacob ERLANDSEN, a Danish prelate, was originally dean of the chapter of Lund, in which capacity he attended the Council of Lyons in 1245. He afterwards became bishop of Roskilde, and archbishop of Lund in 1253. He died May 10, 1274. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Jacob BEN-ISAAC of Prague, who died about 1628, is the author of וראיונות וראיונות, a Judeo-German midrash on the Pentateuch, the five Megilloth and Haftaras (Amsterdam, 1648, and often; partly translated into Latin by Saubert, Helmstädt, 1660; Engl. transl. by Hershen, Lond. 1865); a modern imitation is the La Semaine Israélite, by B. Crehanse (Paris, 1847). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 19 sq. (B. P.)

Jacob of Viterbo, archbishop of Naples, who died in 1308, was at first an Augustinian monk, and had the reputation of great learning. Gandolfo, in his dissertation, De Ducentis Augustinianis, attributes to him a large number of works, which are still unpublished. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Jacob, Carl, a Benedictine, who died at Salzburg in 1661, is the author of, De Gratia Dicina (1630):—Theoremata ex Universa Doctoris Angelici Summa (1642):—Verbum Dei Incarnatum (eod.):—De Deo Uno et Trino (1644):—Conversum Eucharisticum (eod.). See Ibid. Uniers. Salisburg. p. 814; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Jacob, Louis, a French Carmelite, was born at Chalons-sur-Saône in 1608, and died in 1670. Upon joining his order, he took the name of Louis de St. Charles. He wrote, Bibliotheca Pontificia (Lyons, 1643):—Elogium Venerabilis Sororis Isaacæ de Cambri, Tornacensis Monialis S. Augustini (Paris, 1644):—Bibliotheca Purisina (1645):—Bibliographia Gallica Univernalis (1646):—De Clavis Scriptoribus Cabilonensibus Libri Tres (1652):—Catalogus Abbatum et Abbatissarum Benedictinis Dei, Ordinis Cisterciensis, etc. See Cosme de St. Étienne, *Mémoire sur le P. Jacobazzi (Lat. Jacobatius), DOMINICO, bishop of Lucca, was employed in various important affairs by Sixtus IV, and was created cardinal in 1517 by Leo X. He died July 2, 1527. He left a Treatise on the Councils. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Jacobi, Adam Friedrich Ernst, a German divine, who died April 3, 1807, superintendent and member of consistory at Cranichfeld, in the duchy of Gotha, is the author of, Neuester Religionszustand in Holland (Gotha, 1777):—Katechisationen über 12 auserlesene Stücke der heiligen Schrift (Weimar, 1773):—Religion aus der Bibel in Unterredungen aus den Hauptstellen derselben (ibid. 1794). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 824; ii, 270, 354. (B. P.)

Jacobi, Johann Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 16, 1712. For some time preacher at Osterode and Brunswick, he was called in 1758 as general superintendent of Lüneburg to Celle, and died March 21, 1791. He wrote a number of ascetical works. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 23, 385, 418, 438, 488; ii, 40. (B. P.)

Jacobins, a name applied in France to the Dominicans (q. v.), because their principal convent was situated near the gate of St. James (Jacobus), in Paris. At the commencement of the first French revolution the meetings of its most zealous promoters were held in the hall of this convent, and from this circumstance Jacobin came to be another name for revolutionist.

Jacobites, the adherents of James II of England, particularly the non-jurors, who separated from the high Episcopal Church simply because they would not take the oath of allegiance to the new king, and who in the public services prayed for the Stuart family. They were most numerous in Scotland, but were much lessened by the defeat of the Pretender in 1745, and still more so by his death in 1788. See NON-JURORS.

Jacobites, ORDER OF, a Romish order of mendicant monks, established by Innocent III in the 13th century, but which soon ceased to exist.

Jacobs, MICHAEL, D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born in Franklin County, Pa., Jan. 18, 1808. In 1823 he entered the preparatory department of Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, from which he eventually graduated. While there he joined the Presbyterian Church. After teaching in a boarding-school several months at Belair, Md., he moved in April, 1829, to Gettysburg, where he taught mathematics in the Gettysburg Gymnasium, afterwards Pennsylvania College, in which he was elected professor of mathematics and natural science. Having studied theology privately, he was licensed to preach in the fall of 1832. He was repeatedly president and treasurer of his synod, and for a time was secretary of the General Synod. For several years he was editor of the Linnean Record and Journal. In 1865 his department was restricted to mathematics. The following year he withdrew from college instruction. He died July 22, 1871. Although a voluminous writer, very little of his work was published beyond a number of review articles and a small volume entitled Notes on the Battle of Gettysburg. See Fifty Years in the Lutheran Ministry, 1878, p. 228.

Jacob's Well. The following is the latest description of this spot (Bir Yakub), taken from Lieut. Conder's Tent Work in Palestine, i, 71. A full account is given in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, ii, 172 sq.

"The tradition of Jacob's Well is one in which Jews, Samaritans, Moslems, and Christians alike agree. There are also other reasons which lead to the belief that the tradition is trustworthy; the proximity of Joseph's Tomb and of Sychar, and finally the fact of a well existing at all in a place abounding with streams, one of which is within one hundred yards' distance. No other important well is found near, and the utility of such a work can only be explained on the assumption that it was necessary for the patriarch to have water within his own land, surrounded as he was by strangers, who may naturally be supposed to have guarded jealously their rights to the springs. By digging the well Jacob avoided those quarrels from which his father had suffered in the Philistine country, pursuing a policy of peace which appears generally to have distinguished his actions.

"The well then, as being one of the few undoubted sites made sacred by the feet of Christ, is a spot of greater interest than any near Shechem. Its neighborhood is not marked by any very prominent monument, and, indeed, it would be quite possible to pass by it without knowing of its existence. Just east of the gardens of Balâta, a dusty mound by the road half covers the stumps of three granite columns. After a few moments' search a hole is found south-west of them, and by this the visitor descends through the roof of a little vault, apparently modern. The vault stretches twenty feet east and west, and is ten feet broad, the hole in the pointed arch of the roof being in the north-east corner. The floor is covered with fallen stones, which block the mouth of the well; through these we let down the tape and found the depth to be seventy-five feet. The diameter is seven feet six inches, the whole depth cut through alluvial soil and soft rock, receiving water by infiltration through the sides. There appears to be occasionally as much as two fathoms of water, but in summer the well is dry. The little vault is built on to a second, running at right angles northwards from the west end, but the communication is now walled up. In this second vault there are said to be remains of a tessellated pavement, and the bases of the three columns above mentioned rest on this floor, the shafts sticking out through the roof—a sufficient proof that the vault is modern."

Jacobson, Heinrich Friedrich, a German professor of canon law, was born June 8, 1804, at Marienwerder. He studied at Königsberg, Berlin, and Göttingen, commenced his academical career at Königsberg in 1826, was professor there in 1831, and died March 19, 1868. He published, De Codicibus Gregoriano et Hermogeniano (Königsberg, 1826):—Kirchenrechtliche Versuche zur Begründung eines Systems des Kirchenrechts (1831):—De Fontibus Juris Ecclesiastici Borussiae (1838):—Geschichte der Quellen des Kirchenrechts des Preussischen Staats (1837-44, 8 vols.):—Das evangelische Kirchenrecht des Preussischen Staates und seiner Provinzen (Halle, 1864-66, 2 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 603 sq. (B. P.)

Jacobson, Israel, a Jewish rabbi of Germany, was born at Halberstadt, Oct. 17, 1768. He was one of the earliest promoters of reform among his coreligionists. In 1801 he founded an educational establishment at Seesen, in Westphalia, in which Jewish and Christian boys were taught side by side. When the kingdom of Westphalia was erected, Jacobson had the ear of the government; a consistory was established, and he was made its president. In 1805 Jacobson introduced into his synagogue an organ, German hymns, confirmation, and the German sermon. The example set by him was followed by others. When, in 1815, the kingdom of Westphalia was buried under the ruins of Napoleon's empire, Jacobson settled at Berlin, where he established again a private temple of the modern style, in which he officiated as high-priest. He died Sept. 13, 1828. See Jost, Jacobson und die neuern Richtungen in der Israelitische Annalen, i, 29 sq.; Kayserling, Bibliothek jüdischer Kanzelredner, i, 13 sq.; M'Caul, Sketches of Judaism and the Jews, p. 61 sq. (B. P.)

Jacobson, Jacob Hirsch, a Jewish ascetical writer of Germany, who died at Dresden, Jan. 10, 1885, is the author of, Pirke Aboth oder Rabbinische Gnomologie (Hebrew text with German translation and commentary, Breslau, 1840):—Israelitisches Gebetbuch (Hebrew and German, 1843):—דבר אמת ליעקב, eine Auswahl Israelitischer Kanzelvorträge zu religiöser Belehrung und Erbauung:—Katechetischer Leitfaden beim Unterricht in der israelitischen Religion (7th ed. 1876):—Die Geschichten der heiligen Schriften (3d ed. 1875). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 5 sq. (B. P.)

Jacobson, William, D.D., an English prelate, was born at Great Yarmouth, Norfolk, in 1803. He matriculated at St. Edmund's Hall in 1823, migrated shortly afterwards to Lincoln College, on obtaining a scholarship there, and, in 1829, having taken his degree, became a fellow of Exeter. He was made bishop of Chester in 1865, and died at Oxford, July 12, 1884. The chief works of bishop Jacobson were his new edition of Nowell's Catechisms, his reprint in six volumes of the Works of Bishop Sanderson, and his edition of the Remains of Clement, Ignatius, and Polycarp (1838; 4th ed. 1866, 2 vols.). Jacobus. See JAMES.

Jacobus BARADÆUS, a Monophysite bishop of Edessa, is said to have been born at Tela or Constantia, fifty-five miles east of Edessa, towards the close of the 5th century. He was early trained in the ministry, became a noted ascetic, was called to the Byzantine court, but lived there a complete recluse, and was made bishop nominally of Edessa, but virtually metropolitan, A.D. 541. Amid the disastrous and troublesome period in which he lived, his courage and energy prolonged the cause of the party to which he belonged, especially in the famous quarrel with Paul of Antioch. He died suddenly, July 30, 578. A Liturgy is incorrectly ascribed to him (Renaudot, Lit. Or. i, 332), also a Catechesis, largely used by the Jacobites (Cave, Hist. Lit. i, 524). See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. a. v.

Jacobus SARUGENSIS, made bishop of Botnæ, a little town in the district of Sarug, in Osroene, at the age of sixty-seven, A.D. 519, and who died two years afterwards, is the author of very many ecclesiastical works, both in prose and poetry, chiefly of a ritualistic or epistolary character, for which see Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. a. v.

Jacobus, MELANCHTHON WILLIAMS, D.D., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Newark, N. J., Sept. 19, 1816. He entered the sophomore class at Princeton College in his fifteenth year, and graduated in 1834 with the highest honors. In 1835 he entered Princeton Theological Seminary, where he not only regularly graduated, but spent a fourth year in study, at the same time assisting professor J. Addison Alexander in the department of Hebrew. In 1839 he was received by the Presbytery of New York, and in September was ordained pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn, N. Y. At the close of his twelve years' pastorate here the Church was one of the most flourishing in the city. In the fall of 1850 he made a tour through Europe, Egypt, and Palestine, and returned with greatly improved health. During his absence the General Assembly, in May, 1851, had elected him professor of Oriental and Biblical literature in the theological seminary at Allegheny, which position he accepted on his return, and was released from his pastoral charge, Oct. 21, 1851. In January, 1858, in addition to his work in the seminary, he accepted a call to the Central Church of Pittsburgh, which he served for twelve years with marked success. In 1866 he made a second tour of Europe. He was moderator of the last General Assembly of the Old School Church in 1869, and conjointly with Rev. P. H. Fowler, D.D., presided at the opening of the first reunited assembly in 1870. He presented the able report on sustentation, which was adopted by the General Assembly of 1871, and was secretary of that scheme for three years, until it was merged into the Board of Home Missions in 1874. In 1876 he was elected secretary of the Board of Education, but declined the position that he might continue in the ministry. He died Oct. 28, 1876. He had just attended a meeting of the Synod of Pittsburgh, and taken an active part in its proceedings. On the day preceding he had taught his seminary classes as usual. In 1848 Dr. Jacobus, while in Brooklyn, published the first volume of his Notes on the New Testament. Other volumes followed at intervals, the two volumes on Genesis appearing in 1864. These commentaries have had an immense sale, and are found among all denominations of Christians. Besides these he was the author of many other and smaller works. Dr. Jacobus stood in the front rank of the Biblical scholars of his age. As a preacher he maintained all through his ministry a high position, while on the platform his addresses were always happy and effective. He was a most energetic and persistent worker, and his industry was untiring. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1877, p. 36.

Jacoby, LUDWIG S., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Old Strelitz, Mecklenburg, Germany, Oct. 21, 1813. His parents being pious Jews, he was devoutly trained, and liberally educated, especially in the ancient languages. In 1835 he was baptized by a Lutheran minister. In 1838 he emigrated to the United States, and settled in Cincinnati, O., as a physician. He also devoted himself to teaching. About that time he was spiritually converted, under the preaching of Dr. Nast. In 1841 he was sent to St. Louis, Mo., to start the first German mission in that city. Desiring to labor more immediately for his countrymen, he was sent, in 1849, to Bremen, Germany, where he formed a Methodist Episcopal Society. There he continued, faithful in the various offices of presiding elder, pastor, editor, book agent, and superintendent for twenty years. He then returned to the United States, and was transferred to the South-western German Conference, and stationed at Eighth Street charge, St. Louis. In 1873 he was made presiding elder of St. Louis district, whereon he labored faithfully until near his death, which occurred in St. Louis, Mo., June 21, 1874. Dr. Jacoby's life was full of devotedness and energy, and his death full of peace and blessings. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 88; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Jaenbert, archbishop of Canterbury, received his education at St. Augustine's, and was consecrated at Canterbury, Feb. 2, 766, by Egbert, archbishop of York. The great event of this episcopate is the conversion of the bishopric of Lichfield into a metropolitan see by Offa, king of Mercia, and the consequent spoliation, with the loss of dominion, authority, and dignity, of the archbishop of Canterbury. There was much to render the last years of Jaenbert's life melancholy, for the prospects of his country were gloomy in the extreme. Thwarted and discomfited to the last, Jaenbert perceived that his orders to be buried at St. Augustine's would not be obeyed by his chapter if he died without the walls of the monastery, and he therefore sought an asylum in the place endeared to him by the recollection of younger and happier days. He commanded his stone coffin to be prepared; his episcopal robes were arranged by his bedside; his soul was comforted by the psalms sung and the Scriptures read to him by brethren who could sympathize with him in his fallen fortunes. He died Aug. 11, 790. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i, 242 sq.

Jaeshik, in Lamaism, was a Buddha, who brought Buddhism to Thibet, A.D. 407. Jakshiamuni, the fifth divine Burchan, and the supreme god of the Lamaites, caused him to spring forth out of the beautiful Padma-flower, knowing what sanctity he would thereby receive, and authorized him to bring about the salvation of men. Jaeshik undertook, however, only to save the men living in the snowy countries of the north; and he promised to carry out this plan with all perseverance, though his head should split into ten and his body into a thousand parts. He first descended into the kingdoms of hell, and visited the kingdom of monsters (Birid), then that of animals, of men, of evil genii, Assuri and Tägri, and there destroyed all pains and torture; for as soon as his holy mouth spoke the saving words, "Om-ma-ni-pad-mä-hum," hell no longer existed. After having accomplished so much, he began his journey on earth, and travelled through the countries beyond the mountains of snow. There also he spoke his magic words, destroyed evil, brought good from heaven, and led men to the true religion. Next he ascended into the country of the deities on the Red Mountain. There, to his consternation, he again saw many millions of beings unmercifully tortured by being bathed in the Otang Sea, or sea of fire. The tortures of these unfortunates brought forth a tear from each one of his eyes, out of which there sprang two goddesses, who promised to assist him, and, placing themselves in his eyes, their power was manifested by the glances of Jaeshik. He spoke the above-mentioned six words also here, saved the doomed, and converted them to faith in the supreme god Jakshiamuni, so that his work was almost finished. But all the saved were not yet strong in the faith, and this troubled him. He longed for the blessed land of eternal happiness, his home; and suddenly his head split into ten parts and his body into a thousand. Burchan joined the latter together again, and consoled him by saying that his body would become the holiest sanctuary of the world. The thousand parts were to become so many hands, each with one eye, and were to represent so many monarchs.

Jasé, Mardechai ben-Abraham, a famous Jewish author, resided in 1561 at Venice, whence, during a persecution of the Jews, he retreated to Bohemia, and became rabbi in the synagogues of Grodno, Lublin, Krennitz, and Prague. He is the author of the Lebushim, a series of ten works, which hold a high place in the classics of modern Judaism. The general title of the series is לבוש מלכות, Royal Apparel, from Est. viii, 15; and the collection itself is sometimes called לבוש or ספר הלבושים. It consists of (1) Lebush tekeleth, or "the Purple Robe;" (2) Lebush ha-chor, or "the White Vestment;" (3) Lebush atereth zahab, or "the Crown of God;" (4) Lebush butz reargaman, or "the Vestment of fine linen and purple;" (5) Lebush ir Shushan, or "the Vestment of the City of Shushan." These five treatises turn upon the objects of the ritual codices of the Arba Turim of Jacob ben-Asher (q. v.), and the Shulchan Aruch of Joseph Karo (q. v.). The remaining five lebushim are exegetical, cabalistic, and philosophical. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 7 sq.; Etheridge, Introduction to Hebrew Literature, p. 457; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 136. (B. P.)

Jasé, Samuel, a rabbi at Constantinople in the latter part of the 16th century, is the author of homilies on the Midrashim, on the Pentateuch, and on Esther, Lamentations, and Ruth. He afterwards published them under the title of יסודות תורה. He also published homilies on the haggadoth of the Palestinian Talmud. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 9 sq.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 136. (B. P.)

Jaga, in Hindûism, is one of the costliest and most honored sacrifices, which the Brahmins offer to the sun and the planets, and at which strictly no one from any other caste is allowed to be present. In the spring of the year a certain spot is selected and cleansed. A hut is built, in which several hundred Brahmins can be accommodated with seats; in the centre of this the holy pillar is erected, Mahadewa's symbol. Around this a fire is kindled by rubbing together two pieces of wood; and now all that can find room crowd into the hut. The remaining Brahmins surround the holy place, so that no profane eye desecrate the sanctuary. Then a widow is strangled (blood is not allowed to be shed); the liver is roasted with butter, divided in as many parts as there are Brahmins, and given to them on a slice of bread, which they are obliged to eat. Whoever does this is said to be specially purified and made sinless; and the Brahmin who kindled the fire and performed the sacrificial ceremony may take a part of the fire to his home, where he is to keep it constantly burning, and at his death he is permitted to have his funeral pile kindled with it, by virtue of which he enters paradise immediately, without any transmigration of his soul. Of course, under the English rule these barbarities are no longer permitted.

Jäger, JOHANN WOLFGANG, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stuttgart, March 17, 1647, and died at Tübingen, April 2, 1720, doctor and professor of theology, chancellor, and provost. He is the author of, Historia Ecclesiastica, etc. (1710, 2 vols. fol.; Hamburg, 1703, 1717):—Examen Quietismi:—Separatismus Hodiernus sub Examen Vocatus:—De Doctrina Communicationis Idiomatum:—Compendium Theologiae Positivae. Jaghatai-Turki [Tartar] (or Tekke Turco-man) Version of the SCRIPTURES. This dialect is vernacular to the Uzbek and Turkish tribes of Turkestan and Central Asia, and a version of any part of the Scriptures into it is of a very recent date. In 1879 the Rev. James Bassett had completed a translation of the gospel of Matthew, with the assistance of a mirza from Meshed. After a careful revision made at Teheran, the translator carried his version through the press in London. A new and revised edition of this gospel was again printed at Tiflis, and most of the vowel points, which were so numerous in the first edition, were omitted. (B. P.)

Jagnepawadam, in Hindûism, is the cord of the Brahmins, a sacred mark or sign of the highest caste, which no one else is allowed to carry under severe penalties. It is made of nine threads of wool, which are long enough to be wound one hundred and eight times around the hand (because of the one hundred and eight legends of Brahma). These nine threads are divided into three parts, corresponding to the three Vedas, or holy books, and they are then suspended over the right shoulder, so as to touch the hip under the left arm. This Brahmin-cord places him who carries it above the reach of the civil law.

Jagouth (or Yaghûth), one of the five principal gods of the ancient Arabians. He was usually represented in the form of a lion, and is mentioned by name in the Koran.

Jahed, ABÜ-OSMAN-AMRÛ, a Mohammedan doctor of the sect of the Motazelites. The name of Jahed, by which he is generally designated, is only a surname given to him on account of his brilliant eyes. He was thoroughly acquainted with Greek literature. He gained a great many adherents by his writings and eloquence. Among his theological books one is cited as being composed in favor of Ali, and containing more than a thousand traditions respecting him. The best of his works, according to Ibn-Khallican, who cites but two, is a treatise on animals, probably borrowed largely from Greek writers. Jahed died at Bussora, A.D. 869. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Jain, ÆGIDIUS, a Benedictine, was born at Mittenwald, Bavaria, March 17, 1750. In 1770 he joined his order, was in 1778 professor at the Salzburg Gymnasium, and in 1803 professor of the theology there. In 1814 he retired from public duties, and died Dec. 4, 1822. He published, Predigten (Munich, 1803, 2 vols.):—Katechismus (Würzburg, 1811):—Handbuch zum Unterrichte in der christl. kuthol. Glaubens- und Sittenlehre (1821), and other ascetical works. Jakobi, ADAM FRIEDRICH ERNST, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 27, 1733. He studied at Jena, acted for some time as private tutor, went in 1768 as military chaplain to Holland, and was in 1775 appointed superintendent by duke Ernest of Gotha. Jakobi died April 3, 1807. He wrote, Diss. Theologica de Peccatis Apostolorum Actualibus (Jena, 1754):—Exercitatio Ezegetico-Theologica de Monogamia (Gotha, 1776), besides a number of historical and pedagogical works. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Jakshiamuni, in Lamaism, is the supreme god of the Thibetians, identical with Buddha of India, an incarnation of Vishnu, who appears for the fourth time to save men. He is the present sovereign of the universe. After him there will yet come nine hundred and ninety-six Buddhas, before the salvation of men shall be finished. The inhabitants of Thibet, Mongolia, Tartary, China, and Japan hold him to be the only god, creator and giver of their religion.

Jalaguier, PROSPER FRÉDÉRIC, a French Protestant theologian, was born Aug. 21, 1795. Having acted as pastor at several places, Jalaguier was called in 1833 to Montauban, to fill temporarily the chair of Christian ethics. Two years later he was appointed professor of dogmatics, and occupied this office till his death at Montauban, March 22, 1864. He published, Le Témoignage de Dieu (1851):—Authenticité du Nouveau Testament (eod.):—Inspiration du Nouveau Testament (eod.):—Simple Exposé de la Question Chrétienne (1852):—Du Principe Chrétien et du Catholicisme, du Rationalisme et du Protestantisme (1855):—Une Vue de la Question Scripturaire (1863). In these works he defended with great firmness the reality of a supernatural revelation and the religious authority of the Scripture, against the writers of the Revue de Strasbourg. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Jaldabaoth. See IALDABAOOTH.

Jalinder, in Hindû mythology, was one of the mighty demons which, sprung from Danu, are classed and recognised under the name of Danuwas. He was dreaded by all the gods, because he was unconquerable; but this was only by the marvellous virtue and purity of his wife, who favored no one in heaven or on earth. The demon challenged Shiva, and fought with him in Mahadewa's form, and would have come off victorious had not Vishnu come to the assistance of the god. This he did by taking on the form of a demon just like Jalinder, and, coming to the wife of the latter, overcame her virtue, and immediately the demon's strength left him, so that he was conquered and killed.

Jalkut (שׁוֹפְרָן), i. e. collection, is the title of a Midrashic catena of traditional expositions from upwards of fifty different works of all ages, many of which are of great value. This Midrash extends over the whole Bible. The latest edition is the one published at Warsaw (1876-77). The author of the Jalkut is Simeon Cara (q. v.). (B. P.)

Jalloof Version of the SCRIPTURES. This dialect (also called Jolof, Woloff, Guluf, etc.), is spoken by a large tribe near Bathurst, Gambia, West Africa, numbering about 50,000 souls. In 1881, the British and Foreign Bible Society, at the request of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, resolved to print a tentative edition of 500 copies of the gospel of Matthew. The translation was made by Rev. R. Dixon, of Bathurst, Gambia, who had used his version in the services, and found it was understood and liked by the people. See Bible of Every Land, p. 407. (B. P.)

Jam mösta QUIESCERE QUERELA is the beginning of the grand burial-hymn of Prudentius (q. v.). This hymn, which, as Trench says, is "the crowning glory of the poetry of Prudentius," brings before us the ancient worship in deserts and in catacombs, and of which Herder says that no one can read it without feeling his heart moved by its touching tones. The first stanza runs thus in the original:

"Jam mösta quiescere querela,
Lacrimas suspendite, matres,
Nullus una pignora plangat,
Mors hæc reparatio vitæ est."

And in Caswall's translation:

"Grieve, ye tearful mourners,
Thus your hearts to rend,
Death is life's beginning,
Rather than its end."

A German translation is also found in Schaff's Deutsches Gesangbuch, No. 468. (B. P.)

Jama, in Hindû mythology, is the ruler of a division of the infernal region (Nark), and the highest judge there, who decides whether the departed souls are to be admitted to heaven or go to hell, in which latter case they begin their wanderings through life anew. A mirror, made of pure fire, portrays to him the deeds of all men. On a golden scale, held by his assistants, he weighs human deeds, and leads those found wanting to Nark, the others to Suerga (heaven). He is a protecting spirit of virtue and justice, and the most honored companion of Shiva. Nevertheless, he is represented in a frightful appearance, with hideous features, a number of arms, heavy weapons, and riding on a black buffalo with four horns. He lives in Jamapur (city of Jama).

Jamandaga (or Macha Alla) was one of the supreme deities of the Kalmucks. He is represented somewhat like Herli-Kan, but differs from that deity in possessing six arms. His color is blue, and the palms of the hands and the soles of his feet are red. Flowers and skulls are his crown, and snakes his armlets and anklets, while a snake hangs over both shoulders. His girdle is a string of human heads. In one hand he holds a sceptre, in another two cords. In two he holds drinking-vessels, and in the fifth and sixth the hide of an animal. This frightful god crushes with his feet a form which has human arms and feet, but a head resembling an elephant's. This idol is also surrounded by good and evil daemons.

Jamanduga, in Thibetanian mythology, is one of the eight fearful gods (Nadman-Dobshot), who by their might destroy evil, protect the world, and are zealously worshipped by the followers of Lamaism. Jamanduga is an emanation of the god Monsushari. Jakshiamuni, the supreme god, gave him the most hateful appearance that he could devise, in order that he might conquer the frightful Tshotshitshalba, the most dreaded of all evil daemons, who continually seeks to destroy the world. In this form Jamanduga is of a bluish color, surrounded by flames of fire, and has ten heads, in three rows, one of which is that of a bull, another that of a goat, and the rest distorted human faces; but the last and topmost one is that of a beautiful maiden, to denote his divine nature. Twenty arms carry the deadliest weapons and instruments of torture, and with twenty feet he walks on a heap of crushed men. See JAMANDAGA.

Jamaa, in the mythology of the Antilles, was the mother of the great spirit Jokahuna, whom Tonatiks sent to the earth in his stead. This goddess was worshipped on the island Quisqueja (Hayti). She had an idol there, at whose side two servants stood, one to call the gods together, when the goddess wanted to send them out to fulfil her wishes, the other to punish the disobedient.

Jambawat, in Hindû mythology, was an Avatar, an incarnation of the supreme god, in the form of a giant bear. Rama (an incarnation of Vishnu) appeared for the purpose of conquering Ravana, the giant king of Ceylon. The gods all supported the latter, with armies of apes, of bears, and other animals. Brahma gave the bears a king, Jambawat, who came out of the mouth of the god, and who possessed the spirit of Brahma. He now wished to make the expedition to Ceylon alone, but Krishna fought three days with him, until he recognised the supremacy of Vishnu (whose incarnation Krishna was). Then he followed Rama, with his entire army of bears, and assisted him in conquering Ceylon and its ruler.

James, John Thomas, D.D., an Anglican colonial bishop, was born in England in 1786. He was educated at the Charter House and at Christ Church, Oxford, became vicar of Flitton, Bedfordshire, and was elevated to the see of Calcutta. He arrived in that city, Jan. 15, 1828; on June 23 he set out on a visitation to the Upper Provinces of Bengal, and died while on his way to the island of Penang, Aug. 22 of the same year. Bishop James had acquired some celebrity as an author and traveller. He wrote Journal of Travels in Germany, Sweden, Russia, Poland, etc. (Lond. 1816, 4to):—Views in Russia, Poland, etc., prepared in colors:—The Flemish, Dutch, and German Schools of Painting (Lond. 1822, 8vo). James* (Lond. 1830, 8vo); Darling, Cyclop. Bib. s. v.

James, William, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Albany, N. Y., in June, 1797. He received an academic and collegiate education, and was ordained about the 25th year of his age. He was pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church in Rochester, N. Y., from 1825 until 1830 or 1831, and then for a time of the Third Presbyterian Church in Montgomery Street, Albany. He died in 1868. See Munsell, History of Albany, iv, 10. (J. C. S.)

Jameson, GEORGE, an eminent Scotch portrait painter, was born at Aberdeen in 1586, and studied under Rubens and Vandyck. He died at Edinburgh, in 1644. The largest collection of his works are at Taymouth.

Jammabos, a Shinto order of mountain priests of Japan, are a kind of wandering monks, dependent on the benevolence of the people for subsistence; and from the circumstance that they go armed with swords or scimitars, they are sometimes called mountain soldiers. Their founder lived about the 6th century. He wandered about in deserts, and climbed the steepest mountains, subjecting himself to the severest privations. His followers, on entering the order, made a solemn vow to renounce all temporal advantages for the prospect of eternal happiness. In course of time they became divided into two orders, called Tijunfu and Fonsaufu. The former are obliged to go on a pilgrimage once a year to the mountain of Fikooan (q. v.). The other order of Jammabos are obliged annually to pay a visit to the sepulchre of their founder, which is also situated on the top of a high and almost inaccessible mountain. In preparation for this hazardous undertaking, they practice frequent ablutions and severe mortifications. During their pilgrimage they eat only herbs and roots. On their return they go to Miaco, and present a gift to the general of the religious order to which they belong, who, in turn, bestows some honorable title on the pilgrim. At their original institution the Jammabos were Shintoists, but they have blended that form of religion with the worship of strange gods. See SHINTO.

Jammy, Pierre, a Dominican of Languedoc, who died in 1665 at Grenoble, doctor of divinity, is best known as the editor of the works of Albertus Magnus (21 vols. fol. Lyons, 1651). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 914; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Jan, Johann Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian, was born Nov. 9, 1681. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1713 professor of elocution, in 1714 of history, in 1719 doctor and professor of theology, and died Aug. 27, 1725. He wrote, Judicia Eruditorum de Origine Electorum:—Historia Aerae Christianae:—De Censu Romanorum Primo:—De Articulis Suobacensibus Augustinae Confessionis Fundamento:—De Liturgiis Orientalibus in Doctrina de S. Eucharistia, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 611. (B. P.)

Janes, Edwin L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, twin brother of bishop E. S. Janes, was born at Sheffield, Mass., April (his biographers say May) 27, 1807. He spent his boyhood near Salisbury, Conn., receiving the rudiments of an English education; was converted while teaching school in Columbia, N. Y.; and in 1832 entered the Philadelphia Conference. His appointments were, Asbury Church, West Philadelphia; Elizabeth, Plainfield, and Irvington, N. J.; Asbury Church, West Philadelphia; then to Haddington, Middletown, and Odessa Circuits, Del.; then Elkton and St. George's Church, Philadelphia; then was transferred to the New York Conference, and sent in turn to Mulberry Street Church; South Second Street, Williamsburgh; South Fifth Street (which was organized by him); Bridgeport and Middletown, Conn., in 1854 and 1855, presiding elder of New Haven District; South Fifth Street, Williamsburgh, three years; John Street and Forsyth Street, New York city; Flushing and Whitestone, L. I.; Summerfield Church, Brooklyn, in 1866; Central Church in 1867, and John Street, New York city, in 1868 and 1869, where he closed his pastoral life. In 1870 he was appointed district secretary or agent of the National Temperance Society and Publishing House, which office he held until his death, Jan. 10, 1875. Mr. Janes was among the foremost of saintly men; an unrivalled pastor; a man of extraordinary power in prayer; of rare eloquence in exhortation, an ingenious, instructive, effectual preacher; a sound theologian, and a devoted temperance worker. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 51; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Janes, Edmund Storer, D.D., LL.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was born of highly respectable but not wealthy parents, at Sheffield, Mass., April 27, 1807. He was converted in 1820, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. From 1824 to 1830 he was engaged in teaching, during which time he studied law with the intention of making it the profession of his life; but in 1830 joined the Philadelphia Conference, and during the first few years of his ministry, in addition to his work as a minister and his theological studies, which were thorough if not broad, studied medicine. He was ordained deacon in 1832, and elder in 1834, and after filling various important charges was, in 1838, appointed agent for Dickinson College. In 1840 he was elected financial secretary of the American Bible Society; and in 1844 was elected to the bishopric in conjunction with bishop Hamline, they being the last of the bishops who received the vote of the undivided Church. For more than thirty-one years he discharged his duties in the episcopal office, travelling in all the states except Florida, and in most of the territories, besides being president of the Missionary Society, of the Board of Church Extension, and of the Sunday-school Union and Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as well as being one of the managers of the American Bible Society, of the directors of the American Colonization Society, of the trustees of the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn., of the Drew Theological Seminary, and president of the Minard Home, Morristown, N. J. Bishop Janes was in many respects one of the most remarkable men in the history of American Methodism. He inherited the sterling mental and moral qualities of his Puritan ancestors; possessed a mind of a high order, enriched by generous culture, and disciplined by the severest training. He was a model platform speaker, ready, earnest, and impressive; a preacher of rare power, grasp, and eloquence; and an administrator of peerless activity, clearness, decision, patience, and comprehensiveness. He was a man of inflexible principle, thorough, conscientious, and untiring in labor and devotion; and a Christian of the purest humility. He died Sept. 18, 1876. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 365; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.; Life, by Dr. Ridgway (N. Y. 1882).

Jangamas, a Hindû sect, the essential characteristic of which is wearing the Lingam (q. v.), or symbol of creative production, on some part of the dress or person. The type is of small size, made of copper or silver, and is commonly worn suspended in a case round the neck, or sometimes tied in the turban. In common with the worshippers of Siva generally, the Jangamas smear their foreheads with ashes, wear necklaces, and carry rosaries made of the Rudraksha seed. The clerical members of the sect usually stain their garments with red ochre. They are not numerous in Upper India; but in the south of India the Jangamas, or Lingayets, as they are often called, are very numerous, and the officiating priests of Siva are commonly of this sect. They are also represented as being very numerous in the Deccan. Besides the Jangama priests of Kedarnath, a wealthy establishment of them exists at Benares.

Jänisch, Rudolph, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hamburg, May 22, 1750. He studied at Göttingen, was catechist in his native city, and in 1789 pastor of the Lutheran Church at Amsterliam. In 1796 he was recalled to Hamburg, and died April 7, 1826, pastor primarius of St. Catharine's. He wrote, Cogitationes de Animi Humani Libertate (Hamburg, 1770):—Predigtenwürfe über die sonn- und festtäglichen Evangelien (1797–1804, 8 parts). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 149. (B. P.)

Janoah, (1) OF EPHRAIM. Of Khurbet Yanin, the modern representative of this place, the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 395) give only this notice: "Traces of ruins above a spring." (2) OF NAPHTALI. The Yanukh, thought by some to represent this place, is a double village, nine and three quarter miles south-east from es-Zib (Ecdippa, or Achziv), which would fall on the border between Asher and Naphtali, and is thus described (from Guérin) in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (i, 193). "Cisterns cut in the rock, and many cut stones scattered over the soil, surrounding platforms or employed as building material, show that we are here on the site of a small ancient city, the name of which is faithfully preserved in its modern name." Lieut. Conder, however, distinguishes this locality from the Janoah of 2 Kings xv, 29 (see the Memoirs as above, i, 96; but no description of the place is given), which he regards as the Januá lying four miles south of the Leontes (Nahr Kasimiyeh), and six and a quarter miles east of Tyre; but this would fall within the tribe of Asher.

Jansen (Lat. Jansenius), JACQUES, a Belgian theologian, was born at Amsterdam in 1547. He studied at Louvain, was in 1575 first president of the newly-founded Augustinian college, in 1580 professor of theology, in 1614 dean, and died July 30, 1625. He wrote, Instructio Catholici Ecclesiastæ:—Enarratio in Exodi xv et Deuteronom. xxxii:—Commentar. in Jobum:—In Nahum et Habacuc Prophetas:—In Cantica Canticozum:—In Psalmos Davidis:—In Evangelium Johannis. See Andrea. Bibliotheca Belgica; Miræus, Elogii Illustrum Belgii Scriptorum; Jöcher, Algemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Janssens, ELINGA FRANCISCUS, a Dutch Dominican, who died in 1715, was one of the most famous canonists of his time. He wrote, Autoritas D. Thomæ Aquinatis (1604):—Certissimum quid Certissimæ Veritatis pro Doctrina Doctoris Angelici:—Controversiæ in Hæreticos Opusculum (Antwerp, 1673):—Suprema Romani Pontificis Autoritas (1689):—De Romani Pontificis Autoritate et Infallibilitate (1690):—Forma et Esse Ecclesiæ Christi (1702):—Dissertationes de Principali-oriibus Questionibus hoc Tempore in Scholis Disputatis (1707). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Janssens, Abraham, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1569, and at an early age executed a number of works for the churches of Flanders, which rank him among the ablest artists of the Flemish school. His paintings in the Church of the Carmelites at Antwerp, representing The Virgin and the Infant, and The Entombment, are highly commended. In the cathedral at Ghent is an Ecce Homo, and a Descent from the Cross worthy of Rubens himself. His masterpiece is the Resurrection of Lazarus, in the collection of the elector-palatine. He probably died in 1631. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Bug. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Janssens, Hans Herman, a Dutch theologian, was born in 1783, and died at Leyden in 1855, professor of exegesis and dogmatics. He published Hermeneutica Sacra (Liege, 1817, 2 vols.; Paris, 1851; Turin, 1858), a work which is held in high repute among Catholics, and has also been translated into French (Paris, 1827, 1833). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Janum. For this locality Conder suggests (Tent IVork, ii, 337) the present Beni Na'im, which lies three miles east of Hebron (a position possible, perhaps, for the group of towns with which it is associated in the sacred text), with cisterns in the vicinity, and thus described (from Guérin) in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordinance Survey (iii, 325):

"Here I saw in many places ancient materials employed in Arab buildings. Several fragments of wall still upright in good cent stones attracted my attention. I visited a mosque which covers, according to the tradition of the people, the tomb of Lot. The coffin shown to me consists of a great wooden coffer, covered with a carpet, and probably contains the body of some modern saint or saintess revered under the name of Abraham's nephew. Around this sanctuary extends a court surrounded by a square gallery, which is itself enclosed by a wall built of stones belonging to different periods. On one of them I distinguished the trace of a mutilated cross, and one of the people told me that the mosque is supposed to have succeeded a Christian Church. It is at once a sacred edifice and a fortress, for the terraces which cover the gallery are provided with a parapet pierced with loopholes. . . . I was told by the sheik that the place used to be called Kufr Barik, which confirms Robinson's identification of the place with Jerome's Caphar Barnebo."

Janus, in Roman mythology, was a god, concerning whose original signification the most contrary views were held. The most commonly accepted view is that he was a deified king of ancient Italy. About his worship in Rome the following is related: Numa dedicated a sanctuary to his honor, which was opened in time of war and closed in time of peace. This goes to show that he was a god of war, as also his by-name "Quirinus." He is represented with a double face, sometimes with four heads. In his right hand he carried a staff (the symbol of augury), in his left a key (god of doors, for Figure of Janus on an ancient coin). On his fingers the number three hundred was written on one hand, the number sixty-five on the other, designating him the god of the year.

Janvier, GEORGE WASHINGTON, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born of Huguenot descent at Cantwell's Bridge (now Odessa), Del., Jan. 22, 1784. In his twentieth year he joined the Presbyterian Church, and began his preparatory studies with his pastor, Rev. Dr. Read, and continued them at Princeton, but did not graduate. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Castle, Sept. 26, 1810; spent one year in itinerant preaching; became pastor at Pittsgrove, N. J., May 13, 1812; and died there June 9, 1865. He was moderator of the Synod of New Jersey, and was a member of the Board of Foreign Missions. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 115.

Japan. This archipelago in eastern Asia consists of one large island, Hondo (mainland or continent), not called Nippon by the natives, but formerly so named by foreigners, three other large islands, Shikoku (four provinces), Kiushiu (nine provinces), and Yézo (unexplored land), a number of outlying islands, Sado, Oki, Iki, Tsushima, Awaji, Goto, etc., and the more distant groups, the Kuriles (smokers), Bonin (no man's), and Riu Kiu (hanging fringe-tassels or sleeping dragon), with nearly four thousand islets. The area of this empire, called by the natives Nihon or Nippon (sunrise), or Dai Nihon Koku (great land of the sun's root, or origin), is, by survey of 1874, 146,571 $\frac{1}{2}$ square miles, and the population, by census of 1874, 33,623,373 souls. Hondo contains nearly 15,000,000 people, and, with the islands immediately south and next to it, may be called Old Japan (native Oyashima, eight great islands), because historically conquered and colonized in early times. New Japan comprises later acquisitions and colonies, such as Yézo and Riu Kiu.

The origin of the dominant race in Japan is not yet entirely clear to scholars, but traditions all point to Corea and northern Asia as the ancestral seats of that conquering race which, near the Christian æra, descended upon the land over which they saw the sun rise. They found other races on the soil whom they subdued. Many of the subjugated were doubtless of near Asian origin, like their conquerors, but there were also the straight-eyed, black-haired Ainos, who now occupy only Yézo and the Kuriles, whither they were in early times (from the 4th to the 13th century of our æra) driven. The conquerors, by the superior force both of their fetiches and dogmas, as well as of their valor, arms, and agriculture, made conquest only after long struggles. The farmers and warriors finally pacified the fishers and hunters, and established both their political rule and imported religion, Shintō, over "all within the four seas." The first mikado or emperor, deified as Jimmu Tennō (heavenly king), is said to have begun to reign B.C. 667, in his miya or palace-temple, near the miyako (city) of Kiōto—but of Japanese dates, until the introduction of almanacs and writing, with methods for keeping record of time, from China, in the 8d century and later, no one can speak with certainty, and Japanese traditions that antedate the Christian era are chronologically worthless.

The first form of government was a rude species of feudalism, in which the mikado was suzerain, and his relatives or captains were rulers of the conquered land, which had been duly parcelled out into districts. This order of things continued until the 7th century, when the centralized system of pure monarchy, introduced from China, was carried out, and the mikado, as sole ruler, was assisted by six boards or ministries of government, and all provincial officers were appointed in and sent out from Kiôto. Several centuries were necessary to bring this method to perfection, and in the distant provinces military families who had kept the peace and put down insurrections at first made themselves necessary to the central government, and later, at the capital, transferred their energies to ambitious schemes in the palace itself. The introduction of Buddhism led the mikados to neglect the sceptre, and to become Buddhist monks, or live in gross licentiousness under cover of a professedly holy life. This paved the way for the rise of the shôguns (known later as kubo sama, "Tycoon," etc.), who gradually concentrated the powers of the executive in their own hands, while nominally the mikado was the fountain of honors. Exaggerating the mikado's "spiritual" importance for his own ends, the shôgun usurped the functions of military and civil administration, and held the army, the treasury, and the appointing power. Yoritomo, at Kamakura, in 1192, began the dual system of government, which, with slight intermissions, lasted until 1868, though Iyêyasu, at Yedo, in 1604, established the order of things in Japan with which, until 1868, foreigners have been most familiar. Side by side with this spectacle of two rulers and two capitals grew up the elaborate feudalism of Japan, which has so attracted the attention of students, and which in its perfected development was unique in Asia.

The story of the introduction of Portuguese Christianity into Dai Nippon, as given by professor Schem in volume iv, is in the main an admirable one. We note only the following needed corrections: Tanéga (seed island) for Yanéga, Hidéyoshi for Fide Yose, Iyêyasu for Yie Yazoo, Hirado for Firando, Yedo for Yeddo, Rakafu for Rankfu, Iô for Isay, Riobu for Ryoby, etc. We may add that, in 1877, most interesting relics—documents, books, tapestry—of the Japanese embassy to the pope were discovered, and that while in Japan, in 1878, the writer identified the place of imprisonment and burial of "Sedotti" (Jean Baptiste Sidotti), "the last Catholic priest" who, in 1709, landed in Japan, and "was never again heard of" until the Rev. S. R. Brown, D.D., unearthed the account of his inquisition and trial, written by a Japanese scholar. Further, the recently found correspondence of the Dutch superintendents of Dêshima requires us to relieve the Hollanders of much of the odium resting on their names for assisting with cannon to crush the "Christian" insurrection at Shimabara, in 1627 (not "at the close of the 16th century"), in which very much fewer than seventy thousand "Christians" were either concerned or injured.

For two centuries and a half after the expulsion of the Romish priests, the supposed extirpation of Christianity, and sealing of all the doors of the empire against foreign influences, Japan rested in peace in the calm of despotism. But while the successors of Iyêyasu, in Yedo, supposed that the duarchy feudalism and national isolation were permanently established, great currents of thought began to move under the surface. These were finally to break out in floods that should sweep away the old and bring in a new era never dreamed of by ancient or modern man in Japan. These movements were intended to effect the overthrow of the shôgun and his abasement as the emperor's vassal, the replacement of the mikado on his throne as sole ruler, the abolition of the feudal system, the disestablishment of Buddhism, and the restoration of Shintô as the state cultus. All was ready, or nearly so, for upheaval, when the squadron of American steamers, under commodore Matthew Calbraith Perry, swept into the bay of Yedo, July 8, 1853. After his treaty, and those made later by Townsend Harris, our consul-general, and European envoys, and the opening of the ports to foreign residence and commerce, the men who had wrought to undermine the shôgunate bent their energies to the expulsion of the foreigners and the dictatorial isolation of "the holy country" from the rest of the world. The advent of foreigners precipitated a crisis long preparing, and in the chaos of conflicting elements that kept the country in commotion from 1859 to 1870 foreigners resident on the soil could see little but the occasional outbursts of incendiarism, assassination, riots, and bloodshed, culminating in the civil war of 1868-70. In this the progressive party was successful. The mikado was reinstated to supreme power in the capital, which had been removed from Kiôto to Yedo (bay-door)—which received the new and more appropriate name, Tôkiô (eastern capital)—the office of shôgun was abolished, and its last incumbent retired to Shidzuoka (where he died in 1884), feudalism was abolished, and the three hundred or less petty territorial rulers or daimios were retired to private life in Tôkiô, the hereditary pensions of the military-literati, or idle privileged classes, were capitalized and extinguished, society was reconstructed on the simplified basis of "the three classes," nobles, gentry, and common people. From the centralized government in Tôkiô now proceeded the most radical measures of reform, political, social, and moral, which, in their rapidity and frequency, served to show that the mikado's advisers were making all haste to be "civilized." The goal of their agonizing race was the equality of Japan among the nations of Christendom, and the abolition of the odious extra-territoriality clause from the treaties. Dependence was not placed alone upon development of industrial and military resources, although these were carefully attended to, and wisely, for new Japan was not yet purged of the old spirit of feudalism. Several insurrections had to be quelled, one of them, the Satsuma rebellion in 1877, being on a scale which threatened for a time the very existence of the government, and cost the country twenty thousand lives and a hundred million dollars. By means of telegraphs, steamers, improved rifles, ships, and cannon, backed by the valor of peasant conscripts, led by officers of modern education, peace was won after seven months' war. Political education by means of newspapers (now two thousand in number in Japan, or more than in both Spain and Russia) and debating-clubs proceeded apace, resulting finally in the establishment of local assemblies, a franchise based on property qualification, and the solemn oath-bound promise of the mikado that, in 1890, a national parliament should be formed, and the government (changed from absolute despotism) become a limited monarchy. And this in Asia! Such is the political outlook in Japan. Let us now glance at her religious condition.

When the treaties lifted the seals from the closed doors of the empire, and missionaries from the three great divisions of the Christian Church entered Japan, the Roman Catholics searched at once for, and soon found, remnants of the 17th century converts, numbering in all probably five thousand. Preserving a few Latin words of sacred import, and some of the characteristic forms of the Roman ritual, with here and there an image or picture of the Virgin or of Jesus, these descendants of the martyrs were, despite their debased and half heathenish condition, Kristians. With this advantage of historic continuity the Roman Catholics began their work simultaneously with the Russo-Greeks and American Protestants. Persecutions soon broke out, and were carried on both by the old shôgun's and the new mikado's government. The writer has a vivid recollection of seeing, on a bitter cold winter's day, in the mountains of Echizen, a gang of these wretched prisoners roped together and led by jailers while tramping in the snow to their place of duress in the volcano craters of Kaga. The intercession of diplomatists, and especially of the Rev. G. F. Verbeck, then the trusted servant of the government, and president of the Imperial University of Tōkiō, finally stopped these inhuman proceedings. Fear of the censure of Christian nations, and their threatened final refusal to expunge the extra-territoriality clause from the treaties, have compelled the Japanese to cease from persecution in every form. In 1872 the anti-Christian edicts, which, since 1600, had denounced "the corrupt sect," and promised rewards to informers, were removed. Later, both Buddhism and Shintō were disestablished, the department of religion was abolished, and the vexatious burial laws repealed, "and thus it has been brought to pass that Christianity has been, by the action of the Japanese government itself, placed upon a footing of perfect equality with the old-established and recognized religions of Japan. In other words, within twenty-five years from the first Protestant mission in the empire, Christianity secures a position before the law which it gained in ancient Rome only after the delays and persecutions of over three centuries."

About thirty Protestant missionary societies now have representatives in Japan, most of them from America. In addition to the usual methods of missionary work by the foreign teachers, the Japanese themselves carry on matters pretty much in their own way. Almost every form of Christian effort in vogue among us is quickly adopted by the Japanese brethren. Preaching services held in public halls and theatres by a number of speakers during several days in succession are very popular and effective. Social meetings for the promotion of harmony and Christian fellowship are frequently held in individual churches or unitedly by different churches or denominations. The Japanese are good public speakers, enjoying the privilege of a participation in social worship, and being emotional and sympathetic. There are few of those pauses of dead silence which so afflict our own meetings for prayer. The telegraph, now ramifying throughout Japan, often bears such messages as these, "Konichi Mitami Kudari, Kitokwai furuu" (today the Holy Spirit has come down, and the meetings are full of fervor). Prayer-meetings held exclusively for and by women, scripture-reading leagues, young men's Christian associations, popular lecture courses, and religious periodicals, edited by native Christians, supplement the foreign missionary's work, and that of the American, Scotch, and Bible societies, and thus fill the whole land with light and truth. Old missionaries declare that the native Church members, who are very apt at first to join the Church from intellectual conviction, show a most cheering growth in spiritual knowledge. The preaching of the young licentiates or pastors, at first dealing almost exclusively with morality, becomes more spiritual, Christ and his cross being the prominent theme. The complete New Test. has now been in the hands of the Japanese for five years, and the year 1886 will, D. V., see the completed Bible in their homes. The Scriptures are published in three styles of print and diction, so that all classes may read them. Ninety thousand copies and portions of the Scriptures, and one hundred and sixty thousand tracts were distributed by the tract societies last year. Turning away from China as the mother country of knowledge and inspiration, the Japanese now look to Europe and America. A company of literary men and scholars are endeavoring to do away with the use of Chinese ideographs, and to print books and newspapers in the Roman character. Familiarity with their own phonetics, or syllabary of forty-eight letters, makes the final adoption of the Roman alphabet easy. The Romaji-kai is the newspaper in which they are showing how a native boy may now learn to read better in ten months than he could of old in ten years.

Much of the literary, social, political, as well as moral progress made by the Japanese, results either directly or indirectly from missionary labor, suggestion, or stimulus. In addition to their preaching, teaching, translation, and healing, they have conferred upon natives and foreigners alike a lasting benefit of incalculable importance by their aids to the mastery of the language, and their other publications. Of the dangers that beset the churches of Christ in Japan we do not here speak, but refer the reader to the following recent works for a more thorough study of the country and people, and the work for Christ in the sunrise kingdom.

Japanese Version of the Scriptures. The honor of translating the first portion of Scripture into the language of the extensive empire of Japan belongs to the late Dr. Gützlaff (q. v.). About the year 1835 three shipwrecked Japanese mariners arrived at Macao on their voyage homewards, and during the few months that they remained in that city Dr. Gützlaff availed himself of their aid in translating the gospel of John into their language. This translation was printed at Singapore about 1838. In this version the word used for God was Gokuraku, the term the Buddhists use for paradise or the state of supreme bliss. For Logos or the Word he used Kashikoi mono, the wise or clever person; for Holy Spirit, Kami. While in England Dr. Gützlaff proposed, in 1849, to the British and Foreign Bible Society, to have the Scriptures printed in the Japanese tongue. The Acts of the Apostles and the epistles of John were consequently printed according to Gützlaff's translation.

As the style of his version was found inferior, and little likely to prove acceptable to the better educated in Japan, a new translation was undertaken by Dr. Bettelheim, a medical missionary and convert from Judaism. He was sent to the Loochoo islands in 1846, and while there made a translation of the New Test. While in Hong Kong he published the gospel of Luke, under the care of the bishop of Victoria, and at the expense of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. It was printed on blocks, in royal octavo size, with Gützlaff's Chinese translation at the top of the page, and Bettelheim's, in the Loochoo dialect, at the bottom, in Katakana, or the character used for scientific works. When Bettelheim left Japan in 1854 he took up his residence in Chicago, and from this place he offered, in 1860, to sell his translation to the United States government. The government, wishing to know its merits, sent a copy of one of the gospels and a grammar he had compiled to its minister resident in Japan, Mr. Harris, to be examined by scholars there and reported on. Mr. Harris not knowing what better to do, sent it to Drs. Brown and Hepburn, two missionaries, but whether from the peculiarities of the dialect, or out of very imperfect knowledge of the Japanese language at that early day of their residence there, they could not make anything out of it. So it was returned to Mr. Harris with an unfavorable report. Dr. Bettelheim, however, revised his work in Chicago, with the assistance of a Japanese, bringing it more into conformity with the pure Japanese. This revision, consisting of the four gospels and Acts, was offered to the British and Foreign Bible Society, and purchased by them. It was printed at Vienna in 1872 for that society, in the Hira-gama character, which is more generally understood in Japan than the Katakana, in which it was written.

This publication was the only direct effort made by that society as a temporary measure until something better could be prepared. The committee appointed by the missionary convention commenced its sittings in June, 1874. There were invited to meet and participate in the work of translation the Rev. R. S. Maclay, of the American Episcopal Mission; Rev. N. Brown, D.D., of the American Baptist Mission; the Rev. John Piper, of the Church Missionary Society; and the Rev. W. B. Wright, of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Mr. Piper and Mr. Wright, owing to their residing at such an inconvenient distance, could not meet the committee. Dr. Nathan Brown sat with the committee about eighteen months, until January, 1876, when he resigned, and continued to prosecute the work of translation alone. The other members of the committee continued at the work of translation and revision with but slight interruption, Dr. Maclay being absent about eighteen months, owing to other duties, and Dr. Brown being compelled through ill-health to cease work in July, 1879. The committee finished their work of translation and revision of the New Test. Nov. 3, 1879, about five years and six months after they had commenced. The work was cut on blocks and published in the following order: Luke, August, 1875; Romans, March, 1876; Hebrews and Matthew (revised), January, 1877; Mark (revised), April, 1877; epistles of John, June, 1877; Acts, September, 1877; Galatians, January, 1878; John, gospel (revised), May, 1878; 1 Corinthians, August, 1878; 2 Corinthians, September, 1878; Ephesians, Philippians, 1st and 2d Thessalonians, June, 1879; Philemon, James, 1st and 2d Peter, Jude, Colossians, Revelation, April, 1880. As to the literary style of the translation—a matter of no small importance—the following statement, made by the Rev. Dr. J. C. Hepburn on the occasion of celebrating the completion of the Japanese version of the New Test., April 19, 1880, at Tokio, will be of interest:

"In this country, where, from the earliest times, the Chinese language and literature has had such a powerful influence upon the cultivation and language of the people, it was, at the very first, a matter of considerable anxiety in what literary style our work should be brought out to make it most acceptable and useful. The conclusion was not difficult to arrive at: that—avoiding on the one hand the quasi-Chinese style, only intelligible to the highly educated, scholarly, and comparatively very small portion of the people; and on the other hand, a vulgar colloquial, which, though easily understood, might make the Scriptures contemptible—we should choose that style which, while respected even by the so-called literati, was easy and intelligible to all classes. We thus adhered to the vernacular, or pure Japanese, and to a style which may be called classical, in which many of their best books intended for the common reader are written. And our more enlarged experience has given us no reason to regret our first determination, but rather to be more and more satisfied with it, and to believe that in this, as well as in many other matters, we have been under the guidance of a kind and all-ruling Providence."

The committee had assistance from several Japanese scholars, among whom Mr. Okuno and Mr. Matsuyama are mentioned. Of the latter it is said, "He has been with the committee from the first and throughout its whole work. He has been our chief dependence, assistant, and arbiter in all cases of difficulty. Whatever virtue there is in our Japanese text, it is mainly, if not altogether, owing to his scholarly ability, the perfect knowledge he has of his own language, his conscientious care, and identifying himself with the work." At present the New Test. is circulated in Japan in the following editions:

1. The Standard, or Kanamejiri, New Testament.—This is a republication of the New Test. completed in 1880, with such changes as the translation committee finally decided upon.

2. The Romanized New Testament; or, Warera no shu Iyean Kiritau no Shin Yaku zen sho.—This is the Japanese of the Standard New Test., in Roman letter. The transliteration was done by Dr. Hepburn. The Daily Gazette of Yokohama, Oct. 16, 1880, has the following notice concerning the editor: "The labors of this modest but excellent philanthropist and Japanese scholar in the cause of learning and Christianity in Japan are well known. His dictionary, Japanese-English and English-Japanese, was the first work of its kind published in this country, and notwithstanding the more elaborate and copious contribution of Mr. Satow, it still retains its high rank for accuracy and general usefulness. In the midst of other occupations, Dr. Hepburn has found time to add to his literary reputation a complete Romanized version of the New Test., a piece of work which can be but imperfectly estimated by its extent, which embraces six hundred and fifty-three closely printed royal octavo pages.

"Of the quality of the translation we do not feel competent to form an opinion. Dr. Hepburn's close association with the gentlemen who undertook the work is itself a guarantee of excellence; but we may, at a later time, have occasion to notice it critically.

"The American Bible Society is to be congratulated on this valuable addition to its library, and the thanks of all who desire the promotion of good works are due to those whose labor has yielded this good fruit."

3. The Common Reader's, or Sohirakana, New Testament.—In this the common cursive Japanese character is used, almost alone, with but very few Chinese characters. It is intended to meet the wants of the most illiterate. The first volume will appear in a few days, and the entire work will be finished, we hope, before the close of the year. It will be a volume slightly thinner than the Standard New Test. The Rev. Mr. Knox, of the Presbyterian Mission, has kindly superintended the proof-reading.

4. The Shinkatakana New Testament.—In this style the angular Japanese kana are used, with many Chinese characters. It is thought that this will be the favorite edition with the scholarly classes. It is of just about the same size as the Standard, and its cost and selling price will be the same. The proof-reading of this work has been under the supervision of Dr. Hepburn.

5. The Chino-Japanese, or Kuntan, New Testament and Psalms.—The New Test. was prepared by the Rev. D. C. Greene, D.D., and the Psalms by the Rt. Rev. W. C. Williams, D.D. This is an adaptation of the Bridgman and Culbertson Chinese translation for the use of Japanese readers. In the words of Dr. Greene, "The word kuntan is the name given to the diminutive characters written on the right side of the Chinese ideographs. These, which consist for the most part of the Japanese phonetic characters, serve to supply the terminations of the Japanese verbs and such particles as are not found in the Chinese construction. Besides the kuntan, there are certain numerals and arbitrary signs placed on the left of each column, which indicate the Japanese order of thought. By the insertion of these marks, this book becomes substantially a translation into Japanese of the Chinese version above mentioned."

A commencement with the translation of the Old Test. into Japanese has also been made. Delegates of the Protestant missions in Japan met in Tokio, May 10, 1878, to consider principally plans for translating the Old Test. A permanent translation committee was arranged for, to consist of one member from each mission, to be elected by the mission itself, who are to assign the work of translating the different portions of the Old Test. to various sub-committees; and the results of their labors are to be submitted to a general revising committee, to be appointed by the permanent committee. The revision committee is made up of Drs. Hepburn,

Brown, Maclay, and the Rev. Messrs. Green and Piper. As to the progress made in the Old Test. translation, we learn from the different reports of the British and Foreign Bible Society that most of the books have been translated, and that some have already been printed. Besides the reports of the British and Foreign Bible Society, compare also the Bible Society Record of the American Bible Society. (B. P.)

Japhia. Its modern representative, Yáfu, lies one and a half miles south-west of Nazareth. It contains no ancient remains, except a few broken columns, and about thirty cisterns. For a description of the numerous grain-pits cut in the rocks see the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, i, 353 sq.

Jarmuth of JUDAH. The modern representative of this place, Khurbet el-Yarmuk, lies one and a half miles north-west of Beit-Nettif, of which the Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey give only this meagre description (iii, 128): "Heaps of stones, foundations, and cisterns," with a reference to "section A, Jarmuth," which contains no allusion to it.

Jarrom, WILLIAM, an English Baptist minister, was born at Ely Place, Wisbeach, Cambridgeshire, July 29, 1814. After leaving school he spent some time in study at home, and in teaching the classics. He was for some time pastor of a church at Northampton, where he also conducted a school. He resigned his pastorate in 1841, but continued his school until he went as a missionary to China in 1845. While there, he labored at Ningpo with much success. He returned to England in 1851, and settled at Isleham in 1852. He removed to Kegworth in 1856, where he opened a boarding-school, and preached frequently. In 1868 he went to Barton as co-pastor, and in 1874 to West Vale, near Halifax, as pastor. He finally removed to Coningsby, near Boston, Lincolnshire, where he taught and preached until a few days before his death, Feb. 28, 1882. See Baptist Hand-book for 1883, p. 266.

Jattir. The modern representative of this, Khurbet Atir, lies four and a quarter miles south-east of ed-Dhoheriyeh, and nine and three quarter miles north of Tell Milh (Moladah), and is thus described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 408): "Foundations, and heaps of stones; a great many caves; a ruined masonry tomb; several fallen pillar-shafts and cisterns. There is a kubbeh [dome] at the ruin, which stands on a knoll. Many of the caves have masonry arches to the doors. A large building remains, four courses of the wall being left. Below the ruins on the hill-side is a large oil-press."

Jaubert (De Barrault), JEAN, a French prelate and theologian, was the son of Emeri, count of Barrault, and studied at La Flèche, both philosophy and theology, as an abbot of St. Pierre de Solognac, in the diocese of Limoges. He was consecrated bishop of Bazas at Rome, in August, 1612. Two years afterwards he was at the assembly of the clergy at Paris. He had been designated as grand-almoner to Henrietta Maria of France, queen of England, but the Protestants succeeded in preventing him from getting that position. In 1630 he was appointed archbishop of Arles. He presided over the assembly of the clergy, in 1635, at Paris, where he died, July 30, 1643, leaving Erreurs et Faussetés Remarquables (Bordeaux, 1622-31). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Génér., s. v.

Jauk (or Yauk), one of the five deified men mentioned in the Koran as having been worshipped by the ancient Arabians. They are supposed to have been antediluvians who had been distinguished for their virtues. The Arabians represent Jauk under the figure of a horse.

Javanese Version of the SCRIPTURES. The language spoken on the island of Java is, next to Malayan, which is distinct from it, the most polished and most cultivated of Polynesian dialects. Since A.D.

1400, when the Javanese embraced Mohammedanism, many Arabic words have been adopted, by which the native deficiency of the dialect in abstract terms has been in some measure supplied. There are two principal styles of language, called baso kromo and baso ngoko. The baso kromo is the higher style, used in addressing persons of superior rank, etc.; and the baso ngoko is the lower style, used in addressing persons of lower rank; it is also found sometimes in older writings, and in narratives, etc.

The preparation of a Javanese version was first suggested by Dr. Wm. Hunter, of Calcutta, in 1812. When the Java Bible Society was formed, in 1814, the translation was one of the first things considered, but the language was found very difficult of acquirement to Europeans. At length the Rev. Gottlob Brückner, a native of Germany, stationed as minister of the Dutch Church at Samarang, undertook the difficult task. In 1820 he commenced the translation of the New Test., which was printed in 1831 at Serampore. The translation of the Old Test. was undertaken by the Rev. Mr. Gerické, a missionary of the Netherlands Society. In 1831 he completed a version of the Psalms, which he sent to Holland, to the Netherlands Society, for publication.

Mr. Gerické also made a fresh translation of the New Test., on the basis of the preceding. The printing was conducted at the Hague, under the eyes of the translator, Professor Koorda assisting him in the correction of the proof-sheets. The revised New Test. was issued in 1848, and in 1857 the Old Test. was also published, under the auspices of the Netherlands Society. Of late, however, the British and Foreign Bible Society has undertaken to publish a revised edition, at the request of the Rev. P. Jansz of Djapara, supported by Mr. Haffenden, the society's agent in Singapore. "The people of Java," the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1883 states, "are said to number 19,000,000. Of these 8,000,000 are Javanese, 8,000,000 Sundanese, and 3,000,000 Malays. From many sources the committee learn that the existing version of the Bible is full of errors, some of which give a false meaning to the passages in which they occur, and that for practical purposes it is almost worthless. Mr. Haffenden has returned from a journey in Java, where he found the want of an intelligible version of the Scriptures." This induced the British and Foreign Bible Society to authorize the Rev. Jansz, who for over thirty years has been a missionary in Java of the Baptist Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in the Netherland Colonies, and who, besides, is the author of a Javanese Grammar and Dictionary which have reached a third edition, and of several religious books in the Javanese tongue, to prepare a new version. In this work of retranslation Mr. Jansz has the aid of two educated native Christians. In its revised form the gospel of Luke was printed at Singapore in 1884. See Bible of Every Land, p. 369. (B. Jeaurat, EDMÉ, an eminent French engraver, was born in Paris about 1680, and studied under Bernard Picart. The following are some of his best works: The Meeting of David and Abigail; John the Baptist Baptizing the Jews; The Interview between Jacob and Rachel; The Finding of Moses.

Jebis (or Jebisu), in Japanese mythology, was the younger brother of the sun deity, but because he was ill-formed he was cast off by his parents. He lived by fishing, and amassed great wealth. After his death he was worshipped as god of the sea, and as one of the seven gods of wealth. He is represented as the god of waters, the protector of sailors and fishermen, sitting on a lotus-flower, or on a rock, with a line and a fish in his hands.

Jehud. The probable representative of this place el-Yehudiyeh, eight and a quarter miles south by east from Yafa, is described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 258) as "a large mud village, supplied by a pond, and surrounded by palm-trees. Mr. Drake states the population at 800 to 1000 souls. According to the Samaritans, Judah (Neby Hūdah) was buried here."

Jehuda BEN-ELIEZER, a Jewish writer of the 14th century, is the author of מְקוֹמֵי יְהוּדָה, or a commentary on the Pentateuch, in which he especially explains difficult passages of Rashi. This commentary, in which more than one hundred Jewish authorities are quoted, was published at Leghorn in 1783. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 34; De Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 141. (B. P.)

Jehuda BEN-ILAI, a Tanaite of the 2d century, and teacher of the famous Judah hak-Kodesh (q. v.), was a cooper by trade. While he spent his days in manual labor, he spent his nights in persevering study. After attaining the degree of rabbi, he still labored at his trade. So far from being ashamed of this, he gloried in it, and used sometimes to have a tub or hog'shead of his own workmanship brought into the lecture-room, which he used as a pulpit. His honest integrity procured him the title of ha-chasid, or "the Just." In the department of Scripture exposition he paid particular attention to the third book of Moses, or Leviticus, and it is considered that the book "Sifra" was first composed by him, though more fully elaborated afterwards. See Hamburger, Real-Encyclop. ii, 452 sq.; Bacher, Die Agada der Tannaiten (Strasburg, 1884), p. 101, 128, 199, 235, 246, 267, 291, 441. (B. P.)

Jehul, according to the Talmud, is the supreme genius of the genii ruling the fire. Subordinate to him are Seraphiel, Gabriel, Nuriel, Tamael, Shimshiel, Hadarniel, and Sarniel.

Jeitteles, JUDA LÖW, a Jewish author, born in 1773, and died at Vienna, June 6, 1838, is the author of מִשְׁנֵי אֲרָמֵי, or a grammar of the Aramean language (Prague, 1813); besides, he translated into German, Job (Vienna, 1834), the Twelve Minor Prophets (1835), Chronicles (cod.), Samuel (1833), Ezekiel (1835), Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah (cod.), which he published with his own comments. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 52. (B. P.)

Jejeebhoy, Sir JAMSETJEE, a Parsee philanthropist, was born in Bombay, July 15, 1783. He made voyages between India and China, and amassed a large fortune, possessing at his death about £4,000,000. As early as 1822 he released the debtors confined in the jail by paying their debts; and his donations to public objects were estimated at about £1,500,000. He received the honor of knighthood from Queen Victoria in 1842, and a gold medal in 1843. He endowed hospitals, schools, medical institutions, and other benevolent establishments. A school at Bombay for the education and support of poor Parsee children he endowed at an expense of $250,000. He built comfortable places of refuge for the convenience of travellers in various parts of the country, the causeway which unites the islands of Bombay and Salsette, the water-works at Poonah, the bridges at Earla, Parla, and Barba, and many other public works. In 1857 he was advanced to the dignity of a baronet. He died at Bombay, April 14, 1859. A statue was erected to his memory in the town-hall of Bombay, and exposed to view Aug. 1, 1859. See Appleton's Amer. Cyclop. s. v.

Jejumi (figure-treading) is a ceremony observed annually among the Japanese, of trampling upon the crucifix, and images of the Virgin Mary and other saints. It was designed to express the abhorrence of the Japanese for the religion which the Jesuits had tried to introduce into their empire. The images were about a foot long, cast in brass, and kept in a particular box for the purpose. The ceremony took place in presence of the street officers. Each house was entered by turns, two messengers carrying the box. The images were laid upon the bare floor, and the list of the household being called, they were required in turn to tread upon them. Young children, not yet able to walk, were held in their mothers' arms, so as to touch the images with their feet.

Jelf, RICHARD WILLIAM, an English clergyman, was born in London in 1798, and educated at Oxford, where he graduated in 1820, and became a fellow of Oriel College and a tutor. In 1826 he became preceptor in the royal family. He was made canon of Christ Church in 1831, Hampton lecturer and principal of King's College, London, in 1844. He died in Oxford, Sept. 19, 1871. Among his published works are, Sermons, Doctrinal and Practical (1835); The Means of Grace (Hampton Lectures, 1844); and a new edition of the Works of Bishop Jewel (1847-48, 8 vols.).

Jemma, the judge of the wicked after death, among the Japanese, who beholds in a large mirror all the most secret transactions of mankind. Intercession by the priests with Amidas in behalf of the sinner, and liberal presents on the part of his relatives, are sure to release him before the expiration of the allotted time for punishment. The figure of Jemma, the king of the devils, is monstrous; and on each side of him are two large devils, one acting as his secretary, and registering in a book all the sins of mankind, while the other dictates what the secretary is to record. This idol is situated in a temple of Jemma, a short distance from Miaco, in a delightful grotto. The walls are covered with frightful pictures of tortures which the wicked are supposed to undergo. This temple is resorted to by crowds of people from all parts of the country, with oblations and money in their hands, to redeem the souls from dreaded punishments. See JAMA.

Jemshid, in Iranian history, the mythical hero who led the Aryan tribes in their first emigration to Asia, and who taught them the arts of civilization. He is said, however, to have taught them idolatry also. His real name was Yima-Khacra.

Jenichen, GOTTLIB FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 26, 1680, and died at Leipsic, Sept. 17, 1735, professor of ethics. He is the author of Historia et Examen Bullæ Clementis XI contra Quærelum Emisæ (Leipsic, 1714). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 632. (B. P.)

Jenings, SAMUEL, a distinguished minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Coleshill, Buckinghamshire, England, about 1650, and emigrated to New Jersey in 1680, having for some time been an approved minister in his denomination. Soon after his arrival he was appointed by governor Byllinge, of New Jersey, as his deputy. This position he occupied until 1683, when the Provincial Assembly chose him governor of the colony for one year. Up to the time of his removal to Philadelphia, in 1692, he occupied the highest offices in the province. In Pennsylvania his abilities were highly appreciated, and he was nominated to the commission of the peace. When the controversy arose with George Keith (q. v.) he became one of his most zealous and active opponents, and in the early part of 1694 sailed for London as respondent in the appeal of Keith to the London Yearly Meeting, where he ably vindicated the cause of his American brethren from the aspersions of their detractor. On returning from England he removed from Philadelphia to Burlington, his former home in New Jersey. In 1702 he was appointed a member of the Provincial Council, and in 1707 was elected speaker of the assembly, "in which station he distinguished himself by a bold and fearless opposition to the arbitrary misrule of the bigoted lord Cornbury." In his spiritual vocation we are told that he was "an able minister of the gospel, and labored much therein, to the comfort and edification of many people, both in the province of New Jersey and other places. He was one of those rare individuals in whom was concentrated a variety of qualifications and mental endowments, by which, under the sanctifying power of truth, he was made eminently useful to his fellow-men, both in his ministerial and civil capacity." He died at Burlington in 1708. See Bowden, Hist. of Friends in America, ii, 254. (J. C. S.)

Jenkyn, T. W., D.D., a Welsh Congregational minister, was born in South Wales in 1796. He gave early evidence of earnest piety; began to preach while in his youth, studied at Homerton College, and settled first at Oswestry in 1823. While in that border-town of his native country he published The Extent of the Atonement, by which he acquired both literary and theological celebrity, and which led to his being appointed to the theological chair, eventually to the presidency, of Coward College. Meanwhile he removed to Stafford, and there wrote and published On the Union of the Holy Spirit and the Church in the Conversion of the World. In 1837 he relinquished his charge in Stafford, and, proceeding to Germany, formed friendships with the distinguished theologians of that country. When Coward College was amalgamated with Highbury and Homerton colleges, in 1850, Dr. Jenkyn's services were no longer required. Being anxious to do good, he went to Rochester, to establish a new interest in that town, and after a short visit to America returned and labored there to his dying day, May 26, 1858. Dr. Jenkyn was social in his habits, an impassioned lover of music, and no less enthusiastic in his devotion to theological science. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1859, p. 203.

Jennings, OBADIAH, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Baskengridge, N. J., Dec. 13, 1778. He was educated at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa. He studied law for some years, and was admitted to the bar in 1800. He joined the Presbyterian Church in 1811, was licensed to preach in 1816, by the Presbytery of Ohio, and soon afterwards accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church in Steubenville, O., where he labored with great fidelity and success for six years, and then accepted a call to Washington, Pa. In 1828 he removed to Nashville, Tenn., where he remained till the close of his life, Jan. 12, 1832. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 549.

Jenny, ROBERT, LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, son of archdeacon Jenny of Wancetown, in the north of Ireland, arrived in America in 1715, as a missionary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, having been appointed assistant to the Rev. William Vesey, rector of Trinity Church, New York city. In 1722 he was transferred to Rye, and remained there until 1728, when he assumed charge of the church in Hempstead, L. I. In November, 1742, by license of the bishop of London, he became rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, which post he held until the close of his life. His ministry covered fifty-two years. He died in January, 1762, aged seventy-five years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 16.

Jericho. For a description of Tell es-Sultan, supposed to be the site of the ancient city, see the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 222). The following account of the locality in general is from Conder, Tent Work, ii, 2 sq.:

"Reaching Jericho we were again disappointed. The long groves, which appear so charming at a distance, are entirely composed of thorny shrubs. The dôm or zizyphus grows into a tree, with small green leaves and formidable prickles; the nebk, another species, forms long hedges of briar, of which it is said the cruel 'crown of thorns' was woven, for which reason it is called spina Christi. The zakkiôn, or balsam-tree (balanites), is equally thorny, and beneath these grow poisonous nightshade and other noxious plants. The distant beauty of the groves is only a mockery, and the environs of Jericho, when reached, are as stony and unlovely as any other part of the country.

"Yet, in some respects, the place is still charming. Here, late in autumn, the sound of running water and the song of birds greeted our ears. Among the high mounds, or tell's, bare and dusty, a fresh, beautiful stream was flowing from 'Ain es-Saitân, the site of the first Jericho. The great spring wells up in a stony pool, under a high hillock, and opposite to this tell is a jungle crowded by a very large castor-oil tree and other thick foliage. In this grateful shade the birds have found a retreat. The great gray shrikes (Abu Zereik) sit on the top branches, and the queer 'hopping thrushes,' with their tails stuck up like rapiers, bound about beneath. The bulbul also sings in the groves—a gray bird with a black head and a curious yellow patch at the root of the tail. Still more beautiful are the great Smyrna kingfishers (Abu Nukr), in their blue coats and chocolate-colored waistcoats, white-throated, with bills like red sealing-wax; and the gray African species (Abu Kubeia), which also flutters above the stream. Last, but not least, come the lovely sun-birds (Succid), peculiar to the Jordan valley, darting about like little black wrens, but resplendent, when seen close, with all the colors of the prism. . . .

"There is only one natural position for a large town in the plains of Jericho, namely, the neighborhood of the beautiful fountain called 'the Sultan's Spring,' near the foot of the Quarantania precipice. Nothing can well explain the choice of a new position, but the fact that Jericho was cursed by Joshua, and that the curse was fulfilled. Thus it is by the spring that we naturally place the Jericho of Joshua's time, and this view receives confirmation from the account of the flight of the spies 'to the mountain;' for if situated in the immediate vicinity of the great crag of Kârdûl, the city was so near that the fugitives might easily have crept through the cane jungle and thorn-groves to the shelter of one of the innumerable caverns in the face of its precipices.

"Of ancient Jericho nothing now remains but the bright spring, and the shapeless mound above it. We can hardly wonder at this when we find that even the Jericho of Herod has disappeared, and that only a vague conjecture can be made as to the position of Thrax and Taurus, the great towers which once defended it. It seems probable that this second town stood south of ancient Jericho, and even closer to the hills, for the great aqueduct which brought water, a distance of four miles, from the fine spring at the head of the wild Kelt chasm, leads just to the opening of the plain, and seems to be the only one of the numerous aqueducts which dates back to Roman times. At the mouth of the pass, also, is the rock fort called Jibr or Chubir, in which time we may recognise, as my companion, Mr. Drake, pointed out, a relic of the name Cujros, which was given to a tower above Herod's Jericho.

"Jerome tells us that there were in his day two Jerichos, and in A.D. 333, the anonymous pilgrim of Bordeaux found a town at the foot of the pass. Here also we have remains of a bridge which has the opus reticulatum of Roman masonry, and this, with a few strewn fragments and with two great mounds of sun-dried brick, seems all that is left of the second Jericho. The Byzantine, or 4th-century town, mentioned by Jerome as the second Jericho, is no doubt represented by the foundations and fragments of cornice and capital, over which the rider stumbles among the thorn groves east of the 'Ain es-Saitân.

"By A.D. 700 Jericho had again disappeared, and thus, in the 12th century, we find the site once more moved. The modern Ertha then springs into existence near a square tower, such as the Crusaders erected along their pilgrim roads, and a tradition of the 'Garden of Abraham' comes into existence as early as the time of Sæwulf (A.D. 1109). In the 14th century Sir John Maundeville finds Jericho a little village, and Abraham's garden is then stated to be at the foot of the Quarantania. Feltius makes the distance between Jericho and the latter mountain two miles, and thus it is pretty clear that the modern Ertha represents the site which was created in the Crusading period."

Jerusalem, SYNOD OF, 1672. Of all synods which were held at Jerusalem since the apostles' time, this is the most important. The doctrines of Cyril Lucar (q. v.) were condemned by his successor, Cyril of Berrhoe, at the Council of Constantinople in 1638, and again by the next patriarch, Parthenius, at the Synod of Jassy in 1642. The metropolitan of Kiev, Petrus Mogilas, also found it necessary to protest against these doctrines; and his confession, ὁρθόδοξος ὁμολογία τῆς πίστεως τῆς καθολικῆς καὶ ἀποστολικῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἀνατολικῆς, was sanctioned, in 1643, by the patriarchs of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem, and Moscow. Thus an effective barrier was erected against the Calvinistic invasions of the orthodoxy of the Eastern Church. Nevertheless, both the Reformed and the Roman Catholic theologians continued to hint that the Greek Church was leaning respectively either this or that way. In the controversy between the Reformed minister, Jean Claude, and the Jansenists, Nicole and Arnould, concerning the eucharist and transubstantiation, the former alleged, in support of his views, the dogma of the Eastern Church, such as it appeared in its oldest form, and such as it had been revived by Cyril Lucar; while the latter appealed to the dogma of the Eastern Church in its œcumenical form. In 1660 the patriarch of Jerusalem, Nectarius, published a book against Claude, and in 1672 his successor, Dositheus, convened a synod at Jerusalem for the purpose of still further defending the orthodoxy of the Eastern Church. The synod was attended by sixty-eight representatives, and resulted in the so-called Shield of Orthodoxy. March 20, 1672, one of the most important confessional works of the Eastern Church, the full title of which is, Ἀσπίς ὁρθοδοξίας, ἡ ἀπολογία καὶ ἐλεγχος πρὸς τοὺς διαπύρροντας τὴν ἀνατολικὴν ἐκκλησίαν αἰρετικῶς φρονεῖν ἐν τοῖς περὶ Θεοῦ καὶ τῶν θείων, ὡς καθοροῦσιν οὗτοι αὐτοὶ οἱ Καθολικοὶ ὁμολογοῦντες. The first part is directed against the Calvinists, and contains a strong condemnation of the views ascribed to Cyril Lucar, and at the same time an adroit vindication of him personally, flatly denying that he ever held such opinions, ever wrote the books containing them, etc. The second part is critical-dogmatical, and presents a full confession of the Orthodox Greek faith in the form of a refutation of the theses of Cyril. This second part, or σύντομος ὁμολογία, treats in eighteen decreta and four questiones the following subjects: 1. Trinity; 2. The holy Scriptures and their interpretation by the Church; 3. Predestination; 4. Origin of the evil; 5. Relation of divine Providence to the evil; 6. Original sin; 7. Incarnation of the Son of God; 8. The mediatorship of Christ and the saints; 9. Faith acting in charity; 10. Church and episcopacy; 11. Church membership; 12. Infallibility of the Church; 13. Justification by faith and works; 14. Ability of the natural and of the regenerated man; 15. Seven sacraments; 16. Infant baptism; 17. Eucharist; 18. State after death. The four questiones are: 1. Can all Christians read the Bible? 2. Is the Bible conspicuous for all? 3. What constitutes the holy Scriptures? (acceptance of the apocryphal books); 4. What is to be believed concerning images and veneration of the saints? The synodical acts were first published in Greek and Latin, Paris, 1676, and again in 1678. The best editions are found in Harduin, Acta Concil. xi, 179 sq., and in Kimmel, Monumenta Fidei Eccl. Orientalis (Jena, 1850). See also Gass, Symbolik der griechischen Kirche (Berlin, 1872), p. 79 sq.; Schaff, Credo of Christendom, i, 61–67; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Jerushalmi TANCHUM. See TANCHUM OF JERUSALEM.

Jervia, WILLIAM HENLEY, a minister of the Church of England, was born in 1813, and educated at Harrow, where he won some of the first prizes in the school at the unusually early age of fifteen, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a second class in 1835. He was for some years rector of St. Nicholas, Guildford, and held, up to his death, a prebendal stall at Heytesbury—abolished by recent legislation, so that the dignity died with him, Jan. 27, 1882. Mr. Jervia, who took his wife's name some years ago, was a son of the late dean Pearson of Salisbury, and elder brother of canon Pearson of Windsor. To the general public he is best known as the author of a learned and interesting work on the History of the Church of France, from the Concordat of Boulogne to the Close of the First Empire (London, 1872–82, 3 vols.). (B. P.)

Jeshua. For this Biblical site Lieut. Conder proposes (Tent Work, ii, 838) the ruin and tell es-Surek, four and a quarter miles north-west of Tell-Milh (Moladah), which is thus described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 409): "A prominent hill-top, crowned with ruins, consisting of foundations and heaps of stones. The hill is surrounded by a wall built of large blocks of flint conglomerate. Other rocks of a similar kind exist in the valley beneath." The place proposed by Schwarz is probably Eshua, one and a half miles north-east of Surah (Zorah), and two and a quarter south-west of Kesla (Chesalon), "a small village near the foot of the hill, with a well to the west, and olive-trees beneath" (Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, iii, 25); but this is probably Eshuaol (q. v.).

Jeshua (ha-Lawi) BEN-JOSEF, a Jewish writer of the 15th century, is the author of הגליה בל"ה, or a methodology of the Talmud (Constantinople, 1510, and often since). It was translated into Latin by L'Emjereur, under the title, Clavis Talmudica (Leyden, 1635); also by Bashuyesen, Clavis Talmudica Maxima (Hanau, 1714); and by Struve, Logice Hebraice Rudimenta (Jena, 1697). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 64 sq. (B. P.)

Jesseans, according to Epiphanius, a name given to the early Christians, either from Jesse, the father of David, or, more probably, from the name of the Lord Jesus.

Jesse's Tomb is traditionally shown in a corner of a ruined monastery on the hillside between Hebron and Abraham's Oak (Conder, Tent Work, ii, 84).

Jeter, JEREMIAH BELI, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Bedford County, Va., July 18, 1802. His early education was limited. He was converted in 1821; began to preach in 1822; was ordained May 4, 1824, at High Hills Church, Sussex County, where he remained about two years; then removed to Campbell County, and became pastor of the Hill's Creek and Union Hill churches. In the autumn of 1827 he was installed pastor of Morattico Church, in Lancaster County, and subsequently of the Wicomico Church, in Northumberland County. In the latter part of 1835 he was called to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church in Richmond, where for thirteen years and a half he was eminently successful.

In the fall of 1849 he was called to the Second Baptist Church in St. Louis, where he remained three years, and then returned to Richmond to become pastor of the Grace Street Church. He resigned in 1870. He became the senior editor of the Religious Herald, the leading organ of the Baptist denomination in the south, in 1866, and occupied that position till the close of his life, Feb. 18, 1880. Among the books of which he was the author were, Memoirs of Rev. A. W. Clopton:—Memoirs of J. L. Shuch, Missionary to China:—Memoirs of Rev. Andrew Broadbuss:—Memoirs of Rev. Daniel Witt:—Campbellism Examined:—Campbellism Re-examined, both of these works placing Dr. Jeter among the first polemic writers of his times. The Christian Mirror and the Seal of Heaven were published by the American Tract Society. See the Religious Herald, Feb. 26, 1880. (J. C. S.)

Jethlah. For this place Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 338) Beit Tûl, a ruined site four and a quarter miles south-east of Yalo (Ajalon), containing "foundations and a Mukam" (Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, iii, 86).

Jezreel. Zer'in, the modern representative of this noted place, is briefly described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 88), but more graphically by Conder (Tent Work, i, 124):

"Crossing the valley, we see before us the site of Jezreel, on a knoll five hundred feet high. The position is very peculiar, for while on the north and north-east the slopes are steep and rugged, on the south the ascent is very gradual, and the traveller coming northwards is astonished to look down suddenly on the valley, with its two springs, one ('Ain Jâlûd) welling out from a conglomerate cliff, and forming a pool about one hundred yards long, with muddy borders: the other ('Ain Tub'aûn), the Crusaders' Fountain of Tubania, where the Christian armies were fed 'miraculously' for three days on the fish which still swarm in most of the great springs near.

"The main road ascends from near these springs and passes by the 'Dead Spring,' which was reopened by the governor of Jenin, and now forms a shallow pool between rocks of black basalt, covered with red and orange-colored lichen, and also full of little fish; thence it passes on the east side beneath the knoll of Zer'in (Jezreel) to the plain on the south. Climbing up to the village, we are again struck by the absence of any traces of antiquity: the buildings, including the central tower, are all modern, and only the great mound beneath, and perhaps some of the innumerable cisterns, seem ancient; yet the site is undoubted, and has never been really lost. Here, from a tower, perhaps standing where the modern one is erected, the watchman could see down the broad valley of Jezreel as far as Bethshan, and watch the dust and the gleam of the armor advancing. The course of the two horsemen and of Jehu's chariot was distinctly seen beneath the hill, and the distances are sufficiently extensive to give time for the succession of events.

"On the east and south-east there are rock-cut vine-presses on the rugged hills, where no doubt the 'portion of the field of Naboth' and his vineyard are to be placed—a good instance of the decay of vine cultivation in Palestine."

Jidsin-Jombaja, in Lamaism, was a young, beautiful god, a Burchan, assistant or friend of Jakshiamuni, when the latter founded his religion. He usually is placed beside the statue of the supreme god in the Lama temple, and is represented as a very soft, feminine personage, with four arms, the body light-yellow color, the dress blue. Jidsin-Jombaja was instructor of astrological and other secret sciences, and taught the wise men in these branches.

Jijella (or Jiemona), in Slavonic mythology, was a youthful goddess of hunting, comparable in many things to Diana of the Romans, but wanting the hostile attributes of the latter. She was regarded as a friendly companion, and as giving success in hunting. She subdues the wild animals, drives the reindeer within range of the hunter, and favors the most courageous and most worthy; hence many young people, whose family relations were not positively known, were called her sons and daughters, in case they were beautiful and daring. She is also said to have been the goddess of love, at least, she was implored by the Slavs for children, unless she is mistaken for the similarly named Jijindla, who was worshipped as the goddess of marriage.

Jilabog was a Wendian and Slavic deity, representing the moon, with a half-moon on the breast, and the arms raised in the form of a half-moon. He was also a god of time (his name is from Jus, "time"), because the Wends measured their time according to the moons.

Jinas, saints among the Jainas (q. v.) in India. A saint is called a Jini, as being the victor over all human passions and propensities. He is supposed to possess thirty-six superhuman attributes, four of which regard his person; eleven refer to his supernatural powers; while the remaining nineteen are of celestial origin, as the raining of flowers and perfumes, the sound of heavenly drums, and the menial offices rendered by Indra and the gods. The Jinas are twenty-four in number, and, although similar in their general character and attributes, are distinguished from each other in color, stature, and longevity. Two of them are red, two white, two blue, two black, the rest are of a golden hue, or a yellowish brown. In regard to stature and length of life, they undergo a gradual decrease from Rishabha, the first Jina, who was five hundred poles in stature, and lived 8,400,000 great years, to Mahavira, the twenty-fourth Jina, who had degenerated to the size of a man, and was not more than forty years on the earth.

Jins (i. e. genii), according to the Mohammedans, an intermediate race between angels and men. They are said to be made of fire, but with grosser bodies than the angels, to propagate their species, and, though long-lived, not to be immortal; also to have inhabited the earth previous to Adam, under a succession of sovereigns. Mohammed professed to be sent as a preacher to them as well as to men. In the Koran there is a chapter bearing their name, in which they are introduced as saying: "There are some among us who are upright, and there are some among us who are otherwise; we are of different ways, and we verily thought that we could by no means frustrate God in the earth, neither could we escape him by flight; therefore, when we heard the direction, we believed therein. There are Moslems among us, and others who swerve from righteousness."

Jiralk, JOHANN VALENTIN, a Roman Catholic prelate of Bohemia, was born June 19, 1798. In 1881 he was made bishop of Budweis, in Bohemia, and died Feb. 23, 1883. He is the author of Populäre Dogmatik oder Glaubenslehre der katholischen Kirche, edited by B. Schön (4th ed. Vienna, 1865)—in the Bohemian language Jiralk published Twenty Friendly Letters Addressed to the Protestants in Bohemia (1842). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 679 sq. (B. P.)

Jisu, a god among the Japanese, whose office it is to convey souls to the infernal regions.

Joachim or Korsun, the first bishop of Novgorod. He was commissioned, in 992, by the metropolitan of Kiev, Leonce, with evangelizing the northern part of Russia, and has the honor of having planted Christianity there, and having founded the Church of St. Sophia, at Novgorod, where he died in 1030, after a useful episcopate. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Joan of Valois, Saint and queen, was the daughter of Louis XI of France and Charlotte of Savoy, and was born in 1456. She was plain in face and somewhat deformed, and her father, who wished a son, treated her with contempt. This dislike increased, until on one occasion the king rushed into the room to kill her, and her life was only saved by the countess of Liniers. In her twelfth year Joan was married against her will to duke Louis of Orleans, who also treated her with coldness and contempt. Louis XI died in August, 1483, and his son succeeded him as Charles VIII, under the regency of his elder sister Anne. The husband of Joan, thinking the regency ought to have been intrusted to him, endeavored to stir up an insurrection, was unsuccessful, and fled to Francis II of Brittany the bitter foe of France. War broke out, and Joan stood as an angel of peace and reconciliation between the contending parties. Twice she obtained pardon for her captured husband, and he as often returned to his perfidy. After the death of Charles VIII, April 7, 1498, the duke of Orleans ascended the throne as Louis XII. He at once obtained a divorce from pope Alexander VI, by taking an oath that his marriage with Joan was not complete. He gave her the duchy of Berry and Pontoise. She resided at Bourges, where she spent time and revenues in the exercise of charity. In 1500 she founded the order of the Annunciation for women. Joan took the habit herself in 1504, but died Feb. 4, 1505, and was buried at Bourges. Her body was torn from its resting-place in 1562, and burned by Calvinists. She is commemorated in the French martyrology on Feb. 4. Her canonization began under Clement XII, and was completed by Pius VI, in 1775, but she was venerated at Bourges from the time of her death. See Baring-Gould, Lives of the Saints, ii, 109.

Joasaf I, the fourth Russian patriarch, was elected Feb. 6, 1634, and died Nov. 28, 1642. He left a ritual, containing the synodal statutes of his predecessor Philaret. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Joasaf II, the sixth patriarch of Russia, was raised to that dignity Dec. 29, 1667. He assembled, in the first year of his patriarchate, a council to anathematize the sectaries; at this council were present Paisi, the patriarch of Alexandria and Macarius of Antioch; its principal motions are inscribed in the Slongebuk, or missal of 1668. There are extant of his works, a pastoral letter (1668):—another directed to the sectaries, entitled Grz Pravlennia (reprinted in 1753):—an Instruction on the Manner of Painting the Images (1668):—and another on The Manner of Behaving One's Self at the Church (reprinted at Moscow in 1786). He died Feb. 17, 1672. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Jobson, FREDERICK JAMES, D.D., a minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, was born July 6, 1812, at Lincoln, England. He was converted in his eighteenth year, received on trial by the conference, and appointed to the Pattingham Circuit in 1834. He soon became known and highly esteemed as a man of superior gifts and excellent spirit. He was a representative of the Wesleyan Church to American Methodism in 1855, and to Australia in 1860. He filled the appointment of book steward fifteen years, and was elected president of the conference in 1869. In 1880 he became a supernumerary, and died at Hull, Jan. 4, 1881. Dr. Jobson published Chapel and School Architecture (1850):—America and American Methodism (1857):—Australia, with Notes by the Way of Egypt (1862). As a preacher, his fine natural temper, his sound judgment, combined with a most vivid imagination, his cultivated taste, and intense earnestness fitted him for that extensive usefulness which, by the grace of God, he achieved. His talents were much in request for funeral sermons and memorial tributes for his brethren in the Methodist body. Three of such productions, to the memory of the Rev. J. Bunting, D. J. Draper, and Dr. Hannah, were published separately. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1881, p. 27.

Joceline, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of the see of Glasgow in 1174, and consecrated by Eskilus, archbishop of Lunden, in Denmark, June 1, 1175, in Charavalle. He died at Melrose in 1199. He enlarged the cathedral of Glasgow, and is said to have rebuilt it in the same state it continues, and dedicated it in 1197. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 235.

Jocelyn (or Joceline) OF WELLS, an early English prelate, was born and educated at Wells, Somersetshire, of which he became the bishop in 1206, and was the first to fix the title of Bath and Wells to the old see of Glaston. The monks of Glastonbury purchased their exemption from the territory of the see by parting with four manors to the new diocese of Wells. Jocelyn, with archbishop Langton, was banished on account of obstinacy against king John. After five years exile in France he returned to his see, and devoted himself to the beautifying and enriching of his cathedral. He erected some new prebends, and to the use of the chapter appropriated many churches, increasing the revenues of the offices, and he gave three manors to the episcopal see. He, with Hugo, bishop of Lincoln, was the first founder of St. John's, in Wells, and at his own cost built a chapel at Wokey, and another at Wells. The cathedral of Wells was his masterpiece, however. He died Nov. 19, 1242. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 93.

Jocelyn, GEORGE BEMIS, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at New Haven, Conn., Jan. 3, 1824. Shortly afterwards, with his parents, he removed to Cincinnati, and from thence, in 1830, to New Albany, Ind., where he was converted at the age of fourteen. In 1842 he graduated at Indiana Asbury University. He was licensed to preach in 1843, and in the same year was admitted to Indiana Conference, and appointed to Paoli Circuit. In 1844 he was sent to Rockport, where his health soon failed; at his own request he was discontinued, and, removing to Vincennes, Ind., opened a select school. A few months later in the same year he was placed in charge of the preparatory department of Vincennes University, which position he held till September, 1849, when he returned to New Albany and opened the De Pauw Female College. In 1853 he was elected professor of mathematics and natural science in Whitewater College, and in 1855 to the presidency of the same institution. Failure of health led him to spend 1856 as agent for a western railway company, and for the Northwestern University. In 1857 he was transferred to Iowa, and appointed to Fifth Street Church, Des Moines; in 1859 to Zion Church, Burlington; and in 1861 was elected president of Iowa Wesleyan University at Mount Pleasant, serving meantime as pastor of University and Asbury Chapel. In 1864 he was elected president of Albion College, Mich., and transferred from the Iowa to the Detroit Conference. Resigning his presidency in 1869, he was transferred to the Michigan Conference, and stationed at Division

XII.—20

Street, Grand Rapids. In 1871 he was re-elected president of Albion College, which office he sustained till his death, Jan. 27, 1877. Dr. Jocelyn possessed large natural endowments, intellectual and spiritual, which he patiently and thoroughly cultured, placing him in the foremost rank of instructors of his age. As a preacher he had few superiors in power of thought, perspicuity of style, and impressiveness of manner. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 105; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Jochanan, Isaac ha-Lewi. See ISAAC LEVITA.

Jochanan Salomo, a convert from Judaism, was a native of Posen. In 1657 he was baptized at Dantzie, was in 1659 professor of Hebrew there, and died July 1, 1683. He published, Programma de Jubilæis Hebræorum (Dantzie, 1658):—Demonstrationes 38, Jesus Christum Verum et Aeternum Messiam Esse (Frankfort, 1660):—Der verheissene Messias (Dantzie, 1683):—Zertheilte Finsterniss, oder Widerlegung des Buches Fajjums's von Israels Erlösung (1681). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 97. (B. P.)

Joel, David, a Jewish writer, was born at Schwerin, in the duchy of Posen, in 1813. After having completed his studies he was rabbi at Schwesentz and then at Krotoschin. In 1879 he was called to the Talmudic chair of the Rabbinical Seminary at Breslau, where he died, Sept. 8, 1882. He is the author of סדרש חזקוני, or Die Religionsphilosophie des Sohar (Leipzig, 1849). (B. P.)

Joel, Heymann, a Jewish rabbi, who died at Hirschberg, in Silesia, Dec. 20, 1884, published, Das Prinzip der Patriarchen (Düsseldorf, 1857):—Festpredigten für die hohen Festtage des Jahres (2d ed. Hirschberg, 1872). (B. P.)

Joga, in Hindûism, is the world's age, according to which the whole Indian chronology is regulated. The earth, according to this system, stands 12,000 divine years, of which each contains 360 common years, together, 4,320,000 of our years. These 4,000,000 years are divided into four Jogas, which have their particular names. The first is called Krita-Joga, and lasts 4000 divine years; the second, Treta-Joga, lasting 3000 divine years; the third, Dwapar-Joga, lasting 2000 divine years; and the last is called Kali-Joga. In this we live, and it lasts 1000 divine years. Between each of these Jogas there is a twilight period, after the first, of 800 divine years, after the second, of 600 divine years, after the third, of 400 divine years, after the fourth, of 200 divine years. This entire period is called Maha-Joga, or Sadir-Joga. 1000 Maha-Jogas are 4,320,000,000 of our years, and this makes one day of Brahma. The night is equally long, together, 8,640,000,000. In this night all things are dissolved until Brahma wakes up and re-enlivens them. Such a Sadir-Joga, taken 360 times, forms a year of Brahma, namely, 3,110,400,000,000 of our years. Brahma lives 100 such years, namely, 311,040,000,000,000. After Brahma's death an equally long period of destruction follows. After 622,080,000,000,000 years Brahma comes to life again, and the circle of days and nights begin anew. The last-mentioned figure forms a day of Vishnu; 360 of these days form one of his years. His life lasts 100 such years, making a round sum of 22,394,880,000,000,000,000. Probably Shiva would have a still longer life had the Shivaïtes not made their god immortal.

Jogi, in Hindûism, are penitents who torture themselves, either for money or as an act of piety, in the most severe manner.

eastern Buddha, and seems to be identical with Dewadeti. He is represented as a child, wound about by an angry snake; although it seems not to be the child, but the snake, that is the evil demon, for Krishna killed the monstrous snake Kalinak, as a child, by treading on its head.

Joques, ISAAC, a French Jesuit missionary, was born in Orleans, Jan. 10, 1607. He entered the Jesuit school at Rouen in 1624, studied theology in Paris, and took orders in 1636. He was sent as a missionary to Canada the same year, and reached Quebec July 2. He labored earnestly among the Hurons and Dinoudadies for several years. In 1642, in company with father Raymbault, he went to Sault Ste. Marie to establish a mission among the Algonquins. He returned to Quebec with a party of Hurons for supplies for the mission, and on his way back fell into an ambuscade of Iroquois, when almost the whole party was killed and Joques taken prisoner. He was now subjected to the most cruel treatment, and afterwards condemned to death. He became aware of his impending fate through the Dutch citizens of Albany, and effected his escape. He made his way to New Amsterdam (New York), and from there sailed to Europe. He returned to Canada in 1644, and in 1646 went with M. Bourdon to confirm the peace in the Mohawk castles. Peace being established, he set out, Sept. 27 of the same year, to found a Mohawk mission, but was put to death by the Mohawks at Caughnawaga (now Fonda), N. Y., Oct. 18, 1646. A Life of Joques, by the Rev. Félix Martin, appeared at Paris in 1878.

Johannsen, JOHANN CHRISTIAN GOTTEBERG, a Lutheran theologian, was born June 20, 1793, at Nortorf, Holstein. In 1818 he was preacher at Glückstadt, was called in 1825 as pastor primarius of St. Peter's at Copenhagen, and died in 1868, doctor of theology. He published, Aufschwung zu dem Ewigen (Altona, 1820, 2 parts):—Ueber die Grundsätze eines Lehrbuches der christl. Religion (ibid. 1823):—Religionsvorträge für denkende Verehrer Jesu (ibid. 1828, 2 parts):—Untersuchung der Rechtmässigkeit der Verpflichtung, etc. (ibid. 1833):—Die Anfänge des Symbolzwanges, etc. (Leipzig, 1847):—Die augsbургische Confession (ibid. ed.). John is the name of several early Scotch prelates:

1. Consecrated bishop of the see of Glasgow in 1115. Some time after he made a visit to the Holy Land. He rebuilt and adorned the cathedral church, and consecrated it in July, 1136; divided the diocese into two archdeaconries of Glasgow and Teviotdale, set up the offices of dean, subdean, chancellor, treasurer, sacrist, chantor, and succentor, and settled a prebend upon each of them out of the donations he had received from the king. He was witness to a charter of St. David's to the monastery of Newbottle in 1140. He died May 28, 1147. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 232.

2. A monk of Saïs, in Normandy, and bishop of the see of the Isles about 1151. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 297.

3. Consecrated (with Hugh) bishop of St. Andrews in 1178. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 12.

4. Bishop of Caithness in 1185, and witness to king William in a donation to the abbey of Kinloss, at the time when Hugo was chancellor of the kingdom. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 206.

5. Bishop of Galloway in 1189. He became a monk of Holyrood House in 1206, and died in 1209. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 272.

6. Bishop of Aberdeen about 1200, and such in 1201. He died in 1207. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 105.

7. Probably bishop of the Isles in 1226. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 299.

8. Bishop of Dunkeld in 1356, and was still such in 1365. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 84.

9. Probably bishop of the Isles about 1388. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 304.

10. Bishop of Ross in 1420, and witness in the same year to a resignation made by William Graham of his barony of Kerdale into the hands of Thomas, earl of Moray. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 189.

11. Bishop of the Isles about 1490, and privy-councillor to king James IV, from whom he received the abbacy of Icolmkill in 1507. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 305.

12. Bishop of Argyle in 1499. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 288.

13. Joannes Electus Sodoren, sat in the Parliament in 1524. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 306.

John OF CHUR (surnamed Rüberg). From the beginning of the 14th century we often meet in the mystic writings of South Germany with the name of Friends of God (q. v.). One of them was John of Chur, the son of a rich merchant. Suddenly arrested in a wild career, he gave himself up entirely to mystical contemplations. He renounced all his fortune, to which he had fallen heir by the death of his father, and distributed it for benevolent purposes. He regarded suffering as a special gift of divine grace, and even evil thoughts, doubts, and impure desires he believed were to be patiently endured rather than striven against, for they were dispensed by God. He taught that the perfect man "has become one with God, when he wants nothing else except what God wills." About the year 1357 he sought to unite his friends who were of the same spirit into a society. From indications in his writings we conclude that Chur, or Coire, in the canton of the Grisons, Switzerland, was his native city. In 1365 he determined to separate himself from the bustle of the town, and in company with two friends, led by a little black dog, they went into a mountain, where they built a chapel. By and by they were joined by two others, and of these "five men," John of Chur speaks in a separate treatise. He probably died in 1382. His writings consist of letters and tracts. See Acquiry, Het Klooster te Windesheim en Zijn Inloed (Utrecht, 1875); Preger, in the Zeitschrift für die historische Theologie (1869), i, 109 sq., 187 sq.; Der Gottesfreund im Oberland und Nikolaus von Basel, in the Historisch-politische Blätter (Munich, 1875), lxxv; Der Gottesfreund im Oberland, in the Jahrbuch für schweizerische Geschichte (Zurich, 1877); Besuch eines Cardinals beim Gottesfreund im Oberland, in the *Theolog. John "THE CONSTANT," elector of Saxony (1525-32), one of the most zealous of the princely supporters of the Reformation, was born at Meissen, June 30, 1468. He early imbibed a love for a military life, and in several campaigns under Maximilian I, against the Hungarians and Venetians, displayed great decision and courage. When the Reformation struggle began he was already fifty years of age, but followed it up from the very beginning, and with his son, John Frederick, soon became a follower of Luther, of whose sermons he often took notes. He bade the priests of his realm preach the gospel and administer the sacraments according to the institution of Christ. At the diet of Spire, in 1526, he openly espoused the cause of Luther, in connection with the other evangelical princes. He was threatened by a league of Catholic princes, formed at Breslau in 1528, with exile from his land and people unless he delivered up Luther and restored the old order of things. He expressed his refusal to comply by marshalling his troops, which, however, it did not become necessary to use. At the second diet of Spire, in 1529, he signed a protest against the action of the majority, which forbade all religious innovations or discussions on the mass until the convention of an oecumenical council. He acknowledged obedience to the emperor, except where it conflicted with the honor of God and the salvation of souls. At the diet of Augsburg, in 1530, his conduct was heroic. In spite of all personal annoyances he stood firmly by the side of the evangelicals. In 1531 he entered into a league of defence with the evangelical princes and cities for six years, which forced upon the emperor the religious peace of Nuremberg, July 23, 1532. He died Aug. 16 of the same year. Luther preached his funeral sermon from 1 Thess. iv, 13-18, and Melancthon pronounced a memorial address soon after in Latin. Luther honored him as a pious, sincere prince. John was a man of peace, and yet a good soldier of Christ. See Spalatin's Biography, in Mencke, Script. rerum Germ. iii, 1008 sq.; Ranke, Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation, i-iii; Gretsche-Billau, Geschichte des sächsischen Volkes und Staates, i, 419 sq.; Plitt, Einleitung in die Augustana; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. John, patriarch of CONSTANTINOPLE, known for his connection with the measures of the emperor Michael Palæologus, looking to the union of Christendom. He at first refused his aid, and declared the Latins heretics, for which he was imprisoned. While in prison he found leisure to examine the older Greek literature concerning the dissensions of the Eastern and Western churches, and these investigations changed his mind. He was released and made patriarch, but after the death of the emperor retired to a monastery, in 1283. He was again restored, and again exiled, dying in 1298 in Bithynia. The Greek Church excludes his name from the number of the orthodox, but not the Latin Church; hence his writings are found in Leo Allatius's Græcia Orthodoxa, tom. i, ii. See Gass, in Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

John of DARLINGTON, an Irish prelate, was a native of Darlington, Durham, trained a Dominican, and a great clerk, "qui literatura pollebat excellenti et cursilio" (Mat. Paris). Henry III made him his confessor, "which argueth his piety, that so devout a prince used him in so conscientious an office." He afterwards became archbishop of Dublin, being the choice of pope John XXI, in order to settle impartially the rival claims of William de la Corner, king's chaplain, the choice of the prior and convent of Trinity Church, and of Fromund le Brun, the pope's chaplain, the elect of the dean and chapter of St. Patrick's. The pope set both aside. John was also collector of Peter's Pence in Ireland to popes John XXI, Nicholas III, and Martin IV. He wrote many books. Returning to England, he died in 1284, and was buried at Preaching Friars. See Fuller, Worthies of England, i, 486.

John of FLANDERS, a Flemish prelate, was the son of Guy, count of Flanders. He became at first provost of St. Peter of Lille, and of St. Donatian of Bruges. Nicholas III provided him with the bishopric of Metz, Jan. 2, 1280, but he neglected the duties of that charge, and only took its revenues to acquire grounds at Flanders. After a short time he was appointed bishop of Liege, and took possession of his new Church, Oct. 31, 1282. In 1285 he got into difficulties with the sheriffs of Liege, and left the city, taking with him his clergy, and retiring into the borough of Huy. His exile lasted twenty-two months. After his return to Liege he made a league with his brother-in-law, the duke of Brabant, against Renaud, count of Guelders. In 1288, while hunting, according to the custom of those times, he was seized and imprisoned for five months, until he paid a ransom. He died Oct. 14, 1292. He published, in 1287, Synodal Statutes, collected by D. Martène, Thes. Anecd. iv, 829. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

John of THE GRATE (so-called from an iron grating which surrounded his sepulchre), Saint, bishop and confessor, was a Breton, born in 1098. He made rapid progress in his studies, and was made bishop of Aleth. As a bishop his life was embittered by a series of lawsuits with the monks of Marmoutiers. He wished to remove his episcopal see to the island of St. Malo, Aleth being exposed to pirates. But the monks claimed the Church of St. Malo, the pope decided in their favor, and Lucius II at length condemned John to lose his see. He then retired under the protection of St. Bernard to Clairvaux, until, on the death of Lucius, a monk of Clairvaux (Eugenius III) was elevated to the papal throne. John appealed again and was heard. His rights were restored, and the monks of Marmoutiers were obliged to cede the Church of St. Malo to the bishop. It was during his bishopric that the strange heresy of the fanatical Eon de l'Étoile (q. v.) broke out, and John tried by persuasion and instruction to disabuse of their heresy such of the enthusiasts as overran his diocese, and succeeded in converting many. John of the Grate died Feb. 1, 1163. He immediately received popular reverence as a saint, and numerous miracles are said to have augmented the reverence of the people. In 1517 Denis Brignonnet, ambassador of the king to Rome, obtained from Leo X permission for him to be commemorated in a solemn office as a confessor bishop. Monsignor Antoine Joseph des Laurents, last bishop of St. Malo but one, examined John's relics, Oct. 15, 1784. During the revolution they were ordered to be cast into the sea, but the order was countermanded, and the sexton was required to bury them in the common fosse in the cemetery. In November, 1799, M. Manet, a priest who had remained through the Reign of Terror in St. Malo, verified the relics. In a sealed box, March 7, 1823, they were deposited in their ancient shrine, and Nov. 16, 1839, by the sanction of the pope, they were finally installed with great ceremony, and are now in the Church of St. Malo. The authorities for the life of John of the Grate are Albertus Magnus of Morlaix, and the letters of Bernard and Nicholas of Clairvaux. His festival is observed as a double by the Church of St. Malo, in Brittany, and his name appears in Saussaye's supplement to the Gallican martyrology. See Baring-Gould, Lives of the Saints, ii, 26 (sub Feb. 1, his day).

John, a metropolitan of KIEV, was raised to that dignity in 1164 by the patriarch of Constantinople, Lucas Chrysoberges. He is famous for his letter to pope Alexander III, of which a rare book entitled Kirikoroi (Moscow, 1644) gives some extracts. John died May 12, 1166. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

John of MONMOUTH (so called from the place of his nativity), a doctor of divinity and canon of Lincoln, was chosen bishop of Llandaff in 1296, after a vacancy in that see of seven years, the pope remitting the election to archbishop Kilwarby, who called John of Monmouth. He became a great benefactor to the bishopric, procuring for it, among other revenues, the rectory of Newland. He was a learned and pious theologian. He died April 8, 1323. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 434.

John Baptist of SALERNO, a Jesuit, and friend of pope Clement XI, was born in 1670. He accompanied the nephew of the pope, Albani, to Germany and Poland as theological adviser, and succeeded in converting Frederick Augustus of Saxony to the Church of Rome. In acknowledgment of this deed John Baptist was made cardinal, and died in 1729. He is the author of Specimen Orientalis Ecclesie (Rome, 1706). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

John, Frederick (surnamed the Magnanimous), elector of Saxony, son of John the Constant (q. v.), was born at Torgau, June 30, 1503. Brought up in the Church of the Reformation, he became its unwavering advocate, and, like his father, he was on terms of most intimate friendship with Luther, with whom he carried on an uninterrupted correspondence. He increased the endowment of Wittenberg University from the sequestered revenues of convents, and in 1548 founded the University of Jena. His relations to the emperor were unpleasant. In 1536 he entered into a reaffirmation of the Smalcald league, by which the Protestant princes bound themselves to mutual protection for ten years. In 1544 the emperor Charles V was left free to give his whole attention to the affairs in Germany. A war broke out. Frederick was finally defeated, and taken prisoner at Mühlberg, April 24, 1547. He remained in prison till 1552, and died at Weimar, March 3, 1554. John Frederick remained true to the cause of the Evangelical Church in spite of his many misfortunes. See Müller, Geschichte Johann Friedrich des Grossmüthigen (Jena, 1765); Ranke, Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation, iv, 190 sq.; Burkhardt, Die Gefangenschaft Joh. Fr. d. Grossmüthigen (1863); Plitt-Herzog, Reut-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Johnes, Timothy, D.D., a Presbyterian minister of Welsh extraction, was born at Southampton, L. I., May 24, 1717. He graduated from Yale College in 1737, was ordained by the New York Presbytery, Feb. 9, 1743, pastor at Morristown, N. J., and had great success in his ministry there, which closed with his death, Sept. 17, 1794. In 1777 general Washington, on one occasion, communed with his congregation while in the vicinity. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 16. (W. P. S.)

Johns, Henry Van Dyke, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at New Castle, Del., in 1803, being the youngest son of the Hon. Kenesey Johns, chief-justice of Delaware and United States senator. He graduated from Princeton College, afterwards studied at the General Theological Seminary, N. Y., and continued his theological studies under the direction of his brother, bishop Johns of Virginia. His ministry began at Wilmington, Del.; he was for some time rector of the Church at Frederick, Md.; thence he was called to Trinity Church, Washington, D. C.; subsequently to Cincinnati, O.; then to the rectorship of Christ Church, Baltimore, Md., where he continued until 1853, when Emanuel Church was built by a portion of his congregation, and he became its rector, a position which he occupied until his death, April 22, 1859. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1859, p. 352.

Johns, John, D.D., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at New Castle, Del., July 10, 1796. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1815; studied two years at Princeton Theological Seminary; in his eighteenth year joined the Protestant Episcopal Church, and, June 10, 1819, was ordained deacon, and in 1820 presbyter. His first parish was All-Saints' Church, Frederick, Md., and in 1829 he became rector of old Christ's Church, in Baltimore. In 1837 a new church was erected, called the Church of the Messiah, of which he was rector until he became assistant bishop of the diocese of Virginia, May 21, 1842. In 1849 he was elected president of William and Mary College, where he remained until 1854. He died at Alexandria, Va., April 5, 1876. He was a leader of the Evangelical side of his Church, and commanded admiration from men of all shades of opinion by the purity of his life and the sincerity of his convictions. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1877, p. 12.

Johnson, George Henry Sacheverell, an eminent Anglican clergyman and mathematician, was born at Keswick, Northumberland, about 1808. He graduated from Queen's College, Oxford, in 1828, obtained several scholarships and a tutorship therein, became professor of astronomy in 1839, of moral philosophy from 1842 to 1845, preacher at Whitehall in 1852, dean of Wells in 1854, and died Nov. 6, 1881. He published a Treatise on Optics (1836);—Sermons (1857);—and wrote the annotations on the Psalms in the Speaker's Commentary.

Johnson, Samuel, a Unitarian writer, was born at Salem, Mass., Oct. 10, 1822. He graduated from Harvard College in 1843, and from Harvard Divinity School in 1846; became pastor of a "Free Church" at Lynn in 1853; in 1870 removed to Salem, and in 1876 to North Andover, where he died, Feb. 19, 1882. Although not an ordained minister, he was intimately associated with the humanitarian tendencies of modern Unitarianism, and an ardent opponent of slavery, speaking and writing eloquently on kindred subjects of reform. He published A Book of Hymns (1846);—The Worship of Jesus (1868);—and Oriental Religions (his principal work, vol. i, Boston, 1872).

Johnson, Samuel R., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, graduated from the General Theological Seminary, was for many years a professor of systematic divinity there, and a prominent member and secretary of the standing committee of his diocese. In 1872 he became rector of St. Thomas's Church, Amenia Union, N. Y., and died Aug. 13, 1873. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1874, p. 188.

Johnson, William L., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, rector in Jamaica, L. I., for at least eighteen years, and died there, Aug. 4, 1870, aged eighty years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1871, p. 118.

Johnston, John, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Crawford, Orange Co., N. Y., Jan. 28, 1778. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1801; studied theology privately in Princeton; was licensed by the New Brunswick Presbytery in October, 1806. In 1807 he accepted a call to the united congregations of Newburgh and New Windsor, N. Y. In 1810 he was released from the congregation of New Windsor, but remained as pastor at Newburgh until his death, Aug. 26, 1855. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 394.

Johnstone, William O., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland, April 17, 1822, but received his education in this country. He was pastor of the Kensington Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., for more than thirty years, and his services in every department of Church work were constant and untiring. He died suddenly, Jan. 16, 1883. See (Phila.) Presbyterian, Jan. 20, 1883. (W. P. S.)

Jokneam. Of Tell Keimûn, the modern representative of this place, a brief account may be found in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 48), and of the few remaining antiquities (p. 69). A freer description is given by Lieut. Conder (Tent Work, i, 131):

"North of Lejjûn the great Wady el-Milh runs down from the white plateau of the 'Breezy Land,' which it separates from the southern end of Carmel. Here at the mouth stands a huge tell or mound called Keimûn, on which are remains of a little Byzantine chapel, and of a small fort erected by the famous native chief Dhahr el-Amr. The Samaritans have a curious legend connected with this site. According to them Joshua was challenged by the giants, and enclosed here with his army in seven walls of iron. A dove carried his message thence to Nabû, king of the tribes east of Jordan, who came to his assistance. The magic walls fell down, and the king of Persia, Shobek, was transfixed by an arrow which nailed him on his horse to the ground.

"The present name is a slight modification of the ancient Jokneam of Carmel, but the Crusaders seem to have been puzzled by it, and transformed Keimûn into Cain Mons, or Mount Cain, whence arose the curious legend that Cain was here slain with an arrow by Lamech, which they supposed to be the murder referred to in the Song of Lamech (Gen. iv, 23). The chapel no doubt shows the spot once held to be the site of the death of Cain, but the derivation of the name was as fanciful as that of Haifa from Cephas or from Calaphas the high-priest."

Joktheel of JUDAH. For this town Tristram proposes (Bible Places, p. 40) Khurbet Meshkeir-fesh, near Gaza, on the ground that "the word is the Arabic equivalent of the Hebrew"; and a writer in the Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund" (January, 1861, p. 53) proposes "the large ruin Kulâneh, south of Gezer, as the words are from similar roots." But both these identifications are very precarious.

Jones, Alexander, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Charleston, S. C., Nov. 8, 1796. He graduated from Brown University in 1814; pursued his theological studies under the direction of bishop Griswold, at Bristol, R. I.; took charge of a school for some years in Bardstown, Ky.; was ordained deacon in 1822; in 1824 became rector of Zion Church, in Charleston, Va.; in 1851 of St. Paul's Church, in Richmond, and afterwards was settled as rector of St. Peter's Church, in Perth Amboy, N. J., where he remained seventeen years (1857-74), and then having had a stroke of paralysis, he was obliged to abandon all ministerial labor. He died at Perth Amboy, Feb. 15, 1874. "He had a high rank among the clergy of the Episcopal Church for scholarship and useful service, and was a gentleman of genial manners and refined taste." (J. C. S.)

Jones, Arthur, D.D., a Welsh Congregational minister, was born at Llanrwst, Denbighshire, Feb. 12, 1776. He was converted when about eighteen years of age, joined the Calvinistic Methodists, and soon became an exhorter and preacher. He was ordained at Bangor in 1810, where he labored earnestly as pastor; in 1815 he removed to the Welsh churches at Deptford and Woolwich, Kent; in 1823 he returned to his former charge at Bangor; in 1854 he retired to Chester, where he died, Feb. 29, 1860. He published several tracts and sermons, besides his work entitled, Pygmean Athrawiaethol (doctrinal points). See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1861, p. 215.

Jones, Inigo, an eminent English architect, was born in London in 1572. He went to Venice and studied the works of Palladio, and his reputation procured him the appointment of chief architect to Christian IV, king of Denmark, who, in 1606, brought Jones with him to England. He was induced to remain, and was appointed architect to the queen, and subsequently to Henry, prince of Wales. He invented many ingenious decorations and wonderful machines. Among his works are the palace of lord Pembroke, at Wilton, in the county of Wilts; the queen's chapel, St. James; the façades of Holyrood House; and Heriot's Hospital, Edinburgh. He died in London, July 21, 1652. A collection of Inigo Jones's architectural designs was published by Kent in 1712 and 1724. See Spenser, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Jones, John Collier, D.D., an English divine, was born at Plympton, Devonshire, Oct. 7, 1770. He graduated from Exeter College, Oxford, June 6, 1792, and shortly after was elected to a Petrean fellowship. Entering holy orders, he became curate of Mortlake, in Surrey, but afterwards accepted a chaplainship on board the Namur, and was present in the action off cape St. Vincent, in 1797. In 1808 he became one of the tutors of his college; in 1812 a public examiner; select preacher in 1819; and on the death of Dr. Cole was elected to the rectorship of Exeter. Dr. Jones's other official appointments were, delegate of accounts in 1824; vice-chancellor from October, 1828, to 1832; and joint curator of the Sheldonian Theatre in 1829. He was also vicar of Kidlington, and an acting magistrate for the county of Oxford. He died in 1838. His inflexible integrity, gracefulness of manner, and kindness of disposition won for him the esteem and love of all with whom he came in contact. See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, Sept. 1838, p. 568.

Jones, John Emlyn, LL.D., a Welsh Baptist minister, was born at Newcastle Emlyn, Carmarthenshire, Jan. 8, 1820. He was baptized at the age of thirteen; received a good education; was ordained in 1852 co-pastor at Pontypridd; was then pastor in Ebbw Vale; then in Cardiff; in 1865 removed to Merthyr; in 1869 to Llandudno, North Wales, and finally returned to Ebbw Vale, where he died, Jan. 18, 1873. He was ever busy with his pen, as with his tongue, contributing largely to both the Welsh and the English newspaper press. He published Welsh translations of Gill's Commentary and Hamilton's Grammar. He wrote Hanes Prydain Fawr am yr Haner Cwrtif Diweddar ("The History of Great Britain for the Past Half Century"). For several years he was busily engaged in writing his Y Parthylllydd, Sef, Hanes yr Holl Fyd ("The History of the Whole World"), one volume of which was published. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1874, p. 282. (J. C. S.)

Jones, Samuel Beach, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Charleston, S. C., Nov. 23, 1811. He studied at Yale College; spent four years in Princeton Theological Seminary (1832-36); acted one year as assistant secretary of the Board of Missions; was ordained in 1837; became professor of Hebrew in the Oakland Seminary, Miss., in 1838; was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Bridgeton, N. J., from 1839 to 1863; preached in Fairfield from 1870 to 1875, and died at Bridgeton, March 19, 1883. See (N. Y.) Observer, March 22, 1883. (W. P. S.)

Jones, Thomas (1), D.D., an Irish prelate, was born in Lancashire, and educated at Christ College, Cambridge. His first promotion was to the chancellorship of St. Patrick's Cathedral; in 1581 he was elected its dean; in May, 1584, dean Jones was promoted to the see of Meath, and on May 12 was consecrated in St. Patrick's Church. Having presided over that see twenty-one years, he was translated to that of Dublin in 1605, and was consecrated Nov. 9 of the same year. In 1611, he, and the other archbishops of the Established Church, held a council in Dublin, wherein it was decreed that the suffragans should reside in their respective dioceses, visit all the churches, and institute such regulations as would be best calculated to prevent sectarianism and extirpate popery. In 1613 he was one of the justices in commission with sir Richard Wingfield. In 1614 he had a grant of the temporalities of the bishoprics of Kilmore and Ardagh during vacancy. During the episcopacy of archbishop Jones he repaired a great part of Christ Church. He died at his palace of St. Sepulchre's in April, 1619. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 250.

Jones, Thomas (2), an English divine, was born near Havod, Cardiganshire, Wales, April 2, 1752. He was educated at the grammar-school of Ystradmeirig, and ordained in 1774. Having labored in the curacy of Llangevelin and Eglwysbach from 1774 to 1778, he removed to Leintwardine, Herefordshire, England, thence to Longnor, Shropshire, and from this place to Oswestry. His next curacy was Loppington; and in 1785 he was appointed to the living of Creation, Northamptonshire, where he remained till the increasing infirmities of age obliged him to resign his office in 1838. He died Jan. 7, 1845. His works are, Jonah's Portrait (1818, 12mo; 9th ed. 1845, 8vo):—Scripture Directors

Joppa. Of the modern Yafa (called Jaffa by the Europeans) a tolerably full account is given in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 275 sq.); and the description by Lieut. Conder (Tent Work, i, 1 sq.) contains some interesting particulars:

"The town rose from the shore on a brown hillock; the dark, flat-roofed houses climbing the hill one above another, but no prominent building breaking the sky outline. The yellow, gleaming beach, with its low cliffs and sand-dunes, stretched away north and south, and in the distance the dim blue Judæan hills were visible in shadow.

"Jaffa is called the port of Jerusalem, but has no proper harbor at present. In ancient times the 'Moon Pool,' south of the town, now silted up, was perhaps the landing-place for Hiram's rafts of cedar-wood; but the traveller passes through a narrow opening in a dangerous reef running parallel with the shore, or, if the weather is bad, he is obliged to make a long detour round the northern end of the same reef. By ten in the morning the land breeze rises, and a considerable swell is therefore always to be expected. The entrance through the reef is only sufficient for one boat, and thus every year boats are wrecked on the rocks and lives lost. It is said also that each year at least one person is killed by the sharks close to land. The little Russian steamer was anchored about two miles from shore, and relied considerably.

The decks were crowded with a motley assemblage, specimens of every Levantine nationality. Each deck passenger had his bedding with him, and the general effect was that of a great rag-heap, with human faces—black, brown, and white—legs, arms, and umbrellas sticking out of the rags in unexpected places. Apart from the rest sat a group of warthy Bedouin, with their huge head-shawls, not unlike a coal-scuttle in effect, bound with a white cord round the brow. They wore their best dresses, the black hair cloak, with red slippers. The rugged dark faces with white beards and sun-scorched eyes wore a curious mixed expression of assumed dignity and badly concealed curiosity concerning the wonders of civilization surrounding them. The coloring of these various groups would have been a treat to an artist. The dull rich tints were lit up here and there by patches of red leather and yellow silk. Like all Oriental color, it was saved from any gaudiness of effect by the large masses of dull brown or indigo which predominated. The steamer was soon besieged by a fleet of long, flat boats with sturdy rowers, and into these the passengers were precipitated, and their luggage dropped in after them. The swell was so great that we were in constant danger of being capsized under the accommodation-ladder. As we rowed off, and sank in the trough of the waves, the shore and town disappeared, and only the nearest boats were visible high up on the crest of the rollers. The exciting moment of reaching the reef came next; the women closed their eyes, the rowers got into a regular swing, chanting a rude rhyme, and, waiting for the wave, we were suddenly carried past the ugly black rocks into smooth water close to the wharf. The landing at Jaffa has been from time immemorial an exciting scene. We have the terrible and graphic account of the old pilgrim (Sæwulf) who, 'from his sins or from the badness of the ship,' was almost wrecked, and who witnessed from the shore the death of his companions, helpless in a great storm in the offing. We have the account of Richard Lion-Heart springing, fully-armed, into the surf and fighting his way on shore. The little port made by the reef has been long the only place south of Acre where landing was possible; but the storms which have covered the beach with modern wrecks were equally fatal to the Genoese galleys and crusading war-ships.

"The town of Jaffa contains little of interest, though it is sufficiently striking to a new-comer. The broad effects of light and shadow are perhaps enhanced here by the numerous arched streets and the flights of steps which climb from the sea-level to the higher part of the town. The glory of Jaffa consists in its beautiful gardens, which stretch inland about a mile and a half, and extend north and south over a length of two miles. Oranges, lemons, palms, bananas, pomegranates, and other fruits grow in thick groves surrounded by old cactus hedges, having narrow lanes between them deep in sand. Sweet water is found in abundance at a moderate depth. The scent of the oranges is said to be at times perceptible some miles from land, to approaching ships. Still more curious is the fact that the beautiful little sunbird, peculiar to the Jordan valley, is also to be found in these gardens. How this African wanderer can have made its way across districts entirely unfitted for its abode, to spots separated by the great mountain chain, it is not easy to explain.

"Outside the town on the north-east is the little German colony, the neat white houses of which were built originally by an American society which was almost exterminated by fever, and finally broken up by internal differences, caused, I understand, by some resemblance in the views of the chief to those of Brigham Young. The land and buildings were bought by the thrifty German settlers, members of the Temple Society, with the views and history of which sect I became further acquainted during the following winter. See PALESTINE, COLONISTS IN.

"The soil of the Jaffa plain is naturally of great fertility. Even the negligent tillage of the peasantry produces fine harvests. The Germans ploughed deeper, and were rewarded by a crop of thistles, which to a good farmer would have been a subject of satisfaction as proving the existence of virgin soil, only requiring to be sown by other crops for a year or two in order to yield fine harvests of corn. At this time of year, the barley had been gathered in, and only the dry stubble was left."

Jordaens, JAKOB, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp, May 19, 1594, studied under Adam van Oort, and copied the pictures of Titian and Paul Veronese. He was employed by the king of Spain to do some important work. His paintings are very numerous, and abound in the churches and public edifices of the Netherlands. Some of the most celebrated are St. Apollonia, in the church of the Augustines at Antwerp; Christ Disputing with the Doctors, in that of St. Walburg at Furnes; The Triumphal Entry. He died at Antwerp, Oct. 18, 1678. There are a few other etchings by him, among which are the following: The Flight into Egypt; Christ Driving the Traders from the Temple; The Descent from the Cross. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Jordan VALLEY. We extract some interesting particulars on this, the one great river of the Holy Land, from Lieut. Conder's Tent Work in Palestine (ii, 35 sq.), which summarizes the whole information in a clear and compact form. (See map on following page.)

"The Jordan Valley is not only the most remarkable feature of Palestine, but one of the most curious places in the world. It has no exact counterpart elsewhere, and the extraordinary phenomenon of clouds sweeping as a thick mist 500 feet below the level of the sea, is one which few European eyes have seen, but which we witnessed in the early storms of the spring of 1874.

"The Jordan rises as a full-grown river, issuing from the cave at Banias, about 1000 feet above the level of the Mediterranean. In the short distance of twelve miles it falls not less than 1000 feet, passing through the papyrus-marshes, and reaching the Huleh Lake. This lake is four miles long, and from its southern extremity to the north end of the Sea of Galilee is ten and a half miles. The second lake has been determined, by our line of levels, as 682 feet below the Mediterranean; thus in twenty-six and a half miles there is a fall of 1689 feet, or more than sixty feet to the mile.

"The Sea of Galilee is twelve and a half miles long, and thence the Jordan flows sixty-five miles, measuring in a straight line (the bends make it a good deal more) to the Dead Sea, 1292 feet below the Mediterranean. The fall in this distance is, however, not regular. Above the Jier Mujāmil'a it is over forty feet to the mile. From the south end of the Sea of Galilee to the Dāmleh ford is a distance of forty-two miles, and a fall of only 460 feet. From the Dāmleh to the mouth of Wādy el 'Aujeh is thirteen miles, with sixty feet fall, and thence to the Dead Sea is ten miles, with ninety feet of fall.

"It will be seen from the above that the total direct length of Jordan is about 104 miles, or only half the length of the Thames; that the fall to the Sea of Galilee is over sixty feet to the mile; thence to the Dāmleh, at first forty feet, afterwards not quite eleven feet per mile; from the Dāmleh to the 'Aujeh not much over four and a half feet to the mile; and for the last ten miles, about nine feet per mile. The break down of the immense chasm may thus be said to commence immediately north of the Sea of Galilee.

"The valley may be divided into eight sections. First, the portion between Banias and the Huleh, where it is some five miles broad, with steep cliffs some 2000 feet high on either side and a broad marsh between. Secondly, from the Huleh to the Sea of Galilee, where the stream runs close to the eastern hills, and about four miles from the base of those on the west, which rise towards the high Safed mountains, more than 3500 feet above the lake. Thirdly, for thirteen miles from the south end of the Sea of Galilee to the neighborhood of Beisān, the valley is only one and a half miles broad west of the river, and about three on the east, the steep cliffs of the plateau of Kankab el-Hawa on the west reaching an altitude of 1600 feet above the stream.

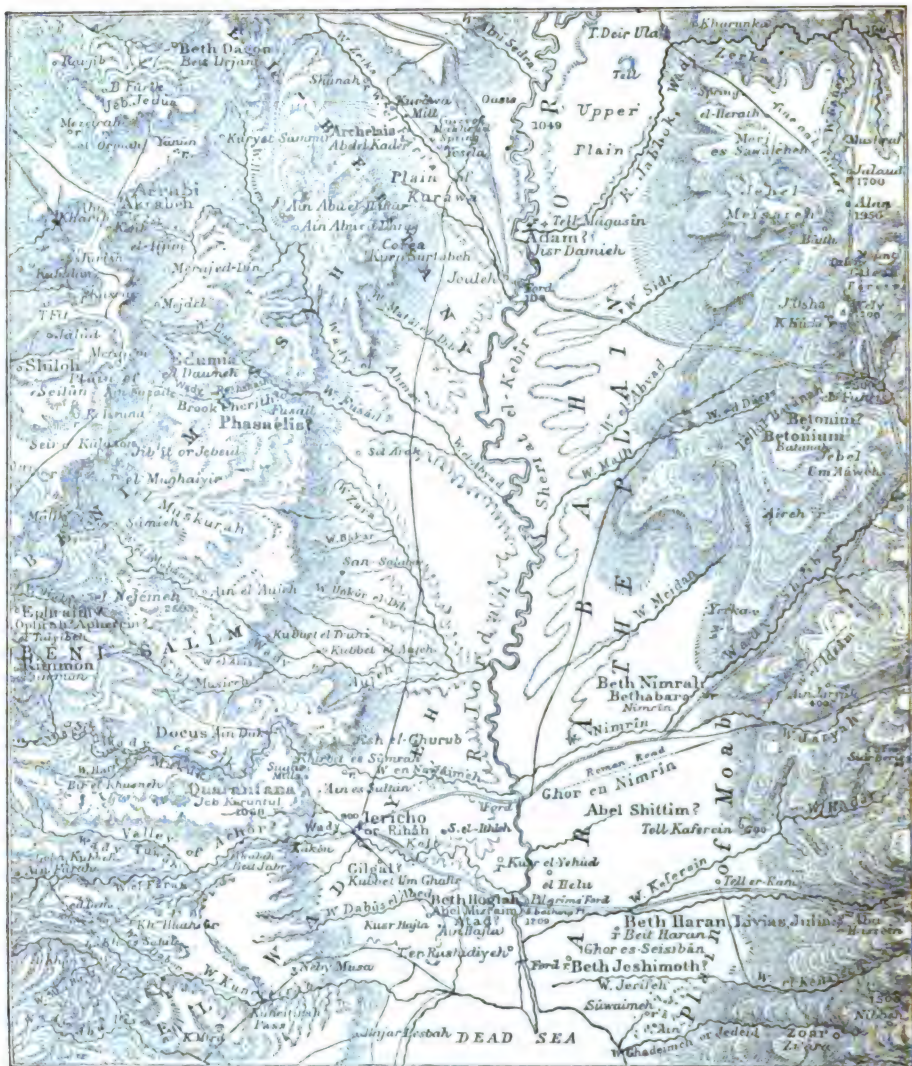

"South of Beisān is the fourth district, with a plain west of Jordan, twelve miles long and six miles broad, the line of hills on the east being straight, and the foot of the mountain on this side about two miles from the river. In the neighborhood of Beisān the cross section of the plain shows three levels: that of the shelf on which Beisān stands, about 300 feet below sea-level; that of the Ghôr itself, some 400 feet lower, reached by an almost precipitous descent; and that of the Zor, or narrow trench, from half to a quarter of a mile wide, and about 150 feet lower still. The higher shelf extends westward to the foot of Gilboa; it dies away on the south, but on the north it gradually rises into the plateau of Kankab and to the western table-land above the Sea of Galilee, 1800 feet above Jordan.

"After leaving the Beisān plain the river passes through a narrow valley twelve miles long and two to three miles wide, with a raised table-land to the west, having a level averaging about 500 feet above the sea. The Beisān plain is full of springs of fresh water, some of which are thermal, but a large current of salt warm water flows down Wādy Māleh, at the north extremity of this fifth district.

"In the sixth district, the Dāmleh region, the valley again opens to a width of about three miles on the west, and five on the east of Jordan. The great block of the Kurn Sirtūbeh here stands out like a bastion, on the west, 2400 feet above the river. Passing this mountain the seventh district is entered—a broad valley extending from near Fushāil to 'Osh el-Ghūrāb, north of Jericho. In this region the Ghôr itself is five miles broad west of the river, and rather more on the east; the lower trench, or Zor, is also wider here, and more distinctly separated from the Ghôr. A curious geographical feature of this region was also discovered by the survey party. The great affluents of the Fārāh and 'Aujeh do not flow straight to Jordan, but turn south about a mile west of it, and each runs, for about six miles, nearly parallel with the river; thus the mouth of the Fārāh is actually to be found just where that of the next valley is shown on most maps. This curious feature was not discovered even by Captain Warren, and nothing more surprised me, in surveying the district, than the unsuspected parallel course of the streams. The whole of the valley in the seventh region is full of salt springs and salt marshes, but the Fārāh, flowing from the Znon springs, is a perennial stream of fresh water.

"The eighth and last district is that of the plain of Jericho, which, with the corresponding basin (Ghōr-es-Seisebān) east of Jordan, measures over eight miles north and south, and more than fourteen across, with Jordan about in the middle. The Zor is here about a mile wide, and some 200 feet below the broad plain of the Ghôr."

Jormungand, in Norse mythology, was the Midgard-snake, the daughter of Loke and the giantess

Map of the Jordan Plain at its mouth.

Angerbode, also the sister of the wolf Fenris and the blue Hela. The gods threw Jormungand into the ocean, where she grew so as to encircle the earth. When she drinks, there is low tide; when she gives back the water again, it is high tide. Thus she will live until Ragnarok (world's end) comes. Thor will then slay her with his mǫlner, or hammer, but will himself be drowned in the poisonous streams issuing from her mouth.

JOSE BEN-CHALEFTA (surnamed the thinker), a Jewish rabbi, was born at Sepphoris, in Palestine, about the year 80 A.D. Involved in the political schemes of rabbi Akiba (q. v.), he was obliged, in the year 124, to save himself from the Roman sword by fleeing to Asia Minor, from whence, on the death of the emperor Hadrian, in 136, he returned to Sepphoris, and died as the head of a school in that place, in 150. Jose's life is said to have been an edifying example of moral conduct, diligence in acquiring and communicating knowledge, and an amiable modesty and humility. "I would rather," said he, "be a learner in a school than be founder of the school. I would rather, in the fulfilment of my duty, die a bitter death, than be infamous in the too well beaten way. I would rather overdo my duty than fail in it. I would rather collect for the poor than, by distributing among them, gain consideration for myself. I would rather be unjustly blamed, than really do what is wrong." Jose is the author of a historical work, which has been preserved, and is possessed of lasting interest, the Seder Olam (q. v.). See Hamburger, Real-Encyklop. ii, 498 sq.; Bacher, Die Agada der Tannaiten (Strasburg, 1884), pp. 20, 87, 99, 110, 139, 207, 223, 242, 246, 247, 284, 305, 337, 381, 422, 438; *Fürst, Bibl. JOSENHAUS, JOHANNES, a Protestant theologian, for some time inspector of the Basle Missionary Institute, who died Dec. 25, 1884, is the author of, Die Herrlichkeit Jesu Christi des Sohnes Gottes (Stuttgart, 1846): — Bilder aus der Missionswelt (Basle, 1858): — Atlas der evangelischen Missionsgesellschaft zu Basel (2d ed. ibid. 1859). JOSEPH BEN-JOSHUA ben-Meir (surnamed Hasfardi, i. e. "the Spaniard"), was born in 1496 at Avignon, whither his father had retired on leaving Spain. He is the author of a historical work, entitled הַכְרֵר הַיְמִינִים, Chronicles of the Kings of France and the Ottoman Soveraigns, in two parts, the first from the creation till 1520, and the second of transactions from that time till 1553 (Venice, 1554; Amsterdam, 1783). Disinterested, and contemporary with those events, he must be regarded as an impartial historian. This work has been translated in part into Latin by Louis Ferrand, Synopsis sive Conspectus Libri Hebraici, etc. (Paris, 1670). An English translation of the whole, by C. H. Bialoblotzky, has made this interesting work accessible to English readers, The Chronicles of R. Joseph ben-Joshua Meir, the Sephardi (Lond. 1836, 2 vols.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 115; Etheridge, Introd. to Hebr. Lit. p. 453; Lindo, History of the Jews of Spain and Portugal, p. 451; Jost, Geschichte des Judenthums, iii, 124. (B. P.)

Josephinism. Under this term we generally understand those ecclesiastical reforms which were introduced by Joseph II, German emperor from 1780 to 1790. It was Joseph's object to form a national Austrian Church, congruent with the territory of the state, closely connected with the strongly centralized secular government, and as far as possible independent of Rome. As, on many points along the boundaries, Austrian dominions ranged under the authority of foreign bishops, a new circumscription of the dioceses was necessary, and it was carried out with little ceremony. A new oath of subjection to the temporal ruler was demanded of the bishops. All imperial decrees were sent to the bishops, and again by them to the pastors, who had to make them known to their flocks from the pulpit. On the other hand, no papal bulls or briefs could be published in the country without an imperial "placet." Connected with this movement was the education of the clergy. The theological students were forbidden to visit the "Collegium Germanico-Hungaricum" in Rome, which institute was replaced by the "Collegium Germanicum et Hungaricum" at Pavia. The philological and theological schools in the monasteries were closed, and diocesan seminaries were opened under the superintendence of an imperial committee. For the divine services the use of the German language was prescribed, and the Latin was abolished. Pilgrimages outside of the country were forbidden. Rules were given in respect to the luxurious ornamentation of the churches, the magnificent processions, the brilliant illuminations. All religious orders not engaged in preaching, teaching, or nursing the sick, were dissolved. Between 1770 and 1786 the number of monasteries sank from 2136 to 1425, and that of monks and nuns from 64,890 to 44,280. On Oct. 13, 1781, an edict of religious toleration was promulgated, according to which the Evangelicals of the Augsburg and Helvetic confessions obtained a limited freedom of worship. Civil disqualifications arising from denominational differences were abolished. Even the position of the Jews was improved. Previous to that edict of toleration, on May 4, an imperial decree had enacted that the oath of obedience to the pope, and the "Professio fidei Tridentina," usual at the distribution of degrees, were abrogated, and that the bulls "In cœna Domini" and "Unigenitus" were to be torn out of the books of the liturgy. The Roman curia became, of course, greatly alarmed at these proceedings, and in January, 1782, pope Pius VI went in person to Vienna. He was politely received without effecting any change, and the more so since the emperor had the support of the most influential prelates of Austro-Hungaria. Joseph, however, died Feb. 20, 1790, and his early death prevented his reforms from taking root. During his immediate successors the old order was again revived. Josephites is the name of a congregation of missionary priests of St. Joseph, organized at Lyons in 1656, by a certain Cretenet, a native of Champlitte, in Burgundy, and a surgeon by profession, who consecrated himself to the service at the hospital in Lyons. The first object of these priests was to act as missionaries in the country, and then to engage in charitable works in the different colleges.

There exists also an organization of females, known as "Sisters of St. Joseph," which was instituted by the bishop of Puy in 1650. These sisters, besides doing charitable works, have to care for the hospitals, govern the houses of refuge, and are charged with the instruction of orphans and little children in the schools, and with visiting the sick. Their vows are very simple, and they can always be relieved from them by the bishop in whose diocese they live. Sister of St. Joseph.

Joseph's Tomb (Kabr Yûsef) is briefly described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 194), and more popularly in Lieut. Conder's Tent Work (ii, 74) as follows:

"About six hundred yards north of the well [of Jacob] is the traditional tomb of Joseph, venerated by the members of every religious community in Palestine. The building stands east of the road from Balâta to 'Askar, at the end of a row of fine fig-trees. The enclosure is square and roofless, the walls whitewashed and in good repair, for, as an inscription on the south wall, in English, informs the visitor, it was rebuilt by consul Rogers, the friend of the Samaritans, in 1868; it is about twenty-five feet square, and on the north is another building of equal size, but older and partly ruinous, surmounted by a little dome. The tomb itself resembles most of the Moslem cenotaphs—a long block, with an arched or vaulted roof having a pointed cross section. It is rudely plastered, and some seven feet long and three feet high. It is placed askew, and nearest to the west wall of the court. A stone bench is built into the east wall, on which three Jews were seated at the time of our second visit, book in hand, swinging backwards and forwards as they crooned out a nasal chant—a prayer, no doubt, appropriate to the place.

"The most curious point to notice is, however, the existence of two short pillars, one at the head, and the other at the foot of the tomb, having shallow cup-shaped hollows at their tops. These hollows are blackened by fire, for the Jews have the custom of burning sacrifices on them, small articles, such as handkerchiefs, gold lace, or shawls, being consumed. Whether this practice is also observed by the Samaritans is doubtful.

"The tomb points approximately north and south, thus being at right angles to the direction of Moslem tombs north of Mecca. How the Mohammedans explain this disregard of orientation in so respected a prophet as 'our Lord Joseph,' I have never heard; perhaps the rule is held to be only established since the time of Mohammed. The veneration in which the shrine is held by the Moslem peasantry is, at all events, not diminished by this fact.

Joshua's Tomb. Lieut. Conder gives the local traditions on the subject as follows (Tent Work, i, 78):

"The 'Holy King Joshua' is said by the Samaritans to have been buried at Kefr Hâria, which they identify with Timnath Heres. This village is nine miles south of Nablûs.

"The Jewish pilgrim, rabbi Jacob of Paris, visited Caphar Cheres—presumably Kefr Hâria—in A. D. 1268, and mentions the tombs of Joshua, Nûn, and Caleb. The Samaritans also hold that Caleb was buried with Joshua, and thus we have the curious result that Jews and Samaritans agree as to the site of these tombs, both placing them within the bounds of Samaria. The crusading writers point to the same site for Joshua's tomb, and the place is marked on the map of Marino Sanuto (A.D. 1322) in the relative position of Kefr Haris.

"The modern village has three sacred places: one of Neby Nûn, the second Neby Lush'a, the third Neby Kif. In the first two we recognise Nûn and Joshua: Neby Kif was a historic character, but his shrine possibly occupies the place of the mediæval tomb of Caleb.

"The site of Joshua's tomb seems therefore to be preserved by an indigenous tradition at least as authentic as that of Joseph's tomb. It has been supposed that Jerome indicates a different site, but a careful reading of his account of St. Paula's journey seems to show that he also refers to the tombs at Kefr Haris."

For another traditional site of Joshua's tomb see TIMNATH-HERES.

Jotes, in Norse mythology. These forms of Scandinavian deities seem to have a historic background. They were probably the aborigines of the north of Europe, who were driven from their possessions by the companions of Odin; hence the undying enmity between the Jotes and the Asas. Fable makes the Jotes to be monstrous giants and magicians, living in dark caves and grottoes. They and the Thusses seem to have been derived from one family.

Jouffroi (Lat. Joffredus), JEAN DE, a French prelate, was born at Luxeuil (Franche-Comté) about 1412. He studied at Dôle, Cologne, and Pavia, and taught three years in the last-named place. He assisted at the Council of Ferrara in 1438, and was engaged in several important religious and diplomatic missions. In 1430 he became bishop of Arras, and in 1461 cardinal. He died Nov. 24, 1473. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Jouffroy, FRANÇOIS GASPARD DE, a French prelate, was born in 1723 at the castle of Gonsans, near Besançon. He became canon of St. Claude, then bishop of Gap in 1774, and of Mans in 1778. Being elected a deputy of the states-general in 1789, he protested against the decrees of the assembly, and went into exile in 1792. He was received by the chapter of Paderborn (Westphalia), and given a revenue of six thousand two hundred florins. He died there in 1797. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Joulouka, in the mythology of the Antilles nations, is the monstrous spirit whose feathered head may be seen in the rainbow. See JULUKA.

Jouvenot, JEAN, an eminent French painter, was born at Rouen, Aug. 21, 1647. At the age of seventeen he went to Paris and studied with Nicholas Poussin, and at twenty-seven produced his celebrated picture of Christ Curing the Paralytic, in the Church of Notre Dame. Soon after he painted, in the Hospital of the Invalides, between the windows of the dome, The Twelve Apostles, with Angels. In 1665 he was admitted a member of the Academy, and painted for his reception the picture of Queen Esther before Ahasuerus—one of the finest works in the halls of the Academy. About this time he executed four pictures for the Church of St. Martin aux Champs, representing Mary Magdalene at the Feet of our Saviour, in the House of Simon the Pharisee; Christ Driving the Money-changers from the Temple; The Miraculous Draught of Fishes; The Raising of Lazarus. His most famous work is the Deposition from the Cross, painted for the Church of the Capuchins, at Paris, where he died, April 5, 1717. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Jowett, Joseph, LL.D., a learned English clergyman, was born about 1750; admitted in 1769 to Trinity College; in 1773 removed to Trinity Hall, where he became assistant tutor, then fellow and principal tutor, and afterwards regius professor of the civil law, which office he retained till his death, Nov. 13, 1813. In addition to his professorship he held the living of Wethersfield, in Essex. Dr. Jowett was a scholarly man, a humble Christian, and a devoted friend of the Bible Society and kindred associations. See (Lond.) Christian Observer, Dec. 1813, p. 820.

Jowett, William, a Church of England divine, was born in 1789. He graduated at St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1810, and was the first clergyman of the Church of England who volunteered, in 1813, for the foreign service of the Church Missionary Society. His field of labor was in the countries in the Mediterranean, and the fruits of his observations were, Christian Researches in the Mediterranean from 1815 to 1820, and Christian Researches in Syria and the Holy Land in 1823 and 1824. He was also the author of, Time and Temper: a Manual of Selections from Holy Scripture, with Thoughts on Education (4th ed. 1852);—Helps to Pastoral Visitation (2d ed. 1848, 3 parts). From 1832 to 1840 he acted as clerical secretary to the Church Missionary Society; for many years held the Sunday evening lectureship of St. Mary's, Aldermanbury; and in 1851 succeeded the Rev. R. Bickersteth as St. John's chaplain. He died at Clapham, Surrey, Feb. 20, 1855. See Hardwicke, Annual Biography, 1856, p. 208.

Joy of the Law, FESTIVAL OF THE, is a name given to the ninth day of the Feast of Tabernacles among the modern Jews. On that day three MSS. of the Pentateuch are laid upon the desk, and three portions are read by three different persons, one portion from each MS., the first closing with the end of Deuteronomy. Another immediately begins with the first of Genesis, to indicate that man should be continually employed in reading and studying the word of God.

Joyce, THOMAS, a Dominican, proceeded D.D. in Oxford, and, living there, became provincial of his order both in England and Wales. From this place, without ever having any other preferment, pope Clement V created him cardinal of St. Sabine—a contradiction, as some call attention, between the friar's profession and practice. He had six brethren, all Dominicans, and Fuller, refusing to liken them to the seven sons of Sceva (Acts xix, 14), all exorcists, terms them "a week of brethren, whereof this rubricated cardinal was the dominical letter." Thomas flourished in 1310, and was buried in his convent at Oxford. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 12.

Juanes, JUAN BAPTISTA, an eminent Spanish painter, was born at Valencia in 1523, and studied at Rome, but afterwards settled at Valencia. He is ranked by the Spanish writers as one of the greatest artists of the glorious age of pope Leo X. Pacheco bestows upon him the highest encomiums, and Palomino Velasco does not hesitate to prefer him to Morales, or even to Raphael himself. Juanes limited himself to subjects of sacred history, and his works are entirely confined to the churches and convents of his native city. There is a fine picture by him, representing The Baptism of Christ, in the Cathedral of Valencia. There are three others, representing The Nativity; The Martyrdom of St. Ives; The Burial of a Monk. Another fine picture is a Dead Christ, in the Church of San Pedro. He died in 1579.

Jubilation, GIFT OF, a privilege alleged by theurgic mysticism to be granted to eminent Romish saints, by which they are enabled in their last moments to sing a triumphant death-song.

Jubin (or Gebuin), Saint, a French prelate, was the son of Hugues III, count of Dijon. Having entered the ministry, he was appointed archdeacon of the Church of Langres. In 1077 he attended the provincial Council of Lyons at Autun, became archbishop of Lyons, and died there, April 18, 1082. He is invoked in cases of gout and the stone, with which he had himself been afflicted during his life. There are extant of Jubin six letters treating of the primacy to his see, printed by Descordes, Dom Liran, Baluze, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Judeo-Arabic Version of the Scriptures. This is not properly a version, but Arabic in Hebrew characters. As early as 1820 the printing of an edition of the Arabic New Test. in Hebrew characters was suggested to the British and Foreign Bible Society. Nothing, however, was done for the many thousand Jews in Egypt, Tunis, and the whole north of Africa, Yemen, Syria, and Mesopotamia (to whom the Arabic is vernacular, but who seldom read or write except in Hebrew characters), until 1846, when the Bombay Auxiliary Bible Society commenced for their use an edition of the gospels of Matthew and John, with the Acts of the Apostles, and the epistle to the Hebrews, under the superintendence of the Rev. Dr. Wilson of Bombay. The work was published in 1847, and has ever since been circulated. (B. P.)

Judæo-German Version of the Scriptures. Like the above, this is the German New Test. in rabbinical characters. The first edition of this testament was printed at Cracow in 1540; the work was executed by John Herzuge, a converted Jew, on the basis of Luther's version; but the book of Revelation is omitted. In 1820 the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews undertook to furnish the German Jews with copies of the German Scriptures in rabbinical characters. The society's first edition appeared in 1822: the German text was from Luther's version, published by Meyer at Frankfurt in 1819, and the transcription into rabbinical characters was made by Mr. Judah D'Allemand of London. In 1859 the British and Foreign Bible Society published the Judæo-German Old Test., under the care of Rev. R. König, and in 1869 the book of Psalms, carefully revised by Rev. W. Edwards of Breslau, was printed at Vienna. (B. P.)

Judæo-Persian Version of the Scriptures. This is the Persian New Test. in Hebrew characters, and designed for the Jews in Persia. When, in 1841, Dr. Häberlin applied to some Christian friends for aid in imparting the Scriptures to the Persian Jews, he received in reply from Herat a copy of Martyn's Persian New Test., written in Hebrew characters, under the care of Dr. Login. Dr. Häberlin laid the version before the Calcutta committee, and they agreed to refer the matter to the British and Foreign Bible Society. The latter requested the Calcutta Society to print an edition of two thousand New Tests, in this form, and arrangements were made to have the edition printed at Calcutta, under the eye of the Rev. Dr. Yates. The death of the latter rendered this plan abortive, and after the Bombay Society had transmitted to London manuscript copies of the Judæo-Persian gospels, an edition of one thousand copies was completed at London in 1849, under the superintendence of the Rev. Dr. Wilson of Bombay. These are all the printed parts extant. (B. P.)

Judæo-Polish Version of the Scriptures. See RUSSIA, VERSIONS OF (20).

Judæo-Spanish Version of the Scriptures. The Judæo-Spanish is spoken by the Jews of Turkey, who are descendants of the Jews formerly settled in the Spanish Peninsula, but forcibly ejected from Spain in 1492, and from Portugal in 1497, by the merciless mandate of Ferdinand and Isabella. As to the versions of the Old Test., compare the art. ROMANIC VERSIONS. A translation of the New Test. into Judæo-Spanish was undertaken by the British and Foreign Bible Society at the suggestion of Dr. Pinkerton, and, in 1823, the Rev. Mr. Leeves, their agent in Turkey, undertook the translation which was printed in 1829 at Corfu. It was afterwards revised, and reprinted at Athens in 1844. In 1874 the British and Foreign Bible Society undertook a careful revision of the New Test., with the assistance of the Rev. J. Christie of the Scottish Missionary Society. This new edition was printed at Constantinople in 1877, and is now in circulation. The Old Test. in Judæo-Spanish, with Hebrew in parallel columns, has also been published by the American Bible Society. (B. P.)

Judd, BETHEL, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minist-

ter, was born at Watertown, Conn., in the spring of 1776. He graduated from Yale College in 1797, and immediately entered upon his preparation for the ministry; was ordained deacon in 1798, and his ministerial life covered sixty years of activity. At different periods he was engaged in the dioceses of Connecticut, New York, Western New York, Maryland, North Carolina, and Florida, and was one of the early presidents of St. John's College, Annapolis, as well as rector of the Church in that city. Among the missionary stations was that of St. Augustine, Fla. During fifteen years he was rector of St. James's Church, New London, Conn., a charge which he resigned on being appointed president of the Episcopal Academy, Cheshire. He died at Wilmington, Del., April 8, 1858. He was a ripe scholar, and an earnest and effective preacher. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1858, p. 342.

Judea. See JUDÆA.

Juel was the most noted festival of the Scandinavian worship, which was celebrated in the longest night as a new year's celebration. Sacrifices and vows were made to the gods for fruitfulness for the coming year. In honor of the god Freir a huge boar was butchered, and the sacrifice, called the Jula-pig or Julablot, was made in the presence of the king. A golden boar was brought into the hall, all laid their hands on it and made the most binding vows. Then four weeks of eating, drinking, dancing, and playing followed. The name Yule for Christmas is thought to have thus originated.

Jug. See JOGA.

Juhles, a name given to aerial spirits or demons among the Laplanders, from whom they receive a sort of adoration, though no statues or images of them exist. Their worship is conducted under particular trees. On Christmas-eve, and the day following, they celebrate the festival of the Juhles. On this occasion they rigidly abstain from animal food; and they carefully reserve some fragments of the food employed, which they suspend in a box behind the house, for the refreshment of the spirits.

Juigné, ANTOINE ÉLÉONORE LÉON, Leclerc de, a French prelate of high family, was born at Paris in 1728. He studied in his native city, became bishop of Chalons in 1764, and during the French revolution took refuge at Chambery, afterwards at Constance, and finally at Augsburg. In 1802 he returned to France, but lived privately in Paris till his death, March 19, 1811. He left some ecclesiastical works, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Julien, SIMON (called Julian of Parma), an eminent French painter, was born at Toulon in 1736, studied under Bardou at Marseilles, and afterwards visited Paris, where he became a pupil of Carlo Vanloo, and gained the grand prize of the Royal Academy. He then visited Rome with the royal pension, and remained in that city ten years. On returning to Paris he soon gained a reputation, and was elected an academicien. Among his best performances is an altar-piece for the chapel of the archbishop of Paris, at Conflans, representing St. Anthony in a Trance. He died at Paris, Feb. 23, 1800. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Juluká, in the mythology of the Caribbeans, is a mighty spirit, living on fish, doves, and other animals. He is of gigantic size, walks over land and sea, and his head projects far above the clouds. His forehead is decorated by a beautiful bandage, made of the feathers of the colibri, splendidly colored; this he shows morning and evening. It is the rainbow. The remainder of the body remains hid in the clouds. If this spirit does not find enough to eat he causes sickness among the inhabitants. See JOULOUKA.

Jumala, the supreme deity of the Laplanders. He was represented by a wooden idol in human form, seated on a sort of altar, with a crown on his head and a bowl in his lap, into which the devotees throw their voluntary offerings.

Jumnoutri, a village on the banks of the river Jumna, which is considered by the Hindûs as a spot of remarkable sanctity. Pilgrimage to this place from the low countries was thought to impart to the adventurer virtues almost equal to deification.

Jung, Andreas, a Protestant professor of Strasburg, who was born in 1793, and died in 1863, is the author of, Geschichte des Reichstags zu Speyer in dem Jahre 1529 (Strasburg, 1830); — Geschichte der Reformation der Kirche in Strassburg (ibid. eod.); — Die öffentlichen Bibliotheken Strassburgs (1836, 1844). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 634; Schmidt, Discours Académique Prononcé à la Mémoire de M. A. Jung (1864); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Junge, Christian Gottfried, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Nuremberg, Oct. 20, 1748. He studied at Altdorf, commenced his ministerial career in 1769, was in 1783 professor of theology at Jena, in 1798 pastor at his native city, and died March 27, 1814. He wrote, De Duratione Panarum Infernalium, etc. (Altdorf, 1783); — De Panarum Divinarum vi Eminentissime (eod.). Besides a number of ascetical works and sermons, he also published the third edition of Döderlein's Summa Institutionis Theologi Christiani (1798). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 634; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 23, 298; ii, 280. (B. P.)

Junkheim, Johann Zacharias Leonhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Anspach, Sept. 8, 1729. He studied at Göttingen, was in 1754 vicar at his native place, and two years later pastor there. In 1757 he was rector of the gymnasium in Anspach, in 1764 court-preacher, and died Aug. 17, 1790. He wrote, De Argumento pro Religione a Constantia Martyrum (Göttingen, 1751); — Progr. ad 1 Petr. iv. 1, 2 (1762); — De Providentia Divina (eod.); — Decas Questionum Synodicalium (1783-90). He also published Sermons. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 157; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 394, 444; ii, 288. (B. P.)

Junkin, David X., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Mercer, Pa., Jan. 8, 1808. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1831, and studied two years at Princeton Theological Seminary. In 1835 he was ordained pastor at Greenwich, N. J.; in 1841 became professor of belles-lettres in Lafayette College; in 1848 pastor of the F Street Church, Washington, D. C.; in 1853 at Hollidaysburg, Pa.; in 1860 chaplain at Annapolis, Md.; in 1866 pastor of the North Church, Chicago, Ill., and in the same year at Newcastle, Pa. He died at Martinsburg, W. Va., April 22, 1880. Dr. Junkin was an eloquent and successful preacher, and a ready writer, being the author of several valuable books, among which was one entitled The Oath a Divine Ordinance, and an Element of the Social Constitution (N. Y. 1845, 12mo). See New York Observer, May 6, 1880; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 83. (W. P. S.)

Justi, Leonhard Johann Karl, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Münchhausen, Hesse, Dec. 5, 1753. He studied at Marburg and Göttingen, was in 1774 deacon at Marburg, and commenced his academical career in 1775. In 1779 he was professor, and succeeded his brother as first pastor of St. Elizabeth. He died May 12, 1800, leaving, Weissagungssang Moiss an die Israeliten, Deut. xxxii (Göttingen, 1774); — De Hilemi Asina Loquente ad Numb. xxii (Marburg, eod.); — Ueber die den Egyptern von den Israeliten bei ihrer Abreise abgeforderten Geräthe, Exod. c, 11, 12 (1777); — Ueber den Genius des Sokrates (1779). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 157; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 23. (B. P.)

Justiciera, Itinerant, officers appointed by Richard I of England to watch over the interests of the Jews residents within the kingdom. They were instructed to protect the Hebrews against all oppression, to secure them in their interests and property, to decide all controversies between them and the Christians, to keep the seal of their corporation, and the keys of their public treasury.

Justiniani, Agostino, a Dominican and bishop of Nebbio, in the isle of Corsica, was born at Genoa in 1470, and died in 1536, on the way from Genoa to Corsica. He edited, Philonis Judæi Quæstiones et Responsiones super Genesim; — R. Moissæ Egyptii Ductor Dubitantium; — Porcheti de Sylectica Victoria contra Impios Hebræos; — Liber Jobi Veritatis Hebræica Restitutus, and published Psalterium Hebræ., Græc. Arab. et Chald. cum Tribus Lat. Interpretationibus et Glossis (Genoa, 1516). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 36; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Justiniani, Benedetto, a Jesuit papal preacher at Rome, who died Dec. 19, 1622, at Toulouse, professor of theology, wrote Explanations in Omnes Epistolas Pauli (Lyons, 1612, 2 vols.); — Explanations in Omnes Epistolas Catholicas (ibid. 1621); — Apologia pro Libertate Ecclesiastica ad Gallo-Franco. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 253, 268. (B. P.)

Justus, archbishop of Canterbury, accompanied Laurentius and Mellitus when they departed from Rome, in 601, to join the mission at Canterbury. He was a Roman by birth; was also first bishop of the see of Rochester. He was translated to Canterbury in 624. The great event of his short occupancy of the latter see was the extension of the Kentish mission to Northumbria. This was effected by the marriage of Edwin, the king of Northumbria, with Ethelburga, the sister of Eadbald, king of Kent. Justus consecrated Paulinus, July 21, 625, to be archbishop of York. He died Nov. 10, 627. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i, 100 sq.

Juttah. Its modern representative Yutta is thus described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 810):

"A large village standing on a ridge. It is built of stone, but some of the inhabitants live in tents. The water supply is from cisterns. On the south there are rock-cut tombs, and rock wine-presses are found all around the village. The neighborhood is extremely stony. South of the village are scattered olives, which are conspicuous objects; on the west, a little lower, under a cliff, is a small olive-yard; to the south-west a few figs. The inhabitants are very rich in flocks; the village owns, it is said, 17,000 sheep, besides goats, cows, camels, horses, and donkeys. The sheik alone has 250 sheep."

Kabasilas. See CABASILAS.

Kabir Panthis, among the Hindûs, are the followers of Kabir, whom they allege to have been the incarnate deity. They believe that he lived in the world three hundred years, from 1149 to 1449 A.D., and that as a child he was found floating on a lotus in a lake or pond near Benares. He is also claimed by the Moslems as a professor of their faith. The Kabir Panthis being in the main followers of Vishnu, they are included among the Vaishnava sects, although they worship no Hindû deity, nor do they practice any of the Hindû ceremonies. Those, however, who have retired from the world, and given themselves to a life of seclusion, abstain from all the ordinary practices of the Hindûs, and employ themselves chiefly in chanting hymns to the invisible Kabir. They believe in one God, the creator of the world, who has a body formed of the five elements of matter, and a mind endowed with the three Gunas or qualities of being. He is free from the defects of human nature, and can assume what particular shape he will; in all other respects he does not differ from man, and the pure man, the Sâdh of the Kabir sect, is his living resemblance, and after death is his associate and equal. Their moral code is brief, but judicious in the main. Humanity is the first virtue, and the shedding of blood, whether of man or animal, is regarded as a heinous crime; because life is the gift of God, and must not be violated by his creatures. Truth is another great principle of morality, and ignorance of God is attributed to falsehood. Retirement from the world is desirable, as a check upon the passions and desires. The last point in the code is implicit devotion, in word, act, and thought, to the Guru or spiritual guide. This sect is very widely diffused throughout India. It is further divided into various branches, twelve of these being traced up to the founder, among whom a difference of opinion as well as descent prevails. Of the establishments of this sect, the Kabir Chaura, at Benares, is pre-eminent in dignity, and is a constant resort for pilgrims. Their doctrines are taught in a great variety of works in different dialects of India; but the great authority to which they are wont to refer is the Vijek, which, however, gives more attention to the defects of other systems than to the explanation of its own.

Kabyle Version of the Scriptura. The Kabyle is spoken in Algeria and Tunis, and it is only of late that a gospel in the Kabyle vernacular has been published. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1884 we learn that, in order to secure as accurate a version as possible, Dr. G. Sauerwein was sent out to Algiers. He returned with a version of the gospel of St. John, made from the French, by an Arab who assisted Père Olivier with his Kabyle-French dictionary. Dr. Sauerwein has revised that gospel from the Greek, and, according to the report for 1885, it was passing through the press. (B. P.)

Kaddish (קדיש), in Jewish usage, means a prayer said by a son for his deceased father or mother during the first eleven months after their death. This prayer has to be repeated morning and evening at the close of the synagogue service, and runs thus, "May his great name be exalted and sanctified throughout the world, which he has created according to his will. May he establish his kingdom in our lifetime, and in the lifetime of the whole house of Israel, soon, and in a short time, and say ye Amen, Amen. May his great name be blessed and glorified for ever and ever. May his hallowed name be praised, glorified, exalted, magnified, honored, and most excellently adored; blessed is he, far exceeding all blessings, hymns, praises, and beatitudes that are repeated throughout the world, and say ye Amen. May our prayer be accepted with mercy and kindness. May the prayers and supplications of the whole house of Israel be accepted in the presence of their Father, who is in heaven, and say ye Amen. Blessed be the name of the Lord, from henceforth and forevermore. May the fulness of peace from heaven, with life, be granted unto us, and all Israel, and say ye Amen. My help is from the Lord, who made heaven and earth. May he who maketh peace in his high heavens bestow peace upon us, and on all Israel, and say ye Amen."

Besides this Kaddish, there is also one used by the rabbins after having delivered a lecture or completed their study. This is called the "Kaddish of the Rabbins," and runs thus, "Unto Israel, their rabbins, their disciples, and all their successors, who diligently study the law, who are in this and every other place; may there be unto them, and to you, abundant peace, grace, favor, mercy, long life, enlarged maintenance, and redemption, from the presence of the Lord of heaven and earth, and say ye Amen. May the fulness of peace," etc. See Hamburger, Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Kadesh-barnea. The search for this interesting locality, and the controversy concerning its site, still continue. The most recent and enterprising explorer is H. Clay Trumbull, D.D., editor of the Sunday-School Times, who has written an elaborate and magnificent work on the subject (Kadesh-Barnea, its Importance and Probable Site, etc., New York, 1884, 8vo). After great pains, while on a trip through the Sinaitic desert, he succeeded in reaching 'Ain Kadeis, which, in his map of the region, accompanying his volume, he locates fifty-five miles west by north of Petra, and seventy-five north-east of the castle of Nukl. His description of the spot is as follows (p. 272):

"It was a marvellous sight! Out from the barren and desolate stretch of the burning desert-waste, we had come with magical suddenness into an oasis of verdure and beauty, unlooked for and hardly conceivable in such a region. A carpet of grass covered the ground. Fig-trees, laden with fruit nearly ripe enough for eating, were along the shelter of the southern hillside. Shrubs and flowers showed themselves in variety and profusion. Running water gurgled under the waving grass. We had seen nothing like it since leaving Wady Feiran; nor was it equalled in loveliness of scene by any single bit of landscape, of like extent, even there.

"Standing out from the earth-covered limestone hills at the north-eastern sweep of this picturesque recess was to be seen the 'large single mass, or a small hill, of solid rock,' which Rowlands looked at as the cliff (azal) smitten by Moses, to cause it to 'give forth his water,' when its flowing stream had been exhausted. From underneath this ragged spur of the north-easterly mountain range issued the now abundant stream.

"A circular wall, stoned up from the bottom with time-worn limestone blocks, was the first receptacle of the water. A marble watering-trough was near this well—better finished than the troughs at Beersheba, but of like primitive workmanship. The mouth of this well was only about three feet across it, and the water came to within three or four feet of the top. A little distance westerly from this well, and down the slope, was a second well, stoned up much like the first, but of greater diameter; and here again was a marble watering-trough. A basin or pool of water, larger than either of the wells, but not stoned up like them, was seemingly the principal watering-place. It was a short distance south-westerly from the second well, and it looked as if it and the two wells might be supplied from the same subterranean source—the springs under the rock. Around the margin of the pool, as also around the stoned walls, camel and goat dung—as if of flocks and herds for centuries—was trodden down and commingled with the limestone dust so as to form a solid plaster-bed. Another and yet larger pool, lower down the slope, was supplied with water by a stream which rippled and cascaded along its narrow bed from the upper pool; and yet beyond this, westward, the water gurgled away under the grass as we had met it when coming in, and finally lost itself in the parching wady, from which this oasis opened. The water itself was remarkably pure and sweet: unequalled by any we had found after leaving the Nile."

Meanwhile the late indefatigable Rev. F. W. Holland, after several ineffectual attempts, had at length successfully achieved a visit to the same spot, and an account of it from his field-book is given in the Quarterly Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund" for Jan. 1884. The accompanying sketch map of his route places 'Ain Kadeis at about the same distance as above from Petra and Nukl respectively, and gives it an elevation of one thousand four hundred and eighty-five feet above the sea. The place is thus described (p. 9)

"There are three springs, two on the hill-side, and one in the bed of the wady; from the lower spring on the hill-side a good stream of water flows for about one hundred yards down the wady, forming pools at which the goats are watered; the camels go to the spring. The upper spring on the hillside is a poor one now; it is built round with large rough stones to a depth of five feet, and there is a rude stone trough here and at the lowest spring. The three springs are not more than forty yards apart. The wady, which is stony throughout, has a bed, below the springs, nearly fifteen feet deep, between stony jorfs. As one ascends, the mountains become lower and less steep; there is much pasturage on them; the lower strata are chalk with flints; the upper, hard limestone (nummulitic?); large masses have fallen down and lie in the valley. There are a few fig-trees and a bed of coarse grass. About fifty yards higher up the wady than 'Ain Kadeis there is a deeper well with four old watering-places; there are also traces of others near."

Both these explorers strongly identify the site with Kadesh-barnea, and the conclusion has been adopted by a large number of Biblical scholars. The name and character of the place have certainly been established as coincident, but still the position is unsatisfactory. 'Ain Kadeis is nearly midway between the Arabah and the Mediterranean, and after all the arguments of Dr. Trumbull and others, this seems too far west to suit the requirements of the Scriptural account, particularly the journeys of the Israelites. Especially is the attempt to remove the well-established position of Mount Hor to some locality west of the Arabah, for the purpose of accommodating this identification (as Dr. Trumbull does not hesitate to do) too herculean an undertaking. That the comparatively late name, "Idumæa," may have been extended so as to include the region immediately south of Palestine, we may very well concede, without admitting that the older designation of "Edom" ever passed the Arabah, which is the natural and still-existing boundary. The reasoning of Dr. Trumbull to the contrary, however ingenious and learned, seems too much like a piece of special pleading for a foregone and favorite theory, and parts of it are clearly defective, especially as to the conquering march of Joshua (Josh. xv, 19, where "from Kadesh-barnea even unto Gaza," evidently marks the eastern and the western limits respectively), the alleged contradiction between the refusal of a passage by Edom to the Israelites, and their burial of Aaron on the traditional Mount Hor (for they did not thereby acquire any title or cross the territory), and the imaginary "Wall Road." See SHUR. We cannot help thinking that more thorough exploration of the north-eastern part of the Sinaitic desert will yet bring to light other oases of a similar character, and among them one still bearing the not uncommon name of Kadesh, or perhaps some trace of the distinctive term Barnea. Lieut. Conder expresses a similar conviction (Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," Jan. 1885, p. 21 sq.).

Kadr, AL, the title of the ninety-seventh chapter of the Koran, which contains an account of God's sending down the Koran from heaven to Mohammed. It represents God as saying, "The night Al Kadr is better than a thousand months." Which night this is has not been definitely ascertained.

Kadroma, in Thibetanian mythology, was a goddess who, changed into an ape, married the god Cenresi, likewise an ape, and by him became the mother of the entire population of Thibet.

Kaffir Version of the Scriptures. The Kaffir is spoken by the Kaffres (q. v.), and was reduced to writing by the Rev. W. B. Boyce, a Wesleyan missionary, who, in connection with the Revs. Wm. Shaw and W. J. Shrewsbury, commenced in 1830 a translation of the Scriptures, which was completed in the course of four years. This translation, however, formed but the basis of that eventually published, and it was not till 1841 that, after a very careful revision, the New Test. was published. A vigorous revision was again undertaken, and in 1845 the revised New Test. was published, which was used by all the missionaries laboring among the Kaffre tribes. A new and again carefully revised edition of the New Test. was completed in 1854 at the Mount Coke Wesleyan mission press, and in 1859 the entire Old Test., after a careful revision, was completed at press. In 1865 the committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society announced that the revised Kaffir Bible, which had been slowly progressing for some time under the editorial supervision of the Rev. J. W. Appleyard, was completed and ready for circulation. The features of this revised edition were, that "very laborious efforts have been made to render the work an accurate and faithful translation of the Hebrew and Greek texts; and the proficiency of Mr. Appleyard in the knowledge of the Kaffir language, combined with great critical care, afford every reasonable guarantee that this version of the Holy Scriptures will prove correct, intelligible, and idiomatic, and in all respects admirably adapted to the people among whom it will now circulate. Its appearance, after long and earnest expectation, will be hailed with peculiar satisfaction by all missionaries laboring where the Kaffir language is spoken." In 1869 the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society again announced that the translation of this Bible was about to undergo revision: "A board of revisers, which consists of representatives of the various churches in South Africa, has been formed, and its labors already commenced. The difficulty here, as in so many other cases, is to make the translation idiomatic without sacrificing the exact sense of the sacred original." In 1871 the four gospels were announced as completed, and one of them was printed as a specimen, in order to elicit further criticisms, if needful, before the text is finally settled. In 1874 the board of revisers lost one of its most valuable helpers, the Rev. J. W. Appleyard, shortly after the revision of the New Test. was completed, which was issued together with the unrevised Old Test. in 1878. The revision of the Old Test. is still in progress; from July 8, 1874, to Jan. 22, 1882, the Old Test. was revised up to Jeremiah xxvi. See Bible of Every Land, p. 426 sq. (B. P.)

Kager, JOHANN MATTHIAS, an eminent German painter, was born at Munich in 1566, and went to Italy while young, where he spent several years studying the best works of the great masters. He died at Augsburg in 1634. His works are chiefly in the churches and public edifices of Munich. He etched a few plates from his own designs, among which are the following: The Adoration of the Shepherds; The Baptism of Christ by St. John; The Holy Family; St. Francis Surrounded by the Monks of his Order; The Virgin and Child in the Clouds. Kaguru Version of the Scriptures. The Kaguru is a dialect spoken by a tribe of East Equatorial Africa, and in this vernacular the gospels of Matthew and Luke, together with the books of Ruth and Jonah, were published by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1884, the translation having been made by missionary Last. (B. P.)

Kahana BAR-TACHLIFA, a Jewish writer, was born at Pum-Nahara about 330, was in 397 rector at the college of Pumbeditha, in Babylon, and died in 413. Kahana is the author of an haggadic work, entitled Pesikta de Rab Kahana (פסיקתא דרב כהנא), comprising a cycle of lessons both from the Pentateuch and the Prophets, for all the festivals and principal Sabbaths of the year, and embodying the traditional explanation of these portions of Scripture. This midrash was for a long time only known from citations found in the Jalkut and Aruch. In the year 1868, however, S. Bubér published, at Lyck, an edition of the Pesikta according to a MS. which had been found at Zefath, and copied in Egypt, with critical annotations, emendations, etc., and an elaborate introduction. Kähler, Ludwig August, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born March 6, 1775, at Sommerfeld, Prussia. Having completed his studies, he was appointed in 1798 preacher at Canig, near Guben, in 1809 deacon and in 1812 archdeacon at Cöbus, in 1819 member of consistory, preacher, and professor of theology at Königsberg, where he died in 1856, a doctor of theology. He published, Christliche Sittenlehre (Königsberg, 1833):—Beiträge zu den Versuchen neuerer Zeit, den Katholicismus zu idealisiren (ibid. 1828):—Supernaturalismus und Rationalismus in ihrem gemeinschaftlichen Ursprunge, etc. (Leipzig, 1818):—Ueber Schwärmerei, Begeisterung, scheinbare und wahre Grösse (Königsberg, 1820):—Predigten über den alleinseligmachenden Glauben an den Sohn Gottes (ibid. 1826):—Die christliche Lehre nach der heiligen Schrift (2d ed. 1836):—Wissenschaftlicher Abriss der christlichen Sittenlehre (ibid. 1835, 1836). Kähler, Wigand, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, nephew of Johannes Kähler (q. v.), was born at Wolmar, Hesse-Cassel, March 27, 1699. He studied at Rinteln, where he also commenced his academical career, and where he died, Nov. 14, 1747, professor of theology, having taken two years previous the degree of doctor of theology at Göttingen. He wrote, De Veris et Fictis Textus Sacri Trajectionibus:—De Methodo Studii Theologici:—De ἀκαταπόδιξις τῆς κρίσεως ad Rom. viii, 19:—De Innocentia Dei circa Lapsum Primorum Parentum. Kaiomorta, in Persian mythology, as represented in the Zend-Avesta, is the first man, who proceeded out of the right hip of the bull Abudad after Ahriman had the same killed. He was both a man and a woman, the object of worship by the angels. Thus Ahriman's plan to destroy the generation which was to populate the earth did not succeed. He therefore sent a Dew, Astnadj, besides a thousand other genii of the infernal region, to battle against him. Kaiomorta withstood thirty years before he succumbed. The liquids flowing from his body fructified the earth. The seed grew into an immense tree, which, instead of fruit, bore ten human pairs, one of which, Meshia and Meshiane, were the progenitors of the human race. They, too, were seduced by Ahriman, and live sinful and condemned, suffering the punishment of their sin unto the resurrection.

Kaiser, Gottlieb Philipp Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hof, May 7, 1781. In 1801 he was teacher at the gymnasium of his native place, in 1809 deacon at Münchberg, in 1814 at Erlangen, in 1816 professor of theology there, and died in 1843, member of consistory and doctor of theology. He wrote, De Apologeticis Evang. Joannis Consiliis (Erlangen, 1821-25):—Grundriss eines Systems der newest. Hermeneutik (ibid. 1817):—De Mosaicis Symbolis et Geniis (ibid. 1827):—Commentarius in Priora Geneseos Capita (1830):—Literärgeschichte der melanchthonischen Original-Ausgabe der augsbургischen Confession (Nürnberg, end.):—*Linguae Aramaicae Usus in Nov. Kala Maha, the male form of the Hindû god Siva, in his character of Time, the great destroyer of all things.

Kalanda-Brothers. See CALENDARUM FRATRES.

Kalastri Linga, in Hindû mythology, is one of the commonest representations of Siva. A pious Indian had noticed that the right eye of the god wept. Immediately he took out his right eye and put it into the idol. Soon after the left eye began to run, and the friend of the god sacrificed his left eye, and, as he was blind, he made use of his foot to find the spot where this eye was to be put in.

Kalendar. See ABDAL.

Kalewa, in Norse mythology, was one of the first gods of the far north, reigning long before the Asas, a mighty giant, and father of the hunter Hiisi, an evil god, whose frightful habitation is a place of damnation.

Kali-age. See KALIYUGA.

Kalika Purana, one of the sacred writings of the Hindûs, which is chiefly devoted to a recital of the different modes of worshipping and appeasing the goddess Kali (q. v.). See PURANAS.

Kalinak, in Hindû mythology, is a monstrous thousand-headed snake. Vishnu sought to capture it, riding on his giant bird, Garuda. When the serpent saw him coming it hid in the river Jumna, whose water it poisoned. When Vishnu, in his ninth Avatar, was still a boy, he decided to deliver the world from this reptile and its offspring. The reptile encircled him with a thousand fangs, but the god walked on its heads and crushed them all but one. He then sent it to the infernal regions, where its poison is used to torture the damned.

Kalisch, MARCUS M., a Jewish writer and commentator, was born at Treptow, Prussia, May 16, 1828. He studied at Halle and Berlin, and took the degree of doctor of philosophy in 1848. In the same year he left his native country on account of political disturbances, and went to England, where he took up a permanent residence. He became secretary to chief rabbi Adler, at London. Here he published his Historical and Critical Commentaries on Genesis, Exodus, and Leviticus (1855-72, 4 vols.):—Hebrew Grammar (1863, 1865, 2 parts):—Bible Studies: I. The Prophecies of Balaam; or, The Hebrew and the Heathen (1877); II. The Book of Jonah (1878). Kalisch died Aug. 23, 1885. (B. P.)

Kalki (or Kalkin, also called Kalighi), the tenth Avatar, or incarnation of Vishnu, which is yet future, and in which he will appear at the close of the Kali-yuga (q. v.), "when the practices taught by the Vedas and the institutes of the law shall have ceased." According to the Vishnu-Purana, he will then be born "in the family of Vishnuyasyas (i. e. possessing the glory of Vishnu), an eminent Brahmin of Sambhala village, endowed with the eight superhuman faculties. He will then destroy all the barbarians and thieves, and all whose minds are devoted to iniquity." The expectation of the Hindû, in reference to the deliverance from present evils by Vishnu, is remarkably similar to the Hebrew expectation of the coming Messiah.

Kalmuck Mythology is nearly related to that of Thibet, the latter extending through India, China, Cashmere, Tartary, and far north. But this mythology has been greatly altered and modified by climatic, social, and other circumstances. According to the fables of the Zongarian Kalmucks and Tartars, the earth was originally covered with water. A great wind-storm arose, causing such a commotion of the waters that from the ensuing chaos eighty mountains sprung up, half of which formed a great range. Seven gods descended from heaven to visit the earth, and several of them satisfied their hunger. The earth then contained honey, and not knowing its origin, two of the deities ate of the honey, and so lost the privilege of returning with the other five. They then populated the earth. There are a thousand deities, who reign alternately. Six have finished their reign; the seventh, Shak Jumeni, rules at present. Maidiri (the prophet), will follow. But before he begins, the world will come to an end, the destroyer will come, surrounded by seven suns, which will set fire to the world. A rain-storm, following, will put out the fire, and Maidiri will go to heaven to take possession of his throne. Then the earth will be entirely depopulated, all men having gone to paradise, and the inhabitants of hell will come up to inhabit it. Their spirits take possession of other animals, from the lowest insect upwards, and thus the transmigration will continue, until the worst spirit of hell shall have become human, and worthy of paradise. To reach that happy place is usually only possible at the end of each world period, but those men who have led a holy life reach the gates of paradise at death.

Kalmuckian Version. By way of supplement to the article RUSSIA, VERSIONS OF, 21, we will add that the British and Foreign Bible Society has published, in 1884, the four gospels, in the translation of professor Pözdnejeff, who is also preparing the remainder of the New Test. (B. P.)

Kalthoff, JOHANN PAUL, a Roman Catholic theologian, who died at Münster in 1839, is the author of Jus Matrimonii Veterum Indorum (Bonn, 1829):—Grammatik der Hebr. Sprache (Ratisbon, 1837):—Handbuch der Hebr. Alterthümer (Münster, 1839). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 643; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 167 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 143. (B. P.)

Kalybe. See CHAPKL.

Kama, in Hindû mythology, is the Indian god of love; verbally the word means "desire." He is the son of heaven and disappointment, and is also called the heart-entering, bodiless, restless god, surnames which are all very significant. Tenderness (Retti) is his wife, and Vasant (blooming-time) his companion, who continually fills his quiver with buds as arrow-points. His favorite residence is at Agra, for there the women are the most beautiful of all portions of India. Kama has a visible form, but because he disturbed Hara, the ruler of creation, in his practices, the latter burned him to ashes by one look, and since then he is called bodiless. He is represented riding on a parrot. His bow is made of sugar-cane. His arrow-points are the rosy-red blooming buds of the amra-tree. The gods sought to induce Siva to a new marriage, and therefore turned to the god of love, under whose influence Siva soon married.

Kamdeva, in Hindû mythology, is the divine cow that can fulfil all desires, produced while the Amrita was in process of preparation, by turning the mountain Mandar into the sea of milk. She was presented by Indra to the Brahmin Jamadagni, who was therefore supernatural, wealthy, and honored everywhere. An evil-minded king, Shawkawser, ruler of Ayadhya, came to him with his whole train of followers, and enterlaiment was given with the aid of the cow. Then he demanded the cow, which was refused, whereupon the evil king made war on the Brahmin; but the cow slew all his army, and ascended again to heaven. The king sought revenge by killing the wise Brahmin; thereupon the cow hurried to the son of the murdered Brahmin, Parasu Rama, and called him to avenge the death of his father; the cow so assisted him that the evil king was slain.

Kamisimo, a garment of ceremony among the Japanese, worn on festival and other solemn occasions. It consists of two parts, a short cloak without sleeves, called kutugeno, and a short petticoat, called rakama, fastened about the waist by a band.

Kämpfer, PETER CHRISTIAN, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 13, 1702. He studied at Rostock, was in 1736 professor of metaphysics there, in 1739 deacon, and took his degree as doctor of divinity in 1749. He died May 18, 1755. His writings are, De Usu Terminorum Ecclesiasticorum (Rostock, 1730);—De Litteris Atque Punctis in Scriptura Veteris Testamenti Hebraicis (ibid. 1734);—De Origine Atque Indole rōū Keri et Chetibh (ibid. 1739);—*De Litteris, Vocabulis et Accentibus in Scriptura V. Kampfschulte, FRANZ WILHELM, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 12, 1831, at Wickede, in Westphalia. He studied at Paderborn, Münster, and Berlin, took the degree of doctor of philosophy in 1859, and commenced his academical career in Bonn, where he was also made professor in 1861. He died Dec. 3, 1872, a member of the Old Catholic Church. He published, De Georgio Wicelio (Paderborn, 1856);—Die Universität Erfurt in ihrem Verhältnis zur Reformation (Treves, 1858-60, 2 vols.);—De Joanne Crato Rubimmo (Bonn, 1862);—Zur Geschichte des Mittelalters (ibid. 1864);—Johann Calvin, seine Kirche und sein Staat in Genf (Leipzig, 1869, vol. i). See Zuehold, Bibl. Theol. i, 644; Literarischer Handweiser für das Katholische Deutschland, 1871, col. 111 sq.; 1873, col. 171 sq. (B. P.)

Kamyu-Murunu (desire for death), modes of suicide formerly prescribed in the Hindū Shastras (q. v.). The commonest mode is drowning in the Ganges, but sometimes the suicide submits to being buried alive. There was formerly an instrument kept by which a person could decapitate himself. It consisted of a sharp, crescent-shaped knife, with a chain and stirrup to each horn. The devotee placed the sharp edge on the back of his neck, and his feet in the stirrups, then gave a violent jerk with his legs, and his head was instantly severed from his body.

Kanah or ASHKR. The modern village Kana, which has usually been identified with this site, lies seven and a quarter miles south-east of Tyre; but this is too far south for the requirements of the Biblical account (Josh. xix, 28). The antiquities in the vicinity, including the remarkable figures on the rocks, are described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (i, 64). A more probable position is that of 'Ain Kanah, "twenty miles farther north, on the edge of the hills, ten miles inland, but in sight of Sidon" (Tristram, Bible Places, p. 293; where, however, the author confounds the description of this with that of the foregoing; see his Land of Israel, p. 58). It lies beyond the limits of the Ordnance Survey.

Kancheliyas, a Hindū sect, not uncommon in the south of India, whose worship is that of Sakti, the personified energy of the divine nature in action. They insist upon a community of women, and are far gone in bestiality.

Kandele, in the mythology of the Finlanders, is a musical instrument, like a zither; the magicians use it in all their magical cures and conjurations.

Kanon, in Japanese mythology, was the son of Amida. According to Picard (Cérémonies et Coutumes Religieuses, vii), this god is half fish, half man, or he crawls out of the throat of a proportionally large fish. The form, almost entirely female, is clothed in a light garment, the neck decorated with pearls, and the head with flowers. It has four hands, two of which are lifted up, and two are down. The latter carry a sceptre and a flower, the uplifted right hand is closed to a fist, the left carries a ring. Before this figure there lies a large, open sea-shell, out of which a man projects in the position of worship. This idol stands in the temple of the god at Osaka, where it is worshipped as a fish or sea deity; also as creator of sun and moon.

Kanthai and Bajusshiak, in the mythology of the Kamchatkians. Our figure represents both idols of the north Asiatic nations, especially of the inhabitants of Kamchatka, just as they stand in the sacred corner of the common hut where the man keeps his weapons. They grant success in hunting and fishing, and therefore the latter is represented half fish-formed. They had no separate cultus, nor temples, nor priests.

Kaplika, a sect of Hindûs, who formerly sacrificed human victims to Kali and other hideous monster gods. The devotee of this sect is thus described, "His body is smeared with ashes from a funeral pile, around his neck hangs a string of human skulls, his forehead is streaked with a black line, his hair is woven into the matted braid, his loins are clothed with a tiger's skin, a hollow skull is in his left hand for a cup, and in his right he carries a bell, which he rings incessantly, exclaiming aloud, Ho! Sumbhu Bhutirata—Ho! lord of Kali."

Kapff, SIXT CARL, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Göglingen, Württemberg, Oct. 22, 1805. He studied at Tübingen, where he became intimately acquainted with William Hofacker. After filling the positions of vicar at Tuttingen, teacher at Hofwyl, and repentant at Tübingen, he became, in 1838, pastor of the colony of pietists at Kornthal. In 1843 he was dean at Münsingen, and in 1847 at Herrenberg. In 1850 he was made general superintendent and member of the superior consistory, and in 1852 he became the greatly beloved and influential pastor of the "Stiftskirche," at Stuttgart, where he preached twenty-seven years. He died Sept. 1, 1879. Kapff was the most perfect representative of the type of piety prevailing in Württemberg in the last generation; as a preacher he was not eloquent, but his earnest manner won the heart. His influence as pastor was very great, and yet he found time to write. He published, Predigten über die alten Evangelien des Kirchenjahres (3d ed. 1875):—Predigten über die alten Episteln (6th ed. 1880):—Communionsbuch (19th ed. eod.), etc. See Burk, in Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Carl Kapff, Lebensbild von Sixt Carl Kapff (Stuttgart, 1881); Zuchold, *Bibl. Kapp, Johann, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 12, 1739. He studied at Leipsic and Erlangen, was in 1765 teacher at the gymnasium in Hof, in 1774 doctor of philosophy, in 1777 court-preacher and professor of theology at Bayreuth. In 1801 he was made doctor of divinity, and died Aug. 18, 1817, leaving, Epistola super Dictis Bibliis Quibusdam Novi Testamenti (Hof, 1767):—Paralipomena de Magis, Matth. ii, 1 sq. (1771):—Progr. Periculum Versionis Psalmi Secundi cum Brevis Scholia (1781):—Brevia Paraphrastica Explicatio Matth. v, 33-42 (1783), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. Kapp, Johann Erhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 23, 1696. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1720 doctor of philosophy, in 1727 professor, and died March 7, 1756. He published, De Nonnullis Indulgentiarum Quæstoribus (Leipsic, 1720):—De Chrysothomi ad Casareum Monachum Epistola, etc. (ibid. 1723):—Nachlese einiger grössten theils noch ungedruckten Urkunden, etc. (4 parts, 1727-33):—Historia Concilii Lateranensis, etc. (1781), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Kapp, Johann Georg, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 8, 1737. He studied at Jena, Leipsic, and Erlangen. In 1761 he was preacher, and in 1781 subdeacon at Bayreuth, and died Oct. 11, 1814. He published, Confusio Romanensium circa Potestatem Papæ (Erlangen, 1758):—De Meritis Philippi Melancthonis (1794). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Kara, JOSEPH ben-Simeon, a Jewish writer of the 11th century, is the author of פִּירוּשׁ חֲזוֹנוֹרָה, or glosses on Rashi's commentary on the Pentateuch; in the same manner he wrote on the Prophets, Job, Ezra, and Chronicles, and the five Megilloth. A collection of glosses from Kara's commentaries is given in נְסִיכֵי נְסִיכֵי (Breslau, 1847); the commentary on Hosea was published from a MS. in the Jewish Theological Seminary at Breslau in 1861. See Zunz, Gottesdienstliche Vorträge der Juden, p. 301, 398; Zur Geschichte und Literatur, p. 68-70; Geiger, Beiträge zur jüdischen Literaturgeschichte (Breslau, 1847), p. 17-29; Fürst, *Bibl. Karaite-Tartar (or Crimean Tartar) Version of the Scriptures. The Karaite-Tartar is vernacular among the Karaite Jews of the Crimea. As to this division among the Jews, see KARAITES. They have long been in possession of a Tartar version of the Old Test. When and by whom it was made is unknown. When Dr. Pinkerton was travelling in the Crimea he purchased a complete copy of this version. The two books of Chronicles do not appear to have been inserted in this version, but it comprises the other books of the Old Test. The translation is such, that although the words are mostly of Tartar origin, yet it would not be intelligible to any Tartar nation. The words are ranged in exact order of the Hebrew, and the style, construction, grammatical observances, and idioms are all conformable to the Shemitic type. This version is, in fact, so truly H-brew in its character, that to the Turks and Tartars it is a sealed book. See Bible of Every Land, p. 350.

In point of practical utility it is deficient, and for this reason the British and Foreign Bible Society only published a small edition of the book of Genesis in 1819, at the mission press of Astrakhan. A subsequent edition of the entire Old Test. was published by the Jews of South Russia. The imperial library at St. Petersburg is now in possession of some codices which were lately procured, and are described by Strack in the Catalog der Hebr. Bibelhandschriften der kaiserlichen öffentlichen Bibliothek in St. Petersburg (Leipsic, 1875), p. 167 sq., which he conjointly published with A. Harkavy. On page 169 we find the first three verses of the book of Leviticus, of which we subjoin the first, together with the Hebrew:

Hebrew.	וַיְקַרְא אֱלֹהִים יִצְחָק וַיֹּאמֶר אֵלָיו אִלְיָהוּ
	וַיֹּאמֶר אֵלָיו אִלְיָהוּ
Karaite.	וַיְקַרְא דְּבִקְרִי שֵׁשׁ נָא אַחַל מִזְכֵּר דָּן
	דְּסוֹזְלֵרִי יִרִי אֲנִי דְּנָא

It must be observed that the first word does not belong to the translation, but it is the first word of the Hebrew text, which is always placed at the beginning of each verse. Dr. H. Dalton, in his Das Gebet des Herrn in den Sprachen Russlands (St. Petersburg, 1870), gives the Lord's Prayer in the Karaite-Tartar which was prepared by the late A. Firkowitsch (q. v.). (B. P.)

Kara Lingia, a sect of Hindû ascetics, found only occasionally among the most ignorant portions of the community. They wander about in a nude state, and profess to worship Siva.

Karass (or Turkish-Tartar) Version of the Scriptures. The version generally denominated the Karass is so called because a town of that name, on the borders of the Caspian Sea, was the place of its publication. It has also been improperly termed the Nogay version, on account of its having been found intelligible to the Nogais, a tribe of Tartars dwelling on the banks of the Kouban and Kouma, in the steppes to the northward of Mount Caucasus. A more correct designation for this version is that of Turkish-Tartar, because it consists principally of words that belong in common to the Turks and Tartars. It exhibits the Turkish language in a comparatively pure state, and corresponds in style and language with such books as are circulated among the Tartars in the south of Russia, and is therefore intelligible to all the different Tartar hordes scattered through that extensive region.

The first version of the Scriptures written in this plain, unadorned Turkish style was that published at Oxford in 1666. The translation was made by William Seaman, formerly chaplain to an English ambassador at the Porte. This version, not being free from faults, was used by Mr. Bruntton, Scottish missionary at Karass, as the basis for a new translation, for which he was eminently fitted on account of his thorough knowledge of the language. In 1807 he published the gospel of Matthew. He completed the translation of the New Test., and died while it was carried through the press. After his death the sheets were corrected by Mr. Frazer, and the edition was completed in 1813. In 1815 another edition of this translation was published, with a few emendations and an introduction by Mr. Dickson, one of the Scottish missionaries, who also undertook a translation of the Old Test. about the same time. The Psalms were completed and published at Astrakhan in 1815, and a second edition in 1818. The Pentateuch was published in 1878. Other books of the Old Test. were translated, but not printed. From the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1883, we learn that Mr. Saleman is examining the text of the New Test. with a view to a new edition, the previous edition having been exhausted. From the report of 1884 we learn that the revision of the New Test. having been completed, the Bible Society's committee have decided to print a new edition, and that the reviser is now engaged in examining certain MS. translations of the Old Test., handed over by the National Bible Society of Scotland to the British Society. See Bible of Every Land, p. 347. (B. P.)

Karen Version of the Scriptures. Karen is a language spoken by the Kareens, Karenes, or Careians, a wild and simple people scattered over all parts of the Burmese territories, and of the British provinces of Tenasserim; they are also found in the western portions of Siam, and northward among the Shyans. See Bible of Every Land, p. 15.

Till a comparatively recent period, however, Karen, which is remarkably harmonious and well adapted for poetry, was totally unknown to Europeans. About 1835, the missionaries of the American Baptist Missionary Society, Wade and Mason, acquired the language, and for the first time reduced it to writing, by employing the Burmese alphabet, with a few additional characters to express the peculiar sounds of the language. These two missionaries translated the entire New Test. into Karen, which was printed, in 1843, at Tavoy, by the aid of the American and Foreign Bible Society. Besides the translation into the Karen, translations into the different dialects prevalent among the Karens were made. The Karen has four principal dialects, the Bghai, Sgrau, Pwo, and Mopgha. Into the latter dialect nothing has as yet been translated. As for the others, there exist in the Bghai-Karen, parts of the Bible published since 1859, and at present there are published Genesis, and twenty chapters of Exodus, Psalms, St. James and St. John's epistles.

Pwo-Karen, Psalms, Daniel, and Jonah since 1861, added to which was Isaiah.

Sgru-Karen, the Pentateuch since 1864.

The Karen language has been treated by Wade, in Grammar of the Karen Language (1861). (B. P.)

Karma, a term used by the Buddhists to denote action, both meritorious and otherwise. When a human being dies, his Karma is transferred to some other being, regulating all the circumstances of his existence.

Karma-visaya, one of the four things which, according to Buddhists, cannot be understood by one who is not of their number. Karma-visaya denotes how it is that effects are produced by the instrumentality of Karma (q. v.). The other three things which only a Buddhist can understand are, (1) Irdhi-visaya, how it was that Buddha could go, in the snapping of a finger, from the world of men to the Brahma-lokus; (2) Loka-visaya, the size of the universe, or how it was first brought into existence; (3) Buddha-visaya, the power and wisdom of Buddha.

Karrer, PHILIP JACOB, a Protestant minister of Germany, was born at Memmingen, Oct. 20, 1762. In 1818 he was called as dean and preacher to Kempten, Bavaria, and died in 1834. He is the author of, Stunden der Andacht (Kempten, 1825); — Nachrichten von den protestantischen Pfarrvätern im Königreich Baiern (ibid. 1825, 1826); — Feste und Gebräuche in der katholischen und protestantischen Kirche (Erlangen, 1829); — Das geänderte und ungeänderte augsburgische Glaubensbekenntnis (Kempten, 1830); — Neues vollständig-richtig-bibliisches Spruchregister (ibid. 1833). Karsten, HERMANN RUDOLPH A., a Lutheran theologian of Germany, member of consistory and doctor of theology and philosophy, was born at Rostock, May 20, 1801. In 1825 he was ordained as assistant preacher, and in 1828 was appointed second preacher of St. Mary's, at his native place. In 1848 he was called as pastor to Dobberan, at the same time being appointed superintendent of his diocese. Two years later he was called as pastor primarius to the Schwerin cathedral. In 1876 he retired from the ministry, and died March 20, 1882. He is the author of, Lehrbuch der christlichen Religion (Rostock, 1838); — Die Kirche und das Symbol in ihrem inneren Zusammenhange (Hamburg, 1842); — Grundlehren der populären protestantischen Dogmatik (Rostock, 1847); — Die protestantische Kirche u. deren zeitgemässe Reorganization (Leipzig, 1850); — Die letzten Dinge (3d ed. Kartan. The site which we have proposed for this is marked as Khan Katamah, four and a half miles north of Safed, on the Map of the Ordnance Survey, but is not described in the accompanying Memoirs. Tristram suggests (Bible Places, p. 274) a trace of the name in Wady Kerkerah, which he vaguely describes as "running down to the sea."

Kashmir Version. See CASHMERIAN VERSION.

Kasi (the magnificent) is the ancient name of Benares, and the name by which it is still called among the Brahmins.

Kasina is an ascetic rite among the Buddhists, by the practice of which they hope to acquire supernatural powers. There are ten descriptions of this rite: 1. Pathawi, earth; 2. Apo, water; 3. Téjo, fire; 4. Wáyo, wind; 5. Níla, blue; 6. Píta, golden; 7. Lóhita, blood-red; 8. Odáta, white; 9. Alóka, light; 10. Akusa, space.

The priest who performs the Pathavi-kasina forms a small circle which he can easily fix his eye upon. The circle must be of clay of a light-red color, placed upon a frame made of four sticks, covered over with a piece of cloth, a skin, or a mat, upon which the clay is to be spread free from foreign substances. After preparing the earth-circle according to these and other directions with the utmost exactness, the priest sits down, and, gazing upon the circle, meditates upon the evils arising from the repetition of existence, and the best modes of overcoming them; on the benefits received by those who practice the dhyanas and other modes of asceticism; on the excellences of the three gems; and he must endeavor to secure the same advantages. He must continue to gaze and to meditate until he receive the nemitta, or inward illumination, by which all scepticism will be removed, and purity attained.

In performing the Apo-Kasina the priest pours water into an alms-bowl or similar vessel, and having chosen a retired place, must sit down and meditate, gazing upon the water, and reflecting that the perspiration and other fluids of his own body are composed of the same material.

The Téjo-Kasina is practiced by taking wood, dry and firm, cutting it into small pieces, and placing it at the root of a tree, or in the court of the wihara, where it must be ignited. He must then take a mat made of shreds of bamboo, or a skin or a cloth, and making in it an aperture one span and four inches in diameter, he must place it before him, and, looking through the aperture, he must meditate on the fire, and reflect that the fire in his own body is of a similar nature, flickering and inconstant.

The Wuyo-Kasina is performed by sitting at the root of a tree, or some other convenient place, and thinking of the wind passing through a window or the hole of a wall; the Nika-Kasina, by gazing on a tree covered with blue flowers, or a vessel filled with blue flowers, or a blue garment covered with flowers; the Pita-Kasina by gazing on a golden-colored object; the Lohita-Kasina on a circle made with vermilion; the Odatu-Kasina on a vessel of lead or silver, or the orb of the moon; the Abaka-Kasina by gazing on the light passing through a hole in the wall or the side of a vessel; and the Akasa-Kasina by gazing at the sky through a hole in the roof of a hut, or through a hole of the prescribed dimensions in a skin.

From the practice of Kasina in any one of its forms a Buddhist expects to derive many advantages. More especially does he expect the power of working miracles, according to the species practiced. The Kasina is exercised in fourteen different ways. See Hardy, Eastern Monachism, p. 252 sq.

Kate, GERHARD TEN, a Dutch theologian, was born in 1699. He studied at Utrecht, was in 1724 professor at the Lingen Gymnasium, in 1728 of philosophy at Deventer, in 1742 of Oriental languages and Church history at Harderwyck, and died Nov. 28, 1749. He wrote, De Omnipotentia Dei:—De Regno Dei et Christi:—De Regni Dei et Christi Fatis inter Gentes:—De Rebus Jesu Christi ex Prophetis. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. Käuffer, JOHANN ERNST RUDOLF, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1793, at Reichenbach, in Upper Lusatia. In 1820 he was con-rector at Bautzen, Saxony, in 1824 professor at Grimma, in 1830 second court-preacher and member of consistory at Dresden, and died Sept. 10, 1865, doctor of theology. He published, besides a number of sermons, Examinatio Novissima Bretschneideri de loco Rom. v, 12 (Dresden, 1834):—De Biblica ζωής αἰωνίου Notione (ibid. 1838):—Handbuch für den Religionsunterricht höherer Volksschulen (ibid. 1849):—Ueberblick der Geschichte der christlichen Kirche (ibid. 1857):—Biblische Studien (1842-46, 4 vols.). Kaufmann, JOHANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Nuremberg in 1566. He studied at different universities, was in 1592 preacher at Wittenberg, in 1597 at Brunswick, and in 1611 at Schweinfurt. He died May 3, 1616, leaving, Enchiridion Ordinandum:—De Hamartigenia:—Catechismus Lutheri Minor Notis Illustratus. See Rethmeyer, Braunschweigische Kirchen-Historie; Zeltner, *Diss. de Joh. Kauta, in the mythology of the Antilles islands, was a mountain of caves in Hayti, called also Quisqueja. Two of these caves are the cradle of humanity. The first pair were guarded here by a mighty giant, until the latter was petrified by the sun's light.

Kavanaugh, HUBBARD HINDE, D.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Clark County, Ky., Jan. 14, 1802, and was of Irish extraction on his father's side. When young he learned the printing business. He was converted at sixteen, and at twenty-one became an itinerant minister. For some years he was engaged in the work of a circuit preacher, but gradually rose to the highest positions in the Church, and in 1864 was elected bishop. He died March 19, 1884. Before the division of the Church he was a member of the general conferences of 1832, 1836, and 1844, on the last occasion leading the Kentucky delegation. At this time he seems not to have taken any public part in the debates on slavery, though he fully sympathized with the position of the Southern delegates, and his name was signed to all their documents. Bishop Kavanaugh was closely identified with the Southern Church from its origin, and one of the most vigorous men, physically and intellectually, that Methodism has placed in the episcopacy. His presence was commanding, his voice good, his language copious, and his power in the pulpit great. See (N. Y.) Christian Advocate, March 27, 1884; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.; Minutes of the Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1884, p. 155.

Kayser, AUGUST, a Protestant theologian, was born at Strasburg, Feb. 14, 1821. For some years assistant librarian at the university of his native place, and private tutor from 1843 to 1855, he accepted, in 1858, a call as preacher to Stosswiler. In 1868 he went to Neuhoof, in Alsace, was appointed professor of theology at Strasburg in 1873, and died there, June 17, 1885. Kayser belonged to the so-called liberal Protestants, and contributed largely to the Revue de Théologie. He published De Justinii Martyris Doctrina (Strasburg, 1850), but his main work is Das vorerzliche Buch der Urgeschichte Israels und seine Erweiterungen (1874). (B. P.)

Kazan-Tartar Version of the Scriptures. The Kazan-Tartars number about a million souls. A translation of the gospel of Matthew, in this dialect, was prepared by professor Ilminski, which was printed in 1873. This was tentative. The British and Foreign Bible Society being satisfied with the translator's abilities, agreed, in 1877, to print the gospels in the Arabic and Cyrillic characters, so that they might be read by Mohammedans of Kazan, who would not read them in the Russ character. As professor Ilminski proceeded very slowly in the preparation of the gospels, at the suggestion of Dr. Gottwald, the committee agreed to send Mr. Saleman, of the University Library, for six weeks to Kazan, to arrange with some one for the purpose of bringing out a New Test. in the language of the people, adapted from some of the sister dialects. Mr. Saleman was to edit the work at St. Petersburg, and refer all local peculiarities to the reviser at Kazan. This was agreed upon in 1880. During the year 1882 the gospel of Matthew, translated by Mr. Saleman, was printed at the Kazan University Press, under the care of professor Gottwald, the censor's authorization having been obtained for the entire New Test. In addition to the gospel of Matthew, that of Mark is to be printed during the year 1885. (B. P.)

Ke, one of the entities and essences in the dualistic system of the Chinese philosophers. It consists of matter most ethereal in its texture, and may be styled the ultimate material element of the universe, the primary matter which acts as the substratum on which things endowed with form and other qualities rest, or from which they have been gradually evolved. The Ke, when resolved into its constituent elements, gives birth to two opposite essences, Yang and Yin. See CHINA.

Kedde, JOHANN, a German Jesuit, who died March 27, 1657, is the author of, Ecclesia Antiqua Romano-Catholica:—Examen Reformatæ Religionis:—*Hortulus S. Kedesh of Issachar (or Kishion) has of late been with great probability identified with Tell Abu Kudeis, lying two miles south east of Lejjûn, and described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 69) as "An artificial mound, with traces of ruins, scattered pottery, and glass; and on the north are springs."

Kedesh or NAPTALI is now represented by Kales, four and a quarter miles north-west of the lake of Huleh; its extensive ruins are copiously described in the Memoirs (i, 226 sq.) accompanying the Ordnance Survey.

Keene, SAMUEL, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Baltimore County, Md., May 11, 1734. He graduated from the college in Philadelphia in June, 1759; was ordained deacon by the bishop of Rochester in the palace at Fulham, England, Sept. 21, 1760; and presbyter eight days after. He became incumbent of St. Ann's parish, Md., March 30, 1762; of St. Luke's parish, Queen Anne County, July 27, 1767; and in 1779 he was rector of Chester parish, which he served for two years, and then took charge of St. John's parish, Queen Anne and Caroline counties, probably in connection with St. Luke's, where he remained until 1792, living on his own estate. In 1803 he appears to have resigned St. Luke's, although still residing there, and in 1805 he became rector of St. Michael's Church, Talbot County, where he remained until his death, May 8, 1810, but after 1807 ceased to be its rector. He was one of the committee of examiners appointed in 1783, one of the superintending committee of 1788 and 1789, and one of the standing committee from 1788 to 1795. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 311.

Kehana, a species of divination by arrows, practiced by the ancient Arabians. Seven blunt arrows, called Azlam, each having a particular mark, were placed in a bag, and one was then drawn out and the oracle read by the diviner. It was also a custom used by the Assyrians.

Kehrein, JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 20, 1808, at Heidesheim, near Mayence. He studied at Giessen, was in 1835 teacher at the gymnasium in Darmstadt, in 1837 at Mayence, in 1855 director of the seminary at Montabaux, and died March 25, 1876. He published, Geschichte der katholischen Kanzelberedsamkeit (Ratisbon, 1843, 2 vols.): — Zur Geschichte der deutschen Bibelübersetzung vor

Luther (Stuttgart, 1851): — Katholische Kirchenlieder, Hymnen, Psalmen (1859-65, 3 vols.): — Lateinische Sequenzen des Mittelalters aus Handschriften (1873): — Das deutsche katholische Lied in seiner Entwicklung (1874). (B. P.)

Keilah. The modern representative of this, Khurbet Kila, lies seven miles east of Beit-jibrin, and eight and a quarter north-west of Hebron, and is a ruined village with two wells to the north, and a large terebinth to the south. It is only cursorily mentioned in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 314). In the neighborhood west of it the English engineers "found a sacred place dedicated to Neby Naaman, the name now attached to a sacred tree near the ruin called Khurbet Shermeh," which Lieut. Conder explains as a travesty of the native Nephsa Neemana, or "Monument of the Faithful," and equivalent to Burath Satia, which Sozomen says (Hist. Eccles. vii, 29) was the name of a place in his day ten stadia from Keilah, where the tomb of Micah was still found (Quar. Statement of "Pal. Explor. Fund," July, 1877, p. 142).

Keim, CARL THEODOR, one of the most prominent theologians of Germany, was born at Stuttgart, Dec. 17, 1825. He studied at Maulbronn and Tübingen, where Baur exercised a great influence on him. For some time pastor at Esslingen, he was called, in 1860, as professor of New-Test. exegesis to Zurich, and in 1873 to Giessen, where he died, Nov. 17, 1878. Keim published, Die Reformation der Reichstadt Ulm (Stuttgart, 1851): — Schwäbische Reformationsgeschichte bis zum augsburger Reichstag (1855): — Ambrosius Blarer, der schwäbische Reformator (1860): — Reformationsblätter der Reichstadt Esslingen (ed.). When he went to Zurich he turned his studies to the beginnings of Christianity, and in this department won a lasting reputation by the following works: Die geschichtliche Würde Jesu Christi (Zurich, 1860): — Der geschichtliche Christus (1865; 3d ed. 1866): — Die Geschichte Jesu von Nazara (1867-72, 3 vols.; Engl. transl. Jesus of Nazareth, Lond. 1873-82, 6 vols.), a life of Jesus from a rationalistic standpoint, though very learned and instructive. A popular form of this life of Jesus he published under the title, Die Geschichte Jesu nach den Ergebnissen heutiger Wissenschaft (Zurich, 1874; 2d ed. 1875). At Giessen he published Celsus wahres Wort (1873), and five years later his last work, Aus dem Urchristenthum. After his death, H. Zeigler, his literary executor, published from MS. Rom und das Christenthum (Berlin, 1881), a work of sterling value. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v., and the sketch by Ziegler, prefixed to Rom und das Christenthum. (B. P.)

Keimann, Christian, a Lutheran hymn-writer of Germany, was born Feb. 27, 1607, in Bohemia. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1643 con-rector at Zittau, and in 1639 rector. He died Jan. 13, 1662. Of his many hymns some have been translated into English, as: Meinen Jesum lass ich nicht ("Jesus will I never leave," in the Moravian Hymn-book, No. 392):—Freuet euch ihr Christen alle ("O rejoice, ye Christians, loudly," in Chorale Book for England, No. 33). Keith, Alexander, D.D., a Presbyterian minister of the Free Church of Scotland, was born in Keith Hall, Aberdeenshire, in 1791. He received his education at Marischal College, Aberdeen. From 1816 to 1843 he was a clergyman of the Established Church of Scotland, at St. Cyrus, Kincardineshire, and subsequently a minister of the Free Church, but for many years, on account of failing health, he was unable to attend to parochial duties. The first edition of Evidences of the Truth of the Christian Religion, Derived from the Literal Fulfilment of Prophecy, a work which became a text-book in the colleges of England and Scotland, was published in 1823 (last ed. by his son, with photographic illustrations). Several other works on similar subjects, among which was Christianity Demonstrated, were published between 1831 and 1861. As one of the deputation of the Scottish Church to Palestine, he visited many of the scenes of Scripture prophecy, and an account of this mission was published under the title of A Narrative of the Mission to the Jews. Dr. Keith died at Buxton, Feb. 8, 1880. See N. Y. Observer, Feb. 18, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Kelam (the science of the Word), a term used by the Mohammedans to describe their scholastic divinity. The writings on the Kelam are very numerous, and very diverse in their teachings.

Kellach. See CELLACH.

Kellach (1), a Scotch prelate, was bishop of St. Andrews before the year 892 or 893, and held a provincial council under king Constantine III in 906. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 6.

Kellach (2), a Scotch prelate, was chosen bishop of St. Andrews about 971, and confirmed by the pope. He ruled this see twenty-five years, and died in 996. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 6.

Keller, Andreas, a Swiss theologian, was born at Schaffhausen in 1756. For a time preacher of the Waldensian congregation at Neuhengstrett, Württemberg, he was called to Illnau, in the Zurich canton, and died in 1834. He is the author of Kurzer Abriss der Geschichte der Württemberger Waldenser (Tübingen, 1796). (B. P.)

Keller, Georg Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1624. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1653 deacon, in 1659 superintendent, in 1670 doctor and professor of theology at Tübingen, and died Oct. 1, 1702. He wrote, De Remissione Peccatorum in Veteri Testamento contra Joh. Coccejum:—De Reformatione Ecclesie:—De Convenientia et Disconvenientia Abarbanelis inter Mosén et Jeremiam ad Deut. xxiii, 15-18:—De Messia Jehovah ad Ps. ii, 7. Kemous, in African mythology, is the only religious festival celebrated by the Abyssinian negroes in the country of Darbanja, to their god Mussa Guzza, by sacrificing a cow.

Kemp (or Kempe), JOHN, a distinguished Anglican prelate and statesman, was born at Olantigh, in the parish of Wye, County Kent. He went to school at Canterbury; became a fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and graduated in laws; but confined his practice to canon law; and in 1418 was employed as a military man, to hold musters at Caen, and to inspect troops. The first dignity to which he was called was the archdeaconry of Durham; it does not appear when he was appointed, but he was in possession of it in 1419. In January of the same year Kemp was elected to the see of Rochester. The following year Henry V made him keeper of his privy seal; and within two years he was nominated chancellor of the duchy of Normandy. He was translated to the see of Chichester, Feb. 28, 1421; was again translated, and sat as bishop of London, Nov. 17 of the same year. On his appointment as a member of the council, which took place immediately after the accession of Henry VI, Kemp resigned the great seal of Normandy. He was sent, in May, 1423, with a letter from the council, in the king's name, to the duke of Bedford, regent of France; and was also commissioned to thank the regent, in the name of the king, for his diligence and service in the government of France and Normandy. In February, 1424, he was sent to the marches of Scotland, to treat for the release of the king of Scots. About a month before his translation to the see of York, which occurred in 1426, Kemp was appointed to succeed Beaufort as lord high chancellor of England, which office he retained six years, and then retired on the plea of ill-health. He resumed this office, however, in 1450. In 1433 he was chosen to represent the Church of England at the Council of Basle; he was also in the year following at the head of an embassy to France, and again in 1439. In the latter year Kemp was created cardinal-priest, with the title of St. Balbina. He established a college at Wye as early as 1431. He enjoyed many important positions up to 1452, when he was appointed archbishop of Canterbury, July 21. Kemp attended to his duties faithfully to the last. He died suddenly, Feb. 24, 1454. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, v, 188 sq.

Kemper, JOHANN, a convert from Judaism, and professor of Hebrew and archaeology at Upsala, where he died in 1714, translated the New Test. into Hebrew, with annotations. Under the title, ספר חזקוני, he wrote an apology of Christianity, based upon the famous cabalistic storehouse, the Zohar. A specimen was published under the title, Phosphorus Orthodoxæ Fidei . . . ex Perpetuo Libro Sohar Deprompta, by A. Norrel (Amsterdam, 1720). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud., s. v. "Krakowia;" Delitzsch, Wissenschaft, Kunst, Judenthum, p. 304 sq. (B. P.)

Kendall, JAMES, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Sterling, Mass., Nov. 3, 1769. He graduated from Harvard College in 1796, passed two years as assistant teacher in Phillips Academy, Andover, at the same time pursuing his theological studies under the direction of Rev. Dr. Tappen, professor of divinity at Harvard College; was licensed by the Andover Association in 1795; in the same year was chosen tutor of Greek in the college, and removed to Cambridge. He commenced preaching at Plymouth, as a candidate, in 1799, and was ordained there in January, 1800. He was the sole pastor of the Church for thirty-eight years, preaching frequently in other pulpits, and died March 17, 1859. Dr. Kendall published a great many single sermons. In his theological views he is believed to have been an Arian. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 427.

Kennard, JOSEPH H., D.D., a distinguished Baptist minister, was born of Quaker parentage near Haddonfield, N. J., April 24, 1798. While residing in Wilmington, Del., he became a Christian, and united with the Baptist Church in that city, where he was licensed to preach, Sept. 5, 1818. In 1819 he was agent for foreign missions in Delaware and New Jersey. He became pastor in Burlington, N. J., Nov. 14, 1819, and in January, 1822, of the Second Hopewell (N. J.) Church, where he remained until called to the Blockley Church, in what was then the suburbs of Philadelphia, Oct. 1, 1823. His labors in this field were abundant and successful. He acted also as a missionary in all the section of country around his home. In January, 1832, he became pastor of what is now the Fourth Baptist Church in Philadelphia, and six years thereafter of the Tenth Baptist Church, where his labors were attended with remarkable success. He died there, June 24, 1866. With all the great benevolent societies of his own denomination he was in hearty sympathy, and with a truly Christian spirit he labored with his brethren of other denominations for the promotion of the cause of God and humanity. Kennedy, WESLEY, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Washington County, Pa., May 8, 1808. He was converted in his nineteenth year, licensed to preach in 1831, and in 1832 entered the Pittsburgh Conference. His fields of labor were: Connellsville Circuit; Washington, Pa.; Liberty Street, Pittsburgh; Wheeling, Va.; agent for Allegheny College; Smithfield Street, Pittsburgh; Beaver Street, Allegheny City; Wheeling; presiding elder of Barnesville District, O.; secretary of the Wesleyan Sabbath Union, Washington, Pa.; and Chaplain Street, Wheeling. In 1852 he was transferred to the Newark Conference, wherein he served Central Church and Clinton Street, Newark; in 1855 was transferred to the Philadelphia Conference, wherein he served Trinity Church and Wharton Street, Phila.; Asbury, Wilmington, Del.; Fifth Street, Phila.; St. Stephen's, Germantown; idle one year, 1866; Easton, Md., 1867-69; Oleassa, Del., 1870-72; presiding elder of Dover District, Wilmington Conference, from 1873 till his death in Smyrna, Del., June 24, 1875. Dr. Kennedy was well educated, though not a college graduate. He excelled as a preacher, a model in pathos, clearness, instructiveness, and spirituality. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 29.

Kenresai, in Thibetan mythology, is the mighty arranger of chaos. Not born of men, but created by the supreme god, he adopted as an ape the name Prasrindo, took the goddess Kadroma as female ape, by the name of Prasrimo, and populated Thibet, from whence the whole earth became inhabited. We find him in a second incarnation, under the name of Gnia-thritz-thengo, in Thibet, where he was teacher of the people, law-giver, and king. He taught them agriculture, civilized them, and left the kingdom, which he had reigned over for ninety-one years, to his sons, of whom there were twenty-two, who together ruled one thousand one hundred and two years.

Keramians, a Mohammedan sect, deriving their name from their founder, Mohammed ben-Keram, who maintained that God is possessed of a bodily form.

Kerari, a Hindû sect who worshipped Devi in her terrific forms, and were wont to offer up human sacrifices. The only votaries belonging to this sect still remaining in India are those who inflict upon themselves bodily tortures, and pierce their flesh with hooks.

Kerbela, among the Mohammedans, is a place held by the Shiites (q. v.) as peculiarly sacred, because it is the seat of the tomb of Hossein (q. v.), the son of Ali. It is situated in Asiatic Turkey, twenty-eight miles north-west of the ruins of Babylon. It is a favorite place of pilgrimage to the Persian Mohammedans, who carry away small portions of the sacred soil, put it in little bags, which they place before them during their devotions to bow their heads upon, and thus worship on holy ground. The pilgrims resorting annually to Kerbela are estimated at eighty thousand, and they bring with them from Persia eight thousand corpses annually to be interred in the sacred spot.

Kerfoot, JOHN BARRETT, D.D., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal bishop, was born in Dublin, Ireland, March 1, 1816, and educated at Flushing Institute and St. Paul's College, New York, where he graduated in 1834. He took deacon's orders in 1837, and priest's in 1840; became president of St. James's College, Maryland, in 1842, and continued in that relation till 1864, when he became president of Trinity College. He was consecrated bishop of Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 25, 1866, and remained in that office until his death, July 10, 1881.

Kerloth or SIMON. Its probable representative, Kurbet el-Kurtein, lies twelve miles south of Hebron, and is thus described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 409):

"Traces of a large ruin and caves; apparently a large town."

"Guerin says that the ruins cover an extent of at least 180 metres in circumference. The direction of many streets can still be distinguished. The houses, whose remains are strewn everywhere over the ground, appear to have been constructed of materials regularly cut; most of them had caves or cellars below them, cut in the rock. He also observed at the western end of the site the ruins of a Christian church, forming a rectangle, lying east and west. Heaps of well-cut stones marked its outline. It was 80 paces long by 17 broad, and was preceded by a square atrium 37 paces on each side."

Kerkaessandi, in Hindû mythology, was the first Buddha, who appeared at the time when men reached the age of forty thousand years, to take their sins upon him. He does not now reign; the present regent is the fourth, and is called Shagkiamuni.

Kern, Friedrich Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 20, 1750, and died at Tübingen, Feb. 8, 1842, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, Observationes ad Librum Jobi (Tübingen, 1826);—Commentationis de Virtute Christiana (part i, 1828);—Der Brief Jakobi untersucht und erklärt (1838). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 666; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 16, 206, 485. (B. P.)

Kern, Gottlob Christian, a Lutheran hymn-writer of Germany, was born Jan. 13, 1792. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1820 deacon at Besigheim, Württemberg, in 1824 professor at the theological seminary in Schönthal, and died Aug. 5, 1835. Of his many hymns, one has been translated into English: Wie kömmt' ich sein vergessen ("Oh, how could I forget Him!" by Winkworth, Lyra Germanica, ii, 142). Kern's sermons were published by W. Hoffmann and L. Völter, Stuttgart, 1837. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 666; Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 210 sq. (B. P.)

Kern, Johann, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 30, 1756. He studied at Tübingen and Göttingen, was in 1781 professor at the gymnasium in Ulm, and after 1790 preacher there besides. He died Jan. 17, 1801, leaving, Allgemeine Chronologie für die Zeiten nach Christi Geburt (Leipsic, 1779);—Der Katholicismus und der Protestantismus in ihren gegenseitigen Verhältnissen (Ulm, 1792);—Die Lehre von Gott (1796);—Die Lehre von der Freiheit und Unsterblichkeit der menschlichen Seele (1797). Kernunos, in Gallic mythology, was a god, represented with horns and deer-ears, on a bas-relief found at Notre-Dame, Paris, in 1702.

Kerr, RICHARD HALL, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in Dublin, Ireland, Feb. 8, 1769. He graduated from Trinity College in 1788, was ordained and appointed domestic chaplain to the bishop of Sodor and Man in 1789, and in the following year went out to India, where he was appointed principal of the Portuguese College at Mankeim, Bombay. In 1793 he became one of the East India Company's chaplains; in 1796 the superintendent of the Military Male Orphan Asylum at Egmore, Madras; and in the same year junior chaplain of Fort St. George, which office he held in addition to the presidency of the orphanage. In 1804 he was appointed senior chaplain of Madras, in which position he labored earnestly till his death, April 15, 1808. Dr. Kerr was an accomplished scholar, an impressive preacher, and very zealous in all his duties. See The (Lond.) Christian Observer, Feb. 1812, p. 80, 150.

Kessen, ANDREW, LL.D., a Wesleyan preacher, the son of a minister of the Established Church of Scotland, was born in Glasgow in 1814. He was educated at the university of that city, from which he received his degree, early united with the Methodists, began to exhort at the age of fifteen, was received by the British Wesleyan Conference in 1840, and devoted all his attainments to the missionary cause. For fifteen years he was principal of the Government Normal Training Institution in Colombo, Ceylon, for native Christian schoolmasters. He was eminently fitted for such work by his scholarly attainments, his gift of teaching, and his interest in the work. On his return to England he devoted several years to the training of missionary students. His pastoral labors were unwearied; his unassuming kindness made him the true friend of the poor, and his genial disposition won the love of all. His life was pure and upright, and his piety was beautiful in its unaffected meekness, its implicit trustfulness, and its ardent catholicity. He resided in London during the latter part of his life. Kessen died while on a visit to Jersey, July 19, 1879. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 40.

Kessler, JOHN S., D.D., a learned and pious minister of the German Reformed Church, was born in Switzerland, Aug. 19, 1799. "After graduating at the canton school of Chur, he pursued and completed his theological studies at the University of Basle in 1821, and soon after, at the early age of twenty-two, he was ordained to the gospel ministry at Devois, in the canton Glaris." In this field he labored up to 1840, when he emigrated to America, and became pastor of several congregations in the vicinity of Woodstock, Va. In 1845 he received a call to become assistant pastor to the Rev. J. C. Bucher, in Reading, Pa. He removed to Baltimore in 1847, and took charge of a German congregation lately organized. In this charge he spent seven years of earnest labor, when he was called to assist his son in carrying forward an institution established in Allentown, Pa., to train young men for the profession of teaching. In connection with his duties in the seminary, he also had charge of several country churches. Here he ended his long and useful life, Dec. 22, 1864. Dr. Kessler was a man of superior talents, finished education, amiable disposition, and great humility. He contributed largely to the Kirchenzeitung, and also to Dr. Schaff's Kirchenfreund, and is the author of an unfinished work, Biblical Dictionary. He also aided in getting up a German hymn-book for the use of the Reformed Church. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 167-174. (D. Y. H.)

Kestner, CHRISTIAN AUGUST, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1794, and died at Jena, Oct. 27, 1821, professor of theology. He is the author of, Ueber den naturhistorischen Kampf unter den beiden ersten Antonien, etc. (Jena, 1818):—Die Agape unter Domitian's Regierung (1819):—De Eusebii Auctoritate et Fide (1815). Ketteler, WILHELM EMANUEL, baron von, an eminent German ecclesiastic, was born in Münster, Westphalia, Dec. 25, 1811, of a noble race, renowned in German annals in the Church and in the field. From 1824 to 1828 he went to the Jesuit College at Brieg, thence to the universities of Göttingen, Berlin, Heidelberg, and Munich. At Heidelberg he had as fellow-student von Bismarck, afterwards prince-chancellor of the German empire. In 1833 the young baron entered the army, and from 1834 to 1838 he occupied important civic positions in his native town. In the latter year he returned to Munich to study theology; in 1841 he was ordained priest, and was pastor at Beckum, Westphalia, two years, Hopsten, three years, and provost of the Church of St. Hedwige, Berlin. In 1848 he received into the Roman Church the distinguished authoress, Ida, countess of Hahn-Hahn. In 1850 he was appointed to the bishopric of Mayence, where his labors were incessant and fruitful. He reopened the Episcopal Seminary, which had been closed for a quarter of a century, May 1, 1851, and furnished it with a fine staff of professors. After twenty-five years it was closed by order of the German government. Monsignor von Ketteler opened the smaller Seminary of Mayence, Aug. 11, 1864, and May 8, 1869, the one at Dreiburg, both of which disappeared under the new German code. He conducted numerous conferences and retreats, revived the ecclesiastical spirit, introduced severe examinations, and reinvigorated the body ecclesiastic of his diocese. In 1850 bishop von Ketteler recalled to Mayence the order of Capuchins; in 1858 he reinstalled the Jesuits in his diocese; in 1854 he established at Mayence a congregation of Franciscan Sisters, whose duty it was to care for the indigent sick; in 1856 he founded an asylum for unemployed domestics; in 1854 the countess of Hahn-Hahn established at his suggestion a convent of Sisters of the Good Shepherd, wherein the pious foundress remained till her death. Two years after he introduced the Sisters of the Perpetual Adoration. In the same year he founded the orphanage of St. Mary at Neustadt for poor and unprotected girls, and placed it under the direction of the congregation of Finthen (a village near Mayence), a charitable association of religious women, devoted to the free instruction of the poor, which he himself had founded in 1851. For poor orphans he instituted the hospital of St. Joseph at Kleinzimmern, also a school of the Christian Brothers at Mayence. In the last-named year he laid the foundation of the Catholic Working-men's Circle, which has many thousand members in Germany, and, as a companion to it, the Catholic Casino, established at the Hotel Frankfort, Mayence. Baron von Ketteler was at once a patriotic German and a devoted son of the Church. He was equally effective in the national assembly, on the platform, and in the pulpit. He was a man of gigantic frame, princely bearing, tempered by Christian sweetness, a model for his priests, and beloved by his people. When on his fifth visit to Rome, in 1877, to assist in the fiftieth anniversary of the episcopate of Pius IX, he caught the typhoid fever, of which he died, July 13 of the same year. Von Ketteler's literary works were mostly of a polemical character, mainly on questions of present interest, bearing the stamp of his intrepid character, practical mind, and vast knowledge of men and books. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1878, p. 81.

Kettell, GEORGE F., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal divine, was born in Boston, May 18, 1817. He received an exhorter's license in 1840, in 1841 was licensed to preach, and soon took charge of the Church in Haddam, Conn. In 1847 he was received into the New York Conference, and became pastor successively at Haddam, Madison, and Windsor, Conn. In 1847 he was appointed pastor of Vesey Street Church, New York city. Afterwards he had charge of churches in Poughkeepsie, Rhinebeck, Philadelphia, and Brooklyn. He died in the last-named place, March 19, 1883. Dr. Kettell was a most efficient preacher and pastor. He brought the principles of divine revelation to bear upon questions of practical ethics with a subtle power that amounted to genius. Some of these sermons are said to have been attended with remarkable power. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1884, p. 92.

Keux, JOHN LE, an eminent English architectural engraver, was born in London in 1783, and studied with Basire. His works embrace nearly all the choice publications in England, illustrative of Gothic architecture, that appeared in his time, as Britton's Architectural Antiquities, Cathedrals, etc.; Gothic Specimens and Gothic Examples; the plates of the first volumes of Neale's Churches. He died in 1846.

Khakis, one of the Vaishnava (q. v.) sects of the Hindûs, founded by Kil, an indirect disciple of Ramanand. They are few in number, and either reside in certain limited districts or lead wandering lives. They are distinguished from the other Vaishnava sects by the application of clay or ashes to their dress or persons. Those who reside in fixed establishments dress like the other Vaishnavas, but those who lead a wandering life go either naked or nearly so, smearing their bodies with a pale gray mixture of earth and ashes. They worship Siva, Vishnu, Sita, and Hanumar.

Khandas, in Buddhist philosophy, are the elements of sentient existence, of which there are five: 1. The organized body, or the whole of being, apart from the mental processes; 2. Sensation; 3. Perception; 4. Discrimination; 5. Consciousness. The four last Khandas are results or properties of the first, which must be understood as including the soul as well as the body. At death the Khandas are believed to vanish entirely.

Khandoba, in Hindûism, is an incarnation of Siva, which is also called Bhairav (q. v.).

Kharejites (or revolters), a Mohammedan sect, who originally withdrew from Ali, and maintain that the Imam need not be of the tribe of Koreish, nor even a freeman, provided he be just and qualified. They maintain, too, that if unfit he may be deposed, and that the office itself is not indispensable.

Kharfester, in Zendic mythology, are a series of wicked beings, who were especially created to punish the crimes of mankind. They were destroyed in the deluge by Tashter, the creative spirit.

Khasi Version of the Scriptures. The Khasi (or Khasee) is the language of the Cossyahs, Cassias, or Khasias, a race of Tartar or Chinese origin, ruled by a number of petty rajahs, who form a sort of confederacy. The first version of Holy Scripture in this language was prepared by a lady. She was the widow of one of the chieftains of the country, and Dr. Carey availed himself of her intelligence in translating the New Test. The preparation of this version occupied ten years; it was printed at Serampore in 1824. For about seven years it remained a sealed book, for no opportunity occurred of distributing it among the people for whom it had been prepared. In 1832 some of the missionaries at Serampore visited Cherrapoonjee, a place in the Khasi country, and their attention was drawn afresh to the spiritual wants of the people. A missionary station was formed there, and Mr. Lish, the first missionary who entered upon the work, turned his attention to a revision of the Khasi version, and in 1834 he produced a new or amended translation of the gospel of Matthew, which was printed at Serampore in Roman characters. In 1841 the Rev. Thomas Jones of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists occupied this station, and executed a new translation of Matthew's gospel, in Roman characters, which, in 1845, he offered to the British and Foreign Bible Society. A small edition was printed as an experiment. After its value and fidelity was fully attested by competent persons, the translation of the entire New Test. was continued by the missionaries engaged on the above station. In 1871 the British and Foreign Bible Society announced that the translating and printing of the New Test. into this North-east India mountain dialect has been brought to a successful conclusion by the Rev. W. G. Lewis, who was materially aided in his labors by the late Rev. W. T. Meller. The report for 1879 stated that the missionaries of the Calvinistic Methodist Foreign Missionary Society were revising the New Test. The Rev. W. G. Lewis, who read the proofs, is engaged in revising manuscript translations of parts of the Old Test., and is also translating the book of Psalms. Since then the Pentateuch has been published (1884). See Bible of Every Land, p. 17. (B. P.)

Khata (or scarf of blessings), an article considered indispensable in Thibet, because it bestows upon the individual who possesses it many blessings from above. It is a piece of silk, nearly as fine as gauze, and of so pale a blue as to be nearly white. It is about three times as long as it is broad, and the two ends are usually fringed. They are of all sizes and prices, for a Khata is an article which neither rich nor poor can dispense with, and they are used on all imaginable occasions. See Hue, Travels in Tartary, Thibet, and China.

Khatib, an ordinary Mohammedan priest, who conducts the worship of the mosque on Fridays. He recites the prayers, and often preaches a sermon.

Khatmeh, a recitation of the entire Koran, which occupies about nine hours, and is customary at the funerals, weddings, and public festivals of Mohammedans, being regarded as meritorious in those who bear the expense.

Khelfun, a mythical flat-nosed satyr, with crown, leopard's skin, and goat's tail, who, on an Etruscan mirror, is conjoined with the goddess Munthukh.

Khem (or Horus-Khem, "The Bull of his Mother"), an ithyphallic deity of the ancient Egyptians, generally represented as standing upright, with his right arm extended in the act of scattering seed, and having behind it the threshing instrument, which is usually called a flagellum. His left hand and arm are closely enveloped in a thick robe, which swathes him like a mummy. His phallus is erected; and his head-dress consists of two upright plumes similar to those of the deity Amen-Ra; he wears a large and richly-ornamented collar round his neck. Mythologically, Khem represented the idea of divinity in its double character of father and son. As father he was called the husband of his mother, while as a son he was assimilated to the god Horus. He properly symbolized generative power, surviving death, indeed, but submitting to a state of rigidity and inertia over which he could not triumph till his left arm was freed. In the one hundred and forty-sixth chapter of the Egyptian Ritual of the Dead, the deceased is said to exclaim, when his soul is reunited to his body, "that he has overcome his bandages, and that it is given him to extend his arm." Khem was also the symbolic deity of vegetable life, and it was probably in allusion to this theory that in a vignette to the Book of the Dead, the new birth of the deceased is represented by a tree growing out of his person while he lies upon a bier. The great festival of germination, in the Egyptian husbandry, was held in honor of the god Khem, and it is fully figured on the walls of the palace temple of Rameses III, at Medinet Habu. See Rawlinson, Hist. of Ancient Egypt, i, 331 sq.

Khemah, one of the principal female disciples of Buddha (q. v.).

Khirkhah (a torn robe), a name given to the dress generally worn by dervishes (q. v.), which Mohammedans claim was the dress worn by the ancient prophets.

Khodum. See GOTAMA.

Khors, a god worshipped by the ancient Slavonians, an image of whom existed at Kiöff before the introduction of Christianity. They were accustomed to offer to this deity the koraray, or wedding-cake, and to sacrifice hens in his honor.

Khotbeh, a prayer which Mohammed was accustomed to recite, and in which example he was followed by his successors. It consists of two parts: the first appropriated to the deity, the prophets, the first four caliphs and their contemporaries; the second includes the prayer for the reigning sovereign. Other khotbehs are offered at certain stated seasons.

Krishna. See KRISHNA.

Kumbandas, an order of beings among the Buddhists, who are believed to be the attendants of Wirudha, one of the four guardian Dewas. They are monsters of immense size and disgusting form, have blue garments, hold a sword and a shield of sapphire, and are mounted on blue horses. They form one of the thirteen orders of intelligence exclusive of the supreme Buddhas.

Kiel, TOBIAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Ballstädt, near Gotha, Oct. 29, 1584. He studied at Jena, and died as pastor of his native place, in 1627. He is the author of several hymns, one of which, Herr Gott nun schleuss den Himmel auf, has been translated into English (Lyra Germ. ii, p. 278), "Lord God, now open wide thy heaven." See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, ii, 268 sq.; Brückner, Kirchen und Schulen Staat im Herzogthum Gotha, vol. iii (Gotha, 1760). (B. P.)

Kienlen, HEINRICH WILHELM, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Berlin in 1816. He studied at Strasburg, was pastor at Colmar in 1842, in 1858 at Strasburg, and died in 1876. He published, Siebzehn Fest-Homilien über Lehrtexte (Basle, 1844):—Encyklopädie der Wissenschaften der protestantischen Theologie (Darmstadt, 1845):—Commentaire sur l'Apocalypse (Paris, 1870). Besides, he contributed to the Studien und Kritiken, Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, Revue de Théologie, Revue d'Alsace, etc. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 668. (B. P.)

Kierkegaard, SÖREN AABY, a Danish philosophical and theological writer, was born May 5, 1813, at Copenhagen. He spent his whole life in his native city, and, being rich and unmarried, became a father to the poor. In 1838 he published pseudonymously From the Papers of a Living, and in 1841 a dissertation On the Idea of Irony. In the same year he went to Berlin to acquaint himself with Schelling's philosophy. In the following year he returned home, and from 1843 to the time of his death, Nov. 11, 1855, he devoted himself entirely to literary activity. In 1843 he published his Whether—Or, in two parts, representing respectively the æsthetical and the ethical type of life, and placing indirectly before the reader the question: Which of these two types ought to be chosen? In the same year he published a small collection of Sermons:—Bits of Philosophy (1844):—Stations along the Road of Life (1845):—Lilies of the Field (1849):—Training for Christianity (1850):—How Christ Looks upon Official Christianity (1855), etc. During twelve years he prepared about thirty volumes for the press, and about as many he left in manuscript. All his writings, as it would seem, were executed according to a preconceived plan; and the subjects chosen were so written that all criticism grew silent. According to Kierkegaard Christianity is no scientific theory, but life and existence. Hence he rejected altogether the ideas of creed, Church, priest, etc. A Christian is, according to him, an insulated individual, alone with God, and in contact with the world only through suffering. Some of his writings were translated into German. As yet we have no biography which gives a satisfactory representation of his philosophical and religious standpoint. Kilconcath, WILLIAM DE, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of the see of Brechin about 1260. He died at Rome in 1275. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 159.

Killikelly, BRYAN B., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born on the island of Barbadoes in 1807. He became rector, in 1853, at Kittanning, Pa.; about 1857 of two churches, All-Saints, in Paradise, and Christ Church, in Leacock; and in 1864 returned to Kittanning. In 1866 he was rector of Grace Church, Mount Washington, and in the following year was made a missionary under the ecclesiastical authority of the diocese, residing at Kittanning, and officiating at McKeesport and vicinity, in which service he continued until within a short time of his death, April 11, 1877. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 169.

Kimball, JOSEPH, D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born at Newburgh, N. Y., Aug. 17, 1820. He graduated from Union College in 1839, and from Newburgh Theological Seminary in 1843; was licensed by the Associate Reformed Church the same year; was pastor at Hamptonburgh from 1844 to 1852; at Hebron; at Brockport; at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, from 1863 to 1865; at Brooklyn, from 1865 to 1874, and died Dec. 6 of the latter year. Dr. Kimball was an able theologian, a laborious preacher, and a sympathetic pastor. See Corwin, Manual of the Reformed Church in America, 3d ed. p. 328.

Kincaid, EUGENIO, D.D., a distinguished Baptist missionary, was born at Mount Zion, Pa., in 1797, and brought up in southern New York. He was one of five students who formed the first class in what is now Madison University, Hamilton, N. Y. While pursuing his studies, he decided to become a foreign missionary. The war between England and Burmah led to the temporary postponement of his plan. Meanwhile he was pastor, for a time, of the church at Galway, and then, for five years, performed missionary labor in the mountainous districts of central Pennsylvania. In the spring of 1830 he sailed from Boston to Burmah, reaching Maulmain towards the close of that year. He commenced at once the study of the language, giving twelve hours a day for six days to his work, and preaching on the Sabbath to the English soldiers stationed in that section of Burmah. Having acquired a knowledge of the language, he spent a year preaching to the Church in Rangoon, and then went to Ava, the capital, and subsequently spent three months in visiting every town and village along the banks of the Irrawaddy. For nearly two months he lived in his boat, subjected to severe hardships; but he heroically continued his work among the natives, and at the end of fifteen months had baptized eleven converts, and organized them into a church. After many years spent in laborious service for his Master, Dr. Kincaid returned, in 1865, to the United States, broken down in health, and took up his residence in Girard, Kan., where he died, April 3, 1883. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 658. (J. C. S.)

King, GEORGE IVES, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Adams, N. Y., June 1, 1815. He studied at Lowville, graduated from Union College in 1838, and from Auburn Theological Seminary in 1841; was licensed by the Presbytery of Columbia, at Hudson, in April, 1840; and for a time was principal of Union Academy, at Bellevue, preaching to two feeble churches on alternate Sabbaths. In the fall of 1843 he was ordained pastor of the Westernville Church, by the Presbytery of Utica. In 1846 he contracted throat-disease by overwork, and then spent two years traveling in the Southern States to restore his health; in 1848 was installed pastor of the Church at Hanover, N. J.; in 1856 of the First Church in Quincy, Ill., in 1868 of the First Church in Jerseyville. He died in New Orleans, La., March 12, 1873. See Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois, vol. i; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 246.

King, John, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Chestnut Level, Lancaster Co., Pa., Dec. 5, 1740. He was educated at Philadelphia College; studied theology privately; was licensed by the Second Presbytery of Philadelphia in March, 1767; in 1769 was called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Conococheague, Pa., where he remained to within a short time of his death, which occurred July 5, 1811. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 281.

King, Jonas, D.D., an eminent Congregational missionary, was born at Hawley, Franklin Co., Mass., July 29, 1792. He graduated from Williams College in 1816, and from the Theological Seminary at Andover in 1819. At the foundation of the new college at Amherst, in 1821, he was elected professor of Oriental languages and literature, having spent a part of the intervening time in missionary labors in the Southern States, and visited France to better prepare himself for the duties of his professorship. He offered his services to the American Board for three years, and in September, 1822, left Paris for Malta. In January, 1823, he reached Alexandria, in Egypt. There, with others, he spent three months preaching, distributing tracts and copies of the Bible. After passing some time in the Holy Land, he returned to his native country in 1827. Having been invited to proceed to Greece in one of the vessels which was to carry out supplies to the afflicted inhabitants of that country, he resigned his professorship, which he had nominally held six years. In 1830 he again put himself under the direction of the American Board, and in 1831 established a school at Athens, where he remained until his death, May 22, 1869. He wrote numerous works in modern Greek, and, on account of some sentiments thus expressed, he was sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment and expulsion from the kingdom. The sentence, however, was not executed, on account of an official protest. His principal work is The Oriental Church and the Latin (N. Y. 1865). See Trien. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem., 1870, p. 1819; Memoirs of Amer. Missionaries, p. 109; and his Memoir (N. Y. 1879).

King, William, D.D., an English Independent minister, was born in Wiltshire, June 9, 1701. He had pious parents, who educated him at the University of Utrecht, Holland, where he began to preach. He returned to England, and was ordained pastor at Chesham, Bucks, in April, 1725. He had offers of preferment in the Church, but being a dissenter from conviction, he refused them. In February, 1740, he settled as pastor at Hare Court, London, in 1748 was appointed one of the merchants' lecturers at Pinner's Hall, and delivered one hundred and ninety-two lectures there, the last in January, 1769. He was also evening lecturer at Silver Street, and a lecturer at Lime Street. He died March 4, 1769, and was interred at Bunhill Field. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iii, 299.

Kingo, Thomas, a famous hymn-writer of Denmark, was born Dec. 15, 1634, at Stangerup, in the island of Zealand. He studied theology at Copenhagen, and was appointed pastor of his native parish in 1668, and bishop of Funen in 1677. He died in 1703. Kingo was a poet born, and a powerful Christian character, and he has given the Danish Church some of its very best hymns. He published Aandelige Sjunge-Chor, a collection of hymns, 1674; and another collection in 1681. He also compiled, at the instance of the government, a new hymn-book, known as Kingo's Psalmebog, 1699, which is still in use. Kingsford, Edward, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Boston, Lincolnshire, England, in 1788. He received a liberal education, and had a high reputation as a scholar. He was for several years an officer in the service of the East India Company. While in this position he was converted, and at once devoted himself to the work of the ministry. For some time he was a pastor in England, and, in 1838, came to America. He labored for a few years in Utica, N. Y., and then removed to Alexandria, D. C. He was highly esteemed and respected wherever he resided, his pulpit efforts being of more than ordinary excellence. He died in Washington, D. C., July 27, 1859. See Watchman and Reflector, Aug. 11, 1859. (J. C. S.)

Kingsley, Charles, an eminent English clergyman and writer, was born at Holue Vicarage, near Dartmoor, Devonshire, June 12, 1819. He graduated from Magdalen College, Cambridge, in 1842; the same year became curate of Eversley, Hampshire, and rector in 1844, a position which he retained for the rest of his life. In 1859 he was appointed regius professor of history at Cambridge, but resigned in 1869, on being offered a canonry in Chester Cathedral, which four years later was exchanged for one in Westminster Abbey. He was also chaplain in ordinary to the queen, and one of the chaplains to the prince of Wales. He died Jan. 23, 1875. Kingsley belonged to the "Broad Church" party, and was an earnest advocate of social improvement. He wrote a large number of popular works, most of them of a fictitious character, but highly instructive, the most noted of which perhaps was his Hyppatia (1853);—also Alexandria and her Schools (1854). He frequently contributed to Fraser's Magazine, the North British Review, and wrote some articles for the Encyclopædia Britannica (8th ed.). He was also known as a poet. See his Letters and Memoir, by his widow (Lond. 1876, 2 vols. 8vo, abridged ed. N. Y. 1877).

Kinika Version of the Scriptures. The Kinika is vernacular to the tribes of the Wanika, in eastern Africa. The late Dr. Krapf, who laid the foundation of the grammatical and lexicographical structure of the Kinika language, likewise prepared a Kinika version of the gospels of Luke and John, and of the epistles to the Romans and Ephesians. But only the gospel of Luke was printed in 1848 at Bombay, in the American Mission press. In 1881 the gospel of Matthew was published, the translation having been made by the Rev. Thomas Wakefield, a missionary at Ribe since 1861. See Bible of Every Land, p. 438. (B. P.)

Kinninmund, Alexander, a Scotch prelate and doctor of theology, was bishop of Aberdeen, April 1, 1329. While he was in office there, the city of Aberdeen was burned by thirty English ships, in 1333. He died soon after. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 110.

Kippurim (כִּפּוּרִים, expiations, atonement), a name given by the Hebrews to the great day of atonement (q. v.), because on that day the sins of the whole people were understood to be expiated or pardoned.

Kirchhofer, Johannes, a Protestant theologian, was born Dec. 15, 1800, at Schaffhausen, in Switzerland. He studied at Göttingen and Halle, was in 1827 pastor at Hofwyl, in 1829 professor of theology at the Collegium Humanitatis, in his native city; in 1842 he was elected deacon at St. John's, and in 1854 pastor there. He died Feb. 27, 1869. Kirchhofer took a very active part in the ecclesiastical affairs of his country. For a time he was the president of the synod, and as such exercised a great influence upon the younger theologians. Of his writings we mention especially, Quellensammlung zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Canons (Zurich, 1842-44);—Leitfaden zur Bibelkunde (2d ed. Stuttgart, 1860). Kirghese-Tartar Version of the Scriptures. The Kirghese-Tartar is a dialect spoken by the Kirghese in Siberia and Turkestan. In 1818 the New Test. was translated by Charles Frazer, a Scottish missionary. Since this mission was abandoned, nothing was done for the circulation of the Word of God among this people, numbering about 1,500,000. In 1879, however, the British and Foreign Bible Society issued an edition of three thousand copies of Mr. Frazer's New Test., it being printed at the Kazan University press, under the care of professor Gottwaldt, who arranged the verses in the new edition as they stand in the Greek and English, besides revising a few passages which were badly translated. See Bible of Every Land, p. 849. (B. P.)

Kiriath Shema (the reading of the Shema), the recital by the Jews of certain passages of the Old Test., called Shema (q. v.).

Kirin, a fabulous monster, conspicuous in Chinese and Japanese legends. It is supposed to be not only gentle and innocent, but intelligent, virtuous, and holy. It is never seen but at the appearance of a particular constellation, and at the nativity of some worthy benefactor of his race.

Kiritinus, ALBANUS. See BONIFACIUS, QUERETINUS.

Kirjath-jearim. Lieut. Conder regards this as a different place from the simple KIRJATH, and was inclined at first to locate it at Soba (Tent Work, i, 22), but finally at Khurbet Erma, two and a quarter miles south of Chesalon or Kesla (Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, iii, 46 sq., where he argues the question at length); but most geographers still incline to the position at Kuryet Enab (or simply el-Kuryet), a full description of the archaeology of which is given in the same Memoirs (iii, 132 sq.).

Kirk, EDWARD NORRIS, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in New York, Aug. 14, 1802. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1820, studied law eighteen months, and in 1824 graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary. He acted for a time as agent for the American Board of Foreign Missions in the Southern States, and in 1828 was settled over a Presbyterian Church in Albany, N. Y. In 1837 he went to Europe, preaching in London, and several months in Paris. In 1839 he returned to the United States, and in 1842 became pastor of the Mount Vernon Congregational Church in Boston, where he labored until 1871, when the failure of his health caused him to transfer the active duties of his office to a colleague. He visited Paris in 1856, in the interests of the American and Foreign Christian Union, to establish American Protestant worship in that city. He afterwards became president of the American Missionary Association. He died in Boston, March 27, 1874. Dr. Kirk was a preacher and writer of rare strength and brilliancy. He published two volumes of Sermons:—Lectures on the Parables;—a translation of Goussien's Théopneustie, and other works. See Cong. Quarterly, 1878, p. 259.

Kirkham, Robert, a minister of the Church of England, was one of the Oxford Methodists. He, in connection with the Wesleys and Mr. Morgan, were the four young men who began, in November, 1729, to spend evenings together, reading, chiefly, the Greek Test.—the inception of that movement which has so changed the religious life of the world. He was the son of Rev. Lionel Kirkham, of Stanton, in Gloucestershire; was a very intimate friend of Wesley's, and earnest in his desire for higher life, faithfully keeping the rules of the Oxford Methodists. In 1731 he left Oxford and became his uncle's curate. These facts are the limit of our knowledge concerning him. It is to be regretted that no record of his life can be found. See Tyerman, The Oxford Methodists, p. 1.

Kislar Aga, the chief of the black eunuchs in Turkey, who is intrusted with the superintendence of all the mosques.

Kist, Nicolaus Christian, a Dutch theologian, was born April 11, 1798. After having completed his studies at Utrecht he was made doctor of theology in 1818, and was called as pastor to Zoelen, in the province of Guelderland. In 1823 he was appointed professor of theology at Leyden, and inaugurated his lectures by a discourse on De Progressione Ingenii Humani in Dogmatum Historiam Christianam Animadvertenda. In connection with his colleague, Royaards, Kist published Archief voor Kerkelijke Geschiedenis Inzonderheid van Nederland (Leyden, 1829-49, 20 vols.; supplement in 2 vols. 1852-54). With W. Moll he published Archives Historico-Ecclesiastiques (Amsterdam, 1857-59, 2 vols.). Of his other works we mention, Oratione in qua Ecclesie Regique Christianae Spectant Historiam (Leyden, 1853):—De Vrije Wil of de Mensch een Redelijk en Zedelijk Vrijzekerend Wezen (1859). Kist died Dec. 11, 1859. See Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 544, 574; ii, 111; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 689 sq.; (Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.))

Kitchen. This part of a monastic establishment invariably adjoined the refectory, behind it, in Benedictine houses, and on the side, usually, in Cistercian arrangements. The ordinary shape was square, but there were exceptions: thus, a bottle-form was adopted at Marmoutier, a round at Chartres, Villers, Saumur, and Vendôme, an octagon at Pontlevoy, Caen, Durham, Glastonbury, and with little apses at Fontévrault. At Westminster there was a vaulted way to the hall; at Canterbury a covered alley; but in the smaller orders a hatch or window formed the means of communication. There was also a kitchen for the infirmary, and the abbot had his own kitchen.

Kitchener was the marketer and purveyor who bought the provisions for kitchen use, and was overseer of the cooks, butchery, and fishponds. He visited the sick every morning, and saw that the broken meat was reserved for the poor.

Kitchi Manito, the name by which the Great Spirit was known among the various tribes of American Indians, especially in Canada. He is the chief of their good divinities. See MANITO; INDIANS.

Kito, a god whom the Chinese soldiery honor as their patron.

Kitoo, a particular prayer which is used by the Japanese in all seasons of public distress.

Kitu, homage or reverence paid by one person to another among the natives of Japan. Inferiors being seated on their heels, according to the Japanese fashion, testified their respect for their superiors by laying the palms of their hands on the floor, and bending their bodies so low that their foreheads almost touched the ground. The superior responded by laying the palms of his hands upon his knees, and nodding or bowing, more or less low, according to the rank of the other party.

Kiwasa, a deity among the savages in Virginia. They represented this god with a lighted pipe in his mouth, which a priest, cunningly concealed behind the idol, smoked, thus proving the god to be alive.

Klaproth, Heinrich Julius, a German Orientalist, was born in Berlin, Oct. 11, 1783. In 1802 he published, Asiatisches Magazin, and was made adjunct to the academy for Asiatic languages at St. Petersburg:—Reise in den Kaukasus und Georgien in den Jahren 1807 und 1808 (Halle, 1812-14, 2 vols.; transl. into French, Paris, 1823). In 1812 he left the Russian civil service, went in 1814 to Italy, in 1815 to Paris, where he was made professor of the languages of Asia in 1816. He died Aug. 20, 1835. Besides the above works, he published, Geogr.-historische Beschreibung des östlichen Kaukasus (Weimar, 1814):—Reise nach Georgien und Imirethi (Berlin, 1815):—Verzeichniss der chinesischen und mandschuischen Bücher und Manuscripte der königl. Bibliothek in Berlin (Paris, 1822):—Asia Polyglotta (1823):—Tableaux Historiques de l'Asie (1834, 4 vols.):—Mémoires Relatifs à l'Asie (eod.):—Collections d'Antiquités Egyptiennes (1829):—*Examen Critique des Traux du feu M. Klausing, Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 28, 1675, in Westphalia. He studied at Wittenberg, commenced his academical career there in 1696, and was doctor of theology in 1710. In 1719 he was called to Leipsic as professor of theology, and died Oct. 2, 1745. His writings are very numerous, and their titles are given by Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Klein, Anton, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born in 1788. In 1811 he received holy orders. He was for some time professor of Church history at Grätz and Vienna, and died at the latter place, April 9, 1867. He is the author of, Historia Ecclesiæ Christianæ (Grätz, 1827, 2 vols.):—Geschichte des Christenthums in Oesterreich und Steiermark (Vienna, 1840-42, 7 vols.). (B. P.)

Klemm, Johann Conrad, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 23, 1655. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1687 professor there, and died Feb. 18, 1717. He wrote, De voce βαρβαρος ad 1 Cor. xiv, 11:—Vindiciae Locorum Pentateuchis Corruptionis Accusatorum:—De κοινωγία θεας φθέρω ad 2 Petr. i, 3, 4:—De Concilio Benedicti XIII:—De Popatu Hierarchico:—De Nominibus Hebraicis, etc. See Neue Zeitungen von gelehrten Sachen; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Kleutgen, Joseph, a Jesuit, was born at Dortmund, Sept. 11, 1811. In 1834 he joined his order, and received holy orders in 1837. For some time he lectured on rhetoric and philosophy at Freiburg and Brieg, Switzerland, went to Rome in 1843, where he became professor at the Collegium Germanicum. He died at St. Anton, in Tyrol, Jan. 14, 1883, leaving, Die Theologie der Vorzeit (Münster, 1853-65, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1867-73):—Die Philosophie der Vorzeit (1860-63, 2 vols.):—Institutiones Theologicæ (1881, vol. i):—Das Evangelium des Matthäus nach seinem inneren Zusammenhang (1882). (B. P.)

Knak, GUSTAV, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born in Berlin, July 12, 1806. He studied in his native city, was in 1834 pastor at Wusterwitz, in Pomerania, in 1849 Gossner's successor at the Bethlehem Church in Berlin, and died July 27, 1878, at Dünnow, in Pomerania, whither he had gone to restore his feeble health. Knak was famous alike as preacher and hymn-writer. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 701; Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 194; Wangemann, Gustav Knak. Ein Prediger der Gerechtigkeit, die vor Gott gilt (Berlin, 1879). (B. P.)

Knapp, JACOB, a distinguished Baptist evangelist, generally known as "Elder Knapp," was born in Otsego County, N. Y., Dec. 7, 1799. Having pursued his studies at Hamilton, he first settled in Springfield, near his native place, and then in Watertown. After having been in the pastoral office for eight years, he felt that he must henceforth devote himself to the work of an evangelist. At this time he had what he always considered a remarkable religious experience. His early labors as an evangelist in some of the great cities and villages of our land were followed by wonderful results. Thousands of conversions took place. In some of these places "his preaching gathered such crowds and produced such excitement that mobs threatened his meetings, and police force had to be employed to suppress popular violence. By the terrors of the law rather than by tender exhibitions of God's love, he sought to drive men to the Cross for salvation." Many of his sermons were models of reasoning and eloquence, the most gifted men feeling the impression as well as the ignorant. He died at his residence, near Rockford, Ill., March 2, 1874. See Jeffrey, Memoirs of Jacob Knapp; The Baptist Weekly, March 12, 1874. (J. C. S.)

Knichin, CHARLES, a minister of the Church of England, was one of the Oxford Methodists, and a fellow of Corpus Christi College. He left Oxford at about the same time the Wesleys did, and became rector of Dummer, a small village of about four hundred inhabitants. In his parish he kept up the habits of the Oxford Methodists, visited from house to house, catechised the children, and had public prayers twice each day. In 1736 he was chosen dean of Corpus Christi College, but retained his rectory at Dummer. While at Oxford he kept the old Oxford Methodist spirit of work alive, visiting the prisoners and ministering unto them. Mr. Knichin never revived the friendship between him and the Wesleys, but followed them in their struggles after higher life until he himself experienced salvation by faith. At the time when the Established churches refused the Wesleys their pulpit, Mr. Knichin's was one of eight to which they had access. He was intensely religious, "lived it, looked it, breathed it." He died Jan. 4, 1742. See Tyerman, The Oxford Methodists, p. 363.

vided by the parish by the Salisbury constitution of 1254. King Athelstan left his knife on the altar of Beverley, as a pledge for his redemption of a vow of benefaction.

Knight, Franklin Lafayette, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Maine, in August, 1824. He graduated from Bowdoin College in 1846; after teaching for several years, was elected professor of Greek and Latin in a Southern university; in 1853 was ordained, and, for some time, exercised his ministry in the state of Maryland; in 1859 he was invited to be chaplain to the bishop of New Jersey. For a few years he was principal of the Diocesan Training and Theological School, in Tennessee. Resigning this position, he removed to Washington, D. C., where, during the remainder of his life, he was assistant minister in the Church of the Epiphany, and also in St. John's. He died there in April, 1876. Dr. Knight was a classical teacher of repute, of blameless life, retiring in disposition, highly esteemed and respected. See History of Bowdoin College, p. 622. (J. C. S.)

Knight, Richard, D.D., a Wesleyan Methodist minister, was born in Devon, England, in 1789. He was accepted by the British Conference, and sent to Newfoundland in 1816. He endured persecutions and hardships, escaped perils oft, was appointed to Halifax, N. S., in 1832, labored thenceforth principally in Nova Scotia until his death at Sheffield, N. B., May 23, 1860. Apparently stern and unapproachable at first, a kind heart and large sympathies dwelt in Knight's stalwart frame. Inflexible when right, humble, dignified, zealous, cautious, courageous, yet gentle; he was an excellent preacher, well-read, and one of the ablest and most prominent ministers in the Maritime Provinces. Dr. Knight was a strong friend of temperance, and published an address on the subject. He also published a Lecture on the Genuineness and Authenticity of Revelations (St. John's, N. B., 1850). See Huestis, Memorials of Meth. Ministers in East Brit. America, p. 56; Morgan, Bibl. Canadensis, p. 214.

Knoll, ALBERT JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1796. He received holy orders in 1818 at Trent, and joined in the same year the order of the Capuchins. In 1820 he was teacher of religious philosophy, in 1823 professor of dogmatics, in 1847 custos-general at Rome. He died at Botzen, Tyrol, March 30, 1863. Knoll published, Institutiones Theologicæ Generalis seu Fundamentalis (Innsbruck, 1846; 4th ed. 1865):—Expositio Regulæ F. F. Minorum S. P. Francisci Assisi Congesta (ibid. 1850):—Institutiones Theologicæ Theoretica seu Dogmatico-Polemica Concinnatæ (Turin, 1862-64, 6 vols.). After his death was published Institutiones Theologicæ Theoretica seu Dogmatico-Polemica (1865, 2 vols.). (B. P.)

Knowlton, MILES JUSTIN, D.D., a distinguished missionary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, was born at West Wardsborough, Vt., Feb. 8, 1825. When quite young he was sent to the academy at West Townsend, and while there determined to enter the Christian ministry. His college and theological studies were pursued at Madison University, Hamilton, N. Y., where he graduated in 1853. He was ordained at West Wardsborough, Oct. 8 of the same year, and, with his wife, Lucy Ann (St. John), embarked for China, and arrived in June, 1854, at Ningpo, where, with singular earnestness and marked success, he labored for nearly twenty years. He died there, Sept. 10, 1874. Among the qualities which made him a model missionary were his remarkable singleness of purpose, his persistency in active labor, and his gentle bearing towards the people. See Amer. Bapt. Miss. Magazine, v, p. 91. (J. C. S.)

Knox, Andrew, a Scotch prelate, of the same family with the Scottish reformer, was born at Ranfurly, in Renfrewshire. He was educated at Glasgow, was first minister at Lochwinnoch, and then at Paisley. King James made him bishop of the Isles in April, 1606, where he distinguished himself by his attention to the propagation of religion. In 1622 he was translated to the see of Raphoe, in Ireland, where he remained until his death, Nov. 7, 1632. See Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland; Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 308.

Knox, Hugh, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland, and came to America in 1751. He spent several years in teaching, leading a somewhat dissipated life; but he shook off his follies and entered Nassau Hall, and graduated in 1754. He studied divinity with president Burr. At his ordination, preparatory to his accepting a call to the island of Saba, the New York Presbytery was so much pleased with his trial sermon on the Dignity and Importance of the Gospel Ministry, that they unanimously requested it for publication. A sermon preached by him, On the Sinner's Faultiness and Inability, was published by bishop Hubart in 1808, and became the subject of much controversy on the distinction between natural and moral inability. The Presbytery corresponded with him yearly through Dr. Rodgers, and expressed regret on hearing after the Revolution of the declining condition of his flock. The celebrated Alexander Hamilton, in early boyhood, was placed under the instruction of Dr. Knox. He published two volumes of sermons on interesting subjects, at Glasgow, in 1772. He spent the closing years of his life at St. Croix, and died there in October, 1790. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America. (W. P. S.)

Knox, John P., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Savannah, Ga., July 28, 1811. He graduated from Rutgers College and the Theological Seminary, New Brunswick, N. J., and was ordained pastor of the Reformed Church of Nassau, N. Y. After this he served as pastor of the Reformed Church at Utica, for two years. He then went to St. Thomas, W. I., where he spent ten years of ministerial labor, and then returned to the United States and accepted a call, in 1855, to the Presbyterian Church at Newtown, L. I. In this old church he labored with zeal and success until his death, June 2, 1882. See N. Y. Observer, June 8, 1882. (W. P. S.)

Knox, Thomas, a Scotch prelate, and son of Andrew Knox, was made bishop of the Isles upon his father's translation, in 1622. He died in 1626. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 308.

Knox, William Eaton, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Knoxboro, Oneida Co., N. Y., Oct. 16, 1820. He graduated from Hamilton College in 1840, and pursued his theological studies at Auburn Seminary. In 1844 he was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Watertown, and in 1848 of that in Rome. In 1870 he accepted a call from the First Presbyterian Church at Elmira, where he continued for the rest of his life. He died at Blue Mountain Lake, in the Adirondacks, Sept. 17, 1888. He occupied an elevated position among his clerical brethren. See N. Y. Observer, Sept. 28, 1888; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 70. (W. P. S.)

Koch, Eduard Emil, a Lutheran theologian, who died April 27, 1871, at Erdmannhausen, near Marbach, is the author of Geschichte des Kirchenliedes und Kirchengesanges (Stuttgart, 1866-70, 7 vols.), the best hymnological work now extant. (B. P.)

Koch, Ignatius, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal

clergyman, first appears in the record as rector of St. John's Church, Western, Missouri. In 1865 he became rector of St. John's Church, Valparaiso, Ind. The following year he was a teacher in Palmyra College in Missouri. In 1867 he was appointed a missionary to the German population in Marysville, Ky., and served in this relation until about 1870, when he was elected principal of St. John's Academy, Jacksonville, Fla., besides performing missionary work in adjacent places. Here he remained until his death, which occurred Dec. 8, 1872. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1873, p. 134.

Köcher, HERMANN FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1747 at Osnabrück, and died April 2, 1792. He is the author of, Nova Bibliotheca Hebraica (Jena, 1788-84, 2 vols.): —Versuch einer Erklärung der Geschichte Saul's mit der Betrügerin zu Endor (Gera, 1780): —Specimen Observationum Philologicarum in 1 Sam. ii (Jena, 1772): *—Comm. Kohlbrügge, HERMAN FRIEDRICH, the founder of the Dutch-Reformed congregation at Elberfeld, was born at Amsterdam, Aug. 15, 1803. He was of Lutheran parentage, and after studying theology became preacher to a Lutheran congregation in Amsterdam. But the rationalism of his colleagues brought him into a conflict which resulted in his deposition. He took the degree of doctor of theology at Utrecht, and after living for several years in retirement joined the Reformed Church. While travelling through the Rhine regions in 1834, where just at that time a kind of revival took place, he preached often, and made a deep impression. After many difficulties, the Reformed congregation at Elberfeld, which had separated from the state establishment, chose Kohlbrügge for its minister (1847), constituting itself as a member of the Church of the Netherlands. At Elberfeld Kohlbrügge labored with great success till his death, March 5, 1875. Besides a considerable number of sermons, he published, Das siebente Capitel des Briefes Pauli an die Römer (8d ed. 1855): —Wozu das Alte Testament (eod.), etc. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 709 sq.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Kohlman, ANTHONY, an eminent Roman Catholic author, was born at Kaizersberg, near Colmar, July 13, 1771. He was ordained priest in April, 1796, joined the fathers of the Sacred Heart, and in 1799 he served those who were taken with the plague in Hagenbrunn, and was appointed chief chaplain of the Austrian military hospitals in Padua, whose moral and physical state was described as frightful. He exercised the ministry in Upper Germany and in Prussia until, in 1805, he entered the Society of Jesus. In 1807 he was sent to America, a part of the time superior of the Jesuit missions. In 1809 he visited Thomas Paine on his death-bed, in company with father Benedict Fenwick. A faithful account of it is in the United States Catholic Magazine, 1842, p. 358. In 1813 the "Catholic Question in America" was discussed in the courts of New York, in which Kohlman took an important part. The case was reported by William Simpson, Esq., one of the counsel, and published in New York by Gillespy. In 1820-21 Kohlman published his Unitarianism Philosophically and Theologically Examined (2 vols. 8vo), going through three editions in a short time. He was rector of Washington Seminary in 1824, when the so-called Mathingly Miracle took place, an account of which was published by Wilson (12mo). In 1825 this keen and learned Jesuit was called to Rome to teach moral theology in the Gregorian University, just restored to the Jesuits by Leo XII, who held him in great esteem, and had placed at his service his private library. Kohlman died in Rome, April 10, 1836. See Cath. Almanac, 1872, p. 80; De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S., p. 356 sq.

Koi Version of the Scriptures. The Kois, who are a branch of the Gonds in Central India, number about one hundred thousand souls. At the request of the Church Missionary Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society published, in 1884, a tentative edition of five hundred copies of the gospel of Luke and the 1st epistle of John. The translation was made by general Haig, assisted by three Kois who understood the Telugu Bible. The translator read also the proofs of the edition. (B. P.)

Koitsch, Christian Jacob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1671 at Meissen. He studied at Halle, was inspector of the Royal School there from 1700 to 1705, head master of the grammar-school at Elbing, in Prussia, from 1705 to 1725, and died in 1735. Koitsch was a man of eminent piety, and his love to Jesus finds expression in his hymns, of which a few are preserved. The most beautiful of his hymns, O Ursprung des Lebens, O ewiges Licht, is found in an English translation in the Moravian Hymn-Book, No. 540. See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iv, 370 sq. (B. P.)

Koive, the ancient pagan high-priest of the Prussians. When it thundered they believed that their Koive was conversing with their god Perkun, hence they fell down before that deity, and implored of him to send them more favorable weather.

Kol Nidrey (קל נדרים, all the vows of, being the initial words) is a Jewish prayer which opens the service for the day of atonement. It is repeated three times in the most solemn manner, and runs thus, "All vows, obligations, oaths, or anathemas, whether termed קנים קינם or otherwise, which we shall have vowed, sworn, devoted, or bound ourselves to, from this day of atonement until the next day of atonement (whose arrival we hope for in happiness), we repent, beforehand, of them all; they shall all be deemed absolved, forgiven, annulled, void, and made of no effect; they shall not be binding, nor have any power; the vows shall not be reckoned vows, the obligations shall not be obligatory, nor the oath considered as oaths." This liturgical formula has been turned against the Jews, as if by it they absolved themselves from all obligations, and therefore could not be bound by an oath. But it must be considered that the Kol Nidrey speaks only of vows made voluntarily, and not of oaths made to others, for the latter were regarded as inviolable except by the personal consent of the individual who had received the oath. The Kol Nidrey dates from about the 9th century, and in MS. its form varies. In its general form it might be used by bad men to escape obligations. But hatred of the Jews has turned the possibility into a fact, and against this charge the Jews have protested at all times. See Lehmann, Die Abschaffung des Kol Nidre (Mayence, 1863); Aub. Die Eingangsfeier des Versöhnungstages (ibid. eod.); Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judentum (Königsberg, 1711), ii, 489 sq.; Bodenschatz, Kirchliche Verfassung der heutigen Juden, ii, chap. 5; Strack, in Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. Konkani Version of the Scriptures. The Konkani (or Kunkana) is the proper language of the Concan, a long, narrow tract of land, the continuation of Malabar and Canara. It is a dialect of the Marathi, influenced by the Davidian languages of South India. It is spoken by upwards of one hundred thousand inhabitants, chiefly on the western coast. The majority of the people belong to the Hindû faith, but many are Roman Catholics; some of them speak the language with a mixture of Portuguese words. A version of the New Test. into this language was executed at Serampore between the years 1808 and 1819, and was printed in the Devanagari character. In 1821 the Pentateuch left the press. Of late (1883) the gospels of John and Matthew have been published by the Madras Auxiliary Society, in a revised form, so as to be better understood by all classes. See Bible of Every Land, p. 129. Kragh, Tiedor, a Lutheran theologian and missionary of Denmark, was born in 1795. After having passed his theological examination, he went to Greenland as a missionary. He translated a great part of the Old Test. and many ascetical works into Greenlandish, and published a prayer-book and collection of sermons in that language. He died March 25, 1883, at Oesby, near Hadersleben, in Schleswig. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 207. (B. P.)

Krakewitz, Barthold von, a German Lutheran divine, was born in the isle of Rügen in 1582. He studied at different universities, was professor of theology at Greifswalde, general superintendent of Pomerania, and died Nov. 7, 1642. He wrote, Comment. in Hoseam et Jonam:—De Bonis Christianorum Operibus:—De Jesu Christo ἱεραρχῶν, etc. See Freher, Theatrum Eruditorum; Witte, Memoria Theologorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. Krapf, Johann Ludwig, a famous German missionary, was born Jan. 11, 1810, at Devendingen, near Tübingen. He studied at the latter place, and entered the service of the Church Missionary Society in 1837. He was sent to Africa, where he labored till 1856, when the poor state of his health obliged him to return to Europe. He retired to Kornthal, and spent his time in translating the Scriptures into different dialects of east Africa. He died Nov. 26, 1881, while at prayer on his knees. Of his works we mention, Reisen in Ostafrika in den Jahren 1837–55 (Kornthal, 1858, 2 vols.):—his Dictionary of the Swahili Language was published after his death (Lond. 1882). (B. P.)

Krause, Heinrich, a Protestant writer of Germany, was born at Weissensee, near Berlin, June 2, 1816. He studied theology under Twesten and Neander at Berlin, and at one time thought of devoting himself to lecturing at the university. With great success he passed the examination as licentiate, in 1843, and published an essay, Ueber die Wahrhaftigkeit (Berlin, 1844), which obtained the approval of professor Nitzsch. When about to commence his public lectures at the university, he met with an opposition, the head of which was his former teacher, Twesten. Krause abandoned the theological career, and betook himself to journalism. In 1852 he commenced publishing Die Protestantische Kirchenzeitung, to which he devoted all his talents. The Kirchenzeitung, as the organ of the so-called Protestanten-Verein, became the battle-field against orthodoxy, and Krause's pen was especially directed against men like Hengstenberg, Stahl, and Leo. In his attacks, Krause was supported by such liberal theologians as Sydow, Jonas, Zittel, Karl Hase, Karl Schwarz, and others. Besides his journalistic work, Krause lectured in public on religious subjects. In 1864 the university at Zurich honored him with the doctorate of theology. Krause died at his native place, June 8, 1868. See H. Späth, Protestantische Bausteine. Leben und Wirken des Dr. Heinrich Krause nebst einer Auswahl aus seinen publicistischen Arbeiten (Berlin, 1873); Ströhl, in Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Kraussold, LORENZ, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died Oct. 22, 1881, first pastor at Bayreuth, member of consistory, doctor of theology and philosophy, published a number of sermons and ascetical works, for which see Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 782 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 217, 240, 283, 366, 403. (B. P.)

Krauth, CHARLES PORTERFIELD, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Lutheran divine, eldest son of Dr. Charles Philip Krauth (q. v.), was born at Martinsburg, Va., March 17, 1823. He graduated from Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, in 1839; studied theology under Drs. Schmucke and Schmidt; was ordained in 1842, and became pastor in Baltimore, Md. He subsequently occupied the same position in Winchester, Va. (1848-55), and Pittsburgh, Pa. In 1859 he was called to the pastorate of St. Mark's Lutheran Church, Philadelphia, and two years afterwards became editor of the Lutheran and Missionary. In 1864 he was appointed professor of theology and Church history in the new Lutheran Seminary, in Philadelphia, and in 1868 professor of philosophy in the University of Pennsylvania, of which he became vice-provost five years subsequently, a position which he retained until his death, Jan. 2, 1883. He had continued preaching, having temporary charge of various churches in the same city, and spent some time in the West Indies in 1852, a visit which occasioned his Sketches of the Danish West Indies. He is the author of a large number of works, among which we mention, a translation of Tholuck's Commentary on John (1859):—Conservative Reformation (1872):—Berkeley's Philosophical Writings (1874):—and an enlarged edition of Fleming's Vocabulary of Philosophy (1877). He was several times president of the Lutheran council, a member of various literary societies, and a member of the American Committee on Bible Revision. His rare attainments, ripe scholarship, genuine catholicity, wise conservatism, and noble spirit made his influence wide and deep, not only in his own denomination, but far beyond it. See Luth. Church Rev. July, 1883.

Krita (or Satya), the age of truth, according to the Hindû system, being the earliest in the history of the human race, the one in which man sprang from the hand of his Creator, pure and sinless, not divided into conflicting orders, and with all his faculties working together in harmony.

Kritzler, HEINRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1829. For some time preacher in Fränkisch-Grumbach, Hesse, he was called in 1875 as professor of the theological seminary at Herborn, and died April 11, 1878. He wrote, Die Heldenzeiten des Christenthums (Leipsic, 1856):—Humanität und Christenthum (Gotha, 1867, 2 vols.):—Die deutsche evangelische Kirche in der Gegenwart (1869):—Civitas Christiana (Wiesbaden, 1874). (B. P.)

Krodo, in German mythology, was a god represented as a man standing on a large fish, holding a vessel of flowers in his right hand, in his left a wheel. He is said to have a similarity to Saturn, but wherein it consists is hard to tell.

Kromayer, JOHANN ABRAHAM, a German theologian, grandson of Jerome (q. v.), was born in 1665 at Ohrdruf, in Thuringia. He studied theology at Jena, was in 1691 deacon, in 1696 pastor and superintendent at his native place, and died April 19, 1733. He wrote, De Usu Lingue Arabicæ in Addiscenda Lingua Ebrææ et Explicanda Sacra Scriptura:—Comment. Theol. de Potestate Ecclesiastica:—Dispositiones Memoriales Librorum et Capitulum Biblicorum tum Veteris tum Novi Testamenti:—Specimen Fontium Scripturæ Apertorum Editum in Illust. Vaticinibus Hoseæ, Joelis et Amos. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Kshattriya, the military caste of the Hindûs, sprung from the arm of Brahma, whose office it is to protect their fellows from internal violence and outward assault. Their duties are to defend the people, give alms, and read the Vedas; and at any age up to twenty-two and twenty-four they must be invested with the mark of the caste. It no longer exists, however, as a distinct caste or division of society.

Kualina, in the mythology of the Caribbeans, is the head of the heavenly spirits. He causes thunder by pursuing those who have been guilty of a sin.

Küchler, CARL GUSTAV, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1796, and died at Leipsic in 1863, professor of philosophy and licentiate of theology. He wrote, Præcepta Pauli Apostoli de Tradenda Religionis Doctrina (Leipsic, 1820):—De Simplicitate Scripturarum Sacrarum in Commentariis de Vita Jesu Christi Commentatio (1821, 1827):—Vita Jesu Christi Græce, etc. (1835):—De Locis Aliquot Evangeliorum ab Oratoribus Sacris Perperam haud Raro Utripsatis (1847). He also published some sermons. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 748 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 551-568; ii, 265. (B. P.)

Kühn, ANDREAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Dresden, May 29, 1624. He studied at different universities, and died at Dantzic, Sept. 30, 1702. He wrote, De Jure Dei in Creaturas:—De Ordine Decretorum Divinorum:—De Puncto et Momento Discrepantiæ Inter Lutheranos et Reformatos:—De Pernicie et Morte Judææ Matt. xxvii, 5:—Aphorismi Practici ex Theologia Morali. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Kulik (or Kulikétu), one of the chiefs of the Nagas, or serpents, in Hindû mythology, who complained to the Lord of the universe that for no fault of his he was continually tormented by the Suras, or inferior gods. In answer to his prayer, Brahma is said to have enjoined that he should receive adoration like the devas from each human being, and that mortals who refused to pay such worship to him should be cut off by some unnatural death, and deprived of the power of rising higher in the scale of created beings. See Hardwick, Christ and Other Masters.

Kumano-Goo, a species of ordeal in use among the Japanese for the detection of crime. The goo is a piece of paper, formally sealed with the signet of the Jammabos (q. v.), on which are drawn several mysterious characters, and the figures of various ill-omened birds. All goos are not of equal value; the most powerful, and those most dreaded by the dæmons, come from a place called Kumano. The ordeal above named consists in making the accused party swallow a small piece of goo in a certain quantity of water. If he be guilty, the goo twinges and gripes him in the most violent manner, till he is obliged to confess his guilt.

Kumaon Version of the SCRIPTURES. The Kumaon dialect is closely allied to the Hinduwee, and is spoken in the province of Kumaon, subject to Great Britain. A version of the New Test. was commenced at Serampore in 1815, and was completed at press about the year 1826. It has never been reprinted since. See Bible of Every Land, p. 123. (B. P.)

Kunstmann, FRIEDRICH, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Nuremberg in 1811. In 1847 he was made professor of canon-law at the University of Munich, and died Aug. 15, 1867. He published, Rhabanus Maurus (Mayence, 1841):—Die gemischten Ehen unter den christlichen Confessionen Deutschlands dargestellt (1839):—Grenzzüge eines vergleichenden Kirchen-Rechtes der christlichen Confessionen (Munich, 1867). (B. P.)

Kunth, JOHANN SIGMUND, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Liegnitz, Silesia, Oct. 3, 1700. He studied at different universities, was pastor and superintendent at Baruth, in Upper Lusatia, and died in 1779. Kunth is known as the author of the beautiful hymn, Es ist noch eine Ruhe vorhanden (Engl. transl. in

Winkworth, Lyra Germanica, i, 195: "Yes, there remaineth yet a rest!" See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iv, 451 sq. (B. P.)

Kunze, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born in Saxony, and educated at the Orphan House and the University of Halle. Upon a requisition from the St. Michael and Zion churches at Philadelphia, Pa., he was selected by the theological faculty of Halle, and ordained as rector of those churches in 1784. Fourteen years he was connected with the Lutheran congregations in Philadelphia, under various names, and then he accepted a call to a church in New York city, where he labored about twenty-four years. At one time he was professor of Hebrew in Columbia College. By express appointment of the founder of Hartwick Seminary he was made professor of theology in that institution, a position which he continued to hold until his death, July 24, 1807, at the age of sixty-three years. It was said of him that he was the most learned theologian of the Lutheran Church in America. His library was extensive, and he had a large acquaintance with Oriental literature. As a preacher, he was distinguished for eloquence and the instructive character of his discourses. With the assistance of Mr. Streibek, he published an English Lutheran Hymn-book in 1795. See Quar. Rev. of Evang. Luth. Church, vii, 277; Lutheran Observer, Feb. 15, 1833.

Kupay, in the mythology of the Peruvians, was an evil spirit, whom they did not worship, but at the mention of whose name they spat on the ground, a sign of contempt.

Kurdish Version of the Scriptures. The Kurdish is in all probability a remnant of the old Farsi or Parsi language, and bears much resemblance to modern Persian. Like most dialects used merely for oral communication through a large extent of territory, the language of the Kurds, having no literature or written standard of appeal, undergoes very considerable alterations and modifications in different places, by intermixture with the language of neighboring nations. Thus the Kurds dwelling in the Ottoman empire have adopted many Turkish words, while corrupted Syriac words have crept into the dialects of the tribes who live in the vicinity, or have embraced the religion of the Nestorian Christians. In 1822 the Rev. H. Leevess proposed to the British and Foreign Bible Society to have a version in Kurdish made. The preparation of the version was intrusted to bishop Schevris, at Tabreez. In 1827 Mr. Leevess forwarded to the committee the portions of the New Test. which had been translated. But this translation was not intelligible to the Kurds. In 1856 the above society published in Armeno-Kurdish the gospel of Matthew, which was followed by the other gospels. In the Armeno-Kurdish dialect the entire New Test. is now extant. See Bible of Every Land, p. 82. (B. P.)

Kurko was a god of the Lithuanians, or heathen Prussians. His seat was not at Romowe, where the gods of the ancient Prussians presided; but everywhere in the country his idol stood under mighty oak-trees. The first-fruits of the field were sacrificed to him.

Kurma, in Hindû mythology, is the incarnation of the god Vishnu as a tortoise. When the mountain Mandar was moved into the milky sea, for the purpose of preparing the drink of immortality, it threatened to sink in the waves; but Vishnu, in his second incarnation, supported it as a tortoise, and thus the world now stands.

Kurudu, in Lamaism, is one of the seven holy relics placed on the altars in the temple of the Lamaite deity. It is a drum, in which all the prayers are written on a long strip of parchment, wound around two rolls. If one of these rolls is turned by a crooked handle, the prayers wind themselves around this roll from the other. Thus these prayers all appear in order under the cover of Kurudu. Praying, among the Kalmucks, Tamuls, Mongolians, etc., means to turn this handle and let God read them. Those praying continue their daily occupations during prayer without disturbing the sanctity of the act.

Kusa, the sacred grass of the Hindûs, on which the Yogi, or Hindû ascetic, is required to sit motionless and meditate.

Kusaian Version of the Scriptures. The Kusaian is a dialect spoken in Strong Island, Micronesia. In 1868 the gospel of John was published in this language by the American Bible Society. (B. P.)

Kusala, merit, among the Buddhists, which is included in Karma (q. v.). "There are three principal meanings of the word kusala, viz., freedom from sickness, exemption from blame, and reward; but as used by Buddha, its primary idea is that of cutting, or excision. It has a cognate use in the word kusa, the sacrificial grass that cuts with both its edges the hand of him who lays hold of it carelessly. That which is cut by kusala is kidsha, evil desire, or the cleaving to existence. Akusala is the opposite of kusala. That which is neither kusala nor akusala is awajdkrata: it is not followed by any consequence; it receives no reward, either good or bad." See Hardy, Eastern Monachism, pp. 5, 6, 276, 301.

Küster, SAMUEL CHRISTIAN GOTTFRIED, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Havelberg, Aug. 18, 1762. From 1804 till 1829 he was director of the teachers' seminary; in 1830 he was appointed superintendent and first preacher at the Friedrichs-Werder Church, and died at Neustadt-Eberswalde, Aug. 22, 1838, doctor of theology. Besides sermons and ascetical works, he published Die Psalmen, mit Einleitungen und Anmerkungen bearbeitet (Berlin, 1832). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 754; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 251, 257, 260, 295, 302, 305, 315, 339, 342, 396. (B. P.)

Kutschker, JOHANN BAPTIST, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born April 11, 1810, at Wiese, in Austro-Silesia. He studied at Olmütz, was made priest in 1833, and doctor of theology in 1834. From that time on till 1851 he acted as professor of moral theology at Olmütz, was then appointed court-chaplain at Vienna, and in 1862 cathedral-provost and general-vicar of the Vienna diocese. He was the right hand of cardinal Rauscher (q. v.), and took an active part in all ecclesiastical affairs. At the special request of the latter he was appointed his successor, and his appointment as prince-archbishop of Vienna was made in 1876. In 1877 he was made cardinal, and died Jan. 27, 1881. He was a very moderate prelate, and Austria owes it to him that she was enabled to bring about the present religious legislation, without coming into a bitter conflict with the Roman see. He always went with the government party. He wrote, Die gemischten Ehen, von dem katholisch-kirchlichen Standpunkte (3d ed. Vienna, 1842):—Das Eherecht der katholischen Kirche (1856-57, 5 vols.). (B. P.)

Kutuchta, the chief priest of the Kalmuck Tartars and Western Mongols. Formerly he was subject to the Dalai-Lama (q. v.) of Thibet, but in course of time he made a schism among the Lamaists, and established himself on an equal footing with the Dalai-Lama himself. He is regarded as a very sacred personage, and there is more or less of mystery always connected with his person in the minds of the common people.

Kuzmany, CARL, a Protestant theologian, who died at Presburg, Hungary, Aug. 14, 1866, and was for some time professor at Vienna, is the author of Praktische Theologie der evangelischen Kirche augsburgischer und helvetischer Confession (3 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 754 sq. (B. P.)

Kwambak, the first officer at the court of the Dairi (q. v.) in Japan, and who represents that pontiff when the dignity devolves on a woman or a child.

Kwan-shi-in, one of the three divinities unknown to the original Buddhists, but worshipped in China as scarcely inferior to Gotama Buddha himself. He is also known by the name of Padma-pani, or lotus bearer. In many districts of Thibet he is incarnate, under the name of Padma-pani, in the person of the Dalai-Lama (q. v.). In Thibet and Mongolia he is represented with innumerable eyes and hands, and sometimes with as many as ten heads. In China this deity is exhibited with a female figure and female decorations.

Kyninmund, ALEXANDER DE, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of Aberdeen in 1357. Here he remained until about 1376, when he was sent on an embassy from king Robert II to renew the ancient league with France, and died at Scone the year after his return, in 1382. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 111.

Kyrko-Handbok, the ritual of the Swedish Church, revised and published in 1811. It is divided into fifteen chapters, containing the Psalms, the morning prayer and communion service, the evening prayer and the holy-day service, the Litany, the forms of baptism, confirmation, marriage, and churching of women, the funeral service, the forms of consecration of churches and of bishops, the form of ordination of priests, etc.

Kyrko-Ordningen, a book containing the laws regulating the government and discipline of the Church of Sweden, first published in 1686.

Kyrko-rad (church council), a church court in Sweden, inferior to the diocesan consistories, and nearly answering to a presbytery. It is composed of clergymen, and of laymen elected by the parishioners.

L.

Laan, PETER, a Dutch theologian, was born Dec. 24, 1696. He studied at Utrecht and Leyden, and acted as preacher at different places from 1722 to 1739. In the latter year he was called as professor of theology and university preacher to Franeker, and died April 4, 1743. He published, Disp. ad Inscript. Paulini xxvi:—Ad Job r. 23:—De Tolerantia Civilis ad Socinianos non Extendenda, Genusis Meminit Minime Iniqua. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Labaree, BENJAMIN, D.D., LL.D., a Congregational minister and distinguished educator, was born in Charlestown, N. H., June 3, 1801. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1828, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1831; was ordained at Bradford, Mass., Sept. 26 of the same year, and for a time was a home missionary in Tennessee. From 1832 to 1837 he was professor of ancient languages, and president of Jackson College; for the next three years secretary of the Central American Educational Society. He was called to the presidency of Middlebury College, Vt., in 1840, and remained in office twenty-six years. From 1867 to 1869 he resided in Hyde Park, Mass., preaching for a part of this time at South Weymouth. His residence thereafter was in West Roxbury (1870-75), Charlestown, N. H., and Walpole from 1880 till his death, Nov. 15, 1883. See Boston Advertiser, Nov. 21, 1883; Trien. Catalogue of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 94; N. Y. Observer, Nov. 22, 1883; Conn. Year-book, 1884, p. 27. (J. C. S.)

Labbé, MARTIN, a French prelate and missionary, was born at Le Luc, near Caen. He entered the Society of Jesus, and requested to be sent to the foreign missions. He went to Cochinchina in 1678, and returned in 1697. Innocent XII made him bishop of Tilopolis. After a short sojourn in Europe the abbot returned to Cochinchina, where he lived fifteen years, in the midst of fatigues and perils. He died in 1723, leaving a letter to pope Clement XI, on the worship of the Chinese; also a memoir on the persecutions. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Laberenz, GOTTFRIED, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Fulda, May 6, 1802. He received holy orders in 1825, and was appointed at the same time professor of Oriental languages and of Old-Test. exegesis. In 1829 he was cathedral dean, in 1836 doctor of theology, and died March 13, 1875, at his native place. He wrote, De Vera Jonæ Interpretatione (Fulda, 1836);—Katholische Homiletik (Ratisbon, 1844);—Grammatik der Hebr. Sprache (Paderborn, 1867). (B. P.)

Labouchère, PIERRE ANTOINE, a noted French Protestant painter, was born at Nantes, Nov. 26, 1807, and studied in Germany and in England. He had been placed at first in a commercial house at Antwerp, and made, in 1827, a journey to the United States, as secretary of M. Bates, and in 1832 went to China as supercargo of a vessel of Nantes, which belonged to his elder brother. Painting, however, seems to have been his predominating passion, and a visit to Antwerp decided his vocation, and he accordingly became a pupil of Paul Delaroche. He died at Paris in 1873. Labouchère chiefly painted historical subjects, especially those of the Reformation in Germany. He left a set of subjects drawn from the life of Luther, which have been engraved, and are accompanied with a text by Merle d'Aubigné. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

La Bruyère, STEPHEN DE, a French prelate, was elected bishop of Nantes some time before 1213, and was involved in a contest with Peter Mauclerc, duke of Brittany, on the privileges of the clergy, which resulted in the bishop's forcible expulsion from his diocese in 1219. He withdrew to Rome, but after some months returned to his functions, and died at Nantes, Feb. 8, 1227. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Labyrinth. At St. Bertin's, in St. Omer, there was one of those curious floors, representing the Temple of Jerusalem, with stations for pilgrims, and actually visited and traversed by them as a compromise for not going to the Holy Land in fulfilment of a vow. The labyrinth at Sens was destroyed in 1768; those of Arras and Amiens shared the same fate in 1825. There is a round labyrinth in the centre of the nave of Chartres, inlaid with lead; another, of encaustic tiles, in the chapter-house of Bayeux; and a third, of octagonal shape, in the nave of St. Quentin.

Lachish. On the identification of this place, Lieut. Conder remarks (Tent Work, ii, 168):

"We visited Um Lana, the site proposed by Dr. Robinson, and could not but conclude that no ancient or important city ever stood there, nor has the name any radical similarity to that of Lachish. (This is surely a mistake, for the initial L is at least the same, and no more can be said in favor of his own proposal.) Much nearer, indeed, would be the title el-Hesi, applying to a large ancient site with springs, near the foot of the hills, about in the proper position for Lachish. The modern site means 'a water-plot,' and, if it is a corruption of Lachish, it would afford a second instance of change which is well known to have taken place in the case of Michmash—the k being changed to a guttural h. The distance from Beit Jibrin to Tell el-Hesi is not much greater than that given in the Onomasticon for Lachish, while the proximity of Egla (Ajlân), and the position south of Beit Jibrin, on a principal road, near the hills, and by one of the only springs in the plain, all seem to be points strongly confirming this view."

Tell el-Hesi is laid down on the Ordnance Map ten and a half miles south-west of Beit Jibrin, and is described in the accompanying Memoirs (iii, 290) as "a truncated cone, with a broad, flat top, and traces of ruins round its base. There are several springs in the neighborhood, but the water is bad." This site was known in the Middle Ages as Alkassi (Boheddin, Vita Salad, p. 228). But Tristram (Bible Places, p. 86) and Trelawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.) still adhere to Um-Lakhi, which lies three miles north-west of Tell el-Hesi, and twelve and a half miles west by south from Beit Jibrin. Its remains are thus described by Guérin (Judea, ii, 299):

"These ruins cover a space of about a kilometre and a half in circumference. They are situated partly on a hill-top, and partly in the midst of fields, either cultivated or bristling with thistles and brambles. A multitude of excavations show that stones, the fragments of ancient buildings, have been taken from the place. There remains, however, a good quantity of materials scattered on the ground. In one of these holes I found a Corinthian capital of grayish white marble, waiting for some one to carry it off. Fifteen ancient silos continue to serve the Arabs of the neighborhood."

Lachrymatory, a small glass or earthen vessel, formerly supposed to have been used among the ancient heathens to receive the tears of surviving relatives or friends, wept for the dead, but now shown to have been merely pots of ointment or perfume, which, with their contents, were buried with the urns and ashes of the deceased. See TEARS.

Lacroix (De Chevières), Jean Baptiste de, a French prelate, belonged at first to the order of the Knights of Malta, was afterwards abbot of Gilmont, in the diocese of Auch, and embarked in 1683 for Canada, to preach to the Indians.

"Lachrymatory" (from the Roman catacombs). See AMA.

He was consecrated bishop of Quebec while on a visit to Paris in 1688. He returned soon afterwards to Canada, where he built a hospital, in which he died, Dec. 26, 1727. He left État Présent de l'Église et de la Colonie dans la Nouvelle-France (Paris, 1688). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lacroix, John Power, Ph.D., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Haverhill, O., Feb. 13, 1833. In his boyhood, while at farm work, he displayed an insatiable thirst for book knowledge. He graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, in 1857; soon after went to New Orleans, where he spent two years in teaching; and then, having cleared himself of college debt, returned north, and in the fall of 1859 entered the Ohio Conference. His fields of labor were Tilton Circuit, Spencer Chapel, Ironton, and Piketon. He spent sixteen months of close application in the universities of Germany in 1865 and 1866, and in the fall of the latter year was elected to the chair of modern languages and history in the Ohio Wesleyan University, which office he held till his death, Sept. 22, 1879. His translations of De Pressensé's Religion and the Reign of Terror; or, The Church During the French Revolution, Naivelle's Problem of Evil, Wulke's Christian Ethics, together with his own Life of Rudolph Stier, will perpetuate his name in scholarly circles. Dr. Lacroix also contributed many able articles to this cyclopædia, as well as writing a valuable Manual on Ethics for the Chautauqua Literary Circle, and, in connection with a fellow-professor, an Introductory Book of Latin. He was the special friend of young men, and hundreds of students who came under his influence at the university, now scattered all over the land and in other nations, bear cheerful testimony to his great personal worth. As a thinker and writer he was bold, independent, and progressive, fervent in his attachment to truth, ardent in his devotion to the Church, broad in charity, and incapable of bigotry or prejudice. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1879, p. 47.

Lada (or Lado), in Slavonic mythology, was the goddess of beauty and love, worshipped in Kiev. Lel (love), Did (return love), and Polol (marriage) were her sons. There are still traces of an idol worship in the yearly celebrated festival of Lada and Did, which falls on the Thursday before Whitsuntide.

Ladvoat, BILLIARD NICOLAS, a French prelate, was born at Paris in 1620. He entered the ministry, was received in the Sorbonne, Dec. 24, 1652, and became canon of Notre Dame and vicar-general of the coadjutor of Paris, Albert de Conti, cardinal of Retz, whom he assisted for several years in his political intrigues, in the administration of his diocese, and whom he accompanied to Rome in 1675. In 1677 he obtained the episcopal see of Boulogne-sur-Mer. He governed his diocese wisely, where he also founded a seminary and some establishments of instruction and of charity. He died April 14, 1681, leaving Vindicia Parthenica (Paris, 1679), which maintains that the Virgin Mary was taken up into heaven bodily. He also composed the first rules which were observed in the Hôtel Dieu de Paris. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Laelius, LAURENTIUS, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born in Franconia, April 15, 1572. He studied at Jena and Wittenberg, was in 1599 deacon, and attended the colloquy at Ratisbon in 1601; in 1602 he was rector at Heilbronn, in 1605 first preacher at Onolzbach, and died July 26, 1634. He wrote, Criterium Fidei:—Index Hæresium Contronensiarum et Schismatum, etc.:—Ezegetis Articuli de Persona et Officio Christi Bellurmino Opposita. See Freher, Theatrum Eruditorium; Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Laetus, GEORGE, a preacher at Lublin, Poland, who died March 27, 1649, is the author of, Peregrinatio Pauli Romana:—Comment. Pract. in Pauli Conversionem:—De Ratione Concionandi ad Methodum Anglicanam Conformata. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 569; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

La Ferronnays, JULES BASILE FERRON DE, a French prelate, was born at the castle of St. Mards-les-Ancenis, Jan. 2, 1735. After he had finished his studies, he entered into orders, and followed cardinal Bernis to Rome, to the conclave which elected Clement XIV, in 1769. On Dec. 24 of the same year he was nominated bishop of St. Brienc, and was transferred to the bishopric of Bayonne in 1774, and to the episcopal see of Lisieux, where he remained until 1790. He refused to take the oath to the civil constitution of the clergy, and left France in 1791. He was pursued by the French soldiers, and retired to Bavaria, where he died, May 15, 1799. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lafitau, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, a French prelate, was born at Bordeaux in 1685. He studied among the Jesuits, and for some time was very active in the affairs of Jansenism. He was sent to Rome as an ambassador, was consecrated there bishop of Sisteron in 1719, and took possession of his see the following year. He is said to have been immoral early in life, but afterwards a pattern of piety. Lafitau died at Sisteron, April 3, 1764, leaving several works on practical religion, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lafo al-jemin (the thief on the right hand), a festival observed by the Syrian Christians in commemoration of the penitent thief. It occurs on the octave of Easter.

Laforet, NICOLAS JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born in 1823 at Graide, Namur (Belgium). In 1848 he was called as professor to Louvain, and died Jan. 26, 1872. He wrote, Histoire de la Théologie Dogmatique:—Vie et Travaux d'Arnold Tûs:—Les Dogmes Catholiques:—La Papauté et la Civilisation:—Histoire de la Philosophie. (B. P.)

Laga, in Norse mythology, was the goddess of the refreshing springs and waters. She lives in Sôquabekr, a silver palace, by which the waters of the earth flow. Odin visits her daily to bathe there.

Lagarto, PEDRO, a Portuguese prelate and theologian, was born at Setubal about 1524. In 1540 he joined the monks of Arrabida, who lived under the rule of St. Francis; afterwards studied theology at Salamanca, and was elected in 1576 provincial of Arrabida. He died July 28, 1590, leaving Summa Utilis Omnium Notabilium. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lagomarsini, GERONIMO, a celebrated Italian Humanist, was born Sept. 30, 1698, at Porto-Santo-Maria (Spain). In 1708 he went to Italy, and commenced his studies in the College of the Jesuits at Prato, in Tuscany. In 1721 he began to teach rhetoric at the College of Arezzo. Four years afterwards he went to Rome to complete his theological studies, after which he returned to his duties at Arezzo. In 1732 he was appointed to the chair of rhetoric at Florence, and in 1751 to that of Greek in the Collegium Gregorianum at Rome, which position he occupied until his death, May 18, 1773. He left several works on classical literature, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lagrange (d'Arquien), HENRI DE, a French prelate, was born at Calais in 1613, of an ancient family of the 15th century, which had been settled at Berry. He went to Poland about 1674, where he finally devoted himself to the Church, and was consecrated cardinal, in 1695, by Innocent XII. After the death of Sobieski, his son-in-law, the queen retired with her father to Rome, where Lagrange died seven years afterwards, May 24, 1707. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lagrenée, LOUIS JEAN FRANÇOIS, an eminent French painter, was born at Paris, Dec. 30, 1724, and studied under Charles Vanloo. He gained the grand prize of the French Academy for his picture of Joseph Explaining the Dreams, and at the age of twenty visited England, and was employed by Antonio Verrio upon the large picture of St. Bartholomew's Hospital. He was also unanimously chosen by the commissioners to paint the cupola of St. Paul's. He died in Paris, June 17, 1801. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Lagus, DANIEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1618 at Colberg, Pomerania. He studied at Königsberg and Wittenberg, was in 1658 doctor of theology, and for some time professor of theology at Greifswalde. He died May 30, 1678, leaving, Comment. Super Epistolam Pauli ad Galatas, Ephesios, Philippenses:—Examen Trium Confessionum Reformatarum, Marchiæ, Lipsiæ et Thoruniensis:—Vindiciæ Evangeliorum Dominicæ et Festivæ contra Thom. Stapleton:—De inveniendi Jesu Decantato ad Psal. xvi, 10, 11:—De Omnipræsentia Humanæ Christi Naturæ:—De Bonorum Operum Necessitate ad Salutem. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Laha, a tablet suspended in a Buddhist Wihara (q. v.) in Ceylon, upon which anything might be written which was intended for the information of the priests.

Lahas, in Lamaism, are heavenly spirits who, long before the creation of the world, lived in unspeakable felicity, which was of an earthly nature. Above the earth there were twenty worlds inhabited by these beings, the highest four of which were so purified that their inhabitants lived without food. When the world was created many of these Lahas descended to it, and became so earthly they were subjected to its laws. When they ate of the fruits of this earth they became black, and the sun and moon were therefore created to give light to this otherwise dark world. The human family, as also the sunken animal world, is indebted to the Lahas for their existence.

Lahmam is doubtless the present Khurbet el-Lahm, located on the Ordinance Map at two and a half miles south of Beit-Jibrin, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (iii, 283) as "foundations, heaps of stones, wells, cisterns, and caverns. The masonry seems probably of Byzantine date, but the site to be older."

Lain, Saint. See LATINIUS.

Laing, JOHN, a Scotch prelate, was first rector of Tannadice, in the shire of Angus, and Linlithgow, and was next preferred to the office of high treasurer in 1465, which office he held until 1468, at which time he was made lord-register, and about the same time enjoyed the rectories of Suthet and Newlands. He was promoted to the episcopal see of Glasgow in 1474; was made lord high chancellor in 1482, and died Jan. 11, 1482-83. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 253.

Lairesse, GÉRARD, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Liege in 1640. He studied under Bertholet Flémel, and at the age of sixteen had gained considerable reputation from his efforts. He visited Utrecht, and afterwards removed to Amsterdam, where his reputation rose so high that the Dutch esteem him their greatest historical painter. He died at Amsterdam in 1711. The following are some of his best works: The Fall of our First Parents; Adam and Eve Driven from Paradise; Joseph and his Brethren; The Child Jesus. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Läis, GIUSEPPE MARIA, an Italian prelate, was born March 24, 1775, at Rome, of Bavarian parentage. He was educated at first among the Jesuits, and finished his studies at the University of La Sapienza, where he also took the degree of a doctor in utroque jure, and was ordained priest. A short time after he became vicar-general to cardinal Galeffi, and commendatory abbot of Subiaco. In 1817 he was appointed bishop of Hippone in partibus, and administrator of the diocese of Anagni. He died at Terentium, July 18, 1836, leaving De Universa Christi Ecclesia. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lakshana, a Hindû name for the characteristic beauties or signs of a supreme Buddha. These were divided into three classes: 1. The two hundred and sixteen Mangalya-lakshana, of which there were one hundred and eight on each foot; 2. The thirty-two Mahapurusha-lakshana, or superior beauties; 3. The eight Anuvyanjana-lakshana, or inferior beauties.

Lakshmi, in Hindû mythology, was the goddess of beauty and loveliness, the wife of Vishnu, generated from the foam of the sea, similar to Venus Anadyomene of the Greeks. She is also the goddess of plenty, and as such is called Sri or Shri. She is also the goddess of felicity, and thus identical with Mangola Deva. She often serves poets as an ideal of womanly beauty.

Lakum. This site Trelawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.) confounds with that of Adam, locating it at Damieh; perhaps from misunderstanding the ambiguous language of Tristram (Bible Places, p. 278), who thinks that "Lakum may be traced in Kejir Kama," which is laid down on the Ordinance Map at two and a quarter miles southwest of Darnieh, and eight miles west from the south end of the Sea of Galilee. The accompanying Memoirs (i. 391) say of it: "There are ruins in this village, and portions of fine limestone columns, but no capitals. There is also a circular basalt olive-press and cisterna."

La Lane, NOËL DE, one of the most famous French theologians of the 17th century, was born of a noble family at Paris, and died in 1673. In 1653 he was sent to Rome to defend the cause of Jansenius, and his famous speech, which he delivered before pope Innocent X. is contained in the twenty-second chapter of the sixth volume of the Journal de Saint-Amour. He was a doctor of the Sorbonne, abbot of Notre Dame de Valcroissant, and wrote, De Initio Pie Voluntatis:—La Grace Victorieuse:—Examen de la Conduite des Religieuses de Port-Royal, etc. (1664):—Lettre sur le Livre de M. Chamillard, etc.:—Défense de la Foi des Religieuses de Port-Royal (1667, 2 parts). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lallouette, AMBROSE, a French theologian, was born in 1654 at Paris, and died May 9, 1724. He wrote, Discours sur la Présence Réelle:—Histoire des Traductions Françaises de l'Écriture Sainte:—Extraits sur Différens Points de Morale:—Avis pour Lire Utilement l'Évangile. See Moreri, Dictionnaire; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

La Marche, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French prelate, was born in the diocese of Quimper in 1729, of a noble family from Brittany. After the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle he left the army to embrace the ecclesiastical calling. He was first canon and grand-vicar of Treguier, then abbot of St. Aubin des Bois, and in 1772 was elected bishop of St. Pol de Leon. At the commencement of the Revolution La Marche refused to obey the civil constitution, and, Jan. 8, 1791, fled to London, where he was befriended by Burke and other Englishmen, who charged him with the distribution of means of relief to the French emigrants. This position he held until his death, Nov. 25, 1806. He wrote, Mandemens, also a Lettre Pastorale and an Ordonnance, the last in London, Aug. 20, 1791, to warn his diocesans against schism. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lamasery, a collection of small houses built around one or more Buddhist temples in Tartary and Thibet, as a residence for the Lamas. See LAMAISM.

Lamb, ANDREW, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Brechin in 1610, and was translated to the see of Galloway in 1619, which he held until his death in 1634. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 167-281.

Lambert, BERNARD, a French theologian, the last of the Jansenistic school, was born at Salernes, Provence, in 1738. When made professor of theology, Lambert published some theses, which were at once censured by the Roman see, and he had to leave Limoges in consequence. He then went to Grenoble, where he remained some time. The episcopal see of Lyons was then occupied by the famous Montazet, who gathered about himself all opposed to the Jesuits, including Lambert. When Lambert went to Paris, monsieur de Beaumont, an opponent of the Jansenists, was archbishop there, and refused to receive father Lambert into his diocese; but some bishops interfered in his behalf, and he was admitted on condition that he would write only against philosophers and unbelievers. Lambert died at Paris, Feb. 27, 1813. Of his many writings we mention, Apologie de l'État Religieux:—Traité sur le Sacrifice de Jésus-Christ (1778):—Idée de l'Œuvre des Secours Selon les Sentimens de ses Véritables Défenseurs (1786):—Traité Dogmatique et Moral de la Justice Chrétienne (1788):—La Vérité et la Sainteté du Christianisme (1796):—Exposition des Prédications et des Promesses Faites à l'Église (1806, 2 vols.), a work in which he admits the doctrine of the Millenarians, and the theory of those who regarded the pope as antichrist. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lamberton, WILLIAM, a Scotch prelate, was chancellor of the Church of Glasgow in 1292, and elected bishop of St. Andrews in June, 1298. Bishop Lamberton strenuously opposed the encroachments made by king Edward I of England upon the constitution of Scotland, and contributed his hearty endeavors to set and keep king Robert Bruce upon the Scottish throne. He died in 1328. He built a palace for the bishop of St. Andrews, also ten churches belonging to the diocese, and did a great many other good and noble works. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 21.

Lami, BERNARD. See LAMY.

Lami, FRANÇOIS, a French Benedictine, was born at Montireau, near Chartres, in 1636, and died at St. Denis, April 4, 1711. After having served in the army, he embraced a monastic life at the age of twenty-three. In spite of his controversies with Bossuet, Malebranche, Arnauld, Nicole, Duguet, and others, he was highly esteemed by all who knew him for his sincerity and piety. He wrote, De la Connaissance de Soi-Même (Paris, 1694-98, 6 vols.; improved ed. 1700):—Le Nouvel Athéisme Renversé, Contre Spinoza (1696):—Vérité Évidente de la Religion Chrétienne (1694):—Des Sentimens de Piété sur la Profession Religieuse (1697):—Leçons de la Sagesse sur l'Engagement au Service de Dieu (1703):—L'Incrédule Amené à la Religion par la Raison (1710):—Les Gémissemens de l'Âme sous la Tyrannie du Corps (1700):—Conjectures sur Divers Effets du Tonnerre (1689). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lamp, THE, a ceremony practiced by the Maronites (q. v.), by way of anointing for the sick. They make a cake somewhat larger than the consecrated wafer of the Romanists, and put upon it seven pieces of cotton twisted with little pieces of straw, and place all together in a basin with some oil. Having read a portion of one of the gospels and epistles, with some prayers, they set fire to all the cotton. They now anoint with this oil the forehead, breast, and arms of every one present, and particularly of the sick person, saying at each unction, "May the Almighty, by his sacred unction, pardon all thy sins, and strengthen thy limbs as he did those of the poor man who was troubled with the palsy." Then they let the lamp burn till all the oil is exhausted. This rite is administered to the sick, and is not confined to the dying, as in the case of extreme unction in the Roman Catholic Church.

Lampadephoria (from λαμπάς, a torch, and φέρω, to bear), ancient Grecian games, celebrated in honor of Prometheus, Athena, and Hephestus, who taught men the use of fire. The game consisted in carrying an unextinguished torch through certain distances by a successive chain of runners, each taking it up at the point where another left it, and the one who permitted it to go out losing the game.

Lampādon Hemēra (from λαμπάς, a torch, and ἡμέρα, a day), the name given to the fifth day of the Eleusinian Mysteries (q. v.), because on that day the initiated marched two and two in procession, each with a torch in his hand, into the temple of Ceres at Eleusis.

Lampeter Brethren. See AGAPEMONK.

Lamps, CHRISTIAN. Many of these of ancient manufacture have been discovered in the catacombs and elsewhere. They were in general of similar form to those used by the Romans at the time, but often with Christian emblems upon them. See FISH.

Lamps, Festival of, a feast celebrated annually in Rajastban, in honor of the Hindū goddess, Lakshmi (q. v.). The festival is called Devnli, and every city, village, and encampment exhibits a most brilliant spectacle from the illumination. On this day it is incumbent upon every votary of Lakshmi to try the chance of dice, and from their success in the Dewali the prince, the chief, the merchant, and the artisan foretell the state of their coffers for the ensuing year.

Lampsacus, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Lampsaceum), held at Lampsaki, on the Hellespont, A.D. 364, as Pagi shows. Orthodox bishops were invited to it; and it is described as a council of Homoiousians by Sozomen (vi, 7) if the reading is correct. But those who directed it must have been really Semi-Arians; for they professed to be partisans of the Homoiousian formula, and of the creed published at Antioch, besides siding with Macedonius, by whom the godhead of the Holy Ghost was denied. What made Sozomen think well of them probably was that they were treated with marked favor by Valentinian; while they condemned the extreme party which Valens espoused, and which he ordered them into exile for dissenting from. On this, too, they seem to have despatched a still more orthodox account of themselves to Rome, which contented Liberius (Socinus, iv, 12; comp. Mansi, iii, 378).

Lamson, WILLIAM, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Danvers, Mass., Feb. 22, 1812. He studied at the South Reading (now Wakefield) Academy, graduated from Waterville College (now Colby University) in 1835, and was a tutor there one year. In the autumn of 1837 he was ordained pastor of the Church in Gloucester, Mass., where he remained until 1839, and then went to the Newton Theological Institution and studied two years. He was pastor in Thomaston, Me., about two years (1841 and 1842), and then returned to Gloucester as pastor until 1848. His next settlement was in Portsmouth, N. H., and his last in Brookline, Mass. (1859-75), where he died, Nov. 20, 1882. See Catbcart, Bapt. Encyclop. p. 669. (J. C. S.)

Lance (Λόγχη, cullellus), a liturgical instrument of the Greek Church, in the shape of a small knife formed like a spear, is used in the common Greek rite in the preparatory office of prothesis, to divide the host from the holy loaf previous to consecration. This earlier fraction, the primitive antiquity of which is doubtful, is distinctly symbolical, and has no reference to the subsequent distribution, for which another fraction has always been made. The typical allusion to the circumstances of our Lord's Passion receives greater force and vividness in the Greek Church, from the use of the "holy spear" for the division of the loaf, as commemorative of the piercing of our Lord's body by the Roman soldier. The priest makes four cuts to separate the host from the oblation, and also stabs it more than once, accompanying every cut or stab with appropriate texts of Scripture, e. g. "He was led as a lamb to the slaughter," "One of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side," etc.

The use of the holy spear is not found in the purely Oriental liturgies, e. g. those of the Syrians and Egyptians, a fact which leads Renaudot to question whether the rite is of primitive antiquity, since these churches borrowed their discipline from the Greek Church in the earliest ages. It is entirely unknown in the Western Church.

Ländler, KARL ADOLPH FERDINAND, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Schönebeck, near Magdeburg, Jan. 4, 1796. For some time rector of the Lyceum and preacher at Stolberg, in Saxony, he was called as member of consistory and preacher to Neustadt in 1828, and died in 1865, a doctor of philosophy.

He published sermons and some ascetical works. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 761 sq. (B. P.)

Landkisch, FRIEDRICH VON, a German writer, was born at Leipsic, March 12, 1618. He studied at his native place, was magister of philosophy in 1640, and died Oct. 22, 1669, a bookseller at Leipsic. He published Concordantia Germanico-Hebraico-Graeco (Leipsic, 1677, fol. often reprinted; best edition that of Reineccius, 1718). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 175; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Landaff, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Landavense). Three such are given in Mansi (ix, 763 sq.) dated A.D. 560; but, even if genuine, they were simply meetings of the bishop, his three abbots, and his clergy, for excommunicating or absolving great offenders: in the 1st case Meuric, in the 2d Morgan, kings of Glamorgan; in the 3d Gwaednerth, king of Gwent; all of them under Oudocens, third bishop of Landaff, and therefore scarcely before the 7th century. "The book, however, in which these records occur is a compilation of the 12th century" (Haddan and Stubbs, Councils and Documents, i, 125, 147).

Landal, WILLIAM, a Scotch prelate, was early rector of the Church of Kinkell, and was promoted to the see of St. Andrews in 1841. He was still bishop of St. Andrews in 1873, and present at the famous act of Parliament, April 4, that year. He died in the abbey of St. Andrews, on St. Thecla's day, Oct. 15, 1885. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 24.

Landauer, MOSES H., a Jewish rabbi of Germany, who died Feb. 8, 1841, is the author of, Jehova und Elohim, etc. (Stuttgart, 1836): — Wesen und Form des Pentateuchs (1838): — Uebersicht der Geschichte und Literatur der Kabbala (published in Literaturblatt des Orients, vi, 178 sq.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 219 sq.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 762. (B. P.)

Landerer, MAXIMILIAN ALBERT VON, a German theologian, one of the most learned and able, though not one of the best known, representatives of the school of theology occupying an intermediate position between the old supernaturalism and modern rationalism, was born at Maulbronn, Württemberg, Jan. 14, 1810. He studied at Tübingen, where Dörner (q. v.) was his fellow-student. In 1839 he was deacon at Göppingen, in 1841 professor at Tübingen, and died April 13, 1878. Rejecting the Hegelian principle of absolute knowledge, Landerer emphasized the religious experience in the department of systematic theology. He did not, however, forcibly separate it from the revelation of the Scriptures. The central doctrine in systematic theology he regarded as the perfect union of God and man in Jesus of Nazareth; and he laid special emphasis on the humanity of Christ, insisting, however, upon his supernatural birth and absolute sinlessness. Being not as imposing in presence as Baur or Beck, yet he became one of the most influential of the theologians of his school, and the more intimately the students came in contact with him, the more highly they learned to respect him. Landerer published very little. For the first edition of Herzog he contributed thirteen articles, the most prominent of which was the one on Melancthon. For the Jahrbücher für deutsche Theologie he wrote on "The relation of grace to the freedom of the will in the application of salvation." After his death some of his former pupils published from his manuscripts, Zur Dogmatik. Zwei akademische Reden, together with Landerer's Gedächtnissrede auf F. C. Baur (ed. by Bader and Weiss, Tübingen, 1879): — Predigten (ed. by P. Lang, Heilbronn, 1880): — Neuere Dogmengeschichte von Semmler bis auf die Gegenwart (published by Paul Zeller, 1881). See Worte der Erinnerung an Dr. M. A. Landerer (Tübingen, 1878); Wagenmann in Jahrbücher für deutsche Theologie (1878), part iii; Württembergisches Kirchen- und Schulblatt (eod.), No. 26-28; Protestantische Kirchenzeitung (eod.), No. 20; Schmidt, in Plitt-Herzog, Landi, GASPARO, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Piacenza in 1756, and studied the grand productions of Correggio and the Caracci. He gained the grand prize at the Academy of Parma for his fine picture of Tobias and Sarah, after which he was sent to Rome by the marquis of Landi, and studied under Pompeo Batoni. After gaining a number of prizes at the exhibitions, he was chosen professor of the Academy of St. Luke by pope Pius VI. In 1813 he was commissioned by the French government to execute several works, and was appointed a director of the School of Design established in the convent of Apollinari. His masterpiece is the picture in the Church of the Dominicans at Piacenza, representing Christ Ascending Mount Calvary. He died at Rome, Feb. 24, 1830. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Landis, ROBERT WHARTON, D.D., an eminent Presbyterian divine, son of Samuel Calvin Landis, a descendant of the old Huguenot family of Calvin, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 8, 1809. He was converted at seventeen, joined the Baptist Church, of which his parents were members, and commenced his theological studies in the same year. He remained but fifteen months at an academy, and three months under a private tutor, before entering upon his pastoral labors. At twenty he united with the Presbyterian Church, was licensed in 1831, and ordained in 1832. He continued his studies while carrying forward his work as pastor, and became possessed of rare literary attainments. In 1835 he was pastor at Providence and Norristown; in 1839 at Allentown; in 1842 at Bethlehem, N. J.; in 1849 at Hillsdale, N. Y.; in 1852 at Greenville; in 1853 at Paterson, N. J.; in 1856 at Iona, Mich.; in 1860 at Somerset, Ky.; in 1867 at Wilmington, Del. In all these places his preaching was attended with marked effect upon his hearers, and large numbers were converted. In 1868 he became professor in Danville Theological Seminary, where he remained one year. He died at Danville, Ky., Jan. 24, 1883. Dr. Landis was the author of several valuable works, and contributed largely to the religious and literary journals. See Nevins, Presb. Encyclop. s. v.

Landon, SEYMOUR, a veteran Methodist Episcopal minister, was born May 8, 1798, at Grand Island, in Lake Champlain, N. Y. He was converted in 1815, and in 1818 joined the New York Conference. He served the following charges: Charlotte Circuit, Vt.; Ticonderoga Circuit, N. Y. (twice); St. Albans Circuit, Vt.; Chazy Circuit, N. Y.; Whitehall Circuit; Poultney, Vt.; Sandy Hill and Glens Falls, N. Y.; York Street, Brooklyn (twice); Lansingburgh, N. Y.; New York; Rhinebeck; Newburgh; Sugar Loaf; Hudson; Hempstead, L. I.; Sag Harbor; West Winsted, Conn.; Grand Street, Brooklyn, L. I.; Greenpoint; Southport, Conn.; Watertown, N. Y.; Mount Vernon; Astoria, L. I.; Amityville and New Bridge; Springfield; Orient. He was presiding elder of Hartford and Long Island districts. He died at Jamaica, L. I., July 29, 1880. His effective ministry closed at Orient when he was seventy-four years old, after an active ministerial career of fifty-five consecutive years. In 1852 and 1860 he was a delegate to the General Conference, and in 1866 and 1864 he was a reserve delegate. He was a man of excessive diffidence, with a conscientiousness and firmness equally marked. Of majestic figure and handsome face, his amiability of disposition and other personal qualities made him a welcome ornament in every circle of society. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 80.

Landri (Lat. Landericus), Saint, twenty-eighth bishop of Paris, occupied that see about 650, under Clovis II, between Audebert and Chrodebert. He showed his love for the poor during the famine which desolated Paris in 651, by sacrificing all his own means, and selling even the vessels of the altar to help them. A tradition generally accepted in the diocese of Paris, and admitted by the Bollandists, attributes to St. Landri the founding and endowing of the hospital called Hôtel Dieu. The monk Marculfe dedicated to Landri his Formules, which he had probably collected at his instigation. The name of this prelate is found among those of the twenty-four bishops who signed the charter of emancipation which Clovis II accorded, in 653, to the abbey of St. Denis, founded by Dagobert I. The last breviary of Paris places the death of St. Landri in 656, and his festival day on June 3, but he is usually commemorated June 10. He was interred in the Church of St. Germain l'Auxerrois, then called St. Germain le Rond. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

Landriot, JEAN FRANÇOIS ANNE THOMAS, a distinguished French prelate, was born at Conches-le-Mines in 1816, and died at Rheims in 1874. He was vicar-general of Autun, in 1856 bishop of La Rochelle, and in 1866 archbishop of Rheims. He published, Discours et Instructions Pastorales (1856-60, 3 vols.); Conférences, Allocutions, Discours et Mandements (1856-64, 3 vols.); La Femme Forte (1863; 8th ed. 1868); La Femme Pieuse (1863, 2 vols.; 7th ed. 1874); La Prière Chrétienne (1862, 2 vols.; 6th ed. 1874); Le Christ de la Tradition (1865, 2 vols.); Les Béatitudes Évangéliques (1866). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lane, AARON D., a veteran Presbyterian minister, was born at Lansingburgh, N. Y., Jan. 29, 1797. He studied at the Lenox Academy, Berkshire Co., Mass.; graduated from Union College, N. Y., in 1816, and from Princeton Theological Seminary. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Columbia, Oct. 26, 1819; was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Waterloo, Seneca Co., N. Y., in 1821, having served as stated supply for nine months. At Waterloo he continued to labor zealously and successfully over fourteen years, until compelled by bronchial affection to cease from preaching. He continued, however, to labor among his former people, loved and appreciated, until his death at Waterloo, Nov. 2, 1880. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 11. (W. P. S.)

Lane, EDWARD WILLIAM, an English Orientalist, was born Sept. 17, 1801, at Hereford. He studied at Cambridge, and spent some years in Egypt (1825-28; 1833-35). He published An Account of the Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians (Lond. 1836, and often; Germ. transl. Leipzig, 1856); Selections of the Kur'ân (Lond. 1843); Arabian Society in the Middle Ages (1858). In 1842 he went for a third time to Egypt, and after his return, in 1849, began the publication of his main work, Arabic-English Lexicon, of which he published five parts (1863-74), and died Aug. 9, 1876. Lane's nephew, Stanley Lane Poole, continues the work of the deceased. (B. P.)

Lanfranco (or Lanfranchi), GIOVANNI, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Parma in 1581, and studied under Agostino Caracci. At the age of sixteen he painted a picture of the Virgin with Saints, which was greatly admired, and placed in the Church of San Agostino, at Piacenza. At the age of twenty he visited Rome, becoming the pupil of Annibale Caracci, who employed him in the Farnese palace, and in the Church of San Jago, where he executed a number of works. His fresco paintings in San Agostino, particularly his Assumption of the Virgin, were greatly admired. Among his other good works were, Moses Striking the Rock; Abraham Offering Isaac; and The Flight into Egypt. He procured the commission to paint the cupola of San Andrea della Valle. It was a wonderful work of art, and represented The Virgin seated in the clouds, surrounded with saints, and contemplating the figure of Christ, which is in the upper part of the picture. In 1646 he was invited to Naples to paint the cupola of the treasury at that place. He was employed by Urban VIII to paint a picture for the Church of St. Peter, representing that apostle walking on the sea. He died at Rome in 1647. There are a number of excellent plates by him, as follows: The Messengers of Moses Returning from the Land of Canaan; also a series of pictures of subjects from the Passion of Christ, for the chapel of the Crucifix. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Lanfredini, Jacopo, an Italian prelate, was born at Florence, Oct. 26, 1670. He became civil auditor of cardinal Camerlingue in 1722, and the following year was declared domestic prelate, member of the consistorial congregation, and referendary of both signatures. Benedict XIII ordained him priest, March 16, 1727. Clement XIII, his compatriot, appointed him, in 1780, to a canonship in St. Peter's. After having been successively secretary of the congregation of the council, voter of the signature of grace, datary of the penitentiary, he was, in 1785, made cardinal, and bishop of Osimo and Cingoli, in the bounds of Ancona. He died May 16, 1741. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lanfroy, Pierre, a French historian, was born at Chambéry, in Savoy, Oct. 26, 1828. He studied at the Collège Bourbon in Paris, and published, in 1857, L'Eglise et les Philosophes au XVIII^e Siècle. In 1858 he issued Essai sur la Révolution Française. Histoire Politique des Papes followed in 1860, but his main work is Histoire de Napoléon I (1867-75, 5 vols.; Germ. transl. Berlin, 1869-76). He died Nov. 15, 1877. Of his Œuvres Complètes, the first volume was published in 1879. (B. P.)

Lang, Heinrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 14, 1828, at Frommen, in Würtemberg. He studied at Schöndal and Tübingen, and was in 1848 appointed pastor at Wartau, in Switzerland. Here he commenced, in 1859, the publication of the Zeitschriften aus der reformirten Schweiz, the organ of the liberal reformed Church party. In 1863 he was called to Meilen, and in 1871 he was elected pastor of St. Peter's at Zurich. He died Jan. 13, 1876, leaving, Predigten (St. Gall, 1852); — Versuch einer christlichen Dogmatik (Berlin, 1858; 2d ed. 1868); — Ein Gang durch die christliche Welt (1859); — Stunden der Andacht (Winterthur, 1862-65, 2 vols.); — Religiöse Charaktere (1862). See Mayer, Heinrich Lang. Lebensbild eines freisinnigen Theologen (Basle, 1877); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 763. (B. P.)

Lang, John, an eminent minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Vassalborough, Me., in 1790. He felt a special interest in the North American Indians, and about 1840 was appointed one of a deputation sent out by the New England Yearly Meeting to the Indians west of the Mississippi River, with a view of suggesting and maturing plans for their improvement. President Grant appointed him on the Board of Indian Commissioners, a position which he held till his death. "Both as a commissioner and as a private citizen he served the government several times in missions of great delicacy and difficulty, accomplishing the service to the satisfaction of the government, and securing amicable relations with the tribes visited." He is represented as having been "a man of splendid physique and great vigor, both of body and mind, yet gentle and unassuming in manner, genial and sympathetic, most appreciative of others, and forgetful of self in his efforts for the good of his fellows." He died at his native place, May 25, 1879. See Friends' Review, xxxii, 681. (J. C. S.)

Langbecker, Emanuel Christian Gottlieb, a German hymn-writer, was born at Berlin, Aug. 31, 1792, and died Oct. 24, 1843. He published, Gedichte (Berlin, 1824, 1828, 2 collections); — Das deutsche-evangelische Kirchenlied (1830); — Gesang-Blätter aus dem 16. Jahrhundert (1838); — Leben und Lieder von P. Gerhard (1841). Some of his spiritual songs are found in the hymn-books of Germany. See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 40 sq.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 763. (B. P.)

Langbein, Bernhard Adolph, a Lutheran theologian, was born in 1815 at Wurzen, Saxony. In 1841 he was deacon at Meissen, in 1853 church councillor at Dresden, in 1866 first court-preacher there, and died July 17, 1873, doctor of theology. Langbein was one of the most prominent preachers of Germany, and the author of many volumes of sermons and ascetical works. Of the latter we mention, Die Reise aus dem irdischen nach dem himmlischen Vaterhause (3d ed. Leipzig, 1869); — Tägliche Erquickung aus dem Heilsbrunnen (2d ed. 1866); — Der christliche Glaube nach dem Bekenntnis der lutherischen Kirche (1873). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 763 sq. (B. P.)

Lange, Abraham, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died Dec. 20, 1615, at Weimar, doctor of theology, and general superintendent, wrote Explicatio Catechismi Lutheri; — Explicatio Psalmi Lxix; — Responsionum ad in Quæstiones de Salute; — Responsum Lutherianum ad Anhaltinorum Calvinianorum Defensionem de Imaginibus Abolendis. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lange, Friedrich Albert, a German philosophical writer, and son of the famous theologian Johann Peter (q. v.), was born Sept. 28, 1828, at Wald, near Solingen. He studied at Zurich and Bonn, and was in 1852 professor at the gymnasium in Cologne, and in 1855 privatdocent of philosophy at Bonn. In 1861 he was appointed professor at the Duisburg gymnasium, was called in 1870 to Zurich, in 1873 to Marburg, and died Nov. 21, 1875. His best work is Geschichte des Materialismus und Kritik seiner Bedeutung in der Gegenwart (Iserlohn, 1865; 2d ed. 1873-75, 2 vols.; Engl. transl. by E. C. Thomas, Boston, 1877 sq., 8 vols.). See Vaihinger, Hartmann, Dühring und Lange (Iserlohn, 1876). (B. P.)

Lange, Friedrich Conrad, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born May 12, 1738. He studied at Copenhagen, was in 1771 con-rector at Altona, in 1776 court-preacher at Glückstadt, in 1783 member of consistory, in 1788 doctor of theology, and in the same year provost and first pastor at Altona. He died Jan. 9, 1791, leaving, besides sermons, De Resurrectione Corporum Nostrorum per Spiritum Sanctum (Altona, 1787); — De Jesu Christo, Mortuo quidem quoad Corpus, Spiritu vero Vivente (ibid. 1789). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 89, 141. (B. P.)

Lange, Johann Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 25, 1669, at Leipzig. He studied at his native place, and commenced his academical career there in 1694. In 1697 he went to Gießen, was in 1716 member of consistory and superintendent, in the same year doctor of theology, in 1718 general superintendent, and died Dec. 16, 1756. He wrote, Theologia Christiana in Numeris (Leipzig, 1702); — Ordo Salutis sub Ratione Theologici Problematis Delineatus (Gießen, 1704; 2d ed. 1744); — Themata Selecta ex Variis Philosophiis Partibus Deprompta (1710); — De Antiquissimo et Novissimo Theologo hoc est, etc. (1716). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Lange, Johann George, a German missionary among the Jews, was born in Silesia, Nov. 30, 1804. In 1824 he was admitted to the mission seminary at Berlin. At the end of 1826 he was engaged by the London Jews' Society, and entered their seminary in 1827. In 1829 he was appointed as missionary, and stationed at Amsterdam. Towards the end of that year he was sent to Warsaw. In 1841 he was stationed at Lublin, and after many years of labor there was again placed at Warsaw in 1853. Towards the end of 1854 he was sent to Breslau, where he died, Aug. 14, 1869. Mr. Lange was not ordained, but had from the Evangelical Consistory the regular permission to preach in any of the Prussian churches, and to give lectures to the Jews. (B. P.)

Lange, Johann Lobegott Ferdinand, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 26, 1798. He commenced his academical career in 1824, was professor of philosophy in 1828, in 1838 doctor and professor of theology at Jena, and died in 1855. He wrote, Beiträge zur ältesten Kirchengeschichte (Leipzig, 1828, 1831, 2 vols.):—Der Glaube an Jesus Christus den Welt- heiland (1830):—Die Kindertaufe in der evangelischen Kirche (Jena, 1834):—Anleitung zum Studium der christ- lichen Theologie (1841):—Tabellen der Kirchen- und Dogmen-Geschichte (2d ed. 1848):—Der Protestantismus in kirchlicher und politischer Hinsicht (1844):—Lehr- buch der christlichen Kirchengeschichte (2d ed. 1845):—Ezercitationes Examinatorias ad Theologiam Dogmaticam et Historiam Dogmaticam Spectantes (Leipzig, 1846): Geschichte des Protestantismus (Elberfeld, 1847). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 301, 367, 434, 451, 548; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 767. (B. P.)

Lange, Johann Peter, D.D., one of the most prominent German Protestant theologians of the 19th century, was born in Sournborn, near Elberfeld, of Reformed parents, April 10, 1802. He studied at Bonn, was in 1826 pastor of the Reformed Church at Langenberg, and in 1832 at Duisburg. He first attracted public attention by poems and a brilliant series of articles in Hengstenberg's Evangelical Church Gazette, at that time the leading orthodox journal in Germany. When Strauss published his famous Life of Jesus, Lange wrote in reply an able defense of the historical character of the Gospel-accounts of the infancy of our Saviour. Soon afterwards, in 1841, he received a call as professor of theology to the University of Zurich, a position to which Strauss had been called before, but which he was prevented from occupying by a rebellion of the people against their infidel government. It was there that Lange prepared his great work on the Life of Jesus (1844-47, 3 vols.), which is a positive refutation of the infidel work of Strauss, and one of the most original and ingenious among the many biographies of the Son of Man. It has been made known to the English-reading public by a translation published by Clark, in six volumes. In 1854 Lange was called to Bonn, and died July 8, 1884, on the same day on which professor Dörner (q. v.) died. Lange's works are numerous: Christliche Dogmatik (Heidelberg, 1849-52, 3 vols.):—Das apostolische Zeitalter (1853-54, 2 vols.). But the work by which he is best known and has made himself most useful is his Theological and Homiletical Bible Work (1857-68), well known in this country by the English translation in twenty-four volumes. The success of this voluminous commentary has been marked. Lange conceived the plan, wrote the commentary on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Matthew, Mark, John, Romans, James, and the Apocalypse. The other books were prepared by a number of German and Dutch divines. Besides the works already mentioned, Lange wrote a number of ascetical and poetical works of high character. He was a poetical theologian, and a theological poet, and though having a theological system of his own, was thoroughly evangelical and in essential harmony with the Reformed type, but adapted to the modern currents of thought. Some of his poems have been translated into English. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 764-767; Schaff, Biographical Sketch of Lange, in the introduction to the American edition of the Bible Work; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 361 sq. (B. P.)

Lange, Samuel Gottlieb, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 5, 1767, at Ohra, near Dantzic. He studied at Jena, and commenced his theological career there in 1795. In 1798 he was called to Rostock as professor, was in 1799 doctor of theology, and died June 15, 1823. He wrote, Versuch einer Apo- logie der Offenbarung (Jena, 1794):—Die Schriften Jo- hannis übersetzt und erklärt (1795):—Diss. Historico- Critica I et II de Justini Martyris Apologia pro Christianis ad Antoninum Pium (ed.):—Ausführliche Geschichte der Dogmen der christl. Kirche (Leipzig, 1796):—System der theologischen Moral (1808):—Versio Germanica Epistolæ Pauli ad Romanos (1820-21). Langeac (or Langhac), JEAN DE, a French prelate, was born at Langeac, in Auvergne, near the close of the 15th century, of a noble Sicilian family. He early embraced the ecclesiastical calling, and received numerous benefices, being preceptor of the Hôtel Dieu of Langeac, rector of Coulanges, count of Brionde, dean of the chapter of Langeac, archdeacon of Retz, treasurer of the Church of Puy, count of Lyons, provost of Brionde, abbot of St. Gildas des Bois, of St. Lo, of Charli, of Eu, of Pibrac, then bishop of Avranches, a see which he resigned in favor of Robert Cenalis, after occupying it six months, and took possession of the bishopric of Limoges, June 22, 1538. He was also protonotary of the sacred see, counsellor of the grand council, grand-almoner of the king in 1516, master of requests in 1518, ambassador to Portugal, Poland, Hungary, Switzerland, Scotland, Venice, Ferrara, England, and finally to Rome. At Limoges he established an episcopal residence, repaired the cathedral, and elaborately ornamented it. His memory is revered at Limoges, where he is still called "the good bishop." Wherever he was sent he firmly defended the rights of the king. At Rome even, he strongly maintained the liberty of the Gallican Church. He was a friend and patron of literature. During his embassy at Venice, he had as secretary Stephen Dolet, who dedicated to him three of his books. He died at Paris, May 22, 1541. Only a collection of synodal statutes in MS. remain of his works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Langellier, NICOLAS, a French prelate, raised to the see of St. Briec in 1564, was invested by Pius IV, Aug. 5 of the same year, and took the oath of the king, Feb. 8, 1565. His administration was full of trouble. Having, in effect, taken the part of the League, he became one of the active counsellors of the duke of Mercœur. But the citizens of St. Briec and the better part of the diocesan clerks remained faithful to the cause of the king, and struggled with all their might against the encroachments of their bishop. Langellier was nevertheless a distinguished prelate, who well understood canonical questions. He died at Dinan, in September, 1595, leaving Notes in Canones, the manuscript of which formed part of the groundwork of St. Germain, at the Imperial Library, No. 870. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Langhans, FRIEDRICH, a Swiss rationalistic theologian, was born in 1829. He studied at Berne, where he became a member of the ministerium in 1853. He died April 17, 1880, at Berne, as professor of systematic theology. He was one of the main movers and promoters of the reform movement, and his writings, as Pietismus und Christenthum im Spiegel der äusseren Mission (1849):—Pietismus und äussere Mission vor dem Richterstuhl ihrer Vertheidiger (1866):—Das Christenthum und seine Mission im Lichte der Weltgeschichte (Zurich, 1875), are the best proofs of his neology. See Zur Erinnerung an Professor F. Langhans, in the Protestantische Kirchenzeitung, No. 28, 29, for 1880; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Languet, HUBERT, one of the most prominent French writers of the 16th century, was born at Vitteaux, near Autun, in 1578. He studied theology, canon law, history, and natural sciences in Poitiers, Padua, and Bologna; visited also Spain, and was, by the reading of Melancthon's Loci Theologici, induced to go to Wittenberg, where he remained from 1549 to 1560, making frequent journeys in Germany and Scandinavia. At what period he definitely embraced the Reformation is not known. In 1560 Languet entered the service of the elector of Saxony, which he left in 1577. The last years of his life he spent in the Netherlands, in intimate connection with William of Orange. Languet died at Antwerp, Sept. 30, 1581. His letters, which are of the greatest interest for the history of his time, were edited by Ludovicus, under the title Arcana Seculi XVI, Huberti Langueti Epistola (Halle, 1669). But his main work is Vindicia contra Tyrannos (Edinburgh and Basle, 1579; French transl. by François, Paris, 1581; German by Freitzschke, Leipzig, 1846). In an elaborate manner he treats the question whether subjects (for instance, Protestants) have a right to revolt when oppressed for their religion's sake by their princes. See Philibert de La Mare, l'ie de Languet (Halle, 1700); Chevreul, Étude sur le seizième Siècle, Hubert Languet (2d ed. Paris, 1856); Haag, La France Protestante; Viguier, Étude sur les Théories Politiques-Libérales au seizième Siècle; Hotman, La Franco-Gallia (Paris, 1879); Scholz, Hubert Languet als kursächsischer Berichterstatler und Gesandter in Frankreich (1560-1572; Halle, 1875); Blasell, Hubert Languet (Oppeln, 1872); Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. Lanigan, JOHN, D.D., an Irish clergyman, was born at Cashel in 1768, and educated in the Irish college at Rome, where he took orders. He was then appointed to the chair of Hebrew, divinity, and the Scriptures, at Pavia, where he remained until the university was deserted in consequence of the war in 1796, when he returned to Ireland, and was elected to a similar position in the College of Maynooth. He declined the appointment, however, and was chosen to a position in the record tower of Dublin castle in 1799, and remained there until 1821, when he was seized with insanity, and died in a lunatic asylum at Finglas, near Dublin, July 7, 1828. He published, Institutiones Biblicæ (1794):—Protestants' Apology for the Roman Catholic Church (1809):—Ecclesiastical History of Ireland to the Thirteenth Century (Dublin, 1822, 4 vols.). See Appletons' Amer. Cyclop. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Lanini (or Lanino), BERNARDINO, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Vercelli about 1522, and studied under Gaudenzio Ferrari. He was much employed at Milan and Novara, where he painted the personification of The Deity in the dome of the cathedral, also several subjects from the life of the Virgin, and the picture of Our Saviour after the Flagellation, between two Angels, in San Ambrogio, at Novara. He died about 1578. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lanitho, a demon of the air, worshipped by the inhabitants of the Molucca islands.

Lansing, DIRCK CORNELIUS, D.D., an eminent Presbyterian minister, was born of a distinguished family at Lansingburgh, N. Y., March 3, 1785. He graduated from Yale College in 1804. While in college he was converted, and immediately felt impelled to preach the gospel. He studied theology under Rev. Dr. Blatchford of Lansingburgh, and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Columbia in 1806. In the autumn of that year he went to an untried field and visited from house to house over a circuit of twenty-five miles, and soon gathered a church where the town of Onondaga now stands, and continued pastor for eight years. Then, on account of failing health, he retired to a farm, preaching as he was able till he became pastor at Stillwater, where he remained two and a half years, and two hundred converts were added to the Church. In 1816 he supplied the Park Street Church in Boston, Mass., and such an interest was awakened in his preaching that in a few weeks more than eighty persons were converted. He next accepted a call from the First Presbyterian Church in Auburn, N. Y. Here he remained twelve years, and his own enthusiasm kindled a corresponding feeling in the hearts of those who heard his preaching and saw his labors, and more than a thousand souls were converted and added to the Church. During a part of the time he occupied the chair of sacred rhetoric in the Theological Seminary. In 1829 he took charge of the Second Presbyterian Church in Utica, and in a short time five hundred persons were converted under his ministry. In 1833 he was installed pastor of a Free Church in New York city, then worshipping in Masonic Hall, but was obliged to retire in 1835 on account of ill-health. For the next ten years he labored chiefly as an evangelist in central and western New York, and one year in Illinois. In 1846 he returned to New York city, and took charge of a feeble church in Chrystie Street. In 1848 he assumed the care of the church on Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, where his labors were crowned with great success, but, his health giving way, he was obliged to leave in 1855. In the spring of 1856 he removed to Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, O., where he supplied the Vine Street Congregational Church. For fourteen weeks he preached twice each Sunday, until the second Sunday in December, when he suddenly failed. This was his last sermon. He died at Walnut Hills, March 19, 1857. Dr. Lansing projected the Auburn Theological Seminary, and by his personal efforts secured an endowment of $100,000. He was a member of the original board of trustees of Hamilton College. He published Sermons on Important Subjects (1825). See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 407; Nevins, Presb. Encyclop. s. v.

Laio, ANDRÉ, an Italian Carmelite, and professor of theology at Padua in the 16th century, was one of the most powerful and learned supporters of papacy in his time. After having published a dogmatical treatise of small importance, Disputationes Theologicae ad D. Thomam et de Conscientia, he made himself conspicuous and popular among the clergy by publishing Brevia de Summo Pontifice Tractatus, etc. (2d ed. Rome, 1668). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lao Kyun, in Chinese theology, was the originator of a religious sect, whose followers are called "children of immortality." He came two hundred years after Confucius. His priests were magicians and sorcerers.

Laosynactes (λαοσυνάκτης), an officer in the Greek Church, whose duty it is to collect together the deacons and the people.

Lapacci, BARTOLOMEO, an Italian prelate, was born about 1396 at Florence. He was admitted to the Dominican order, received, in 1427, the diploma of doctor, and was, at the Council of Florence, one of the ten theologians who maintained the articles of union of the Greek with the Latin Church. Pope Eugenius IV recompensed him for this service by appointing him, in 1439, master of the sacred palace in place of Torquemada, who was made cardinal. Being sent to Greece in 1443, in company with F. Condelmerio, he became bi-hop of Argoli. Two years later he was at Constantinople, where he disputed publicly with Mark of Ephesus. At this time he occupied the see of Caron, and, abandoning it when the Turks became masters of the city, he retired to Florence, where he died, June 21, 1466. He wrote De Sensibilibus Deliciis Paradisi (Venice, 1498), and manuscript treatises upon several points of theology, also some sermons, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lapide, CORNELIUS A. See CORNELIUS A. LAPIDE.

Lapland Mythology. The accounts on this subject are very scant, because the Lapps never had a public divine worship, but conducted their religious services privately in their homes. They had a conception of a supreme being, which the North American Indians call the Great Spirit, the Laplanders, Jamula. The latter see three forces of nature combined in the supreme god. They have the god Tiermes, thunder, the god Storjunkare, the ruler of earth, protector of the woods, and the goddess Baiwe, the sun. These three were united in Jamula. Besides these supreme deities they have numerous others, who are subordinate, but not servants of the former; they have their own smaller circles, as, for instance, the spirits of air, the water deities, mountain deities, and the dreaded evil deities of death, who separate the soul from the body, giving the latter to corruption, and bringing the former into distant regions of good hunting and fishing. They made sacrifices of that which they considered most costly, young male and female reindeer. They offered sacrifices generally in the fall for the whole people. This was the only custom which pointed to a public divine worship. They had no priests nor temples; therefore every father of a household was priest and magician for his family, and taught his own sons. In the autumn, if none of the three gods accepted the offerings, they were sad, because the gods were angry. Although Christianity has entered among them, there are many heathen, who still adhere to their original usages.

Lappish Version of the Scriptures. The Lappish is vernacular to the Laplanders. The earliest religious work in the Laponese is a manual containing the Psalms, the Proverbs, the book of Ecclesiasticus, the dominical gospels and epistles, published at Stockholm in 1648. This work was not generally understood, on account of the peculiarity of the dialect in which it was written, and accordingly another manual was published in 1669. It is not known at what time the New Test. was translated into Laponese. The first edition of which there is any account was published in 1755, from which a new edition was printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1811. In the same year the Old Test. was published. Of late efforts have been made to give to the Laplanders of Russia, Sweden, and Norway versions in their respective vernacular, and thus there exist now, besides the Lappish version proper, the New Test. and Psalms in Norwegian-Lapp, the gospel of Matthew in Swedish-Lapp, and the same gospel in Russ-Lapp. See Bible of Every Land, p. 322; QUÄNIAN VERSION. (B. P.)

La Poye (de Vertrieu), JEAN CLAUDE DE, a French prelate, was born in 1655, of an ancient family of Poitou. He became vicar to M. de St. Georges, archbishop of Lyons, and in 1702 was called to the episcopal see of Beziers. This he refused, and the same year became bishop of Poitiers. In 1716 he was one of the prelates who signed the article demanding of the pope an explanation of the bull Unigenitus. He died Feb. 3, 1732, near Poitiers. He was in part author of an estimable work entitled, Compendiosa Institutiones Theologicae (Poitiers, 1708). The questions are here treated with great precision and method. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Larentalia, a festival among the ancient Romans, which was held in honor of Acca Larentia (q. v.). It was also observed in honor of the Lares generally.

La Roche (Armon) Charles Antoine de, a French prelate, was born at the chateau of Mainsat, Feb. 17, 1697. He was at first canon of St. Peter's at Macon, and vicar-general of Limoges, before being consecrated bishop of Sarepta, Aug. 5, 1725. He occupied successively the sees of Tarbes, 1729, Toulouse, 1740, Narbonne, 1752, before being appointed grand almoner, July 18, 1760, and archbishop of Rheims, Dec. 5, 1762. He was created cardinal in 1771, invested the following year with the abbey of St. Germain-des-Près, and consecrated Louis XVI on Trinity Sunday, June 11, 1775, having previously baptized him, given to him his first communion, and confirmed his union with Marie Antoinette of Austria. He presided over all the assemblies of the clergy of France from 1760 to 1775, having assisted at all the preceding assemblies from 1735. He was at the time of his death dean of the French episcopacy, having as his coadjutor Alexander Angelique, of Talleyrand Perigord, afterwards archbishop of Paris. He was distinguished for his modest piety and extreme benevolence. He died at Paris, Oct. 27, 1777. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

La Roche (Armon), Ralph de, a French prelate, was born about 1160. He was a Cistercian monk, was at first abbot of Igny, in the diocese of Rheims, and in 1224 was deemed worthy to succeed St. Bernard at Clairvaux. Having occupied this see for eight years, he was called to govern the Church of Agen, from which Gregory IX transferred him, in 1235, to the metropolitan see of Lyons. Here he died March 5, 1236. His memory is celebrated March 5, and he is called the Happy Ralph de la Roche. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

La Rochefoucauld, Dominique de, count of St. Elpis, a French prelate, was born in 1713 at St. Elpis, in the diocese of Mende. He was a descendant of a poor and ignorant branch of the house of La Rochefoucauld, which the bishop of Mende, of Choiseul, discovered in one of his pastoral visits. Frédéric Jérôme de la Rochefoucauld, archbishop of Bourges, made known this discovery, and took upon himself the direction of the studies of young Dominique. He placed him at the Seminary of St. Sulpice, and having made him grand-vicar, gave him the archbishopric of Alby in 1747. Being a member of the assemblies of the clergy in 1750 and 1755, he zealously defended the rights of the Gallican Church, and was invested with the abbey of Cluny in 1757. Two years later he was transferred to the see of Rouen, and in 1778 made cardinal. Elected deputy of the clergy of the bailiwick of Rouen to the States-General in 1789, he came out strongly against the principles of the revolution. He was one of the signers of the protest of Sept. 12, 1791, against the innovations made by the national assembly in the matter of religion. In the preceding April he had published a pastoral instruction, which the tribunal of Rouen had torn and burned, as being contrary to the laws of the constituent assembly. After Aug. 10, 1792, the cardinal La Rochefoucauld retired to Germany, and died at Munster, Sept. 2, 1800. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

La Rochefoucauld, François de, a French prelate, was born at Paris, Dec. 8, 1558, being the son of Charles I, of La Rochefoucauld, count of Randan, and of Fulvie Pic de la Mirandole, lady of honor to the queen. He was destined by his uncles for the priesthood, and completed his studies at the College of Clermont in a very brilliant manner. At the age of fifteen he was invested by the cardinal of Guise with the rich abbey of Tournus, and scarcely had he reached his twenty-seventh year when Henry III appointed him bishop of Clermont. Being a partisan of the Holy League, he sought to excite Auvergne in revolt against the king; but the inhabitants of Clermont revolted against their bishop, and he was obliged to take refuge at his chateau in Mozun. In 1589 the bishop of Clermont called an assembly of the states of his province at Billom. La Rochefoucauld addressed them in a vehement discourse, in which he accused the king of being in harmony with the Protestants. This led the assembly to embrace the side of the sacred union. His father, who governed in the League, was killed in 1590, and Henry IV abjured some years later. The bishop of Clermont yielded, and composed a work upon the spiritual authority of the popes, remaining silent upon the temporal power. Some time after Martha Brussier excited the wonder of the credulous world. François de la Rochefoucauld and his brother, Alexander, travelled from city to city, interrogating the evil spirits concerning the real presence of Jesus Christ in the eucharist. They were at length obliged to desist from this ridiculous business. François de la Rochefoucauld yielded, and in 1607 was made cardinal and bishop of Senlis. In 1618 he became grand almoner of France, and in 1619 of the abbey of St. Genevieve. In 1622 he was made president of the Council of the States, and charged with the reformation of the abbeyes of France. This reform occupied the rest of his life. He died at the abbey of St. Genevieve, Feb. 14, 1645, and an elegant tomb was erected for him. Full of zeal for literature, La Rochefoucauld enriched various libraries with Greek and Latin MSS. He wrote, Statuts Synodaux pour l'Eglise de Clermont (1699):—Statuts Synodaux pour l'Eglise de Senlis (Paris, 1621):—De l'Autorité de l'Eglise en ce qui Concerne la Foi et la Religion (ibid. 1603, 1604). His life was written by La Marinière (Paris, 1647). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

La Rochefoucauld (BAYERS), François Joseph de, a French prelate, was born at Angoulême in 1735. He was bishop of Beauvais in 1772, and by this title peer of France, and was sent by the clergy of the bailiwick of Clermont, in Beauvais, to the States-General, which became the constituent assembly. He there defended the privileges of the clergy. Chabot having denounced him before the legislative assembly as taking part in an anti-revolutionary meeting, he fled with his brother, the bishop of Saintes, to the house of their sister, the abbess of Soissons, and then started for Paris. They were arrested at Carmes, and assassinated at Paris, Sept. 2, 1792. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

La Rochefoucauld, Frédéric Jérôme de Roye de, a French prelate, was born July 16, 1701. He was son of François de la Rochefoucauld, of Roye, count of Rouncy. He embraced the ecclesiastical calling, and in 1729 was called to the archbishopric of Bourges. Elected coadjutor of the abbey of Cluny in 1738, he became titular abbot in 1747, by the death of the cardinal of Auvergne. The same year he was made cardinal, and the following year was sent to Rome as ambassador. In 1755 the king appointed him to the abbey of St. Vandrille, and charged him at the same time with the schedule of benefices. He presided over the assemblies of the clergy in 1750 and 1755. In 1756 Louis XV made him grand almoner. He died April 29, 1757. He was a prelate of mild and conciliatory character. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

La Rochefoucauld (BAYERS), Pierre Louis de, a French prelate, brother of François Joseph, was born in 1744 in the diocese of Périgueux. In 1770 he was made commendatory prior of Nanteuil by the cardinal La Rochefoucauld, and general agent of the clergy in 1775, which office he held until 1780. In 1782 he was called to the bishopric of Saintes. Being sent to the States-General by the jurisdiction of the seneschal of Saintes, he voted at the national assembly with the minority. Having taken flight with his brother, the bishop of Beauvais, he perished with him at Paris, in the prison of Carmes, Sept. 2, 1792. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

La Rocheposay, HENRI LOUIS Chasteignier de, a French prelate, son of Louis Chasteignier, was born Sept. 6, 1577, at Tivoli, Italy. Having been educated by the celebrated Scaliger, he received at Rome the four minor orders in 1596, and the priesthood at Paris at the hand of Henry de Gondy, who was then cardinal of Retz. Coadjutor of Geoffroi de St. Blin, bishop of Poitiers, he succeeded him in 1611, and bore witness three years later to his fidelity to the king by opposing the entrance of the prince of Condé and his troops. The conduct of this prelate appears little in conformity with the canons, and gave rise, on the part of the celebrated Jean du Vergier de Hauranne, abbot of St. Cyran, to a defence, ingenious as well as paradoxical: Apologie pour Messire Henri Chasteignier de la Rocheposay, etc. (1615). La Rocheposay assisted at the assembly which was held at Rouen in 1627, under the presidency of Gaston of France, then at the synod of Bordeaux, and at the general assembly of the clergy in 1628. He occupied himself zealously in trying to purge Poitou of the doctrines of Calvin. He died July 30, 1651, leaving several works, as Recueil des Axiomes de Philosophie et de Théologie:—Rémarques Françaises sur St. Matthieu (Poitiers, 1619):—Exercitationes in Marcum, Lucam, Joannem et Acta Apostolorum, etc. (ibid. 1626):—In Genesim (1628):—In Librum Job (eod.):—In Exodum et in Libros Numerorum, Josue et Judicam (1629):—In Prophetas Majores et Minores (1630):—Dissertationes Ethico-Politicae. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Laron (or LORON), JOURDAIN DE, a French prelate, was at first provost of St. Leonard, which position he occupied until the death of Girard, bishop of Limoges. Several competitors claimed the succession to Girard, but Jourdain de Laron obtained it, and the duke of Aquitaine conducted him in triumph to his episcopal city. He was the sub-deacon, but in two years was ordained deacon, priest, bishop, by Islon, bishop of Saintes, assistant of the archbishop of Bordeaux and Boson, Arnauld, Isomert. This ordination was not participated in by the archbishop of Bourges, who had Limoges in his province. The archbishopric of Bourges was at that time occupied by Gauslin, son of Hugh Capet, and therefore brother of king Robert; and he, through jealousy, caused the excommunication of Jourdain and his whole diocese. Jourdain, after a time, made a journey to the Holy Land. On his return, in 1028, he consecrated his cathedral. In 1081, at the Council of Bourges, he discoursed against the armed hordes which devastated the country, which discourse was resented by the bishops. He died in 1052. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Larroque, PATRICK, a French spiritualistic philosopher, was born in 1801 at Beaume. He had taught with great success at different colleges, and was successively rector at Cahors, Limoges, and Lyons. The last position he held till 1849, when some differences arose between him and archbishop Bonald. In 1851 he took his dismissal, and died at Paris in 1879. He published, Cours de Philosophie:—Examen Critique des Doctrines de la Religion Chrétienne (1859), a kind of manifesto of deism:—Rénovation Religieuse (1860), a kind of religious programme of the future, destined to unite all on the ruins of positive religion. See Dumur, in the Révue Chrétienne, 1861, p. 581 sq.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Larbow, FRIEDRICH, a German Orientalist, who died at Berlin, Oct. 3, 1870, is the author of, De Dialectorum Lingua Syriaca Reliquis (Berlin, 1841):—Des heiligen Athanasius, Bischof von Alexandria, Festbriefe (Leipzig, 1852):—Die Genesis überetzt und schwierige Stellen erläutert (Berlin, 1843). (B. P.)

Larue, Charles de, a French Benedictine, was born at Corbie, July 12, 1684, and joined his order at Meaux. Being charged by Montfaucon with the edition of the works of Origen, he only succeeded in publishing the first two volumes. While superintending the print of the third volume, he was seized with a paralytic stroke, and died Oct. 5, 1789, at Paris. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Larue, Vincent de, a French theologian, nephew of the foregoing, was also born at Corbie. He continued the work commenced by Sabathier, Bibliotheca Sa- erorum Latine Versionis Antiqua seu Versio Vetula Italica (Rheims, 1743-49, 8 vols.). Larue died at St. Germain-des-Près, March 29, 1762. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lasaulx, Amalie von, a Roman Catholic philanthropist, sister of Ernst (q. v.), was born at Coblenz in 1815. She joined the Sisters of St. Borromeo, and as sister Augustine was made mother superior at Nancy. She was sent, in 1849, to Bonn, and took charge of the hospital of St. John the Baptist. In the German wars against Schleswig and Austria, and during the Franco-German war of 1870, she proved herself a true Samaritan. Her early education, which she received from pupils of Hermea, whose views were condemned at Rome, her connection with the Catholic professors of the University of Bonn, who refused to subscribe to the decisions of the Vatican council, led her to oppose the papal dogmas. She cared not for the menaces of the Ultramontanes, but followed her calling as before. Her self-denying and faithful attention to her onerous duties finally broke down her health. While on her bed of sickness, the general mother superior of Nancy demanded of her that she should recant and accept the Vatican decrees, but she would not yield. At last she was obliged to leave the place of her lifelong activity, and died in 1872. When she was dead, the dress of the order was taken from her corpse. See Reinken, Amalie von Lasaulx (Bonn, 1878); Lecoultrre, Courte Notice sur Amélie de Lasaulx (Paris, 1879); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lasaulx, Ernst von, a German antiquarian, was born at Coblenz, March 16, 1805. He studied at Bonn and Munich, spent some time at Vienna, Rome, Athens, Constantinople, and Jerusalem, was in 1835 professor of philology at Würzburg, in 1844 professor at Munich, and was deposed in 1847. In 1848 he was a member of the German National Assembly, and went with the Roman Catholic fraction in all religious questions. In 1849 he was reappointed to his professorship, and died May 10, 1861. He published, Der Untergang des Hellenismus durch die christlichen Kaiser (Munich, 1854); Die Philosophie der schönen Künste (1860); Ueber die theologische Grundlage aller philosophischen Systeme (1856); Wahrheit der Thatsachen geprüfter Philosophie der Geschichte (ed.) Des Sokrates Leben, Lehre und Tod (1857); Die prophetische Kraft der menschlichen Seele in Dichtern und Denkern (1858). The last four books were put on the papal index. See Holland, Erinnerungen an Ernst von Lasaulx (Munich, 1861). (B. P.)

La Saussaye, DANIEL CHANTEPIE DE, a Walloon preacher and Dutch publicist, was born at La Haye, Dec. 10, 1818. He studied at Leyden, was preacher at the Walloon Church in Leeuwarden (1842-48), and at Leyden (1848-62). Here he edited a periodical entitled Ernst en Vrede (1858-59), in which he defended the ethical principle and supernatural in Christianity against the so-called "modern theology," inaugurated by J. H. Scholten. In 1862 he accepted a call to Rotterdam, where he edited another journal. In 1872 he was called to the chair of dogmatics and Biblical theology, which was formerly occupied by P. Hofstede de Groot, and died shortly afterwards, Feb. 13, 1874, doctor of theology, a distinction conferred on him by the Bonn University in 1858. He published, L'Existence Permanente du Peuple Juif Expliquée par son Avenir (Leyden, 1849); Témoignages contre l'Esprit du Siècle (Amsterdam and Leyden, 1852); Réflexions sur l'Essence et les Besoins de l'Eglise (Leyden, 1855); Appréciation de la Doctrine de l'Eglise Réformée, de J. H. Scholten (Utrecht, 1859); Études Bibliques (1859-61); La Crise Religieuse en Hollande (Leyden, 1860); Sermons (Leyden and Rotterdam, 1860-66, 5 vols.); Leven en Richtiging, i. e. Life and Tendency (Rotterdam, 1865); Le Supernaturel dans l'Histoire (Groningen, 1874). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lasharon. Concerning this place Keil remarks (Commentary, Josh. xii, 18), "Knobel supposes it to be the place called Saruneh, to the west of the lake of Tiberias, and conjectures that the name has been contracted from Lassarion by the aphæresis of the liquid. This is quite possible, if only we could look for Lasharon so far to the north. Bachiene and Rosenmüller imagine it to be the village of Sharon, in the celebrated plain of that name, between Lydda and Arsuf." Nevertheless, Conder (Tent Work, ii, 338) and Trelawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.) adopt the above position at Sarona, which is laid down on the Ordnance Map at six miles west of the south end of the sea of Galilee, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (i, 414, quoting from Guérin) thus, "The houses are rudely built on two hillocks, which lie round a valley watered by a spring, which is contained in a sort of square chamber, the roof of which is formed of large slabs, and which is preceded by a large vaulted chamber in very regular cut stones, the whole of ancient appearance." Eusebius and Jerome state (Onomast. s. v. Sarona) that the region between Tabor and the lake of Tiberias was called Sharon in their time.

Lassen, CHRISTIAN, a famous German Orientalist, was born Oct. 22, 1800, at Bergen, Norway. He studied at Christiania, Heidelberg, and Bonn, spent some years at London and Paris copying and comparing Indian MSS., and published with Burnouf the Essai sur le Puli (Paris, 1826). Having returned to Bonn, he commenced his academical career by publishing Commentatio Geographica atque Historica de Pentapotamio Indici (Bonn, 1827). In 1830 he was made professor, and died May 8, 1876. He published editions of Jayadeva's Gîtâgovinda (1837); Gymnosophista, sive Indica Philosophia Documenta (1832); Anthologia Sanscritica (1838; new edition by Gildemeister, 1865, 1868); Institutiones Linguae Pracriticae (1837); but his main work is Indische Alterthumskunde (1844-62, 4 vols.; 2d ed. vol. i, 1866; vol. ii, 1873). In his Die altpersischen Keilinschriften (1836) he deciphered for the first time the cuneiform inscriptions. (B. P.)

Lassenius, JOHANN, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Waldau, in Pomerania, April 26, 1636. He studied at different universities, and travelled extensively. On account of his writings against the Jesuits he was imprisoned at Vienna. He was taken to the Turkish frontier for the purpose of being sold as a slave to the Turks, but he managed to escape. He took his degree as doctor of theology at Greifswalde, was appointed court-preacher at Copenhagen, and died Aug. 29, 1692. He was a very prolific writer, and wrote a great many ascetical works. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 769. (B. P.)

Lathrop, JOHN, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born in Norwich, Conn., May 17, 1740. He graduated at Princeton College in 1763. For some months after his graduation he was engaged as assistant teacher in Moor's Indian School at Lebanon, Conn., and at the same time studied theology. He was licensed soon after this, labored as a missionary among the Indians, and in 1767 was invited to settle both at Taunton and Reading. In 1768 he accepted a call to become pastor of the Old North Church in Boston, preaching in that city until his death, Jan. 14, 1816. He became a member of the Corporation of Harvard University in 1778. He was also one of the counsellors of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, vice-president of the Massachusetts Bible Society, and president of the Massachusetts Congregational Charitable Society. His publications consisted of single sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 68.

Latil, JEAN BAPTISTE MARIE ANNE ANTOINE, duke de, a French prelate, was born in one of the Isles of Sainte Marguerite, March 6, 1761. Being destined for the ecclesiastical calling, he entered the Seminary of St. Sulpice at Paris, and was ordained priest in 1784. Shortly after he was appointed grand-vicar of the bishop of Venice, who charged him with representing him at the bailiwick assembly of his diocese at the convocation of the States-General. On the breaking-out of the French Revolution Latil refused to take the oath of the civil constitution of the clergy, and withdrew to Coblenz, but in 1792, having returned to France, he was arrested at Montfort l'Amaury, and remained for some time in the prisons of that city. Having recovered his liberty, he retired to Germany, and settled at Düsseldorf, where he devoted himself to preaching. He had determined to set out for America, when the count of Artois sent for him, in 1794, and made him almoner. Latil from this time never left this prince, and at the restoration became his chief almoner. Appointed bishop of Amyclæa, in partibus infidelium, he was consecrated April 7, 1816; became bishop of Chartres in 1821, and archbishop of Rheims, Aug. 11, 1824. He consecrated Charles X in the metropolis of Rheims, May 29, 1825. He was made a peer of France in 1828, made count by Charles X, and also minister of state. Pope Leo XII made him cardinal, March 12, 1826, and the king gave him the title of duke. The same year he signed the declaration of the clergy of France touching the independence of the temporal power in civil matters. He was accused, however, of being a great partisan of the Jesuits, and of urging Charles X to adopt measures which aided the revolution of July. In view of this Latil fled to England. He soon returned to France and maintained his episcopal see, but refused the oath as peer of France. He died at Gémunos in December, 1839. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Latimer, JAMES ELIJAH, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Hartford, Conn., Oct. 7, 1826. He graduated from Wesleyan University in 1848, and the same year became teacher of languages in Newberry Seminary, Vt., and of Latin and geology in Genesee Wesleyan Seminary, Lima, N. Y.; in 1851 principal of New Hampshire Conference Seminary, Northfield, N. H.; in 1854 principal of Fort Plain Seminary, N. Y.; in 1858 joined East Genesee Conference, and was pastor in Elmira and Rochester, where he made a deep and permanent impression by his learning and devotion. After this he travelled and studied in Europe. In 1869 he became pastor of a Church in Penn Yan, N. Y.; in 1870 professor of historic theology in school of theology of Boston University, and in 1874 dean and professor of systematic theology in the same school. He died at Auburndale, Mass., Nov. 27, 1884. Professor Latimer took high rank as a student of German literature. He possessed a genial temper, and was greatly beloved by all under his instruction. His sermons, essays, and lectures are highly commended. See Alumni Record of West. Univ. 1881, p. 91; Meth. Rev. March, 1886.

Latinus, LATINUS, an Italian critic, was born at Viterbo in 1518. He acted as secretary to cardinals Farnese and Colonna at Rome, and died Jan. 21, 1598. He wrote, Observationes et Emendationes in Tertullianum:—Bibliotheca Sacra et Profana (edited by D. Maicer, Rome, 1659):—Epistole, Conjecturæ et Observationes Sacra Profanæque Eruditione Ornata (2 vols.). See Freher, Theatrum Eruditorum; Teissier, Éloges des Savans; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Latoniæ, BARTHOLOMÆUS, a German controversial writer, was born at Arlon, Luxemburg, in 1485. He taught Latin at Treves, and rhetoric at Cologne and Freiburg. In 1534 he was called to Paris, and visited Italy in 1539. In 1541 he was appointed counsellor at the electoral court of Treves, with his residence at Coblenz, and died in 1566. Of his controversial writings we mention, Responsio ad Epistolam Bucerii (1548):—Adversus Bucerum de Controversiis Quibusdam Altera Defensio:—Responsio ad Convicia et Calumnias Petri Dutheni (concerning the communion and the sacrifice of the mass, Frankfurt, 1558):—De Docta Simplicitate

Præf. Ecclesiæ (1559). At the instance of the emperor Charles V, he also took part in the Ratisbon Colloquy in 1546, and was appointed by him imperial counsellor in 1548. See Du Pin, Bibl. Eccles. xxvi, 145 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Wagenmann, in Plutt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Latona, in Greek mythology, was the daughter of Cœus and Phœbe, therefore a Titanide. Being loved by Jupiter, she reaped the hatred of Juno. The latter took an oath from the earth not to grant Latona a place, and persecuted her by the frightful dragon Python. Everywhere the earth refused to receive her. At last an island, Delos, arose from the sea, which had not existed when Juno exacted the oath, where Diana, hardly born, assisted her mother in the birth of her twin brother Apollo. Being one of the oldest goddesses, she was everywhere highly worshipped. Apollo and Diana would not forgive the smallest insult to their mother, as is fully shown by the fate of Niobe, with whom she had stood on intimate friendship. Herodotus relates that she was also worshipped in Egypt.

Latour (D'Auvergne Lauragnis), HUGUES ROBERT JEAN CHARLES DE, a French prelate, was born at the chateau of Auzeville, near Toulouse, Aug. 14, 1768. In the care of his uncle, a canon of Castres, he went to Paris, where he entered the Seminary of St. Sulpice, and pursued a course of theology under Emery. In 1792 and 1793 he was secretly ordained sub-deacon, deacon, and priest by the bishop of Limoges of Angentré. He refused the oath to the civil constitution of the clergy, and withdrew to Picardy, to the house of his aunt, the countess of Vergy, and there performed secretly the offices of his ministry at Amiens. He was finally arrested and thrown into prison. A contractor of the republican army rescued him by taking him into his service. The first consul appointed him bishop of Arras, May 9, 1802. The young bishop reconstructed his diocese, and founded in it all sorts of institutions. On all occasions he manifested his admiration for the chief of the state, who had restored peace to the Church, and advanced the glory of France. The events of 1814 modified his opinions, and on April 8 he sent his approval to the act of forfeiture of the emperor. The restoration brought to him an offer of the bishopric of Rheims, which he refused. The government of July offered still more important archbishoprics. Latour wished to remain in his see, but accepted the Roman purple, Dec. 14, 1840. He died July 20, 1851. He left some catechisms, sermons, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Latinius, SAINT, traditionary first bishop of Sees, commemorated June 20, is said to have been sent into Gaul by Clement of Rome, and is assigned to some period earlier than A.D. 500. He is believed to be the saint popularly known as St. Lais, whom the Bollandists place at the beginning of the second century.

Lau, JOHANN THEODOR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Schleswig in 1818. In 1843 he was appointed second pastor at Hettstadt, near Hunsrück, in 1855 pastor at Ottensen, near Altona, and died Dec. 20, 1873. He is the author of, Gregor I, der Grosse, nach seinem Leben und Lehre geschildert (Leipzig, 1855):—Reformationsgeschichte in Schleswig (Hamburg, 1867). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 770. (B. P.)

Laub, HARDENACK OTTO KONRAD, bishop of Viborg, was born in 1805. Having completed his theological studies, he was appointed to a pastorate in the isle of Funen. In 1854 he was made bishop of Viborg, and held this position till 1877, when feeble health obliged him to retire from his ecclesiastical duties. He spent the remainder of his life at Copenhagen, and died May 27, 1882. He was highly honored by the congregations as well as by the ministers of his diocese. (B. P.)

L'Aubespine, Gabriel de. See AUBESPINE.

L'Aubespine, Sébastien de, a French prelate and diplomatist, was born in Beauce in 1518. His high ability won for him from Francis I the gift of many ecclesiastical benefices, especially that of the abbey of Basse Fontaine, in the diocese of Troyes. Being sent to Switzerland, he there combated the influence of the emperor, in 1543. At the Diet of Worms, he prepared the work of the honorary ambassador, the count of Grignan, a man more distinguished by his ancestry than by his own merit (1545). Henry II afterwards sent him to negotiate with the people of Strasburg in 1548, and to modify the treaty of alliance with the Helvetic cantons. On his return to France he was charged with an embassy to Flanders, but he soon resumed his former functions in Switzerland, and still negotiated with ability and honor. Then he was appointed ambassador to Philip II of Spain. From 1558 he held the bishopric of Limoges, in which city he already held the rich abbey of St. Martial. After rendering various services to the king, and being driven from the court, he withdrew to Limoges, and devoted all his attention to works of piety connected with the episcopacy. Here he died in 1582, and was interred in his cathedral. For mention of his works see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lauder, Alexander, a Scotch prelate, was rector of Ratho, promoted to the see of Dunkeld in May, 1440, and died Oct. 11 following. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 87.

Lauder, George, a Scotch prelate, was vicar of Crail in 1425, and was afterwards master, or preceptor, of the Hospital of St. Leonard's. He was promoted to the bishopric of Argyle as early as 1427, and was still bishop in 1462. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 287.

Lauder, Robert, a Scotch prelate, was probably promoted to the see of Dunblane in 1448, and in 1451 was sent jointly with the bishops of Glasgow and Moray into England. He was probably bishop there in 1465. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 177.

Lauder, Thomas, a Scotch prelate, was preferred to the see of Dunkeld in 1452, which see he retained until 1476, when he resigned his charge on account of advanced age. He died Nov. 4, 1481. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 89.

Lauder, William, a Scotch prelate, was preferred to the see of Glasgow in 1408. He was bishop there and lord chancellor, April 14, 1424. He died about 1426. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 248.

Laudisti, a society which was instituted in Florence, in 1316, for the performance of religious lauda. The society still exists, and is in active operation.

Laue, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 20, 1683. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1708 con-rector at Quedlinburg, in 1710 deacon, in 1715 pastor at Diffurt, and died May 30, 1721. He wrote, Meditationes Ezegetico-practicae:—Apparatus Ezegetico-homileticus:—Historia Arcana Veteris Testamenti ad Judic. II et I Sam. III:—Disput. an Turrium et Campanarum Usus in Ecclesia Deo Displacet? See Leporius, Germania Literata Vivens; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Laufela, in Norse mythology, was a Jote-woman, the wife of the giant Farbaute, and the mother of Loke, the evil one among the Asas.

Launawater, in the mythology of the Finns, was an evil goddess, whose children were the plagues and sicknesses of men.

Launoy, MATTHIEU DE, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born at Ferté-Alais, but embraced the Reformation at Geneva in 1560, and was admitted to the evangelical ministry. He was pastor at Heidelberg in 1578, afterwards at Sedan, where he had adulterous relations with one of his cousins, and was thus obliged to leave the place. Being excommunicated, he abjured

Protestantism, and became one of the most furious preachers of the League. To justify his second apostasy he published, Défense de Launoy (Paris, 1578), and Déclaration et Réfutation, etc. (1579). To secure the favor of the Catholics, he published Réponse Chrétienne à xxix Articles, etc. (1581). In consideration of his return to the Church of Rome, he was made canon of St. Gervais de Soissons, and, with Boucher, was one of the first four pillars of the League. He belonged to the council of sixteen who decreed the assassination of president Brisson. After the capitulation of Paris, Launoy went to Flanders, where he probably died. See Labitte, De la Démocratie Chez les Prédicateurs de la Ligue et la France Protestante; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Laurel, a plant which was sacred to Apollo, the god of prophecy, and much used by those who pretended to inspiration. The heads of ancient seers were usually adorned with laurel wreaths, while they carried in their hands a laurel branch as a magic wand. The heads of victors in the national games were also crowned with laurel wreaths; hence the expression, "winning the laurels."

Laurence (1), a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of the see of the Isles in 1249, but was drowned the same year. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 299.

Laurence (2), a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of the see of Argyle about 1261. About 1269 he ratified to the monks of Paisley the churches of Kilfinan and Kilkeran. He was still bishop in 1299. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 286.

Laurent, JOHANN THEODOR, a French prelate, was born July 6, 1804, at Aix-la-Chapelle. He made himself especially conspicuous by his opposition to the Hermesians (q. v.), and in recognition of his merits he was appointed bishop of Cherson, in partibus infidelium. As he could not reside in Hamburg, where he intended to live, he went to Rome, and was in 1841 appointed apostolic-vicar at Luxemburg, but was recalled, in 1848, on account of his too rigorous procedure. He retired to Simpelvelde, in the province of Limburg, and died Feb. 20, 1884. (B. P.)

Laurentia. See ACCA.

Laurentie, PIERRE SEBASTIEN, a French Roman Catholic historian and publicist, was born Jan. 21, 1793, at Houg (department of Gers). In 1817 he was professor of rhetoric at the Collège Stanislas in Paris, and in 1818 professor of history at the Polytechnic Institute. In 1823 he was appointed inspector-general of the public schools, but he lost this position in 1826 on account of his opposition to the ministry headed by Villèle, whom he had attacked in his journal, La Quotidienne. Laurentie now devoted himself entirely to his journal, which, for a time, was called L'Union Monarchique, and after 1848 merely L'Union. Laurentie died at Paris, Feb. 9, 1876. Besides his articles, he published, De la Justice au xix Siècle (1822):—De l'Origine et de la Certitude des Connaissances Humaines (1826):—Introduction à la Philosophie (1829):—Théorie Catholique des Sciences (1836; 4th ed. 1846):—Histoire de France (1841-43, 8 vols.):—Les Rois et le Pape (1860):—Rome et le Pape (ed.):—Histoire de l'Empire Romain (1861-62, 4 vols.):—L'Athéisme Scientifique (1862):—Le Livre de M. Renan sur la Vie de Jésus (1863). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Laurentii, LAURENTIUS, a German hymn-writer, was born June 8, 1660, at Husum, in Holstein, and died May 29, 1722, at Bremen. He published Evangelia Melodica, or spiritual hymns and songs, according to the Christian year, some of which have been translated into English; thus, Du wesentliches Wort ("O thou essential Word," in Lyra Germ. i, 15):—Wer im Herzen will erfahren ("Is thy heart athirst to know," in Lyra Germ. ii, 45):—Jesus was hat dich getrieben ("Jesus! what was that which drew thee," in Hymns from the Land of Luther, p. 79):—Fließt ihr Augen, fließt von Thränen (ibid. p. 92):—Ermuntert euch ihr Frommen (ibid. p. 51). (B. P.)

Laurentius, Saint. In early Christian art St. Laurence usually carries a copy of the gospels, to denote his office of deacon. In the Church of St. Laurence, in Agro Verano, at Rome, there is a mosaic of the 6th century, representing the martyr with an open book in his hand, on which may be read the words "disperisit, dedit pauperibus" (Ciampini, Vet. Mon. tab. lxvi, 2), in allusion to his kindness to the poor.

Laurentius, a Scotch prelate, was promoted to the see of Dunblane in 1160, and was witness to a charter to the abbey of Dunfermline. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 170.

Laurentius, Jacob, a Dutch theologian, who died at Amsterdam, March 19, 1664, is the author of, Refutatio Tripartita Fabulæ Papiæ de Purgatorio, Limbo Patrum et Puerorum:—Comment. in Epist. Jacobi ac Utramque Petri:—Expositio Septem Epistolarum quas Johannes in Insula Puthmo Scripsit:—Apologia Catechesis Heidelbergensis contra Coppensteinium:—Explicatio in Loca Difficiliora Epistolarum Pauli:—Expositio Historiæ Josephi Gen. xxxvi:—De Vera et Legitima S. Scripturæ et Patrum Auctoritate. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Laurentius, Paulus, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 30, 1554. He studied at Leipsic, was superintendent at Dresden, and died Jan. 24, 1624, doctor of theology. He wrote, Erklärung und Auslegung der 2 Bücher Samuelis:—Auslegung des Propheten Amos:—Predigten über den Propheten Jona:—Erklärung des xxi Paulus:—Explicatio Symboli Athanasii, etc. See Witte, Diarium Eruditum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lauretti (or Laureti), TOMMASO (called il Siciliano), an eminent Sicilian painter, was born at Palermo about 1530, studied under Sebastiano del Piombo, and settled early in life at Bologna. He subsequently visited Rome, at the invitation of Gregory XIII, to finish the ceiling of the Sala de Constantino. He was honored with the appointment of president of the Academy of St. Luke. He died about 1610. Among his principal works at Rome are the fresco paintings of the History of Brutus; at Bologna are the Crowning of the Virgin, in Santa Mattia; the Resurrection, in San Giacomo Maggiore. He died about 1592. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Laurie, ROBERT, a Scotch prelate, was first minister and then dean of Edinburgh. He was advanced to the see of Brechin about 1670. He was allowed to retain his deanery, and continued to exercise a particular ministry at the Church of the Holy Trinity in Edinburgh until his death in 1677. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 168.

Lauterbach, ERHARD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died Dec. 16, 1649, at Naumburg, doctor of theology, is the author of, De Prædestinatione:—De Persona Christi:—De Officio Christi Regio:—De Justificatione Hominis Peccatoris Coram Deo:—De Tripudio Solis Paschali:—Syntagma de Præcipuis Fidei Articulis. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lauterbach, Samuel Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Poland, was born at Fraustadt, Oct. 20, 1662. He studied at Breslau and Wittenberg, and died at his native place, June 4, 1728. He is the author of, Ariano-Socinianismi Olim in Polonia (Frankfort and Leipsic, 1725):—Vita, Fama et Fata Valerii Herbergeri. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 770; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lavābo (I will wash) is a term expressing the act of washing the priest-celebrant's fingers prior to the celebration of mass. This occurs in the English rite, by custom, after the offertory. The act is performed as a sign of the purity with which he should approach the altar. In the Roman rite, before the priest assumes the sacerdotal vestments, he washes the tips of his fingers. This custom seems to have been almost universal. Whenever sacrifice was about to be offered, the minister of the altar performed special ablutions. Such customs were current among the Jews, having been expressly enjoined by the law of Moses (Exod. xxx, 17-21). In the Western Church priests ordinarily recite the last six verses of Psalm xxvi during the act of washing, a practice which is referred to by several fathers, among others St. Clement and St. Cyril, and which became common throughout the whole Church about the 8th century. In St. Cyril's Catechetical Lectures, that bishop remarks, "You have seen the deacon provide water for the priest of sacrifice and presbyters around to wash their hands. . . . That washing of hands is a symbol indicating that you ought to be pure from every sin and prevarication."

Lavallette, LOUIS DE NOGARET D'EPERON, a French prelate, was born at Angoulême in 1593, and was the third and last son of the duke of Eperon. Being destined by his parents for the ecclesiastical calling, he was sent while very young to the abbey of St. Mesmin of Gard, Bardona, in 1611; of Gimont, St. Victor de Marseille, the Grasse, etc., in 1621. As archbishop of Toulouse he assisted at the States-General held at Paris. Promoted to the Roman purple, Jan. 11, 1621, he took part in the assembly of the clergy the same year, and of that held at Paris in 1625. In 1628 he resigned the archbishopric of Toulouse in favor of Charles de Montchou, his former preceptor, and devoted himself to military service. At his death, which occurred Sept. 28, 1639, the pope refused him the honors customarily rendered to a cardinal, under the pretext that he had commanded the armies of the heretics against the Catholics. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Laver of REGENERATION, a name sometimes given in the early Christian Church to baptism.

Laverna, in Roman mythology, was a protecting goddess of thieves and deceivers at Rome, who had a temple near the Lavernian gate.

Law, James, a Scotch prelate, was promoted to the see of Orkney in 1606, where he continued until 1616, when he was translated to the bishopric of Glasgow. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 227.

Lawa Allek, in the mythology of the Laplanders, was one of the three deities who are constant companions of the sun.

Lawkapatim, in Slavonic mythology, was worshipped by the Poles as a field-god, and his favor entreated before ploughing.

Lawrence, Francis Bingham, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was a graduate of St. Paul's College, at College Point, N. Y., and in 1852 of the General Theological Seminary; in 1853 he was assistant minister of the Church of the Holy Communion, New York city, and remained such until 1859, when he was chosen rector, and continued in that relation until his death, June 11, 1879, at the age of fifty-three years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 171.

Lawrence, Samuel, D.D., an English Presbyterian clergyman, was born at Nantwich, Cheshire, in 1693. His father was a Dissenting minister. He was educated at the Glasgow University, became tutor in the family of chief baron Warl, and settled as a minister first at Newcastle, Stafford, in 1714. In 1727 he became pastor at Newcastle-on-Tyne, but his health failing, in 1738, he had to go south, and settled at Moukwell Street, London, where he had a crowded audience for many years, and his ministry was very successful. He was learned, serious, cheerful, modest and polite, zealous and pious. He died, Oct. 1, 1760, and was interred in Bunhill Fields. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iii, 208.

Lawson, George, D.D., an eminent Scotch divine, was born March 13, 1749, near West Linton, Peeblesshire. At twenty he had finished his studies, and was licensed to preach. In 1771 he was ordained pastor of the Bergher Secession Church at Selkirk, where he continued during the remainder of his life. For more than thirty years he was also professor of divinity in the school of theology at the same place, and died there Feb. 21, 1820. He was a man of marked ability, extensive scholarship, and earnest piety. Dr. Lawson published many volumes of Sermons and Lectures; also Discourses on the Whole Book of Esther, etc. (Edinb. 1804, 12mo; Lond. 1809, 12mo):—Lectures on the Whole Book of Ruth, etc. (Edinb. 1806, 12mo):—Lectures on the History of Joseph (1807, 2 vols. 12mo):—Exposition of the Book of Proverbs (1821, 2 vols. 12mo; posth. pub. from 80 MS. vols. left by the author). See Macfarlane, Life (Edinb. 1861; N. Y. 1881).

Layritz, Friedrich, a famous German hymnologist, was born Jan. 30, 1808, at Nemmersdorf, in Upper Franconia. He studied at Erlangen, was in 1837 preacher in Hirschbach, and died at Schwaningen, near Ansbach, in 1859. He is the author of, Kern des deutschen Kirchengesanges (3d ed. Nördlingen, 1853-56):—Liturgische Gemeindegebänge (1855):—Geistliche Melodien meist aus dem 16. und 17. Jahrhundert (3d ed. Erlangen, 1860):—Die Liturgie eines vollständigen Hauptgottesdienstes (1849). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 772; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 53 sq. (B. P.)

Lazarus, Levi, a Jewish scholar, was born in 1822 at Filehne, duchy of Posen. He studied philosophy and Oriental languages at Berlin, and for twenty-five years was rabbi at Prenzlaw. When Dr. L. Frankel (q. v.), the director of the Jewish rabbinical seminary, died, he was called in 1876 as his successor. Lazarus died April 16, 1879. He was a great Talmudist, and a clever thinker. In 1877 he published a very interesting brochure, Zur Charakteristik der talmudischen Ethik. (B. P.)

Lazzari, Donato. See BRAMANTE.

Le, in the philosophical system of Confucius (q. v.), is the ultimate immaterial element of the universe. It is the absolute, regarded in association with material essences, and manifesting itself in virtue of such association as the cause of organization and order. The spirit of man is strictly of one substance with this principle. The Le, therefore, is identical with the Tai-ki, the Great Extreme. Beyond it, as the highest pinnacle of heaven, the one ultimate power, the entity without an opposite, no human thought is capable of soaring. "The absolute is like a stem shooting upwards; it is parted into twigs; it puts out leaves and blossoms; forth it springs incessantly until its fruit is fully ripe; yet even then the power of reproduction never ceases to be latent in it. The vital juice is there; and so the absolute still works and works indefinitely. Nothing hinders or can hinder its activity until the fruits have all been duly ripened, and activity gives place to rest."

Leach, BERTIAH N., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Middletown, Vt., April 28, 1801. He joined the Church in 1815, and was ordained in October, 1826, over the Church at Cornwall. His subsequent pastorates were in Middlebury, Fredonia, Wyoming, Hamilton, and Brooklyn, N. Y., and in Middletown, Conn. His useful life closed Jan. 28, 1869. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 678. (J. C. S.)

Leavitt, Jonathan, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Cornish, N. H., Oct. 21, 1800. He was educated at Kimball Union Academy, graduated from Amherst College in 1825, and was a member of Andover Theological Seminary for two years. He was ordained an evangelist in 1828, and became a home missionary in Pendleton and Wilmington, S. C., alternately; in 1830 was temporary supply successively in Lincolnton and Macon, Ga., Westbrook, Me., Atworth, N. H., and Waltham, Mass. He was acting-pastor at Bedford in 1835, was installed in 1837, and remained until 1840, when he was next installed pastor of Richmond Street Church, Providence, R. I. He was without charge from 1863 until his death, at Providence, Oct. 7, 1877. See Trien, Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 80. (W. P. S.)

Leavitt, Joshua, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Heath, Franklin Co., Mass., Sept. 8, 1794. He graduated from Yale College in 1814, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1819. He soon secured a lucrative practice in his native town, and afterwards in Putney, Vt., but left it to enter Yale Divinity School, where he graduated in 1825. The same year he was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church in Stratford, Conn. After a highly successful pastorate of three years he resigned and became secretary of the Seaman's Friend Society, and editor of the Sailor's Magazine, New York city. In 1831 he became editor of the New York Evangelist; in 1837 of the Emancipator; in 1848 managing editor of the Independent, retaining this position till his death, which occurred Jan. 16, 1873, in Brooklyn, N. Y. Dr. Leavitt was a man of great suavity of manner, a graceful writer, and an eloquent speaker. He published, Easy Lessons in Reading (1823):—Christian Lyre (1831):—and a series of Readers (1847).

Leblanc, Guillaume, a French prelate, was born at Alby in 1561. The position of his uncle, a distinguished theologian of the same name, aided his access to ecclesiastical honors. Having been chamberlain to pope Sixtus V, he was appointed, in 1588, to the bishopric of Vence, which a bull of Clement VIII reunited, in 1591, with the episcopal see of Grasse. This reunion, which the chapter of Vence vigorously repelled, became to Leblanc a great source of embarrassment and litigation. He was even the object of an attempted assassination, and sought to destroy the act of union by the parliament of Aix. He died at Aix, Nov. 21, 1601. For mention of his works, see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Leblanc (de Beaulieu), Jean Claude, a French prelate, was born in Paris, May 26, 1753. After being canon-regular of St. Genevieve before the Revolution, he became, in 1791, constitutional rector of the parish of St. Genevieve, and subsequently of St. Étienne du Mont. He was chosen archbishop of Rouen on the death of Gratian; consecrated Jan. 18, 1800, at Paris, and held in his metropolitan church a council of the bishops of his diocese the following October. In 1801 he assisted at the national council held at Paris. After the signing of the Concordat, he gave in his resignation, and in 1802 was appointed bishop of Soissons. He established a seminary in his episcopal city. Being invited, in 1815, to be present at a reception of the emperor after his return from the island of Elba, Leblanc wrote to the minister to give assurance of his fidelity to Louis XVIII. This declaration was published, and the bishop of Soissons withdrew to England. The return of the king recalled him to his diocese, and in 1817 he was appointed archbishop of Arles, re-established by the new Concordat. Having resigned in 1822, he withdrew to the Seminary of Foreign Missions at Paris, took charge of the Savoyards, and was appointed member of the chapter of St. Denis. He died July 13, 1825. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lebonah. The modern site, el-Lubban, is laid down on the Ordnance Map ten miles north of Beitin (Bethel), and is briefly described in the accompanying Memoirs (ii, 286, 360) as well as by Guérin (Samaria, ii, 112). Five pillars still remain standing, which seem to have been part of an ancient chapel.

Lebrecht, FÜRCHTEGOTT S., a Jewish scholar, was born at Memmelsdorf, Bavaria, in 1800. He made his Talmudical studies at the rabbinical seminary in Presburg, Hungary, and his philological at Halle, under Gesenius. In 1832 he went to Berlin, where he died, Oct. 13, 1876. Lebrecht contributed largely to the Literatur-Blatt des Orients (1841-44), and in connection with Biesenthal edited the dictionary of David Kimchi, called Liber Radicum. Besides, he wrote an essay, Handschriften und erste Ausgaben des babylonischen Talmuds, published in Wissenschaftliche Blätter aus der Veitell Ephraimischen Lehranstalt in Berlin (1862), and Die Stadt Belher, in Magazin für die Wissenschaft des Judenthums (Berlin, 1876), p. 27-40, 77-98. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 226 sq. (B. P.)

Lebrun, Charles, an eminent French painter, was born in Paris, March 22, 1619. In 1662 he commenced his great work, The Battles of Alexander, which gained him a great reputation. In the Church of Notre Dame are two of his most celebrated pictures, The Stoning of St. Stephen, and The Martyrdom of St. Andrew. He died in Paris, Feb. 12, 1690. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Lebrun, Jean Baptiste (surnamed Desmaretz), a French scholar, was born at Rouen, and partly educated at Port Royal. He labored in different dioceses, and died at Orleans, March 19, 1781, never having been willing to proceed to a higher order than that of acolyth. He left an edition (the second) of the Latin work of John, bishop of Avanches, De Divinis Officiis (Rouen, 1679, 12mo):—An edition of St. Paulinus, with notes, etc. (Paris, 1685):—A Concordance of the Books of Kings and Chronicles (Lat.):—Le Voyage Liturgique de France, published under the name of the Sieur de Molton (Paris, 1718, 8vo):—The Breviaries of Orleans and Nevers:—Luctantius, the edition which passed in MS. to his brother, a bookseller at Rouen, and from him to Langlet du Fresnoy, who published it (2 vols. 4to). He was working at a new edition of the Martyrology of Usuardus when he was put into the Bastille, where he remained five years. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Le Camus, ÉTIENNE, a French prelate and theologian, was born at Paris, Nov. 24, 1632, of an ancient family in the magistracy. He became doctor of the Sorbonne in 1650, and almoner of the king, Louis XIV, while still a minor. He was appointed bishop of Grenoble in 1671, and from that time a great change took place in his life. He was indulgent to the faults of others, and gave an example of charity, modesty, and piety. In 1686 Louis XIV demanded the hat of the cardinal for M. de Harlay, archbishop of Paris. Innocent XI not liking this prelate, sent the Roman purple to Le Camus. This irritated Louis XIV, and he called for the new cardinal, wishing to reproach him, but the bishop of Grenoble disarmed him by his pleasantry. Le Camus left all his goods to the poor of his diocese. He founded two seminaries, one at Grenoble, the other at St. Martin de Misere, and several establishments of charity. He died at Grenoble, Sept. 12, 1707. For mention of his works, see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lecanomanoy, a species of divination (q. v.), performed by means of a basin, with wedges of gold or silver marked with certain characters. The wedges were suspended over the water, and the dæmon formally invoked, when he gave the response in a low hissing sound passing through the water.

Lecerf de la Vieville, PHILIPPE, a French Benedictine, who died March 11, 1748, is the author of, Bibliothèque Historique et Critique des Auteurs de la Congrégation de Saint-Maur (Hague, 1726):—Défense de la Bibliothèque, etc. (Paris, 1727):—Histoire de la Constitution Unigenitus, en ce qu'elle regarde la Congrégation de Saint-Maur (Utrecht, 1726). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lech, JOHN, an Irish prelate, was elected to the bishopric of Dunkeld, Scotland, in 1809, and was canon of the Church. In 1810 he was promoted to the see of Dublin. In 1812 he was constituted lord treasurer of Ireland. He died Aug. 10, 1818. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 120.

Le Courayer, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, a French theologian, was born at Rouen in 1681. At the age of sixteen he was admitted to the congregation of St. Genevieve, and soon he was instructed there in philosophy and theology, was canon in 1701, and librarian in 1711. A dissertation which he published at Brussels in 1723, under the title Sur la Validité des Ordinations des Anglais, called forth the opposition of Gervaise, Hardouin, and Lequien, and an assembly of twenty-two bishops who met at St. Germain-des-Près condemned the work, together with Le Courayer's rejoinder to his opponent. Finally he was excommunicated by the abbot of St. Genevieve and cardinal Noailles; but about the same time the Oxford University made him doctor of theology. He intended to write against the cardinal; but, afraid of being imprisoned, went to England, where he was received by archbishop Wake of Canterbury. Le Courayer died at London in 1776. He published a French translation of Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent, with notes (London, 1736, 2 vols.). See La France Protestante; Nécrologes des Hommes Célèbres; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Le Coz, CLAUDE, a French prelate, was born at Plounevez Parzay, Brittany, Sept. 2, 1740. He pursued his studies at the College of Quimper, and was a professor there at the time of the Revolution. In 1791 he was elected constitutional bishop of the department of Ille-et-Vilaine, and the same year deputy at the legislative assembly. During the Reign of Terror he was imprisoned and sent to Mont Michel, where he remained fourteen months. Obtaining his liberty in 1795, he resumed his episcopal duties, and adhered to the encyclicals published by the synod of the constitutional bishops reunited at Paris. Le Coz presided over the national council of the same bishops, held at the capitol from Aug. 15, 1797, to Nov. 12 of the same year.

In 1799 he assembled a synod at Rennes, but the priests of his diocese did not all recognise his authority. Being called to the presidency of the council of 1801, he opposed the project of a French sacramentarian. At the time of the Concordat of the first consul with the pope, Le Coz resigned, and was appointed archbishop of Bezançon. In 1804 he went to Paris to visit the pope, and after some difficulties signed an article of adhesion and submission to the briefs of the holy father. He died at Villevieux, near Lons le Saulnier, May 8, 1815, leaving a number of works, for mention of which see Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Led (or Leda), in Slavonic mythology, is the god of war; also among the Russians. He appears armed with sword and shield, a helmet on his head, and a spear in his hand.

Leding, in Norse mythology, is the chain with which the wolf Fenris was chained.

Lee, Henry Washington, D.D., LL.D., a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Hamden, Conn., July 26, 1815. He was ordained deacon in 1838; became rector at Springfield, Mass., in 1840; and in 1848 of St. Luke's at Rochester, N. Y., where he was consecrated bishop of Iowa, Oct. 18, 1854. His episcopal residence was at Davenport. Griswold College, located in that place, became the object of his special care. He died Sept. 26, 1874. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

Lee, Richard Henry, LL.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, rector of Trinity, Washington, Pa., died at that place, Jan. 3, 1865, aged seventy-five years. For many years he was professor in Washington College. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1865, p. 140.

Lee, Samuel, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in London, England, in 1625. From his father, Samuel Lee, he inherited a large estate. After remaining some time at St. Paul's school, he went, in 1640, to Oxford, and continued his studies there until 1648, when he received the degree of M.A. Soon after he was appointed to a fellowship in Wadham College, and became proctor of the university in 1656. At that time he was a lecturer in Great St. Helen's Church in London. In 1677 he became associated with the celebrated Theophilus Gale, as minister in a nonconforming congregation in Holborn. In September, 1679, he was preaching at Bignell, in Oxfordshire, where he remained for some time. Afterwards, for several years, he was pastor of an Independent Church at Newington Green. Although strongly advised to enter the Established Church, conscientious scruples forbade it. In 1686 he landed in New England, and was employed to preach in Bristol, R. I. The next year, in May, he was chosen pastor of the newly organized Church there. As religious toleration began to prevail in England, he resolved to return thither. Resigning his pastorate in Bristol, he set sail in 1691, but was captured by a French privateer and carried to St. Malo, where he died in the latter part of the same year. It is said of him that there was scarcely a department of knowledge with which he was not familiar. At one time he devoted a great deal of attention to astrology, but disapproved of it afterwards, and burned a hundred books relating to it. His benevolence was manifested in frequent gifts to the poor. Besides a number of sermons, he published several books. His Triumph of Mercy was popular in New England, and was reprinted in Boston in 1718. Another work, Orbis Miraculum; or, The Temple of Solomon Portrayed by Scripture Light (1659, fol.), printed at the expense of the University of Oxford, was much admired. Another, De Excidio Anti-Christi (eod. fol.), was a study of popery. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 209.

Lee, William, D.D., an Irish prelate, was born in Ireland in 1815. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he was elected fellow in 1839, in 1857 was appointed professor of ecclesiastical history, and in 1863 lecturer on divinity. In 1874 he was archdeacon of Dublin, and he died May 11, 1888. He is the author especially of, Introductory Lectures on Ecclesiastical History (1858);—Examination of Remarks of Baden Powell (1861); but is best known by his Lectures on the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures (1852).

Leechman, John, LL.D., a Scotch Baptist minister and missionary, was born at Glasgow, Sept. 2, 1803, and became a Baptist in 1820. He was educated at the Haldane Institution, Grantown, in the north of Scotland, in the Baptist College, Bristol, and the University of Glasgow. He was ordained a missionary to India at Edinburgh, July 8, 1832, and sailed from Liverpool on the 25th for the mission station at Serampore. He began work as tutor in the college, and preacher of the gospel. In 1835 he was ordained co-pastor of the Church at Serampore. In 1837 he sailed for England for the benefit of his wife's health, and to awaken greater interest at home in the mission in India. In 1838 he was induced to settle as pastor of the Church at Irvine, Ayrshire. He removed to London in 1848 as pastor of the Baptist Church in Hammersmith. In 1850 he was sent, with the Rev. Joshua Russell, as a deputation to India and Ceylon, in which they spent some four months. He resigned his pastorate in 1863, and removed to Bath for rest and recuperation. He afterwards engaged in various public labors, and at the close of 1867 accepted the pastorate at Kensington Chapel. He ceased to preach in 1870, and died March 16, 1874. See (Lond.) Bapt. Hand-Book, 1875, p. 284.

Leechman, William, D.D., a Scotch divine, was born in 1706, educated at the University of Edinburgh, licensed to preach in 1731, ordained minister of Beith in 1736, elected professor of theology in the University of Glasgow about 1748, principal in 1761, and died Dec. 3, 1785. He was held in high estimation by his brethren in the ministry, having been elected by them, in 1740, to the moderatorship of the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr, and in 1757 of the General Assembly. He was a ripe theologian, a powerful preacher, and a warm advocate of all institutions of a worthy character. A collective edition of his sermons, with a life of the author, by James Wodrow, D.D., was published (Lond. 1789, 2 vols. 8vo; new ed. 1816, 2 vols. 8vo). See The (Lond.) Christian Observer, Dec. 1812, p. 758; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Le Faucheur, Michel, one of the most famous Protestant preachers of the 17th century, was born in the neighborhood of Geneva in 1585. In 1607 he was ordained, and appointed pastor at Annonay. His fame as a pulpit orator was soon made known, and the authorities of Geneva wished him to come there. But Le Faucheur declined, and in 1609 went to Paris. In 1612 he was called to Montpelier, and at different periods represented the churches of Languedoc at the synodical assemblies. He died at Paris in 1657, leaving, Sermons:—Traité de l'Action de l'Orateur (Paris, 1657);—Traité de la Cène du Seigneur (Geneva, 1635). See Bayle, Dict. Historique; Haag, La France Protestante, vi; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Léger, Saint. See LEONKAR.

Legge, GEORGE, LL.D., a Scotch Congregational minister, was born at Huntley, Aberdeenshire, Oct. 10, 1802. He became a student of King's College, Aberdeen, in 1819, completing his curriculum in 1825, and receiving his degree of M.A.; was converted in 1828; entered Highbury College to prepare for the ministry in 1830, and in 1832 became pastor at Bristol. In 1835 he accepted a call to the pastorate of Gallowtree-gate Chapel, Leicester, and in that capacity continued till his death, Jan. 24, 1861. In 1859 he was chairman of the Congregational Union. Dr. Legge was a man of noble qualities, endowed with a strong intellect, a glowing imagination, a loving heart, and great constancy of purpose. His principal publications were, Principles of Nonconformity:—Christianity in Harmony with Man's Nature, Present and Progressive:—The Range and Limitations of Human Knowledge, besides several single sermons. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1862, p. 247.

Legobien, CHARLES, a French Jesuit, was born at St. Malo in 1658; in 1671 he entered the society of Jesus; shortly after taught at Tours; then removed to Paris, where he became first secretary, and afterwards superintendent, of the missions of his order to China. He published, about 1702, a collection of letters from missionaries in China, etc., entitled Lettres Édifiantes et Curieuses, Écrites des Missions Étrangères. He died March 5, 1708, at Paris. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Le Gouverneur, GUILLAUME, a French prelate, was born at St. Malo. After being canon, then dean of the cathedral of his native place, he became bishop, Jan. 29, 1610. He assisted as deputy of the clergy to the states of Brittany in 1614, founded in his diocese several establishments of charity and religion, and occupied his time in collecting the ecclesiastical regulations laid down by his predecessors. He died at St. Malo, June 25, 1630. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Legras, LOUISE DE MARILLAC, Madame, foundress of an order of nuns, was born at Paris, Aug. 12, 1591. She was daughter of Louis de Marillac, brother of the celebrated guard of the seals, and of the marshal of this name. In 1613 she married Antoine Legras, secretary of the queen Marie de Medicis. Being eventually left a widow, she devoted herself entirely to religious matters. In connection with Vincent de Paul she bore an important part in the establishment of various charitable institutions. They founded the institution of the sisters of charity called Sœurs Grises, on account of the color of their costume. Placed at the head of a community of this order at Paris, madame Legras devoted herself with great self-abnegation to the care of the sick. She aided Vincent de Paul in bestowing large charities in various ways. Her death occurred at Paris in 1662. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Le Hennuyer, JEAN, a French prelate, was born in 1497 at St. Quentin. He was successively chief almoner of Henry II, Francis II, Charles IX, and Henry III. Appointed bishop of Lodeve in 1557, and afterwards of Lisieux, he was spiritual director of Catherine de Medicis and of Diane de Poitiers. In this position he always showed a disposition to persecute the Protestants, although some acts to the contrary have been falsely attributed to him. He died in 1578. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lehl. On the identification of this site Lieut. Conder remarks as follows (Tent Work in Palestine, i, 276):

"A little way north-west of Zoreah, seven miles from Belt 'Atâb, is a low hill, on the slope of which are springs called 'Ayn Abu Mehârib, or the 'fountains of the place of battles.' Close by is a little Moslem chapel, dedicated to Sheikh Nedhir, or 'the Nazirite chief.' And, higher up, a ruin with the extraordinary title Ism Allah—'the name of God.' The Nazirite chief is probably Samson, whose memory is so well preserved in this small district, and the place is perhaps connected with a tradition of one of his exploits. The Ism Allah is possibly a corruption of Em'a Allah—'God heard'—in which case the incident intended might be the battle of Ramath Lehl. Finally, we were informed by a native of the place that the springs were sometimes called 'Ayn Kâra, in which name we should recognise easily the En hak-Kore, or 'fountain of the crier' (Judges xv, 19). To say that this spot certainly represents Ramath Lehl—the hill of the jaw-bone—would be too bold. It seems, however, clear that a tradition of one of Samson's exploits lingers here; the position is appropriate for the scene of the slaughter with the jaw-bone, and we have not succeeded in finding any other likely site."

Lehmann, WILHELM FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran minister, was born Oct. 16, 1820, in Württemberg. In 1824 he came with his parents to America. He studied at the theological seminaries of Columbus, O., and Philadelphia, Pa., and was for some time preacher at Somerset, O. In 1846 he was appointed professor at the University at Columbus. He died Dec. 1, 1880. For many years he was president of the Lutheran Synod of Ohio. (B. P.)

Lehmus, ADAM THEODOR ALBERT FRANZ, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Soest, Dec. 2, 1777. He entered the ministry in 1801, was in 1819 dean and pastor at Anspach, and died Aug. 18, 1837, doctor of theology. He wrote, Die Lehre von der Versöhnung des Menschen mit Gott durch Christum (Sulzbach, 1821):—Ueber die Taufe (Heidelberg, 1807):—Aufsätze theologischen Inhalts, etc. (1835):—Die Rechtfertigungslehre der evangelischen Kirche in ihren Hauptmomenten dargestellt (1836). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 439, 450; ii, 19, 65, 75, 100, 166; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 780 sq. (B. P.)

Leib Olmal, in the mythology of the Laplanders, was a deity of the atmosphere, who made the weather favorable to hunting and fishing.

Leifthus, in Norse mythology, was one of the rivers of hell, which take their origin from the spring Hwergelmer.

Leighton, HENRY DE, a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of Moray, March 8, 1414, where he continued ten years. In 1424 he was translated to the see of Aberdeen. He was one of the commissioners sent to London for negotiating the ransom of king James I, and returned home with him. He died in 1441. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 113-142.

Leimbürg, JOHANN LEISS VON, a Roman Catholic prelate of Germany, was born in 1821. For some time dean at Bregenz and Innsbrück, he was in 1879 appointed prince-bishop of Brixen, and died April 24, 1884. He was a man of peace, and tolerant against non-Catholics. (B. P.)

Leinbach, THOMAS HARTMAN, an earnest and successful minister of the German Reformed Church, was born in Berks County, Pa., Jan. 18, 1802. He studied privately under the Rev. Dr. F. L. Herman; was licensed and ordained in 1822. After serving for several years a few congregations, located partly in Lancaster and partly in Berks County, he accepted a call from the Tulpehocken charge, where he concluded his long and useful ministry, March 31, 1864. Father Leinbach was celebrated as a "catechist," which eminently fitted him for the particular field to which he was called. He was besides a very able, earnest, and effective preacher, and a most conscientious and successful pastor. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 175. (D. Y. H.)

Leiptr, in Norse mythology, was one of the rivers of hell, which have their source in the spring Hwergelmer.

Leire. See LETHRA.

Leiter, SAMUEL B., D.D., a German Reformed minister, was born at Leitersburg, Md., April 19, 1809. His literary and theological training he received at York, Pa. He was licensed and ordained by the Maryland Classis of the Reformed Church in 1835; immediately left for the West, and settled in Ohio, where he successfully exercised his ministry in different sections of the state. Dr. Leiter was a man of good natural parts and extensive requirements, which he conscientiously employed in the service of his Master. He died March 31, 1883. (D. Y. H.)

Lejay (Lat. Laius), CLAUDE, one of the fathers of the Jesuit order, was born at Alse, in Faucigny, in the diocese of Geneva, about 1505. He commenced his studies at the College of La Roche, and completed them at Paris. He allied himself in friendship with Peter Faire, which, in 1535, led to his becoming a Jesuit, and a great help to his order. In 1545 he assisted at the Council of Trent. He afterwards directed the College of Boulogne, where he received the degree of doctor of theology. He then returned to Germany, taught at Ingolstadt, then at Vienna, in June, 1551, where he died, Aug. 6, 1552. He composed various works, which were only published in the Speculum Præsulis ex Sacra Scriptura, Canonum et Doctorum Verbis (Ingolstadt, 1625, and in vol. xvii of the Œuvres of P. Gretser, Ratisbon, 1741). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Le-ke, one of the sacred books of the Chinese. It is the acknowledged guide to rites and manners, prescribing rules for all the relationships of life, and the established orders of society. See CONFUCIUS.

Lekkio, in Finnish mythology, was an evil spirit of the woods, who appeared in various frightful forms.

Lel, in Slavonic mythology, was the god of love, son of Lada, the goddess of beauty, and brother of Did and Puel.

Lelli (Saint), CAMILLO DE, founder of an order of Italian friars, was born at Buccianico, May 25, 1550. An ulcer, resulting from his early vices, led him to enter a convent. The Franciscans rejected him, and he went to Rome, where he was received at the hospital of St. James. He speedily recovered, and was afterwards expelled for misconduct. In 1569 he enrolled himself among the troops of Venice, and after the close of the war, having been dismissed, hired out to the Capuchins of Manfredonia. He wished to become a monk, but was repulsed on all sides on account of his infirmity. He returned to the hospital of St. James, where this time his good conduct obtained for him the position of steward. Thinking that the diseases even then were not well treated at the hospitals, he completed his studies among the Jesuits, was made priest, and founded in 1584 the congregation of Clerics Regulars, especially intended for the care of the sick. This congregation, being approved by Sixtus V, March 8, 1586, was established as a religious order by Gregory XIV, Oct. 15, 1591. St. Camillo de Lelli resigned his supervision in 1607, and was beatified by Benedict XVI in 1742. He died at Rome, July 14, 1614. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Le Maire, GUILLAUME, a French prelate, was chosen as successor to Nicolas Gellent, bishop of Angers, having been first chaplain and penitentiary of the cathedral. The newly elected bishop went to Vincennes, May 16, 1291, and took the oath to king Philip. Some years later he excommunicated David de Lesmaisons, bailiwick of Angers, and his sub-bailiwick, Darien Bidoyen. The difficulty was concerning the ecclesiastical immunities. In the unfortunate condition of his treasury the king objected to the subsidies, and his officers levied upon the goods of the Church as well as others. This was opposed by Guillaume Le Maire, together with other bishops. He argued this question against the count of Anjou. The whole administration of Le Maire was laborious and discordant. He died May 13, 1314, leaving a historical work, for mention of which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Le Maître, ANTOINE, a French writer, brother of Isaac Louis le Maître (better known as de Sacy), was born at Paris in 1607. For a time he practised law with great success, but abandoned his profession and joined the recluses of Port Royal. He died Nov. 4, 1658. Le Maître is the author of, Vie de Saint Bernard:—L'Aumône Chrétienne (Paris, 1658, 2 vols.):—Vies de S. Ignace, de S. Jean Climaque, et des Martyrs de Lyon, in the Vies des Saints, published by Du Fossé (1685); from the Latin he translated Chrysostom's treatise, De Sacerdotio. See Clémencet, Hist. Générale de Port-Royal, vol. ii and iii; Besoigne, Histoire de l'Abbaye de Port-Royal, vol. iii; De Vallée, Antoine le Maître et ses Contemporains; Sapey, Guillaume du Vair et Antoine le Maître;

Lemke, HEINRICHI, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 31, 1601, at Lubeck. He studied at different universities, and died at Bergen, Norway, March 7, 1674. He wrote, Vindictio Librorum Apocryphorum Veteris et Novi Testamenti:—Vindictio Incarnati Veri Messie Promissi ex Thalmud et Rabbino-rum Scriptis Desumpta:—Schola Papistarum Reformata. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lemoine, JKAN, a French prelate, was born at Cressy, in the 13th century. Having completed his studies, he took the degree of doctor of theology at the University of Paris, and made a journey to Rome, where he was well received, and appointed auditor of the rota. His commentary upon the sixth book of the Decretales, which he wrote at Rome, gained for him the title of cardinal. Boniface VIII appointed him legate to France in 1302, and in this position he strove to re-establish peace between Philip the Fair and the holy see. He acted with so much discretion that he won the esteem of the king without losing his credit with the pope. He assisted, in 1305, at the conclave held at Perugia for the election of Clement V, and accompanied that pontiff to Avignon, where he died, Aug. 22, 1318. His body was borne to Paris, and interred in the church of the college which he had founded in 1303 in that city, on Rue St. Victor, upon the site of the houses, chapel, and cemetery which had belonged to the Augustinian monks.

His brother, ANDRÉ LEMOINE, bishop of Noyon, aided him in the founding of the college which bore the name of the cardinal Lemoine. He died in 1315, and the two brothers were laid in the same tomb. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lenæus, JOHANN CANUTUS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1573, at Lenna, near Upsala. He studied at Wittenberg, Helmstadt, and Rostock, was professor of Greek and Hebrew at Upsala, and died April 25, 1669, doctor of theology, archbishop of Sweden, and pro-chancellor of the Upsala Academy. He wrote, Comm. in Evangelium Johannis:—Comm. in Lucæ Acta Apostolorum:—Comm. in Canonicas Epistolas Jacobi, Petri, Johannis et Judæ:—Brevi Informatio de Veritate et Excellencia Christianæ Religionis:—Judicium de Unione a Calvinianis Petita. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 185. (B. P.)

Lenet, PHILIBERT BERNARD, a French monk, was born at Dijon, Aug. 24, 1677. Having been received among the canons regular of St. Genevieve, he soon distinguished himself by his piety and learning. For a time professor at Senlis and at Provins, he became director of the seminary at Rheims, and abbot of Grand-Val-des-Écoliers, in the diocese of Langres. Being accused of Jansenism, Lenet was obliged to retire from his position, and died in 1748. He wrote some works, for which see Nécrologie des Plus Célèbres Défenseurs de la Vérité, vol. iii; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Le Neve, JOHN, an English clergyman and biographer, was born Dec. 27, 1679, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He became rector of Thornton-le-Moor, Lincolnshire, about 1721, and died about 1741. He was an industrious collector of biographical materials, and has given to the world several important collections. They include, Lives of the Most Illustrious Persons who Died in 1711-12 (London, 1713-14, 2 vols. 8vo):—Fasts Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ (1716), of which a new edition was published (1854, 3 vols. 8vo) by T. Duffus Hardy, assistant keeper of the public records, with a continuation to the year of publication; the first edition contained eleven thousand entries, while the new edition contains more than thirty thousand names of clergymen:—Memoriale Concerning Dr. Richard Field (1716):—Monumenta Anglicana (1700–19, 9 vols. 8vo):—Lives of the Protestant Bishops (1720):—Lives of the Archbishops (1723). See Biographical Notice of Le Neve in Hardy's edition of the Faust.

Lenfant, DAVID, a French Dominican, who died at Paris, May 31, 1688, is the author of, Concordantia Augustiniana (1655–1656, 2 vols. fol.):—Biblia Augustiniana (2 vols.):—St. Bernardi Biblia (1665):—St. Thomæ Aquinatis Biblia (1657–59, 3 vols.):—Histoire Générale de Tous les Siècles (1684, 6 vols.). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lenglet-Dufresnoy, NICOLAS, a French writer, was born at Beauvais, Oct. 5, 1674. He studied theology at Paris, and took holy orders, but soon exchanged his clerical dress for that of a politician and diplomatist. He died Jan. 16, 1756. Of his numerous works we mention the following, bearing upon theology: Novum Jesu Christi Testamentum Notis Historicis et Criticis Illustratum (Paris, 1703, 2 vols.; reprinted 1735):—Imitation de Jésus-Christ, Traduite et Revue (1771):—Traité Historique et Dogmatique du Secret Inviolable de la Confession (1713 and often):—Réputation des Erreurs de Spinoza, avec sa Vie à la Tête (Amsterdam, 1731):—Traité Historique et Dogmatique des Opérations, des Visions et des Revelations Particulières (1751, 2 vols.):—Recueil des Dissertations Anciennes et Modernes sur les Apparitions, les Visions et les Songes (1752, 4 vols.). He also edited Lucii Cæcilius Lactantii Opera Omnia (1748, 2 vols.), the most complete edition of Lactantius's works. See Michault, Mémoires pour Servir à l'Histoire de la Vie et des Ouvrages de l'Abbé Lenglet; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lengnich, KARL BENJAMIN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Dantzig, Feb. 19, 1743. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1772 second preacher at his native place, and died Nov. 5, 1795, leaving, Predigten (Dantzig, 1770):—Beitrag zur Kenntnis seltener und merkwürdiger Bücher (ibid. 1776, 2 vols.):—Nachrichten zur Bücher- und Münzkunde (ibid. 1780–82, 4 vols.). See Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner, p. 200. (B. P.)

Lenormant, Charles, a French archaeologist and numismatician, was born in Paris, June 1, 1802. In 1828 he travelled in Egypt, was in 1837 conservator at the national library, and after 1835 acted as Guizot's substitute at the Sorbonne, where his lectures, savoring too much of Romish orthodoxy, often caused disturbances, especially in 1846, so that he had finally to give up his lecturing. In 1848 he was called as professor of Egyptian archaeology at the Collège de France, and died at Athens, Nov. 24, 1859. Of his works we mention, Trésor de Numismatique et de Glyptique (1836–50, 5 vols.):—Élite des Monuments Cramographiques (1844–57, 3 vols.). (B. P.)

Lenormant, François, son of Charles, was born in Paris, Jan. 17, 1837. He pursued the same studies which distinguished his father. In 1862 he was sub-librarian of the Institute, in 1874 professor of archaeology at the large Paris library, and died Dec. 10, 1883, leaving, Manuel d'Histoire Ancienne de l'Orient Jusqu'aux Guerres Indiques (3d ed. 1869, 3 vols.; transl. into German, Berlin, 1869, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1871):—Lettres Assyriologiques et Épigraïques (1871–72, 4 vols.):—Les Premières Civilisations (1874, 2 vols.; Germ. transl. Jena, 1875):—Les Sciences Occultes en Asie (1874–75; Germ. transl. Jena, 1878), two parts; the first treating of La Magie chez les Chaldéens et les Origines Accadiennes; the second of La Divination et la Science des Présages chez les Chaldéens:—Les Origines de l'Histoire d'Après la Bible et les Traditions des Peuples Orientaux (1880–82, 2 vols.; Engl. transl. New York, 1882):—Monnaies et Médailles (Paris, 1883). (B. P.)

Leo, Gottlob Eduard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1803, and died at Waldenburg, May 7, 1881, member of consistory and doctor of theology. He is the author of, Geschichte der christlichen Religion und Kirche (Leipsic, 1831):—Das Leben Gellert's (Dresden, 1846):—Stimmen aus der Kirche (1845):—Pauli Epistola i ad Timotheum Græce (1837):—Geschichte der Reformation in Dresden und Leipzig (1839):—Das Leben August Hermann Francke's (1848). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 786. (B. P.)

Leo, Heinrich, a famous German historian, was born at Rudolstadt, March 19, 1799. He studied at Breslau and Jena, and commenced his academical career at Erlangen in 1820. In 1824 he was at Berlin, accepted a call to Halle in 1830, and died April 24, 1878. Leo was orthodox in religion, and conservative in politics, and from this standpoint wrote his Lehrbuch der Universalgeschichte (Halle, 1835–44, 6 vols.; 3d ed. 1849–53). Liberalism found in him a violent opponent, and the liberal tendencies in State and Church he assailed in Studien und Skizzen zur Naturgeschichte des Staates (ibid. 1833), Die Hegelingen (1838), Signatura Temporis (1849), more especially in the Kreuz-Zeitung, the organ of the political conservatives, and in Evangelische Kirchenzeitung, the organ of orthodoxy. His political tendencies were acknowledged by king Frederick William IV, and in 1863 he was made a member of the Prussian upper house for life. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Brockhaus, Conversations-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Leo, Rudolf, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born May 6, 1806, at Rudolstadt. He studied at Jena and Göttingen, was tutor of prince Günther of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt from 1829 to 1839, and professor at the gymnasium of his native place from 1839 to 1844. In the latter year he was appointed second deacon, in 1851 court-preacher and member of consistory, and in 1852 general-superintendent. He retired from the ministry in 1879, and died Jan. 18, 1883. (B. P.)

Leonard, ALEXANDER S., S.T.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in New York city, June 28, 1806. He graduated from Columbia College in 1825; was engaged in mercantile pursuits for twenty years; ordained deacon in 1848; assistant at St. Clement's Church, N. Y.; rector of Emmanuel Church, in the same city, from 1849 to 1865, and died there, May 17, 1878. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 169; Church Almanac, 1879, p. 93.

Leonhard, MATTHÆI D'UDINE, a famous Dominican, who died in 1470, provincial of Lombardy, was a doctor of law and divinity. He preached in the principal cities of Italy, especially at Florence, before pope Eugene IV and his court. His Sermones have often been printed. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Leoni, OTTAVIO (called il carr. Padovano and Padovano), an eminent painter and engraver, was born in Rome in 1578. Among his historical works is The Virgin and Infant, in Santa Maria della Minerva; The Annunciation, in San Eustachio; and St. Carlo, St. Francesco, and St. Niccolò, in San Urbano. He was chosen director of the Academy of St. Luke, and was appointed knight of the order of Christ, on which occasion he painted the Martyrdom of St. Martina, for the Church of the Academy. As an engraver, he did not succeed very well. He, however, executed a number of works. He died in 1630. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Leopard-worship. The leopard is held in great dread by the natives of different parts of Africa, not only on account of its ferocity, but from the superstitious notion that wicked men metamorphose themselves into these animals, and commit all sorts of depredations without the liability or possibility of being killed. In southern Guinea large villages are sometimes abandone by their inhabitants, because they are afraid to attack these animals on account of their supposed supernatural powers. In Dahomey, the leopard is accounted so sacred that if any one should kill it he would be convicted of having committed sacrilege, and would be offered in sacrifice to the offended god as a propitiation. The leopard is there looked upon as an impersonation of the supreme god, whom they call Seh. If any one is killed by a leopard, his relatives rejoice at the event, and treat the animal with great kindness. See LEOPARD.

Lepcha Version of the Scriptures. Lepcha is a dialect spoken by an aboriginal mountain-tribe in north-east India, near Darjeeling. The first attempt at a translation into that dialect was made by the Rev. W. Start, in 1855 or 1856, who printed the gospel of Matthew at his own expense. The Calcutta Auxiliary Bible Society published, in 1871, the gospels of Matthew and John, Genesis, and part of Exodus. (B. P.)

Lepsius, KARL RICHARD, a noted German Egyptologist, was born at Naumburg, Dec. 23, 1810. Well prepared by seven years of classical training at Pforta, he went in 1829 to Leipsic and Göttingen to study philology. When he took his degree, he showed at once by his dissertation that he knew how best to utilize the principles of comparative philology by applying them to the solution of difficult problems of classical scholarship. He took for his subject the Umbrian Inscriptions, and thus laid the foundation of what has proved in the end one of the most successful achievements of the science of language—namely, the decipherment and grammatical analysis of the Etruscan tables. In 1833 he went to Paris to attend lectures, and study in libraries and museums. In 1834 he published Paläographie als Mittel für die Sprachforschung, for which was awarded by the French Institute the Priz Volney. In 1835 another essay of his, Ueber die Anordnung und Verwandtschaft des semitischen, indischen, äthiopischen, alpersischen und altägyptischen Alphabets, was read before the Berlin Academy; and in the same year, while still at Paris, he wrote his paper, Ueber den Ursprung und die Verwandtschaft der Zuhörörter in der indogermanischen, semitischen, und der koptischen Sprache. At the time of his residence at Paris, Champollion's star was just rising, but Egyptian studies were only in their infancy. Lepsius felt attracted towards these new studies. Having acquired the first principles of the decipherment of hieroglyphs from Champollion's works, he proceeded from Paris to Italy, which was rich in Egyptian antiquities. He spent some time with Rosellini, at Pisa, and then settled down to steady work at Rome. Here he was attracted by Bunsen, who did everything he could for him. By his Lettre à M. Rosellini sur l'Alphabet Hiéroglyphique (1837), Lepsius took his position as one of the leading Egyptologists of the day, and thus entered upon a career which he never left again. But, although Egypt formed the principal object of his studies, his classical tastes, too, found ample food in Italy, as was shown by his edition of the Inscriptiones Umbricæ et Oscæ (Leipsic, 1841), and by his papers on Die Tyrrhenschen Palästra in Etrurien (1842). From Italy he went to England, where he spent two years studying in the British Museum, and shaping plans for future work. In 1842 we find Lepsius established as professor at Berlin. In the meantime he had published some of his best-known works—his Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden des ägyptischen Alterthums (1842, fol. with 23 tables), and Das Todtenbuch der Ägypter (ed. with 79 tables). In the same year followed the great expedition to Egypt, projected by Bunsen, and carried out at the expense of the king of Prussia, Frederick William IV. Lepsius was the leader, and he acquitted himself of this most difficult task with perfect success. Every student of Egyptology knows the fruits of that expedition, as gathered partly in Denkmäler aus Ägypten und Äthiopien (1849– 59, 12 vols. of the largest folio, with 894 tables). In 1849 he published his Chronologie der Ägypter, one volume; the second never appeared. Without enumerating the many works which he published after his return from Egypt, we will state that in 1866 he went to the land of the Pharaohs once more, and this second expedition was crowned by the discovery of a new trilingual tablet, a worthy companion of the Rosetta stone. In 1869 he paid his last visit to the land of his lifelong love, being present at the opening of the Suez canal, and afterwards travelled with the crown-prince of Prussia to Upper Egypt and Nubia. The last years of his life were devoted chiefly to the elaboration of his Nubian Grammar, a work of enormous labor, full not only of new materials, but of new views on the relationship of the numerous languages of Africa. "Taken all in all," says Max Müller, "Lepsius was the perfect type of the German professor, devoted to his work, full of ideals, and convinced that there is no higher vocation in life than to preserve and to add to the sacred stock of human knowledge, which, though it is seen by the few only, has to be carried, like the Ark of the Covenant, from battle to battle, and kept safe from the hands of the Philistines." Lepsius died July 10, 1884, only one day after Dörner and Lange. Like a Christian, he prepared himself for his last journey, being strengthened before his departure by the Lord's Supper, which he received from the hands of the court-preacher, Dr. Kögel. Besides having received different orders from the hands of kings, he was made doctor of theology by the Leipsic University in 1859. He also introduced the so-called missionary alphabet, or Standard Alphabet for Reducing Unwritten Languages and Foreign Graphic Systems to a Uniform Orthography in European Letters, a system which gained support both by scholars and missionaries. See Max Müller, in the Academy (Lond. July 19, 1884); Ebers, Richard Lepsius, ein Lebensbild (Leipsic, 1885); a list of Lepsius's works is found on p. 376-390; Dillmann, Gedächtnisrede auf Karl Richard Lepsius, read before the Berlin Academy of Sciences, July 2, 1885 (Berlin, 1885). Lerad, in Norse mythology, is a mighty tree, standing in Walhalla, in whose boughs the reindeer Eikthyrnir and the goat Hejdrun live and find nourishment. From the drops which fall from the antlers of the former all the rivers of the world are formed.

Lercari, NICOLAS MARIE, an Italian cardinal, was born at Tabia, Genoa, Nov. 19, 1675. He filled various offices at the pontifical court, and afterwards became successively governor of Lodi, of Benevento, of Cambrino, of Ancona, of Civita Vecchia, and of Perugia. Being called to Rome in 1724 by Benedict XIII, with whom he had allied himself at Benevento, he was consecrated archbishop in partibus, and two years later appointed prime-minister. The foreign ambassadors refusing to treat with him, under the pretext that his position was not sufficiently honorable, he was made cardinal in December, 1726. In his position as secretary of state he showed himself an able negotiator, and several times thwarted the purposes of the imperial court. In 1730, on the death of Benedict XIII, he was despoiled of his honors, and arraigned before a congregation of cardinals to give an account of his administration. His integrity was established, but his influence was gone. He died March 20, 1757. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Leschies, in Slavonic mythology, were evil spirits of the woods, whose existence is still believed by the Russians and Lithuanians. They were similar to the Pan or Fauns of the Greeks and Romans, and were brought north probably by the latter.

L'Espine (Lat. Spina, or Spinæus), JEAN DE, a

French theologian, was born about 1506. At first a monk, he renounced Romanism in 1561, and joined the Reformed Church. After the Poissy Colloquy, he was for some time preacher at Fontenay-le-Comte, and afterwards at La Rochelle. In 1564 he published his Discours du Vray Sacrifice et du Vray Sacrificateur. In 1568 he was pastor at St. Quentin, in 1572 at Paris, in 1576 at Saumur, in 1578 at Angers, and died in 1594 at Saumur. Besides his Discours, he published, Traité de l'Apostasie (1583):—Dialogue de la Cène (eod.), etc. See Bayle, Dict. Hist. et Critique, s. v. "Spina;" Vincent, Recherches sur les Commencemens et Premiers Progrès de la Réformation en la Ville de La Rochelle (Rotterdam, 1693); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lestang, CHRISTOPHE, a French prelate, was born at Brives in 1560. When not more than twenty years of age he was made bishop of Lodeve, in which position he devoted himself to the destruction of Calvinism, then very rife in Languedoc, and for this he received of Henry III a pension of twelve thousand crowns per month. The League counted him among its most fervent advocates. He had a contest with the duke of Montmorency. Lestang lost all the revenues of his bishopric, and the palace which he had built was destroyed. To make amends, Henry III gave to him the episcopal house and the revenues of the bishopric of Carcassonne, which Montmorency had enjoyed. In 1604 he was made bishop of Carcassonne. Louis XIII made him commander of his orders, grand master of his chapel, member of his private council, and director of his finances. Lestang continued to fill important offices until his death, which occurred at Carcassonne, Aug. 11, 1621. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lestonac, JEANNE DE, foundress of an order of French nuns, was born at Bordeaux in 1556. She was the daughter of a councillor of the parliament of Bordeaux, and of Jeanne d'Eyquem of Montagne, sister of the celebrated philosopher Michel de Montagne. Although her mother was a Protestant, her father and uncle made her adopt the Catholic religion. In 1573 she married Gaston de Montferriand. After the death of her husband she consecrated herself to the Virgin, and entered, in 1603, the house of the Feuillantines of Toulouse. Shortly after, Jeanne de Lestonac placed herself at the head of a society of young ladies, the greater part taken from Calvinistic families. These new nuns bore the name of Jesuitines. Cardinal de Sourdis opposed the foundation of this order, but the pope favored it and ordered its consecration, which took place, March 25, 1606, and it was confirmed by a brief of Paul V, April 7, 1607. The order grew rapidly in importance. At the time of the death of Jeanne, she had control of twenty-nine houses of Jesuitines. She died at Bordeaux, April 2, 1640. After her death some of her bones were sent to the principal convents of the order, or were used, according to some hagiographers, to perform various miracles. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lestrange, LOUIS HENRI DE (dom Augustine), the renovator of the order of La Trappe, was born at Viverais in 1754. On his nomination as coadjutor to the archbishop of Vienne in 1780, he retired to La Trappe, in the department of Orne, near Mortagne, the seat of Cistercian monks since 1140, but reformed by the abbé de Rancé in 1662, and which has given its name to all monasteries which have adopted the rigorous rule of Rancé. See TRAPPISTS. In 1791 the French government seized the property of the monks of La Trappe, and Lestrange led twenty-four of the religious to Val Sainte, canton of Fribourg, Switzerland, where they were heartily welcomed, constituted an abbey by Pius VI, and Augustine placed at its head. On the invasion of Switzerland, in 1798, by a French army, the Trappists were compelled to flee. They wandered with their leader through various parts of Austria and Bavaria, until Paul I promised them hospitality in his states, and they established themselves in Russian Poland in 1799. In the following year the czar issued a ukase ordering all French emigrants to leave his territories. Augustine then led his brethren to Protestant Prussia, where they found a temporary asylum. Then it was that a party of them, guided by Urban Guillet, embarked at Amsterdam for Baltimore, May 29, 1803. The deliverance of Switzerland, in 1804, soon permitted the monks to return to Val Sainte, and in 1805 Napoleon granted them authority to establish themselves in his empire. Mont Valerian, which rises at the gates of Paris, soon beheld a monastery of this austere order arise, but when the emperor began to persecute the pope, the fervent disciples of Rancé and Lestrange resisted him. In 1810 Dom Augustine accordingly made his monks solemnly retract the oath of fidelity to the constitution of the empire, and Napoleon ordered all houses of La Trappe to be closed, and the abbot Lestrange to be tried by court-martial; but Augustine escaped to Switzerland, and thence traversing Germany, pursued by the imperial police, embarked at Riga for London, and thence for the United States. There (in the city of Boston) he found a second colony of Trappists, under Vincent of Paul, awaiting him. Dom Augustine Lestrange arrived in New York in 1813, to which place he ordered Guillet from Missouri, and Vincent of Paul from Boston, and concentrated at one place the scattered and feeble forces of the brethren. The energetic Lestrange also founded a community of Trappist nuns. Meanwhile the fall of Napoleon opened France to the Trappists, and Dom Augustine returned to restore the black-girdled monks to their home. He embarked for Havre in October, 1814, with twelve monks, the sisters and pupils, when he restored the order to Europe. Lestrange, the indefatigable and heroic successor of Bernard and Rancé, died at Lyons, France, July 16, 1827. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 370.

Letfete, in Norse mythology, was one of the twelve famous Asa-horses mentioned in the Edda.

Lethe, in Greek mythology, is the stream of forgetfulness, out of which the souls drank when entering Elysium.

Lethra (now Leire), in the island of Zealand, the city of the gods among the ancient Danes. This was the holy place where the nation assembled to offer up their sacrifices, to present their prayers, and to receive the choicest blessings from the gods.

Lettsish Version. See SLAVONIC VERSIONS.

Leuchars, PATRICK DE, a Scotch prelate, was invested with the see of Brechin in 1354, and some time after was made lord high chancellor of the kingdom. In 1370 he resigned his office of chancellor. He was bishop, and present at Parliament in 1373. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 162.

Levi, GIUSEPPE EMANUELO, a Jewish writer, was born at Vercelli, Italy, in 1814. In 1848 he was appointed "laureatus" (graduate) professor of literature at the University of Turin, and died June 10, 1874, leaving, Parabole, Legende e Pensieri Raccolti dai Libri Talmudici:—Christiani et Ebrei nel Medio Evo (German transl. by Seligmann, Leipzig, 1863):—Teocrazia Mosica:—Autobiografia di un Padre di Famiglia:—Cerimoniale per le Cenna di Pasqua:—Dei Pregi della Lingua Ebraica, Discorso Accademico. Lewis, ISAAC, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Wilton, Conn., Jan. 1, 1773. He graduated from Yale College in 1794, with his twin-brother, Zephariah Lewis. Remaining at New Haven, he prosecuted the study of theology, and was ordained May 30, 1798. He was installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1800; in 1806 of the Presbyterian Church in Goshen; and in 1812 preached in Bristol, R. I.; subsequently served in New Rochelle and West Farms, N. Y., as a stated supply, and succeeded his father in Greenwich, Conn., in December, 1818. He assumed charge of the Church in Bristol, R. I., Nov. 12, 1828. In September, 1831, the failure of his voice compelled him to resign his charge, though he still preached occasionally until the time of his death, which occurred in New York city, Sept. 23, 1854. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 667.

Lewis, John W., an eminent Baptist minister of Georgia, was born near Spartansburg, S. C., Feb. 1, 1801. He studied medicine, and practiced with success, but was drawn to the ministry, and ordained in 1832. About 1840 he removed to Canton, Ga., where he was pastor for a time, and afterwards of other churches in Cherokee County. In such secular concerns as he undertook he exhibited good judgment and sagacity. During the civil war he was a senator in the Congress of the Confederate States, and had much to do with the establishment of the Supreme Court of Georgia. As a preacher, he was instrumental in the conversion of many souls. His death took place in Cherokee County, Ga., in June, 1865. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 691. (J. C. S.)

Lewis, Samuel Seymour, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in Springfield, Vt., Sept. 4, 1804. His early education was acquired in the district school, but at the age of fifteen he entered the High School at South Berwick, Me., where he prepared for college. After entering Dartmouth, failing sight compelled him to dissolve his connection with it, and he entered into partnership with a friend in Utica, N. Y., and devoted himself to mercantile pursuits. Consulting a distinguished oculist in New York, he was assured that he was simply near-sighted, whereupon he immediately closed up his business, and entered Trinity (then Washington) College, Hartford, Conn. At the end of two years he graduated, Aug. 6, 1829. Shortly after he entered the General Theological Seminary in New York city, but before the end of the year he was elected a tutor in Trinity College, which post he held until he was ordained deacon, June 10, 1832. In the fall of that year he took charge of Christ Church, Tuscaloosa, Ala., and in the following year he was admitted to priest's orders. Accepting an invitation from Mobile, he went there in the latter part of 1835, occupying the only parish in the city, and that a feeble one. Here he remained for ten years. He died there July 9, 1848. His style of preaching was of the evangelical type, and he was especially successful as a pastor. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 714.

Lewis, Tayler, D.D., LL.D., a distinguished Biblical scholar and Congregational divine, was born in Northumberland, Saratoga Co., N. Y., March 27, 1802. He graduated from Union College in 1820, studied law in Albany, and, being admitted to the bar, entered on the practice of his profession at Fort Miller. In 1833 he gave up the practice of law, and opened a classical school at Waterford, and in 1835 removed his school to Ogdensburg. In 1838 he was chosen professor of Greek in the University of New York, which chair he occupied until 1849, when he was appointed professor of the Greek language and literature in his Alma Mater, and occupied that position until his death, May 11, 1877. Through all the years of his professorate he was a thorough, indefatigable student of Oriental and Biblical literature. He employed his attainments to defend and illustrate the truths of divine revelation. Among his first publications were translations and texts of Plato's works, accompanied with valuable notes and critical dissertations. In 1855 he published his Six Days of Creation, the work by which he became widely known as one of the ablest defenders of divine revelation. Dr. Lewis contributed largely to magazines, both monthly and quarterly, and his contributions to religious journals were almost without number. To mention only one, the New York Observer, that paper contains numerous valuable articles. Among them are, "State Rights," "A Photograph from the Ruins of Ancient Greece," "Heroic Periods in a Nation's History," "A Defence of Capital Punishment," "The People of Africa, their Character, Condition, and Future Prospects." He was one of the authors of the recently published Life of President Nott, of Union College, and the translator of Genesis and Ecclesiastes in Lange's Commentary. (W. P. S.)

Lewis, William Henry, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Litchfield, Conn., Dec. 22, 1803. He was rector for a number of years of the Church of the Holy Trinity, in Brooklyn, N. Y., until 1861, when he became rector of Christ Church, Watertown, Conn., of which he continued to have charge until 1874. He died at the latter place, Oct. 2, 1877. He published, Sermons for the Christian Year:—Confession for Christ:—The Early Called:—Position of the Church, besides several tracts. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 169; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Lewis, Zechariah, a Congregational minister and editor, son of Rev. Isaac Lewis, D.D., was born at Wilton, Conn., Jan. 1, 1773. With his twin brother, Isaac, he graduated from Yale College in 1794, and after studying theology at Philadelphia under Ashbel Green, D.D., was licensed to preach in 1796; and in the same year was appointed tutor in Yale College, remaining in that office until 1799. While a theological student he was a private tutor in general Washington's family. Convinced that his health was too much impaired to fulfil the duties of the ministry, he became the editor of the Commercial Advertiser, and New York Spectator, continuing in that employment until 1820. For six years he was corresponding secretary of the New York Religious Tract Society, out of which sprang the American Tract Society. Resigning this position in February, 1820, he was elected, in May, a secretary of the United Foreign Missionary Society, which office he held for five years. For several years he was editor of the American Missionary Register, which he began to publish in July, 1820. He died in Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1840. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 666.

Lha Ma, in Lamaism, is one of the five upper worlds through which the soul of the departed has to wander.

Lhamoghiuprul, in Lamaian mythology, was the wife of the Thibetan king, Sazan, one of the most beautiful, pure, and sacred nymphs of the lower heaven. See CIO CONCIOA.

Lha-Ssa-Morou, an annual festival observed by the Lamas of Thibet on the third day of the first moon, at Lha-Ssa. It lasts six days, and is designed to give the devout an opportunity to implore the blessings of the Talé-Lama, and to make a pilgrimage to the celebrated Buddhist monastery called Morou, which occupies the centre of the town. See Huc, Travels in Tartary and Thibet.

Libāmen, a name given by the ancient Romans to denote the bunch of hair which was cut from the forehead of the victim about to be sacrificed, and which was thrown into the fire as a kind of first-fruits.

Libanomancy (from λίβανος, the frankincense tree, and μαντεία, divination), a species of divination (q. v.) which was performed by throwing a quantity of frankincense into the fire, and noting the odor which it emitted. If it burned quickly and gave out an agreeable smell, the omen was favorable; but if the reverse took place, it was unfavorable.

Libelli Pœnitentiāles (certificates of penitence), documents frequently issued during and after the 8th century by the Romish priesthood, granting immediate absolution to those who confessed their sins to the priest, and declared themselves ready to fulfil the appointed penance, even though they were not prepared to partake of the communion. Great opposition was made to this practice by the reformers in the time of Charlemagne. See PENITENTIAL.

Liber Albus (white book) of the ancient monasteries and guilds contained a personal history of visitors or benefactors, frequently recorded in the handwriting of the persons themselves commemorated.

Liberalia, a festival observed annually by the ancient Romans on March 17, in honor of Liber or Bacchus. A procession of priests and priestesses, wearing ivy garlands, marched through the city, bearing wine, honey, cakes, and sweetmeats, along with a portable altar, having in the middle of it a fire-pan, in which the sacrifices were burned. On this occasion the Roman youths who had reached the age of sixteen were invested with the toga virilis or dress of manhood. The Liberalia were much more innocent in their character than the Bacchanalia (q. v.), and continued to be celebrated in Rome after that festival was suppressed.

Libera nos (deliver us) is the amplification of the petition, "Deliver us from evil," in the Lord's Prayer, found in almost all liturgies. For instance, that of the Gallican (which is variable) is on Christmas day—"Libera nos, omnipotens Deus, ab omni malo et custodi nos in omni opere bono, perfecta veritas et vera libertas Deus, qui regnas in sæcula sæculorum." Many liturgies contain supplications for the intercession of saints in the Libera nos.

Liberi, PIETRO, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Padua in 1605, and studied under Alessandro Varotari, also the works of the best masters, as Michael Angelo, Raphael, Correggio, and Titian. Among his best productions are the Murder of the Innocents, at Venice; Noah just Landed from the Ark, in the cathedral at Vicenza; and The Deluge, in the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore, at Bergamo. Others of his grand pictures are the Destruction of Pharaoh's Host, in the cathedral at Vicenza; Moses Striking the Rock, at Bergamo; and the Sufferings of Job. He died in 1687. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Libnah. Some would locate this place at Beit-Jibrin, and others at Ibna, on the coast road, but Tristram (Bible Places, p. 44) and Trelawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.) accept the identification with Arak el-Menshiyeh, which the Ordnance Map lays down at six and a half miles west of Beit-Jibrin, and the accompanying Memoirs describe thus (iii, 259): "A mud village on a flat plain, surrounded with arable land, and supplied by three wells. It is of moderate size, with two sacred places. The curious mound north of it is a remarkable feature in the landscape, two hundred and fifty feet high, and consisting of natural rock, but scarped, and appearing to have been artificially made steeper. On the top is a sacred mukâm, with a few hedges of prickly pear. This site is evidently ancient and important. The hills near it are of very white chalk, and the name Libnah signifies 'milk white.'"

Libra (a balance), the seventh sign of the zodiac. It was supposed that those who were born under this constellation loved equity. There were other kindred superstitions connected with this sign by the ancients.

Libs, in Greek mythology, was the south-west wind. He was represented in Athens, on the tower of winds, as a young man, clothed in a light mantle. In his hands he carries a ship's ornament. See NOTUS.

Lichtenstein, Anton August Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 25, 1753, at Helmstädt, where he also pursued his studies. In 1778 he commenced his academical career in his native place, was in 1777 rector at the Johanneum at Hamburg, and in 1782 professor of Oriental languages there. In 1798 he was called to his native place as professor of theology, general superintendent, and first preacher at St. Stephen's. He died Feb. 17, 1816, leaving, Doctrinarum Theologicarum Examen ad 1 Cor. iii, Lichtenstein, Friedrich Wilhelm Jacob, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born of Jewish parentage at Munich, Oct. 8, 1826. In 1842, his mother joining the Church, he was baptized, together with his brother Moritz, at Witzsburg. In 1843 he commenced his theological studies at Erlangen, and pursued the same at Halle. In 1848 he was ordained, and appointed assistant pastor at Munich. In 1855 the University of Erlangen bestowed on him the diploma of doctor of philosophy, for a work entitled, Lebensgeschichte des Herrn Jesu Christi in chronologischer Uebersicht (Erlangen, 1855). In 1863 he was called to Culmbach, and died March 24, 1875. (B. P.)

Lichtenstein, George Philip, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Main, March 26, 1606, of Jewish parents. Towards the end of that same year he was baptized, together with his father, who made an open profession of Christ. Lichtenstein made his philosophical studies at Giessen and Marburg, and his theological at Strasburg. He was offered by the Swedish field-marshal, count Horn, who was at that time in Germany, the chaplaincy of the court of Sweden, but he preferred to remain at home, and was ordained to the ministry in 1634. He ministered for several years in the neighborhood of Frankfort, till he was called, in 1657, to the pastorate of St. Catharine's Church. He died Feb. 7, 1682, his funeral sermon being preached by his friend, the famous Dr. Spener. (B. P.)

Lichtenstein, Johannes Leopold, a Presbyterian minister, was born of Jewish parentage, at Hechingen, April 10, 1813. At the age of sixteen he was appointed teacher at Habsheim, in Upper Alsace. When twenty-one years old his way led him to Basle, where a Hebrew Christian prepared himself for missionary work. To bring this lost sheep back to the fold of the synagogue was Lichtenstein's intention, but the would-be victor was soon conquered, and the former teacher became now a disciple of Christ. On Sept. 28, 1834, he was baptized at Strasburg, adding the name Johannes to his Jewish name Leopold. Soon after his baptism he went to Geneva, where he attended the École de Theol. Oratoire, and where Merle d'Aubigne was one of his teachers. From Geneva he went to Strasburg, and attended the upper classes of the Protestant gymnasium. Having passed his examination in 1839, he then went to Erlangen, where Hoffman, Harless, Thiersch, and others were his professors. In 1841 he went to Berlin to complete his theological studies under Hengstenberg, Stahl, Neander, Twisten, and others. In 1842 he was ordained for the ministry at Erlangen, and accepted a call from the Jewish Missionary Society at Strasburg. In 1845 he received a call from New York, to act as superintendent of the Jewish mission there, which he accepted. In 1847 he left his position, and in 1848 was appointed pastor of the German Presbyterian Church at Paterson, N. J. From 1851 to 1854 he labored at New Albany, Ind.; accepted a call of the German Reformed Church at Buffalo, N. Y., where he remained till 1862, when the First German Reformed Church of Cincinnati, O., called him as its pastor. In 1866 he exchanged his position for the pastorate of the First German Presbyterian Church there, and fell asleep in Jesus, Nov. 3, 1882. (B. P.)

Lichtenstein, Moritz, a Lutheran minister of Germany, brother of Jacob, was born Jan. 3, 1824. Like his brother, he studied theology first at Erlangen, and subsequently at Halle. In 1855 he entered actively upon the ministerial career, by being made curate to an aged minister at Bürglin, in Franconia. In 1857 he was appointed to the living of Tann. The place proving injurious, Lichtenstein was transferred to Rittersbach, Central Franconia, in 1860, and died Sept. 3, 1876. (B. P.)

Lida, DAVID DE, a Jewish writer of the 18th century, is the author of, מגדל דוד, or a cabalistic commentary on Ruth (Amsterdam, 1610):—ציר דוד, homilies on the Pentateuch (ibid. 1719):—ציר מלכות, or a commentary on the 613 precepts (1690). His writings were edited and published under the title of דף ספר, by his son (Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1727). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 247. (B. P.)

Liebertmann, FRANZ LEOPOLD BRUNO, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born at Molsheim, near Strasburg, in 1759. At the time of the French revolution, to avoid being imprisoned, he fled to Germany, but returned to his parochial work at Ernolsheim in 1795. In 1801 he was called to Strasburg as cathedral-preacher and episcopal secretary, but returned again to Ernolsheim in 1803. In 1804 Liebertmann was imprisoned under the pretext of having relations with the Bourbon family. He was released, however, in 1805, and his friend, the bishop of Mayence, appointed him superior of the clerical seminary and canon at the cathedral of Mayence. Liebertmann, who died in 1844, is the author of Institutiones Theologiae Dogmaticae (1819, 5 vols.), a work still used in the seminaries of France, Belgium, Germany, and America. It has also been translated into French in 1856. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Wiuer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 307. (B. P.)

Liebetrut, FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died Oct. 17, 1881, at Charlottenburg, near Berlin, doctor of theology, is the author of, Die Ehe nach ihrer Idee und nach ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (Berlin, 1884):—Der Tag des Herrn und seine Feier (1837):—Christliche Andachtstunden für Frauen und Jungfrauen evangelischer Konfession (1847):—Ueber die Verehrung der Heiligen, Reliquien und Bilder (1845):—Katechismus der christlichen Lehre (1853):—Reise nach dem Morgenlande (1858):—Dr. Beck und seine Stellung zur Kirche (1857):—Ueber die Heuchelei und wider dieselbe (1859). Liebner, KARL THEODOR ALBERT, a prominent Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Schkölen, near Naumburg, March 3, 1806. He studied at Leipsic, Berlin, and Wittenberg, was in 1832 pastor at Kreisfeld, in Saxony, in 1835 professor at Göttingen, in 1851 at Leipsic, and in 1855 general superintendent and court-preacher at Dresden. He died June 24, 1871, at Meran, Switzerland. Liebner is the author of, Hugo von St.

Victor und die theologischen Richtungen seiner Zeit (Leipsic, 1832):—Die christliche Dogmatik aus dem christologischen Princip dargestellt (Göttingen, 1849):—Introductio in Dogmaticum Christianum (Leipsic, 1854). Besides, he published Predigten in der Universitäts-Kirche gehalten (Göttingen, 1841; 2d ed. 1856):—Predigt-Beiträge zur Förderung der Erkenntnis Christi in der Gemeinde (1861), and contributed largely to the Jahrbücher für deutsche Theologie. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 794; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Liemaecker, NICOLAS (called the Rose), an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Ghent in 1575, and first studied under Mark Gerards, and, after the death of that master, with Ottovienius. The name of Rose was given him when a boy on account of his ruddy cheeks. He was one of the most eminent painters of the Flemish school, and his works are in almost every town in the Low Countries. He painted sacred and historical subjects. In the Church of St. Nicholas, at Ghent, are two of his best works, The Good Samaritan, and The Fall of the Rebel Angels, which last is considered his masterpiece. Also in the Church of St. James are several of his works, one of which is a grand composition, representing The Last Judgment. He died at Ghent in 1647. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Lieven (Livens, or Lywyns), JAN, a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Leyden, Oct. 24, 1607, and was placed under the direction of George van Schooten, but when ten years of age was placed under Peter Lastman. He painted a number of fine works while quite young, which procured him a favorable reception at the court of England, where he resided three years. At Brussels, in the Church of the Jesuits, is his Visitation of the Virgin, and in the Church of St. James, at Antwerp, a fine picture of The Holy Family. In 1641 he returned to Leyden, where he executed his celebrated pictures of David and Bathsheba and The Sacrifice of Abraham. He died probably in 1663. The following is a list of some of his best prints: The Holy Family; The Virgin Presenting a Pear to the Infant Jesus; St. John the Evangelist; St. Jerome in a Cell, holding a Crucifix; The Raising of Lazarus. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Lif and Lifthrasser, in Norse mythology, are two human beings who hide themselves with Ragnarok (destruction of the world), and feed on dew. From them all men are born who will inhabit the rejuvenated earth after the fire of Sotur.

Lifuan Version of the Scriptures. Lifu is a language spoken on the Loyalty Islands. In 1869 the book of Psalms, in the Lifu language, was printed in the island of Mare. In 1872 the New Test. was printed in England, under the care of the translator, the Rev. M. Macfarlane, one of the missionaries at Lifu. In 1877 the Pentateuch was issued from the press, under the editorship of the Rev. S. M. Creagh, of the London Missionary Society. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society of 1885, we learn that the completion of the revision of the translation of the Bible was made Aug. 29, 1884. The translator, Rev. S. M. Creagh "is now copying the corrections made in the parts already printed, viz. Pentateuch, Psalms, and New Test., and the number of changes in these amount to 52,310. The whole is being prepared for publication." The same translator is also preparing marginal references. (B. P.)

Lifur, in Norse mythology, is a dwarf formed of and living in the earth. He was slain by Thor at Baldur's funeral, and thrown into the burning ship.

Ligature (ligatura, ligamentum, δῖσις, παρίαυμα, etc.) was a kind of amulet worn by the ancient heathen, either upon their own persons or those of their animals, for the purpose of averting evil. Their use is condemned by early Christian writers (Chrysostom, Homil. adv. Jud. viii. 7; Const. Apostol. viii, 32, etc.).

Lightenstein, JOHN, D.D., a member of the Cincinnati Presbytery, was born at Hechingen, Hohenzollern, Germany, in 1818. The occasion of his conversion was his zealous efforts to bring back to the Jewish faith a companion who had become a Christian. At different universities he enjoyed the teachings of such men as Merle D'Aubigne, Hegutenberg, Neander, Stahl, and Schelling. He was ordained in 1842, and was for a time a missionary among the Jews of Alsace. He came to New York in 1845, on the invitation of the Society for Ameliorating the Condition of the Jews, and was superintendent of their mission-house. He afterwards became pastor of a German Presbyterian Church in Paterson, N. J., and subsequently of a German Reformed Church in Buffalo, N. Y., where he remained eight years. He removed to Cincinnati in 1866, took charge of the First German Presbyterian Church, and continued there until his death, Nov. 3, 1882. He was a ripe scholar, an able preacher, and a thoroughly evangelical man. See N. Y. Observer, Nov. 23, 1882. (W. P. S.)

Lights, FEAST OF, a name applied by Josephus to the Jewish Feast of Dedication (q. v.).

Lights of Walton, a class of enthusiasts who appeared in the 17th century at Walton-on-Thames, Surrey, England. The story of their origin is related as follows: In the beginning of Lent, 1649, Mr. Fawcett, then minister of Walton, having preached in the afternoon, when he had concluded it was nearly dark, and six soldiers came into the church, one with a lighted candle in a lantern, and four with candles unlighted. The first soldier addressed the people, declaring that he had received in a vision a message from God, which they must listen to and believe on pain of damnation. The message consisted of five lights: 1. The Sabbath is abolished; "and here," said he, "I should put out my first light, but the wind is so high that I cannot light it." 2. Tithes are abolished. 3. Ministers are abolished. 4. Magistrates are abolished, repeating the same words as he had uttered under the first head. Then taking a Bible from his pocket, he declared that it is also abolished, as containing only beggarly elements, which are unnecessary now that Christ is come in his glory, with a full measure of his Spirit. Then taking the lighted candle from his lantern, he set fire to the pages of the Bible, after which, extinguishing the candle, he added, "and here my fifth light is extinguished."

Lightsch, in Slavonic mythology, was the god of atonement and rest. The wives pray to him after having been angry with their husbands.

Liknon (λίκνον), a long basket, in which the image of Dionysus was carried in the Dionysia. The Liknon was the winnowing fan into which the corn was received after threshing, and was, very naturally, used in the rites of both Bacchus and Ceres. It was also employed to carry the instruments of sacrifice, and first-fruits or other offerings. See BACCHUS.

Lillenthal, MAX, a Jewish rabbi, was born at Munich in 1815. He studied at his native place, and graduated in 1837 as doctor of philosophy. In 1839 he received a call as director of the Hebrew school at Riga, Russia. In 1845 he resigned his position and went to New York city, where he was elected rabbi of three congregations, an office which he, however, resigned to open a Jewish boarding-school. In 1855 he accepted a call to the congregation at Cincinnati, and died April 1, 1882. Besides sermons and addresses, he published, Ueber den Ursprung der jüdisch-alexandrinischen Religionsphilosophie (Munich, 1839);—Bibliographische Notizen über die hebräischen Manuscripte der königl. Bibliothek zu München (printed in the Beilage der allgemeinen Zeitung des Judenthums, 1848). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 249 sq. (B. P.)

Lilith, the name of the first wife of Adam, according to rabbinical tradition. She was made of the earth as was Adam himself, and would not submit to be ruled over by her husband. Seeing no possibility of an agreement between herself and him, she fled away to the sea, where she became the mother of a race of demons, and, as a punishment for refusing to return to Adam, one hundred of her children were to die every day. Lilith became noted in Jewish legend as a destroyer of infants, and for this reason they adopted the custom of writing the names of three protecting angels on slips of paper or parchment, and binding them upon the infant, to prevent the evil influence of Lilith. Among modern Jews, when a woman approaches the period of her confinement, the husband inscribes on each of the walls or partitions around the bed, along with the names of Adam and Eve, the words "Begone, Lilith." On the inside of the doors also he writes the names of three angels, which it is believed will defend the child from the injuries which it might otherwise receive from Lilith.

Lillie, ADAM, D.D., a Scotch Congregational minister, was born in Glasgow in 1803. He embraced religion very early in life, studied at the university, and becoming animated by a strong missionary desire, offered his services to the London Missionary Society, studied three years at Gosport, and in 1826 sailed to India. His health failing caused his return to Glasgow in the following year. He then settled as teacher, soon after became itinerant minister, in 1833 was chosen copastor at Musselburgh, and in 1834 accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Brantford, Ontario, where he continued during life. In 1840 Dr. Lillie added to his pastorate the tutorage of the Canadian Institute for the training of a local ministry. He died Oct. 19, 1869. Dr. Lillie was an eminent Christian and scholar, and a prodigious worker. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-Book, 1870, p. 305.

Limus, an article of dress worn around the loins by the ancient Roman papa, or officiating priest, at the sacrifices.

Lincoln, Richard, D.D., an Irish prelate, was promoted to the see of Dublin in 1757. He encouraged his people to a continuance of peaceful and Christian dispositions, and forcibly appealed to those of another communion as to Catholic loyalty and love. He died in 1762. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 469.

Lincoln, Thomas Oliver, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Boston, Mass., May 4, 1809. He graduated from Yale College in 1829, and from Newton Theological Institution in 1834; was ordained pastor of the Baptist Church in Kennebunkport, Me., Dec. 10, 1834, and afterwards served the Free Street Church in Portland; Philadelphia, Pa.; Mount Holly, N. J.; Manchester, N. H.; Utica and Elmira, N. Y.; Williamsport, Pa.; and Roadstown, N. J. He died at Bridgeton, Jan. 20, 1877. (J. C. S.)

Linde, JOHANN WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 24, 1760, at Thorn, and died Feb. 16, 1840, at Dantzig, superintendent and member of consistory. He is the author of, Sententie Jesu Siracidae (Dantzig, 1795);—Des Sohnes Sirach Sittenlehre (Leipzig, 1782, 1795);—Reinhard und Ammon, oder Predigten-Parallele; als Beitrag zur Homiletik (Königsberg, 1800). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 233; ii, 48, 64; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 250. (B. P.)

Lindemann, JOACHIM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 7, 1662, at Rostock. He studied at different universities, was in 1684 magister in his native city, in 1688 archdeacon, in 1692 professor, and died Dec. 14, 1698, a doctor of theology. He wrote, De Obligacione Conscientia;—De Præjudiciis Philosophicis;—De Sanctorum cum Christo Redivivorum Resurrectione, ex Matt. xxvii, 52, 53;—*De Proto-Canonicis et Deutero-Canonicis S. Lindesay, David, a Scotch prelate, was preferred to the see of Ross in 1600, and still continued his ministry at Leith until his death, which occurred about 1613. In 1604 he was one of the commissioners for uniting the two kingdoms. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 201.

Lindesay, Patrick, a Scotch prelate, was first minister at St. Vigan's, in Angus. In October, 1613, he was preferred to the episcopal see of Ross, and consecrated Dec. 15 of the same year. From this he was translated to the see of Glasgow, April 16, 1633. He died at Newcastle in 1641. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 202, 264.

Lindet, Robert Thomas, a French prelate and politician, was born at Bernay (Eure) in 1743. He was pastor of the parish of St. Croix in that town, when he was elected deputy of the clergy of the bailiwick of Evreux to the States-General of 1789. In 1791 he was elected constitutional bishop of Eure. In November, 1792, he married publicly. In 1793 he resigned his episcopate, and all his offices in 1798, and lived thereafter in obscurity, until finally, by the law of amnesty of 1816, he was obliged to leave France. After staying some time in Switzerland and Italy, he was permitted to come home to his native country, where he died in August, 1823. He wrote, Lettre Circulaire au Clergé de son Diocèse:—Lettres aux Religieuses des Monastères de son Diocèse. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lindley, Daniel, D.D., a Presbyterian missionary, was born in America in 1800. After receiving his theological education, he was ordained, and went with five others to South Africa in 1834. In 1836 he established a mission on the Allover river, Port Natal, and commenced his lifelong work of laboring to convert the Zulus to Christ. On account of the numerous wars in that country, his mission was broken up, and for a considerable length of time he was prevented from carrying out his great design. He lived, however, to see a great moral and civil revolution among the inhabitants of that country, and his zeal and perseverance in the great cause in which he was engaged were crowned with success. After toiling for thirty-seven years, he was obliged, on account of his wife's illness, to return to the United States. He travelled extensively throughout the country advocating the cause of missions, until 1877, when he was stricken with paralysis, from which he never recovered. Dr. Lindley died in New York in August, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Lindley, Jacob, D.D., a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, was born June 13, 1774, in western Pennsylvania, and was the fifth in descent from Francis Lindley, one of the passengers in the Mayflower. Jacob's father erected a block-house between the Monongahela river and Wheeling, as a defence against prowling Indians, in the winter of 1774 and 1775; and it was long known as Fort Lindley. Young Jacob became a communicant about 1786. For a time he was a student at an academy near his home, and at the age of eighteen entered the institution afterwards known as Jefferson College, at Cannonsburg, Pa. In 1798 he entered Princeton College, from which he graduated in 1800. Having studied theology for a time, he was licensed to preach by the Washington Presbytery, and in 1803 removed to Beverly, O. The first board of trustees of Ohio University selected him to organize and conduct that institution, for which purpose he went to Athens in 1808. For several years he had charge of the infant college, and was the prime mover in securing the erection of the college buildings, and in founding the Presbyterian Church in Athens. During a part of his twenty years' labor there he was the only Presbyterian minister in that section of Ohio. About 1828 he was partially relieved by the appointment to the presidency of Rev.

Dr. Wilson, of Chillicothe; although he remained about a year longer in the college as professor of moral philosophy and mathematics. Subsequently he spent one year at Walnut Hills, Cincinnati; then a year or two at the Flats of Grace creek; after which he accepted a call from the Upper Ten Mile congregation, within whose bounds was his birthplace. While here, in western Pennsylvania, he received a mandate from his presbytery forbidding ministerial intercourse with the Cumberland Presbyterians. Refusing obedience to the mandate, charges were brought against him, which he showed to be groundless, and then he demanded from his presbytery a letter of dismission. This was granted, and in this way his connection with the Presbyterian Church was severed. He became a Cumberland Presbyterian, but continued his pastoral relation with the Upper Ten Mile congregation for two or three years. Subsequently he took charge of a Cumberland Presbyterian congregation at Beverly (then Waterford), O. In 1837 he removed to Alabama, still preaching and teaching as opportunity offered. From 1848 Dr. Lindley spent his winters in the South, and his summers in the North. He died at Connelleville, Pa., Jan. 29, 1857. In 1846 he published a small volume, entitled Infant Philosophy. See Beard, Biographical Sketches, 2d series, p. 45.

Lindner, Friedrich Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1779 at Weida. He commenced his academical career at Leipsic in 1806, was in 1825 professor of catechetics, retired in 1860, and died Nov. 1, 1865. He published, Die wichtigsten That-sachen und Urtheile für und gegen Missions- und Bibel-gesellschaften (Leipsic, 1825):—Die Lehre vom Abend-mahl (1831). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 800; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 454, 587. (B. P.)

Lindner, Wilhelm Bruno, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Leipsic in 1876, doctor and professor of theology, is the author of, De Joviniano et Vigilantio (Leipsic, 1839):—Lehrbuch der christlichen Kirchengeschichte (1848-54, 3 vols.):—Bibliotheca Patrum Ecclesiasticorum Selectissima (1857):—Sermons, delivered in the University Church (1844):—Christological Sermons (1855). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 800 sq. (B. P.)

Lindo, Elia H., a Jewish writer, who died in London, July 11, 1865, is the author of History of the Jews of Spain and Portugal (London, 1849). From the Hebrew he translated a work of Menasseh ben-Israel: The Conciliator, a Reconciliation of the Apparent Contradictions in Holy Scripture (1842, 2 vols.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 251. (B. P.)

Lindsay (properly Alexander William Crawford), Lord (known after the death of his father as Count of Crawford and Bulcarres), an English writer, was born Oct. 16, 1812. He was educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and graduated in 1833 as master of arts. He then travelled extensively, and published in 1838 his Letters on Egypt, Edom, and the Holy Land, in two volumes. In 1844 he published A Letter to a Friend on the Evidence and Theory of Christianity, and in 1846 Progression by Antagonism. In 1861 he issued his Scpticism; in 1870 Ecumenicity in Relation to the Church of England, and in 1872 Etruscan Inscriptions. He died at Florence, Dec. 13, 1880. A large work on comparative history of the religions of antiquity, which he intended to publish under the title of The Religion of Noah, was left incomplete. (B. P.)

Lindsay, Alexander, a Scotch prelate, was preacher at St. Madoes, and bishop of Dunkeld, where he continued until 1638, when he renounced his office, abjured episcopacy, submitted to Presbyterian parity, and accepted from the then rulers his former church of St. Madoes. He acquired the barony of Evelick, in the case of Gowrie. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 98.

Lindsay, David, a Scotch prelate, was minister at Dundee, made bishop of Brechin, and consecrated at St. Andrews, Nov. 23, 1619. He was translated to the see of Edinburgh, Sept. 17, 1634. He was deposed and excommunicated for reading the liturgy in the High Church of Edinburgh, July 23, 1637. He went to England, and died soon after. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 61.

Lindsay, Ingeram, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Aberdeen in 1442, and also in 1448, 1452, and 1458, when he probably died. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 114.

Lindsay, James, D.D., an English Presbyterian clergyman, was born and educated in Scotland, where he began to preach. He came to London, and was ordained pastor at Monkwell Street in May, 1783. In 1787 he was appointed afternoon preacher to the Presbyterians at Stoke-Newington, where he fixed his residence, and opened an academy. In 1803 he removed to Old Ford, and received his diploma from Aberdeen University. He published two funeral sermons, and was minister at Monkwell Street in 1811. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iii, 215.

Lindsay, John, a Scotch prelate, was promoted to the see of Glasgow about 1325. This prelate was killed in 1385, while returning from Flanders to Scotland. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 244.

Lindsay, William, a Scotch prelate, was minister at Perth, and consecrated bishop of the see of Dunkeld, May 7, 1677. He died in 1679. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 99.

Linegar, John, D.D., an Irish prelate, was appointed to the see of Dublin in 1734, and held the office until 1789, without being molested in any way. The act of king William, "for disarming the Papists," was enforced, and this caused some disturbance. He died in 1756. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 466.

Linn, James, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Sherman's Valley (now Perry County), Pa., Sept. 4, 1783. He graduated at Dickinson College in 1805, and studied theology with Dr. Williams. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Carlisle, Sept. 27, 1809, visited the congregations of Spruce Creek and Sinking Valley, and was ordained pastor in 1810. He was called to take charge of the churches of Bellefonte and Lick Run, but in 1839 was released from the latter, that he might give his whole time to the former. In 1861 Rev. J. H. Barnard was appointed co-pastor. Dr. Linn died at Bellefonte, Feb. 23, 1868. See Presbyterian, March 14, 1868. (W. P. S.)

Linsley, Joel H., D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Cornwall, Vt., July 16, 1790. Under private tuition, and afterwards at the Addison County Grammar-school, he acquired his preliminary training, and graduated from Middlebury College in 1811. For a year he taught school in Windsor, and in 1812 began the study of law. In 1813 he was appointed tutor in Middlebury College, holding that position for more than two years, still prosecuting his legal studies. He was admitted to the bar in December, 1815, went into a law-partnership, and continued in practice until 1822. Previously, in 1812, he was licensed to preach, and for a time studied at Andover Theological Seminary. After eight months of missionary labor in South Carolina he returned to New England, was ordained, in 1824, pastor of the South Congregational Church in Hartford, Conn., and remained until 1832, in which year he was installed pastor of the Park Street Church, Boston. He resigned to assume the presidency of Marietta College in 1835, and held that position for about ten years. Then for two years he was in the service of the Society for the Promotion of Collegiate and Theological Education at the West. In December, 1847, he became pastor of the Second Congregational Church in Greenwich, Conn., and died there March 22, 1868. He published a volume of lectures on the Relations and Duties of the Middle-Aged, besides orations, addresses, reviews, and sermons. See Cong. Quarterly, 1868, p. 380.

Lintner, George A., D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born at Minden, Montgomery Co., N. Y., Feb. 15, 1796. At an early age he was admitted to Union College. After graduation he studied theology, and was licensed to preach in September, 1818. The following year he accepted a call to the pastorate of Schoharie and Cobleskill. He was one of the recognised leaders of his synod in opposition to what he called the "Quitman Dynasty of Rationalism." After a time he and others became dissatisfied with the old synod, and at a convention, in 1830, at Schoharie, the Hartwick Synod was organized, of which he was chosen the first president. In 1837 certain members of this synod withdrew, and formed the Franckean Synod, on the widest latitudinarian basis. The movement was revolutionary, and led to controversy and contests in the courts. He was pastor of the Church in Schoharie until 1849, a period of thirty years. From 1827 to 1831 he was editor of the Lutheran Magazine. In 1841 and 1843 he was president of the General Synod of the United States. The liturgy of the Lutheran Church of America, published by order of the General Synod of 1832, was prepared by him. During his ministry he organized three new churches as the result of his work—one at Breakabeen, one at Middleburg, and another at Central Bridge. From 1837 until the close of his life he was president of the Schoharie County Bible Society. The last years of his life he visited the Lutheran churches in New York and New Jersey in behalf of the Foreign Missionary Society. He died Dec. 21, 1871. See Five Years in the Lutheran Ministry, 1878, p. 206.

Lintrup, Severin, a Lutheran theologian of Denmark, who died March 13, 1731, at Copenhagen, was bishop of Wiburg, in Jutland, in 1720, and in 1725 court-preacher and professor of theology. He wrote, Specimen Calumnias Papae-Calvinianae in August. Confess. Invariatae:—De Σημιοπαξία Paulina 1 Cor. x, 32:—De Polymathia Scriptorum Sacrorum, Speciatim Pauli Apostoli:—Meletemata Critica in ad Selectiora N. T. Loca, etc. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lion-worship was particularly prevalent in the city of Leontopolis, Egypt. The lion was the symbol of strength, and therefore typical of the Egyptian Hercules. The lion was also sacred to the Egyptian Minerva. In southern Ethiopia, in the vicinity of the modern town of Shendy, the lion-headed deity seems to have been the chief object of worship. He holds a conspicuous place in the great temple of wady Owateh, and on the sculptured remains at wady Benat, at the former of which he is the first in a procession of deities, consisting of Rê, Neph, and Ptah, to whom a monarch is making offerings. According to Plutarch, "the lion was worshipped by the Egyptians, who ornamented the doors of their temples with the gaping mouth of that animal, because the Nile began to rise when the sun was in the constellation Leo." Mithras, which is a solar god, was represented with a lion's head. In his mysteries the second degree was that of the lion. Adad, the god of the Syrians, was seated on the back of a lion, which represents his solar nature. In South America the first discoverers found at Tabasco an image of a lion, to which the natives offered human sacrifices. Dr. Livingstone, in his Travels in Africa, mentions a tribe who believe that the souls of their chiefs enter into lions, and therefore they never attempt to kill them; they even believe that a chief may metamorphose himself into a lion, kill any one he chooses, and then return to the human form; therefore when they see one they commence clapping their hands, which is their usual mode of salutation. See LION.

Lipovniczky, STEPHAN VON, a Roman Catholic prelate, who died Aug. 12, 1885, bishop of Gross-Wardein, Hungary, took an active part in the political events of 1849. After the suppression of the Hungarian revolution he was condemned to death. Being pardoned by the emperor of Austria, Lipovniczky resumed clerical duties, and finally became the incumbent of one of the most important episcopal sees of Hungary. (B. P.)

Lippincott, CALKB ARMORE, a veteran Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Pemberton township, N. J., July 26, 1803. His parents were of Quaker descent, and he was brought up a moral youth, but was full of animal spirits, and fond of all the follies of the age. He was converted among the Methodists in 1825, commenced circuit work in 1829, and in 1830 entered the Philadelphia Conference, wherein he served Tuckerton Circuit, Warren Circuit, Newton, Frankford, Germantown, Philadelphia, and Asbury (West Philadelphia). He then, in 1842, was transferred to the New Jersey Conference, and was sent in turn to Birmingham Mission, Columbus Circuit, Northampton, Flemington, Bordentown, Morristown, Flanders, Rahway District, Stanhope, Hackettstown, Cross Street, Paterson, and Union Street, Newark; then served as tract agent; was then sent to Hurdstown, Hope, Berkshire, Hurdstown and Longwood, and Chester and Denville, at which latter place he died, June 17, 1871. Mr. Lippincott was a man of remarkable powers of mind. He was a natural orator, possessed marvellous powers of description, overflowed with wit and good humor, and was pre-eminently a revivalist. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 84.

Lis (or Lys), JAN VAN DER, an eminent Dutch artist, was born at Oldenburg, Germany, in 1570, but studied at Haarlem, under Henry Goltz, and afterwards went to Italy, where he studied the works of Paul Veronese and Domenico Pieti. His subjects are principally taken from sacred history. The chief of them are a picture of Adam and Eve Mourning over the Body of Abel, and in San Nicolo, at Venice, is a celebrated painting by him, representing St. Jerome in the Desert. He died at Venice in 1629. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Lisco, FRIEDRICH GUSTAV, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 12, 1791, at Brandenburg. He entered upon his ministerial duties at Berlin in 1814, and died there, July 5, 1866, doctor of theology. Lisco was a prolific writer, and published, Predigten über die Gleichnisse Jesu (Berlin, 1828); — Die Offenbarungen Gottes in Geschichte und Lehre (2d ed. Hamburg, 1835); — Die Parabeln Jesu exegetisch-homiletisch bearbeitet (5th ed. Berlin, 1861); — Die Bibel mit Erklärungen, etc. (1852, 2 vols.); — Das christliche Kirchenjahr (4th ed. eod. 2 vols.); — Biblische Betrachtungen über Johannes den Täufer (1836); — Die Wunder Jesu, exegetisch-homiletisch bearbeitet (2d ed. 1844); — Das christlich-apostolische Glaubensbekenntnis (4th ed. 1851); — Die Scheidelehren der protestantischen und römischen Kirche (1845); — Die Iraz, Hymnus auf das Weltgericht (1840); — Stabat Mater, Hymnus auf die Schmerzen der Maria (1848), etc. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii. 802-804; Winer, Handbuch der Theol. Lit. ii. 87, 119, 123, 201, 306, 310, 357, 359. (B. P.)

Litaolané. There is a curious tradition among the Bechuanas in South Africa, to the effect that a monster of immense size, at a remote period of time, swallowed up all mankind except a single woman, who conceived miraculously and brought forth a son, to whom she gave the name of Litaolané. This son of the woman attacked the monster and was swallowed up alive, but being armed with a knife he cut open an outlet for himself from the belly of the monster, and thus he obtained deliverance, and all the nations of the earth in him. Thus saved, men sought, without success, to destroy their rescuer.

Litè (Λιτή), in the Greek Church, a procession according to XII.—22 accompanied with prayer, made on various occasions of public calamity and intercession. Forms of service on such occasions are given in the Greek euchology.

Litæra Clericæ (clerical letters), a name given by Cyprian to letters written by a bishop in ancient times to a foreign Church, and which were sent by the hands of one of the clergy, usually a sub-deacon.

Lithomancy (from λίθος, a stone, and μαντεία, divination), divination performed by means of stones. The stone used for this purpose was washed in spring water by candle-light, and the person engaged in divining, having purified himself, covered his face, repeated a form of prayer, and placed certain characters in a certain order. Then the stone was said to move of itself, and in a soft, gentle murmur to give the answer. See DIVINATION.

Litta, LORENZO, a learned Italian prelate, was born at Milan, Feb. 23, 1756. After studying at the Clementine College, in Rome, he was appointed apostolical protonotary in 1782, in 1793 became archbishop in partibus of Thebes, and the year following departed for Poland as nuncio. In 1797 he went in the same capacity to Russia. He died May 1, 1820, leaving Littres Diverses, etc. (Paris, 1809). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Little, HENRY, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Boscawen, N. H., March 30, 1800. He was converted at six years of age, graduated at Dartmouth College in 1826, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1829. The same year he was ordained as a missionary under the auspices of the American Education Society, for labor in the West. In 1831 he became pastor at Oxford, O., and two years later Western agent of the American Missionary Society; in 1838 pastor at Madison, Ind., a position which he occupied for ten years. The rest of his life was devoted to home missionary work in the Presbyterian Church. He died at Madison, Feb. 25, 1882. He was remarkably successful in pastoral labor, and in organizing missions and raising funds for their support.

Litré, MAXIMILIEN PAUL ÉMILE, the leader of positivism in France, was born in Paris, Feb. 1, 1801. He at first chose medicine as his profession, and, though he did not practice, much of his varied intellectual activity was directed to the scientific and historical side of the subject; indeed, his first work of great importance was his edition and translation of Hippocrates, the first volume of which appeared in 1839, while the last came out on the eve of the appearance of his famous Dictionnaire de la Langue Française. In the same year, when his Hippocrates appeared, he was elected a member of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, and in 1844 he took Fauriel's place in the company charged by the Academy with the continuation of the Histoire Littéraire, in which he did much good work. A great part of his time and energy was also taken up by his connection with Comte and positivism (q. v.). He himself was, by temperament, inclined not to polemics against religion, but to a kind of ignoring of it in favor of science; and he had translated Strauss's Leben Jesu within four years of its publication. He adopted positivism, as it at first presented itself, with vigorous partisanship, and produced in 1845 an excellent analysis of the Philosophie Positive. His subsequent refusal to follow Comte (q. v.) in his later excursions gave rise to the acrimonious polemic between the party of which he was the real chief, and the thorough-going disciples of the Politique, the Synthèse, the Catéchisme, and the rest. A very few years before his death, Littré, in his "testament," expressed his attitude towards Christianity, in words from which it is evident that he had no hostility, nor even indifference, towards Christianity. He simply could not believe in it. It was an extreme inability, which his intellect could not overcome, as may be learned from his own words:

"Some pious souls have troubled themselves about my conscience. It has seemed to them that, not being an absolute contemner of Christianity, and heartily acknowledging that it possessed grandeur and conferred blessings, there were chords in my heart that it might touch. It was a beguiling of faith, they thought, to entertain neither hostility nor contempt for a faith which has reigned for many centuries over men's consciences, and which even now is the consolation of so many faithful souls. As I never experienced nor expressed repulsion or uneasiness in finding myself the subject of the feelings that I have just sketched, and as age and illness warned me of my approaching end—as they have never abandoned the hope that I might experience the sovereign effect of divine grace, nor ceased to appeal from the mature man, too proud of his strength, to the old man, henceforth accessible to the promptings of his weakness—I reply to these solicitations, without wishing to wound their feelings, by saying that I neither share their faith nor experience any misery at being unable to believe. I have questioned myself in vain. It is impossible for me to accept the conception of the world which Catholicism imposes upon its true believers; but I feel no regret at being outside these creeds, and I can feel within me no desire to enter within their pale."

And yet he died, June 2, 1881, within the pale of the Catholic Church, having shortly before his death been baptized. Besides the works already mentioned, Littré also published, Conservation, Révolution et Positivisme (Paris, 1852):—Auguste Comte et la Philosophie Positive (ibid., 1863):—Sémétes en Compétition avec les Aryens pour l'Hégémonie du Monde (Leipsic, 1880). Compare Caro, Littré et le Positivisme (Paris, 1883). (B. P.)

Lively, EDWARD, D.D., an English divine of the 16th century, was professor of Hebrew and divinity in the University of Cambridge, a learned Orientalist, and one of the translators of the Authorized Version of the Bible. He died in 1605. He published annotations on several of the Minor Prophets (1587):—and Chronology of the Persian Monarchy (1597). See McClure, Translators Revised.

Liverance, GALFRID, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Dunkeld in 1236, 1239, 1247, and in 1249. He died at Tippermuir, Nov. 22 of the last-named year. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 79.

Livese Version of the Scriptures. The Livese is a dialect spoken by a remnant of the Finnish people in the peninsula of north-west Courland, known by the name of Liva, inhabiting Livonia, a name given to the largest of the Baltic provinces of Russia. The Liva number about five thousand souls. The gospel of Matthew was transcribed for them into the Lettish character by the academician Widemann, at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and carried through the press in 1879. Living, a term often used in England to denote a benedice (q. v.).

Living, an English prelate, is first met with as bishop of Wells, to which see he was consecrated in 999. In 1013 he was translated to the see of Canterbury. He continued for seven years, but in that time did very little more than to repair the roof of the cathedral. He did not receive the pallium. He died in 1020. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i, 472 sq.

Livingstone, DAVID, LL.D., etc., an eminent African traveller and missionary, was born March 19, 1813, at Blantyre, in Lanarkshire, Scotland. At the age of ten he became a "piecer" in a cotton factory, and for many years was engaged in hard work as an operative. An evening-school furnished him with the opportunity of acquiring some knowledge of Greek and Latin, and finally, after attending a course of medicine at Glasgow University, and the theological lectures of the late Dr. Wardlaw, professor of theology to the Scotch Independents, he offered himself to the London Missionary Society, by whom he was ordained as a medical missionary in 1840. In the summer of that year he landed at Port Natal, in South Africa. Circumstances made him acquainted with the Rev. Robert Moffatt, himself a distinguished missionary, whose daughter he subsequently married. For sixteen years Livingstone proved himself a faithful and zealous servant of the London Missionary Society. The two most important results achieved by him in this period were the discovery of Lake Ngami (Aug. 1, 1849), and his crossing the continent of South Africa, from the Zambezi (or Leeambye) to the Congo, and thence to Loando, the capital of Angola, which took him about eighteen months (from January, 1853, to June, 1854). In September of the same year he left Loando on his return across the Continent, reached Linsanti (in lat. 18° 17' south, and long. 23° 50' east), the capital of the great Makololo tribe, and from thence proceeded along the banks of the Leeambye to Quilimane, on the Indian Ocean, which he reached May 20, 1856. He then took ship for England, where he arrived Dec. 12 of the same year. The reception accorded him by his countrymen was most enthusiastic. Probably no traveller was ever more affectionately honored. This was owing not merely to the importance of his discoveries, though it would be difficult to overestimate them, but to the thoroughly frank, ingenuous, simple, and manly character of the traveller. In 1857 Livingstone published his Missionary Travels and Researches in South Africa, a work of great interest and value. "In all his various journeys," said Sir Roderick Murchison, at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, held shortly after Livingstone's return, "he had travelled over no less than eleven thousand miles of African territory. . . . By his astronomical observations he had determined the sites of numerous places, hills, rivers, and lakes, nearly all of which had been hitherto unknown, while he had seized upon every opportunity of describing the physical features, climatology, and geological structure of the countries which he had explored, and had pointed out many new sources of commerce as yet unknown to the scope and the enterprise of the British merchant." In 1858 the British government appointed him consul at Quilimane, whither he returned in the course of the year; it also furnished him with a small steamer, that he might pursue his explorations of the Zambezi River and its tributaries. Livingstone started up this river in January, 1859, but after ascending it for over two hundred miles his farther progress was impeded by the magnificent cataracts of the Murchison. In March, following, he started for a second journey up the Shire, a branch of the Zambezi, and on the 18th of April discovered Lake Shirwa. Then followed the discovery of Lake Nyassa on Sept. 16. In 1864 he was ordered by the British government to abandon the expedition, and, returning to England, he published his second book of travels, entitled A Narrative of an Expedition to the Zambezi and its Tributaries. In August, 1863, Mr. Livingstone left England on his third journey to Africa; discovered Lake Liemba in April, 1867, south of Tanganyika, and going westward thence found Lake Maero on the 8th of September. But after eight years of lonely wandering in a previously unknown region, and after achieving discoveries which will permanently benefit mankind, the heroic traveller was overtaken by death. Having made repeated attempts to find the sources of the Nile, and being thwarted every time, in the last instance by severe illness, he requested his followers to take him to Zanzibar, as he was going home. After suffering intensely for several days, he died, May 1, 1873. His body was brought to England and interred in Westminster Abbey. See (Lond.) Christian Observer, Jan. 1876, p. 14; Life, by Blaikie (Lond. 1874); Walker, Last Journals (ibid. ed.).

Livingtown, JAMES, a Scotch prelate, was first rector of Forteviot and Weems, then dean of Dunkeld, and afterwards, in 1476, bishop of Dunkeld. He was constituted lord chancellor, Feb. 18, 1483, and died at Edinburgh in the same year. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 90.

Livinus, Saint, called the apostle of Brabant, was born in Ireland, it is said of noble parents, and received his education there. He was bishop of Dublin in 656. Being actuated by religious zeal, he intrusted his diocese in Ireland to the management of its archdeacon, and went to Ghent with three of his disciples, and, for a month, offered up mass at the tomb of St. Bavo every day, and afterwards went to Esca and preached the gospel, and converted numbers. He was murdered by some of the pagan inhabitants, Nov. 12, 656. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 16.

Ljada, in Slavonic mythology, was a god of war among the Poles, to whom, before and after battle, human sacrifices were offered.

Llewelyn (or Llywelyn), THOMAS, LL.D., a Welsh dissenting minister, was born at Penalltan-isaf, Glamorganshire, about 1724, and having secured a liberal education, became the principal of an academical institution in London. He died in 1788. Although never the pastor of any church, he preached frequently, and was recognised as a minister of the gospel. He was a ripe scholar and a judicious writer. His works are, Historical Account of the British or Welsh Versions and Editions of the Bible (Lond. 1768, 8vo):—Historical and Critical Remarks on the British Tongue, etc. (1769, 8vo). Lloyd, HUMPHREY, D.D., etc., an eminent English divine and scientist, was born in Dublin in 1800. He entered Trinity College in 1815, was elected scholar in 1818, and graduated in 1820. In 1824 he was made fellow and tutor of Trinity College, and was soon ordained a minister of the United Church of England and Ireland. In 1831 he resigned the office of tutor, and was elected to the chair of natural philosophy, and afterwards gave his attention almost wholly to scientific investigations. He died Jan. 17, 1881. Dr. Lloyd was a fellow of the royal societies of London and Edinburgh, and honorary member of the philosophical societies of Cambridge and Manchester, and other scientific societies of Europe and America. In 1846 he was elected president of the Royal Irish Academy; in 1856 he received the degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford; and in 1867 was chosen president of the British Association. His works are chiefly scientific. See Men of the Time, s. v.

Loanz, ELIAS ben-Moses (surnamed Baal Shem), who died at Worms in 1686, rabbi, is the author of a cabalistic commentary on the Song of Solomon, entitled רִנְתָּ דְּרִירָא (Baale, 1599), and on Koheleth or Ecclesiastes, entitled סֵפֶר חֵכְמָה. Locales, a name anciently given to ecclesiastics who were ordained to a ministerial charge in some fixed place. At the Council of Valencia, in Spain, a decree was passed that no priest should be ordained unless he would give a promise that he would be a localis. Indeed, ordination at large was not considered valid.

Locherer, JOHANN NEPOMUK, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Freiburg, Aug. 21, 1773, and died at Giessen, Feb. 26, 1837, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, Geschichte der christlichen Religion und Kirche (Ravensburg, 1824-34, 9 vols.):—Lehrbuch der christlichen Archäologie (Frankfort, 1832):—Lehrbuch der Patrologie (Mayence, 1837). Lockwood, SAMUEL, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Norwalk, Conn., Nov. 30, 1721. After graduating from Yale College in 1745, he studied theology under the direction of his brother, Rev. James Lockwood, of Wethersfield. A society having been formed in Andover, in 1747, embracing Coventry, Lebanon, and Hebron, he was called to preach, as a candidate, in the beginning of the following year. Of this parish he was ordained pastor, Feb. 26, 1749, O. S. He died in New Lebanon, N. Y., June 18, 1791. His manner in the pulpit was marked by gravity rather than vivacity; but he was very popular with his people. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 465.

Loculus, a name given to a place for a coffin among the ancient Romans.

Lo-debar, Tristram remarks (Bible Places, p. 829), "may be Dibbin, near Jerash, where I found a fine ancient fountain and other remains."

Lodrone, PARIS, a German prelate, was born about 1570 at the castle of Lodrone, in the Italian Tyrol. He was the youngest of a nobleman's family, and was destined for the ministry. In 1619 he became prince-archbishop of Salzburg. In the midst of the excitement of the Thirty Year's War, he determined to preserve in that country a complete neutrality, and assured to the adherents of both creeds equal protection, which certainly was a singular example at that time. In 1628 he founded the University of Salzburg, which occupied a very distinguished place among all the older ones. After that he commenced the reconstruction of the cathedral, and founded several establishments for the public benefit. Lodrone died at Salzburg in March, 1658. See Hoefler, *Nouv. Biog. Loebenstein, ALOIS, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, came to America in 1852, and located at Femme Osage, Mo. He had studied theology at Vienna, and soon was employed as pastor in one of the Evangelical churches. The year succeeding he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was appointed successively to Belleville, Ill.; Newport, Ky.; Buckeye Street, Cincinnati, O.; Indianapolis, Ind.; professor of theology at Wallace College, Berea, O., which position he held for eight years; Lafayette, Ind.; Toledo, O.; Walnut Street, Detroit, Mich.; Beaubien Street, East Saginaw. He died at the last appointment in 1881. He was a member of the Central German Conference. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 312.

Loftus, ADAM, D.D., an Irish prelate, was born at Swinshead, in Yorkshire, and was educated at the University of Cambridge. In 1561 he was rector of Pains-town, in the diocese of Meath. In 1562 he was appointed to the see of Armagh, and was consecrated by Hugh, archbishop of Dublin, at the close of that year. In 1564 he was elected dean of St. Patrick's. In August, 1567, he was promoted to the see of Dublin. In 1568 this prelate consecrated Dr. Lancaster as his own successor in Armagh, at Christ Church. In 1573 he was appointed chancellor. In 1582 Loftus was one of the lords justices of Ireland. In 1583 he was the unjust judge that illegally sentenced the Roman Catholic archbishop of Cashel, Dermot Hurley, to the cruelties of death on Osmantown Green. In 1597 Loftus was again one of the lords justices of Ireland, and also in 1599. At the close of that year he was named as one of the assistant councillors to the lord president of Munster, and in 1608 had pardon of intrusion and alienation in reference to the manors, etc. He died April 5, 1605. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 240.

Lohengrin, in British fable, was the famous guard and protector of the sacred Graal. He saved Elsa, the princess of Brabant, from a magician, by coming to her as a swan. She married the valiant knight, but on condition that she would not inquire as to his ancestry. Finally she asked about this, and Lohengrin fled on his swan back to the sacred Graal.

Lohmann, BOGISLAV RUDOLF, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born Dec. 28, 1825. He studied at Göttingen and Halle, was in 1853 pastor at Fürstenwalde, in 1865 at Springe, and died Dec. 15, 1879, at Görbersdorf, Hanover. He published, Kurze Fragstücke zum kleinen Katechismus Luther's (Berlin, 1858):—Athanasius, der Vater der Rechtgläubigkeit (2d ed. 1860):—Lutherische und unirte Kirche (1867). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 809. (B. P.)

Loll (or Lull), in German mythology, was a frightful god of the Franks, who had a sacred grove containing a brazen image in the region of Schweinfurt.

Lollards of Kyle. See LOLLARDS.

Lommatzsch, KARL HEINRICH EDUARD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 22, 1802, at Grossschönau, near Zittau. He commenced his academic career at Berlin in 1829, was in 1832 professor at the theological seminary in Wittenberg, and died Aug. 19, 1882, doctor of theology. Lommatzsch is especially known as the editor of De la Rue's edition of Origenis Opera Omnia (Berlin, 1831-48, 25 vols.). (B. P.)

Long, CLEMENT, D.D., LL.D., a Congregational minister, was born in New Hampshire in 1807. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1828, studied theology for two years in Andover Theological Seminary as a member of the class of 1834, and was ordained. He was a tutor in Western Reserve College, and became professor of intellectual and moral philosophy in that institution in 1834; professor of theology in 1844; professor of theology in the theological seminary at Auburn, N. Y., in 1852; professor of intellectual philosophy and political economy in Dartmouth College in 1854. He died at Hanover, N. H., Oct. 14, 1861. See Trien. Cut. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 112.

Longstreet, AUGUSTUS BALDWIN, LL.D., a Methodist minister, was born at Augusta, Ga., Sept. 22, 1790. He studied in the Litchfield (Conn.) Law School, and settled in his native state. In 1823 he represented Greene County in the state legislature, and the following year was made judge of the Superior Court of the state. During the Nullification excitement he established the Augusta Sentinel. In 1838 he entered the ministry, and from 1839 to 1848 was president of Emory College, in Oxford. He was then for a short time president of Centenary College, Jackson, La., and from 1849 to 1856 president of the University of Mississippi. Still later he was president of South Carolina College. He died Sept. 9, 1870. He was a frequent contributor to Southern periodicals, and published many separate works, among the best known of which is his humorous collection of Georgia Scenes. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1872.

Longueuil, RICHARD OLIVER DE, a French prelate, was born about 1410, of an illustrious family of Normandy. He was archdeacon of Eu, and became, in 1453, bishop of Coutances. Having been designated among other commissaries, by the pope, in 1455, to revise the proceeding in the case of Joan d'Arc, he exhibited great zeal in rehabilitating the memory of that female hero. King Charles VII sent him as ambassador to the duke of Burgundy, and placed him at the head of his council. He also obtained for Longueuil from the pope, Calixtus III, the cardinal's hat, in 1456. In his devotion to the Church that prelate ventured to oppose in the parliament the Pragmatic Sanction, for which he was fined not less than 10,000 livres. Pius II gave him the bishoprics of Oporto and of St. Ruffina, also the legateship of Umbria, and made him archpriest of the basilica of St. Peter. He died at La Pérouse, Aug. 15, 1470. See Huefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lonsano, MENACHEM DI, a Jewish writer of the 17th century, is the author of אורי חוריר, or critical work on the text of the Pentateuch (Amsterdam, 1659 and often). He compared ten MSS., chiefly Spanish ones, with the text of Bomberg's quarto Bible, published in 1544, some of them being five or six hundred years old. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 255 sq.; De Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 184 sq. (B. P.)

Loomis, HARMON, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Georgia, Vt., Oct. 26, 1805. He received his preparatory education at St. Albans' Academy, and at a high-school in his native place; graduated from the University of Vermont in 1832, and in the same year entered Andover Theological Seminary, where he spent two years. He was licensed to preach by the North-western Congregational Association of Vermont, Oct. 10, 1834. In 1835 he entered Princeton Seminary, but left in January, 1836, and became stated supply of the Union Presbyterian Church, New York city. He was ordained by a Congregational Council at Vergennes, Vt., Aug. 31, 1836. Soon after he accepted the position of chaplain for the American Seaman's Friend Society of New York, and began preaching to seamen in New Orleans, Jan. 8, 1837. This he did four years, spending his summers in the North and raising funds for the society. From 1841 to 1845 he preached as stated supply to the Presbyterian Church at Mount Joy, Pa. In the last-named year he entered upon the duties of corresponding secretary of the American Seaman's Friend Society, in New York, and continued in that office till 1871. He died in Brooklyn, Jan. 19, 1880. Dr. Loomis published a number of volumes and pamphlets, and did much to promote the temperance cause. He was a man of sincere and earnest piety. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1880, p. 25.

Lorck, JOSIAH, a Lutheran theologian of Copenhagen, was born Jan. 3, 1723, at Flensburg, and died Feb. 8, 1785. He published, Die Bibelgeschichte in einigen Beiträgen erläutert (Copenhagen, 1779):—Beiträge zu der neuesten Kirchengeschichte in den königlichen dänischen Reichen (1757-62, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 69, 832. (B. P.)

Lord, JEREMIAH SKIDMORE, D.D., a Reformed Dutch minister, was born at Jamaica, N. Y., May 10, 1812. He graduated from the University of the City of New York in 1836, and from the Union Theological Seminary in 1839; was ordained Aug. 20 of the same year, becoming pastor at Montville, N. J.; went to Grigstown in 1843, to Harlem, New York city, in 1848, and died there, April 2, 1869. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 14; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 356.

Lord, JOHN CHASE, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Washington, N. H., Aug. 9, 1805. He studied at Plainfield Academy, and Madison and Hamilton colleges, from the last of which he graduated in 1825. After two years' editorial experience in Canada he went to Buffalo, N. Y., began the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1828. He united with the First Presbyterian Church of Buffalo in 1830, and soon after entered Auburn Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in 1833, and was called to the Church at Genesee, where a wonderful revival occurred. In 1835 he became pastor of the Central Church at Buffalo, and remained until he gave up effective work in the ministry in 1878. He died there, Jan. 21, 1877. Dr. Lord was the author of, Lectures to Young Men (1838):—Lectures on Civilization (1851), besides sermons and pamphlets. See (N. Y.) Evangelist, April 26, 1877; Gen. Cit. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1888, p. 263; Nevin, Presb. Encyclop. s. v. (W. P. S.)

Lord, William Hayes, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of president Nathan Lord, was born in Amherst, N. H., March 11, 1824. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1843, and three years after from Andover Theological Seminary; was ordained pastor at Montpelier, Vt., Sept. 20, 1847, and died there, March 18, 1877. He was a trustee of the Washington County Grammar School from 1853, and president from 1865. From 1847 to 1875 he was director of the Vermont Bible Society, and held the same relation to the Domestic Missionary Society from 1853 to 1877. After 1870 he was president of the Vermont Historical Society, of which he had been for some time previously a member. In 1876 he was appointed fish commissioner of Vermont. He was moderator of the General Convention of Vermont in 1861; was corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions from 1873; and the following year became editor of the Vermont Chronicle. See Cong. Quarterly, 1878, p. 446.

Lore, Dallas Dayton, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Mauricetown, N. J., in 1815. He was converted at the age of fifteen, and at twenty-one entered the Philadelphia Conference, soon receiving the most important charges. In 1847 Mr. Lore sailed for South America as a missionary, and for seven years was the pastor of a large and intelligent congregation in Buenos Ayres, proving himself eminently successful both among the foreign and native population. Upon his return he was sent on a tour of exploration to New Mexico to inspect the condition of the mission field. In 1856 he was transferred to the Newark Conference, and after serving several prominent charges within its bounds, received a transfer to the Genesee Conference, and was appointed to Grace Church, Buffalo. In 1864 he was elected editor of the Northern Christian Advocate, in which office he continued till his death, at his residence near Auburn, Jan. 20, 1875. As a theologian, Dr. Lore was diligent and comprehensive in his researches, and careful in his conclusions. As a preacher he was earnest, direct, and practical. As an editor he achieved success by his strong and forcible style, by the boldness and wisdom of his conclusions, and by his devotion to the truth. His zeal in the cause of Christian missions was truly marvellous, and highly exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 119; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Loretz, Andrew, one of the early pioneer ministers of the German Reformed Church in America, a Swiss by birth, was educated in Europe, and emigrated to America towards the close of the last century. "About the year 1789 he commenced preaching and ministering in a wide field, embracing a large part of both the Carolinas, from Orange County, in North Carolina, to beyond the river Saluda, in South Carolina, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles." He died in 1812. Mr. Loretz was a man of superior natural ability, extensive learning, great zeal and energy, and, in his day, "regarded as one of the best pulpit orators in the Carolinas." See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iii, 15. (D. Y. H.)

Lorimer, Peter, D.D., an eminent English Presbyterian divine, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1812. He graduated from the university there, was ordained in 1836, and installed pastor of the River Terrace Church, London, which was then in connection with the Church of Scotland. He was at one with those who, in 1843, formed the Free Church of Scotland, and along with his congregation became a constituent part of the Synod of Berwick in 1844, which, until recently, was known as the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England. From that time forward the first desire of his life was the advancement of that Church to a position worthy of its name. He was connected with the London Theological College from the date of its establishment in 1845, when he was elected to the chair of Hebrew and Biblical criticism. He was made the first principal in 1878, and died suddenly, July 28, 1879. He was the author of several valuable works, among them, The Life of Patrick Hamilton:—The Life of the Scottish Reformer, John Knox:—and A History of the Presbyterian Church of England, a work on which he had spent years of diligent research, but which he was only able to complete in part.

Loriquet, Jean Nicolas, a French Jesuit, famous on account of his historical falsifications, was born Aug. 5, 1760, at Epemay, Champagne. He was professor at the Seminary of Argentières, which was closed by Napoleon in 1807. The events of 1814 made the Jesuits come forward in great numbers, and their colleges were multiplied. Loriquet was intrusted with the direction of the schools at Aix, Provence, and St. Acheul, Picardy, and the pupils who were under his charge were imbued with that spirit which has been detrimental to modern society. In 1830 the people of St. Acheul destroyed the school there, and the reverend fathers had to quit the place. Loriquet went to Switzerland, where he worked in behalf of his order. Under Louis Philippe he returned to France, and died at Paris, April 9, 1845. Loriquet was a prolific writer. For a list of his works, see Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Lorraine (or Gélée), Claude, an illustrious French painter, was born in a small town of Champagne, in the diocese of Toul, Lorraine, in 1600, and went to Rome early for instruction, where he made great improvement in his studies, but met with many reverses, and often was almost penniless. Godfrey Waal admitted him into his academy, where he remained probably two years. Agostino Tassi became interested in Claude, took him into the bosom of his family, and made him his familiar companion. Claude, naturally of a religious disposition, feeling profound gratitude for the many benefits he had received, soon after leaving Tassi and quitting Rome, about 1625, performed a pilgrimage to the holy Virgin of Loretto, where he remained some days in devotional meditation. From thence he made a tour through Italy, traversing Romagna, Lombardy, and on to Venice, where he practiced his profession for some time. In 1627 he returned to Rome, and soon found abundant employment. One of his earliest patrons was cardinal Bentivoglio, for whom he painted two pictures which established his reputation. About this time he was employed by cardinal Crescenzi to decorate the rotunda of his palace; he was also similarly engaged in the Muti of the Holy Apostles, and of the Medici alla Trinità de' Monti. These were succeeded by commissions from the duke of Bracciano, the duke de Bouillon, and the prince de Leaucour, for each a picture. The fame of Claude now extended to every part of Europe, and he received commissions from the most distinguished persons. His works were not confined to Rome, Milan, Parma, Lombardy, and Venice, but extended also to Paris, Lyons, Montpellier, Avignon, Antwerp, Amsterdam, and Madrid. He died Nov. 21, 1682. See Spooner, Bio. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Losing, Herbert, an English prelate, was born probably at Hoxon, Suffolk, his father being an abbot, wives in that age not being absolutely forbidden the clergy, though his father might have become abbot in his old age. Herbert bought a better preferment for himself, however, giving £1900 to king William Rufus for the bishopric of Thetford. Simony was a fashionable sin at that time. He afterwards went to Rome, returned to England, removed his bishopric from Thetford to Norwich, built the fine cathedral there and five beautiful parish churches, and died July 22, 1119. See Fuller, Worthies of England (Nuttall), iii, 13, 166.

Lotto, LORENZO, an eminent Italian painter, was probably born at Bergamo in 1490, and apparently studied at Venice under Giovanni Bellini. His principal works are in the churches at Bergamo, Venice, and Recanati. His picture of the Virgin and Infant is considered one of his best performances. In the Church of Santo Spirito is another exquisite picture of the Virgin and Infant, with St. John Standing at the Foot of the Throne, Embracing a Lamb. Other masterpieces are to be seen at Bergamo in the churches and private collections, and place him almost upon a level with the first luminaries of art. He died in 1560. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.; Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Lotze, HERMANN RUDOLF, a philosopher of Germany, was born May 21, 1817, at Bautzen, Saxony. He studied medicine and philosophy with such success that, five years after his entrance to Leipsic University, he was able to qualify as a teacher in both faculties. In 1844 he was called to Göttingen as professor of philosophy. Before going there, however, he had published his metaphysics in 1844, and his logic in 1843. In 1881 he was called to Berlin, and died the same year. Lotze was a determined opponent of materialism in philosophy. "It is the glory of Hermann Lotze," says Joseph Cook, "to have broadened, by exact and not mystical methods, the philosophical outlook upon human nature, to have taken the emotions in all their ranges into view, as well as the intellectual faculties; and thus, gradually, through the strictest methods of modern research, to have risen to a philosophy of the soul and of the whole composite nature of man, in harmony with the truths of all the sciences—mental, moral, æsthetic, and physical." Others, however, see in the philosophical system of Lotze a decided tendency to that insidious form of idealistic pantheism which comes near to denying the objectivity of matter, or at least to resolving all phenomena into pure deity. See SCEPTICISM, RECENT PHASES OF. Lotze published, Metaphysik (Leipsic, 1841):—Allgemeine Pathologie und Therapie als mechanische Naturwissenschaften (1842; 2d ed. 1848):—System der Philosophie (2 vols.; vol. i, Logik, 1843; new ed. 1874; vol. ii, Metaphysik, 1878; 2d ed. 1884; Engl. transl. edited by B. Louis, SAINT, bishop of Toulouse, was born in February, 1274, at the castle of Brignoles, in Provence. He was the second son of Charles II, the hunchbacked king of Naples, and of Mary, the daughter of Stephen V, king of Hungary; was educated by the disciples of St. Francis, took the habit of their order, and was ordained priest in 1296 at Naples, notwithstanding the solicitations of his family, who wished to have him married to the sister of the king of Aragon. From his fourteenth to his twentieth year he served as hostage to his father, and was imprisoned at Barcelona, where he was treated very cruelly. Pope Boniface VIII appointed him to the see of Toulouse, Dec. 27, 1295, although he was not yet of the required age, and charged him with administering the diocese of Parniers. Louis divided his time between the study, works of piety, and the pastoral duties, also making great efforts to destroy the Albigenses. In 1297 he went to Paris with his father. "A princess," says one of his biographers, "sought to test his virtue; in fact, she omitted nothing to seduce him, but the holy prelate disregarded her caresses and her threatenings." He went away from the court as soon as possible, and was invited to visit Aragon and Catalonia. He resolved, however, to go to Rome, in order to surrender into the hands of the pope the burden of the episcopacy; but on arriving at Brignoles he was attacked with fever, and died Aug. 19, 1297. His body was at first taken to Marseilles, and afterwards to Aragon. Pope John XXII, who had been the preceptor of Louis, canonized him, April 7, 1317. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Loundres, HENRY DE, an Irish prelate, previously archdeacon of Stafford, succeeded to the see of Dublin in 1213. In July of the same year he was appointed lord-justice of Ireland, where he continued until 1215. He was present, June 15 of that year, in England, when the king executed the Magna Charta at Runnymede. In 1216 king John conferred upon archbishop de Loundres and his successors the manor of Timothan, to which, in 1217 and 1225, various other grants were annexed. During the time this prelate presided over the see of Dublin, he erected the collegiate Church of St. Patrick into a cathedral. He constituted William Fitz-Guy the first dean, and appointed a precentor, chancellor, and treasurer, to whom he allotted lands and rectories. He died in July, 1228. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 79.

Lounsberry, THOMAS, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Florida, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1789. He graduated with the highest honors from Union College in 1817; studied theology for more than a year at Princeton, N. J.; then became missionary in Sullivan County, N. Y., from 1821 to 1823; was ordained by the presbytery of Geneva, Sept. 4 of the latter year; preached at Ovid from 1823 to 1849; was afterwards stated supply at Homer, Hector, and Romulus; then went again to Ovid, where he died, Oct. 29, 1867. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 217; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 27.

Loup (Lat. Lupus), SAINT, a French prelate, was born in the neighborhood of Bayeux. There is a legend, according to which St. Ruffinian, bishop of Bayeux, educated the young Loup, who soon became the most learned and most distinguished among all the clerks at Bayeux. Thus, at the death of Ruffinian, he was elected by the whole people his successor, and consecrated by Sylvester, archbishop of Rouen. Saint Loup died about the year 465. To him has often been attributed the Life of St. Raimbert, bishop of Bayeux. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Loup, SAINT, bishop of LYONS, Sept. 25, 542. He began as a monk in the monastery of the Isle of Sainte-Barbe, on the Saône, near Lyons. He became the superior of it, and Saint Virentiol, in the see of Lyons, in 528. He presided at the third council of Orleans, May 7, 538, at which there were passed thirty-three canons to restore discipline in the Church of France. He died Sept. 25, 542, and is said to have been buried in the hermitage of the Isle of Sainte-Barbe. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Loup, SAINT, OF TROYES. See LUPUS.

Low, DAVID, an Anglican bishop, was born in the neighborhood of Brechin, Scotland, in 1768. He received his education at the University of Aberdeen, then studied with bishop Gleig at Stirling, and was settled in charge of the congregation at Pittenweem in 1790, where for more than half a century he fulfilled the duties of the pastoral office without intermission. Dr. Low was consecrated bishop of the united diocese of Argyle, Ross, and Moray, in 1819. Some years subsequently he effected a separation between the diocese of Ross and Moray and that of Argyle, retaining the superintendence of the former. He resigned the see in 1850, and died at Pettenween, Jan. 26, 1855. He was especially intimate with Scottish traditions and historical lore, and was a captivating conversationalist. See Amer. Quar. Church Rec. 1855, p. 315.

LÖW, LEOPOLD, a Jewish rabbi, was born in 1811 in Moravia. He studied at Prague, and was in 1843 chief rabbi of Great Kanizsa, Hungary. He took an active part in the revolution of 1848, and after its suppression was imprisoned and condemned to death. He was, however, pardoned, and in 1851 became chief rabbi at Szegedin, where he died, Oct. 13, 1875. Löw was a voluminous writer, his essays having been published in four volumes, under the title Gesammelte Schriften (Szegedin, 1876). Still valuable are his Beiträge zur jüdischen Alterthumskunde (Leipsic, 1870):—Allgemeine Einleitung und Geschichte der Schriftauslegung (Great Kanizsa, 1855). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 266. Lowder, CHARLES FUGE, an Anglican clergyman, of some fame in the history of city missions and of English ritualism, was born at Bath, June 22, 1821, and graduated at King's College School, London, and Exeter College, Oxford. He served his apprenticeship to London church-work under Skinner, at St. Barnabas, Pimlico, from 1851 to 1856. It was a time of vehement anti-Catholic agitation. The ritualism of Skinner and Lowder consisted in (1) Procession of clergy and choristers from and to the vestry; (2) Obedience towards the altar on entering and retiring from the sanctuary; (3) The eastward position; (4) Coloured coverings varied for the season on the altar. Bishop Blomfield allowed some of these, but disapproved of others. These troubles dragged on until the Lushington judgment disheartened the High-Church party, and the first decision of the privy council in December, 1855, was welcomed as a deliverance by hearts which could not foresee the very different treatment which the Rubric on ornaments was to receive from that same body in the Ridsdale judgment. Yet, at the beginning, the ritualism of St. Barnabas "roused such a storm and provoked such outrage that towards the end of 1850 the religious people of the district were so horrified by the blasphemous cries of the mob that they were fain to keep within their houses." In 1856 and 1857 Lowder took charge of mission congregations at Ratcliff Highway and Welclose Square, where, amid many physical discomforts, and among the rough population of that wild East London district, he left "the record of a very noble life, full of unconscious greatness, to which the term heroic would not be misapplied." He was not a man of brilliant abilities or social attractiveness, by no means eloquent as a preacher, not always a good judge of character, his asceticism impaired his health and his working force, yet one could speak of his calm, unexcited courage, his splendid patience, his unsparing laboriousness, his habitual, far-reaching charity, his burning love of souls, his intense loyalty to Christ as a personal Saviour. In 1858 Lowder welcomed a coaljutor, Alexander Heriot Mackonochie, since so conspicuous in the English Church. In 1859 six clergy were laboring in the parish, with a large staff of lay assistants, fifty-four services were held weekly, and six hundred children were under instruction in the six schools which had been set on foot. This outburst of missionary energy, with services so ritualistic, excited opposition. In September, 1859, Lowder came near being murdered by a mob lashed into fury, and in the beginning of 1860 "the whole service was interrupted by hissing, whistling, and shouting; songs were roared out during the service and lesson; cushions and books were hurled at the altar . . . the clergy were spat upon, hustled, and kicked within the church, and only protected from greater outrages by sixty or eighty gentlemen who, unasked, came to the rescue." The mob gutted St. George's Church of everything savoring of the Roman service, and the bishop (Tait) for the most part gave way to the rioters. After the storm had passed, the patience and Christian spirit of Lowder and his associates began to make itself felt upon the rough zealots. Some of them became choristers in other churches, or assisted priests in mission work. New agencies for good sprang up, one of which was the Working Men's Institute. The Church of St. Peter's, London Docks, was consecrated June 31, 1866, Lowder being its first vicar. Then came the visitation of cholera, which conquered the people and bowed their hearts once for all to the pastor who gave himself up with such absolute devotedness to the work of helping them. Lowder did not set up a system in place of a Person, or his own office as the substitute for an absent, instead of the witness for a present, Lord. The root-idea of confession was the heinousness of sin and the promise of pardon through the blood of Christ, and confession and absolution were freely offered to all those who needed it. He had rituals, because he thought it his duty to put before the eyes of the people the image of the worship of heaven, and the outward appointments of the Church gave an air of comfort and dignity—a lesson for the people to take back to their squalid homes. As the result, not only was open sin swept away from the streets of St. Peter's, where before streets were peopled by houses of ill-fame, but five hundred communicants of St. Peter's were lifted above the suffering life into joy and peace. Lowder's health, undermined for a long time, broke down in 1874 or 1875. In August, 1880, he went abroad, never to return. In the Tyrol, at Zell-am-See, at the age of sixty, among strangers, Sept. 9, 1880, this great and heroic spirit passed away. See Charles Lowder, a biography, by the author of the Life of St. Teresa (2d ed. Lond. 1882; N. Y. ed.); *Church of England Quar. Löwenthal, ISIDOR, a famous missionary and translator of the Bible, was a native of Poland, and of Jewish parentage. At the age of twenty he had to flee his country, being suspected by the government of conspiracy. He came to America, and at Princeton, N. J., went about as a pedler, hawking jewelry and stationery. In or near Princeton, living a life of retired though literary habits, was a much-respected clergyman, who had more than one conversation with the eloquent pedler. Perceiving in him talent of no common order, he offered to assist him in the prosecution of his studies. An appeal to some princely merchants of New York speedily procured the funds necessary to send the young man to Princeton College. At this time he was a bigoted Jew, but his course of studies, his intercourse with tutors, brought about his conversion, and he received baptism. Having completed his studies, he offered himself as a missionary to the American Presbyterian Board. To India he directed his steps, and fancying from what he had read that among the Afghans might be found traces of the lost tribes, he proposed that he should be sent to Peshawur, as a missionary to the Afghans. There, in 1856, he commenced his work. With rare ability and perseverance, he had so perfected himself in the difficult language of the Afghans as to prepare a translation of the entire New Test.; and although the execution of the work devolved wholly upon himself, it was marked by close adherence to the original texts, and by an idiomatic power of expression which earned the warmest commendation of the Pushtu linguists who were capable of pronouncing a critical opinion on the result of his labors. The question of translating the Old Test. had been discussed, and as the importance of giving the Afghans a complete Bible was deeply felt, Mr. Löwenthal had expressed his willingness to undertake this great and responsible task. But the Divine Master had otherwise appointed, and before he had fairly entered upon the duty, he was assassinated, April 27, 1864. See PUSITŮ VERSION. (B. P.)

Lubersac, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH DE, a French prelate, was born at Limoges, Jan. 15, 1740. He became first grand-vicar of the archbishop of Arles, in 1768 almoner of the king, and in 1775 bishop of Tréguier. In 1780 he was transferred to Chartres. Having been sent by the clergy to the States-General, he refused to recognise the constitution of the clergy, and March 15, 1791, was forced to emigrate. In 1801 he resigned his bishopric. After his return to France he was appointed canon of the chapter of St. Denis. He died Aug. 30, 1822, leaving, Journal de l'Émigration du Clergé de France en Angleterre (Lond. 1802):—Apologie de la Religion et de la Monarchie Reunies (ibid. eod.). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Luca, ANTONIO DE, cardinal-bishop of Palestrina and vice-chancellor of the Church of Rome, was born Oct. 28, 1805, at Bronte, Sicily. In 1863 he was made cardinal, and died Dec. 29, 1883. He was one of the most prominent members of the college of cardinals, chief of the apostolic chancery, and, with the cardinals Pitta and Hergenröther, had charge of the archives and the Vatican library. (B. P.)

Lucarinos, REGINALDO, an Italian Dominican, who died Oct. 10, 1671, is the author of, Episcopus Regularis:—Manuale Controversiarum Thomisticarum:—Hermes Biblicus:—Bibliotheca Scriptorum Ordinis Prædicatorum. See Echard, De Scriptoribus Ordinis Dominicorum; Ughelli, Italia Sacra; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lucatelli (or Locatelli), PIETRO, a distinguished Roman painter, was born in 1660, and studied under Ciro Ferri. He was elected a member of the Academy of St. Luke in 1690, and executed some works for the public edifices at Rome. His paintings in the Church of San Agostino, and in the Collegio Fuccioli, are highly commended. He died in 1741. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Lucchi, MICHAEL ANGELO, an Italian prelate, was born at Brescia, Aug. 20, 1744. He made his profession at Monte Cassino, where he was appointed to teach philosophy and theology. He visited the principal libraries of Italy, and collected a number of ancient MSS., now in the Vatican. Pius VII called him to Rome, made him cardinal, Feb. 23, 1801, and intrusted him with the censorship of books. He died at Subiaco, Sept. 29, 1802, leaving several works on the Greek and Latin classics. See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lucena, LORENZO, a Spanish Roman Catholic theologian, was born in 1807. He was ordained deacon by the bishop of Cordova in 1830, and priest in 1831 by the suffragan bishop of Seville. For eight years he acted as professor of theology at the College of St. Pelagius, in the University of Seville, and for three years held the office of provisional president there. In 1842 he was appointed honorary canon of Gibraltar Cathedral, and reader in the Spanish language and literature in the Taylorian Institution at Oxford, in 1861. He assisted in preparing the new edition of the Spanish Bible, generally known as that of Cipriano de Valera, and published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. He died at Oxford, Aug. 24, 1881. Luchan, in Mongolian mythology, is a mighty dragon, inhabiting the great sea, constantly growing, and destined finally to devour the universe.

Lucius, Saint, of Britain, lived in the 2d century. Bede, in his Ecclesiastical History, says that in 154, under the Roman emperors, Marcus Aurelius and Verus, and during the pontificate of Eleutherus, a British king Lucius wrote to the pope, announcing that he wished to become a Christian. Eleutherus favorably received the communication, and sent priests to instruct the Britons in the Christian faith. A similar account may be found in a number of other traditions. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Lucius, Johann Gottlieb, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 3, 1665, at Dresden. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1687 bachelor of theology, in 1698 licentiate, in 1708 doctor, and in 1712 superintendent at Pirna. Lucius died April 27, 1722. He wrote, De Lege Æterna:—Vindicia Dissertationis Carpovianæ de Descensu Christi ad Inferos:—De Eternitate Dei:—De Concrificatione Fidelium cum Christo ex Hos. vi, 2:—De Cohabitatione et Conglorificatione Fidelium cum Christo ex Joh. xvii, 24. Ludger, Saint, a German prelate, was born in Friesland. In his early youth he studied under the discipline of St. Gregory, who governed the school as well as the Church of Utrecht. In 802 he is noticed at Rome, and next at Monte Cassino, where he stayed two years: finally returning to the barbarians, he preached the gospel to the Saxons and the Frieslanders, where, about the same period, he became chief of the Church of Münster. He died March 26, 809, leaving a single work, The Life of St. Gregory, Abbot of Utrecht (published in the Acta Sanctorum). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ludi Funèbres (funeral games) were celebrated at the funeral pyre of distinguished persons among the ancient Greeks and Romans. They were private entertainments, given by survivors in honor of their deceased friends, and were sometimes continued for two or three days.

Ludi Martiales (martial games) were celebrated every year among the ancient Romans in the circus, Aug. 1, in honor of Mars.

Ludki (Polish Ludschki) were conceived by the Wends to be earth-spirits. At night they have feasts; they come into houses by way of subterranean passages, do not allow themselves to be disturbed, and avenge every provocation by a knavish trick. German superstitions also admit of such ghost-like beings.

Ludlow, GABRIEL, D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born at Acquackanonck, N. J., April 23, 1797. He graduated from Union College in 1817, from New Brunswick Theological Seminary in 1820, and was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick probably the same year. He was stated supply at Albany for six months thereafter, and at Neshanic, Somerset Co., N. J., from 1821 until his death, Feb. 19, 1878. He was genial and sympathetic, strong in thought, as well as independent. He published several sermons. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 358.

Ludovici, CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Landshut, Silesia, in 1663. He studied at Breslau and Leipsic, commenced his academical career in 1687, was professor of Oriental languages in 1699, doctor of theology in 1724, and died at Leipsic, Jan. 15, 1732. He wrote, Isagogæ in Accentuationem Hebraicam:—Hebraismus, Chaldaismus, Targumico-Talmudico-Rabbinicus et Syriasmus ad Harmoniam et Compendium Redacti:—Diss. V in Rabbi Levi ben Gerson Commentarium Rabbinicum in Hiobum:—Schediasma

Ludwig, EDMUND A., a German Reformed minister, was born in Switzerland. He received a liberal education, and obtained the degree of doctor of philosophy from a European university. After coming to America he became professor of languages in Washington College, Lexington, Va. Subsequently he went North, engaging as editor and teacher for some years. In 1868 he was licensed to preach, but failing to secure a call, spent the remainder of his life at Erie, Pa., in teaching and as organist. He died in 1880. He was a proficient scholar and devoted Christian. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 381.

Luigi de Gonzaga, an Italian saint, was born March 9, 1568, at Castiglione, being the son of Ferdinand of Gonzaga, marquis of Castiglione. After being educated at the court of Francis de Medicis, he went to Spain with his father, where Philip II gave him as a page to prince James. In 1585, leaving his worldly goods to his brother Rodolph, he entered upon the novitiate of the Jesuits at Rome. He died June 20, 1591, and was buried in the Church of the Annunciation, but some time later his body was transferred to a chapel which had been built under his invocation by the marquis Scipio Lancellotti. He was beatified in 1621 by Gregory XV, and canonized in 1726 by Benedict XIII. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Luini (or Lovini), BERNARDINO, an eminent Italian painter, was probably born at Luino, a small town in the Milanese province, on the Lago Maggiore, in 1480, and is generally considered to have been a pupil of Leonardo da Vinci. His two pictures of Mary Magdalene and St. John Embracing the Lamb, in the Ambrosian Gallery at Milan, are excellent works. He was no less distinguished for his frescos, of which the most celebrated is Christ Crowned with Thorns, in the same gallery. He died in 1530. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lukasiewicz, JOSEPH VON, a Polish historian, was born Nov. 30, 1797, at Kromplewo, near Posen, and died Feb. 18, 1872. His works having been translated into German, we give the German titles: Historische Nachricht über die Dissidenten in der Stadt Posen im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert (Posen, 1832; German by Dalitzki, Darmstadt, 1843); — Ueber die Kirchen der böhmischen Brüder im ehemaligen Grosspolen (Posen, 1835; German by Fischer, Grätz, 1877); — Geschichte der Kirchen des helvetischen Bekenntnisses in Litauen (1842, 2 vols.; German, Leipsic, 1850); — Geschichte des helvetischen Bekenntnisses in Kleinpolen (1853); — Geschichte aller katholischen Kirchen in der ehemaligen posen'schen Diözese (1858-63, 3 vols.). Luke, an Irish prelate, was dean of St. Martin le Grand, London, and treasurer of the king's wardrobe. He was elected to the see of Dublin, and obtained the royal confirmation, Dec. 13, 1228. His election was set aside at Rome as not being canonical, and he was re-elected, but not confirmed by the pope until 1230. About 1237 he improved the buildings of Christ's Church, and endowed that of St. John, without the New Gate, with two burgages and six acres of land in St. Kevin's parish. In 1240 he granted to the vicars serving mass at the altar of the Blessed Virgin, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, a certain portion of the revenues of the Church of Alderg. In 1247 archbishop Luke made an act for the purpose of enforcing the residence of the prebendaries of St. Patrick's Cathedral. In the following year he made the Church of Larabrien a prebend of the same cathedral. He died in December, 1255. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 90.

Lumpkin, JOHN, a distinguished Baptist minister of Georgia, was born in Pittsylvania County, Va., Nov. 4, 1785, but went, when a child, to Georgia, and was reared in Oglethorpe County, where he spent his whole life. Socially, his relations were of a high character. One of his brothers, Wilson Lumpkin, was governor of the state three years, and another brother, Joseph Henry, chief-justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia. His ordination took place in 1808, and his ministry was exercised in different parts of the county in which he lived. Three new churches were formed during his life, through his personal efforts. He died, greatly lamented, Aug. 1, 1839. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 724. (J. C. S.)

Lund, JOHANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 11, 1638, at Flensburg. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1672 deacon at Tondern, Schleswig, and died Sept. 13, 1686. He is the author of Beschreibung des Levitischen Gottesdienstes, which was published by his son under the title, Jüdische Heilighümer. An edition, with notes, was published by Joh. Christ. Wolf (Hamburg, 1738). See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 137. (B. P.)

Lundy, FRANCIS J., D.C.L., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of New York, became assistant minister of St. Paul's Church, Newburgh, in 1867, and died April 7, 1868, aged fifty-three years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1869, p. 109.

Lupercalia, a noted Roman festival, was celebrated annually on Feb. 15, in honor of Lupercus, the god of fertility, or, as is alleged by many, in honor of Pan. Plutarch calls it the feast of wolves, and declares it to have been of a lustral or ceremonially purifying character. Whatever may have been its origin, it was in some way connected with the legend that Romulus and Remus were suckled by a she-wolf, and accordingly the rites of the Lupercalia were observed in the Lupercal, the place where this nursing was supposed to have occurred. On the appointed day the Luperci (q. v.) assembled and offered sacrifices of goats and young dogs. A peculiar ceremony then followed. Two youths of high rank were led forward to the priests, who, having dipped a sword in the blood of one of the victims which had been sacrificed, touched their foreheads with it; after which some of the other priests came forward and wiped off the blood with a piece of woollen cloth which had been dipped in milk. The youths now burst into a fit of laughter, and forthwith the general merriment which characterized this festival began. The priests having feasted themselves, and indulged freely in wine, covered their bodies over with the skins of the goats which they had sacrificed. Thus fantastically dressed they ran up and down the streets, brandishing thongs of goat-skin leather, with which they struck all they met, particularly the women, who hailed the infliction of the sacred lash as a species of ceremonial lustration. This festival was long observed in commemoration of the founding of Rome, but having been neglected in the time of Julius Cæsar, it was revived by Augustus, and continued to be celebrated until the reign of the emperor Anastasius.

Luperci, the most ancient order of priests among the Romans. They were sacred to Pan, the god of the country, and particularly of shepherds, whose flocks he guarded. Plutarch derives the name from lupa, a she-wolf, and traces their origin to the fabulous she-wolf which suckled Romulus and Remus. They formed originally a college, consisting of two classes: the Fabii, or Fabiani, and the Quinctilii, or Quinctiliani. Julius Cæsar instituted a third class, under the name of Julii or Juliani. At first the Luperci were taken from the higher classes of society, but in course of time the whole order fell into disrepute.

Lupold or BEBENBURG (or EGLOFSTEIN), a learned German prelate, after having studied jurisprudence at Bologna, under the direction of John Andreas, became canon successively at Mayence, at Würzburg, and at Bamberg, of which place he had been elected bishop in 1852. He died July 20, 1363, leaving, De Zelo Veterum Principum Germanorum in Religionem (Basle, 1497).—De Juribus et Translatio Imperii (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Lupus (originally Wolf), CHRISTIAN, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born June 12, 1612, at Ypern. He joined the order of the Augustinians, was in 1658 doctor of theology and professor primarius at Louvain, and died July 10, 1681. He wrote, Diss. de Meletii et Arii Personis, Moribus Atque Erroribus.—De Symbolo Apostolico et Nicæno.—De Synodo Nicæna.—De Concilio Sardiceni.—De Concilio Constantinopolitano.—De Synodo Ephesina.—De Latrociniis Ephesino.—De Synodo Sertæ.—De Synodo Trullana.—Scholæ et Notæ in Canones et Decreta Synodorum Generalium et Provinciarum (5 vols.). After his death was published from his manuscript, Summum Romanæ Apostolicæ Sedis Privilegium Quoad Evocationes et Appellationes (Venice, 1729). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 659, 664, 913, 920. (B. P.)

Luther's (Two) Catechisms. By way of supplement to the article Luther (q. v.), we add that both these catechisms, the larger one in the form of a continuous exposition, and the smaller one arranged in questions and answers, appeared in 1529, although the preparatory work dates back to the very beginning of Luther's reformatory activity. In 1518 Johann Schneider collected and published the various expositions of the Lord's Prayer which Luther had given in his sermons and lectures. This induced Luther to publish his exposition in an authentic form. In the same year he published a Latin exposition of the Ten Commandments, and in 1520 these sporadic efforts came to a preliminary consummation in his Eyn Kurcz form des zehnen Gebot.—Eyn Kurcz form des Glaubens.—Eyn Kurcz form des Vater Unsers. After 1524 Luther's attention was very strongly drawn to the school. His An die Raths herrn aller Stedte deutsches Lands: dass sie christliche Schulen aufrichten und halten sollen caused many evangelical schools to be founded, and the necessity arose for a trustworthy handbook in the elements of true Christianity. This necessity was the more felt by Luther himself, when, in his tour of visitation through Saxony in 1528, he saw how sorely both the ministers and congregations stood in need of such a book, and thus, in 1529, both the larger and smaller catechisms appeared. Luther's catechisms, however, are not the first attempts of the kind. There existed such works by Brenz, Althammer, and Lammer, but Luther's catechisms soon took the lead, and were immediately translated into Latin. The smaller catechism, which soon became an almost symbolical book in the Lutheran churches, consists of, I. The Ten Commandments; II. The Creed; III. The Lord's Prayer; IV. The Sacrament of Baptism; V. The Sacrament of the Altar; to which is added, in the editions since 1564, a sixth part, Confession and Absolution, or the Power of the Keys. Considering the smaller catechism as a whole, it is indeed the ripe fruit of many exertions, the full expression after many trials. Wherever Lutherans are found, this catechism too is used. See Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Luther's Hymns. It was a saying among the Roman Catholics in the time of Luther, that "by his songs he has done more harm to the Romanists than by his sermons." And such is the fact. "For," says Mr. Coleridge, "Luther did as much for the Reformation by his hymns as by his translation of the Bible. In Germany the hymns are known by heart by every peasant; they advise, they argue, from the hymns, and every soul in the Church praises God, like a Christian, with words which are natural and yet sacred to his mind." Luther was intensely fond of both music and poetry, and his poetical talent we best perceive in his hymns. Altogether he wrote about thirty-six hymns, which may be divided as follows: (a) Translations of Latin hymns; (b) Amplifications of German hymns from the Latin; (c) Correction and revision of German hymns; (d) Hymns based upon Latin psalms; (e) Hymns based upon passages of the Bible; (f) Original hymns. Spangenberg, in his preface to the Cithara Lutheri, in 1545, speaks thus of Luther's hymns, "One must certainly let this be true and remain true, that, among all Meister-singers, from the days of the apostles until now, Luther is, and always will be, the best and most accomplished; in whose hymns and songs one does not find a vain or needless word. All flows and falls in the sweetest and neatest manner, full of spirit and doctrine, so that his every word gives outright a sermon of its own, or, at least, a singular reminiscence. There is nothing forced, nothing foisted in or patched up, nothing fragmentary. The rhymes are easy and good, the words choice and proper, the meaning clear and intelligible, the melodies lovely and hearty, and in summa all is so rare and majestic, so full of pith and power, so cheering and comforting, that, in sooth, you will not find his equal, much less his master." The most famous of Luther's hymns is the Reformation hymn, Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott, which has been translated into very many languages. A collection of the translations of this hymn in nineteen languages has been published by B. Pick (Rochester, 1880); an enlarged edition, comprising twenty-one languages (28 English; 2 Dutch; 1 Danish; 1 Swedish; 5 Latin; 3 French; 1 Spanish; 1 Russian; 1 Polish; 1 Bohemian; 1 Wendish; 1 Lettish; 1 Lithuanian; 1 Finnish; 1 Estonian; 1 Hebrew; 1 Accra; 1 Tshi; 1 Zulu; 1 Hungarian; 1 Italian), was published by the same author in 1883. But this is not the only hymn which has been translated into English. In fact, all his hymns are translated, as may be seen from Pick's Luther as a Hymnist (Philadelphia, 1875). An edition giving the German text, with the English translation and notes, was published by Scribner's Sons (New York, 1883). (B. P.)

Lutherans, SEPARATE. When, in 1817, the union between the Lutheran and the Reformed churches was established in Prussia, the protest of J. G. Scheibel, professor of theology at Breslau, found much sympathy among the Lutherans. For several years, however, the movement was confined within the boundaries of simple literary polemics, especially between Scheibel and David Schultz, also professor at Breslau. But when the breaking of the bread was introduced in the administration of the Lord's Supper by a cabinet order of 1830, Scheibel refused to obey, and asked permission to continue administering the Lord's Supper after the old Wittenberg agenda. The permission was not granted, and Scheibel was suspended. Soon he saw himself at the head of about two or three hundred families, who left the State Church and organized themselves into a new Church. They petitioned the minister of public worship to be acknowledged as a Church organization, but this he refused to do. The many vexations which Scheibel had to undergo induced him to leave the country. In the meantime the party had progressed very rapidly under the leadership of professor Hnaschke. A synod was convened at Breslau in the year 1834, and it was declared that nothing but complete separation from the State Church, and the formation of an independent organization could satisfy the Lutheran conscience. Persecutions then began. Several ministers were kept in prison for many years. A number of well-to-do laymen were reduced to poverty by money fines. Not a few emigrated to America, among others, Grabau (q. v.) and Von Rohr, who formed the so-called Buffalo Synod. With the succession of Friedrich Wilhelm IV, in 1840, a change took place, and July 23, 1845, the concession for the foundation of a free Church was given, and in 1850 the Church numbered fifty pastors and about fifty thousand members. Similar movements took place also outside of Prussia, in Saxony, Hesse, and Baden. Perhaps no separation from the State Church made a deeper impression than that of Theodor Harms (q. v.) at Hermansburg, Hanover. The reason for his separation was neither dogmatical nor constitutional, but a few changes which were introduced by the government in the marriage formularies. Harms refused to accept these changes, and was suspended, Jan. 22, 1878. He immediately formed an independent society, which soon absorbed the majority of the old congregation. Meanwhile the relation between the Separate Lutherans and the State Church Lutherans was often very unpleasant, and bitter controversies arose. Finally, dissensions broke out among the Separate Lutherans themselves, and a party headed by pastor Dietrich, of Jabel, organized the so-called Immanuel Synod in opposition to the party headed by Huschke of Breslau. This was in 1862. A similar split was caused in Saxony by the Missouri Synod. This synod was organized by a certain Stefan, who had emigrated in 1840 to America. Stefan, who was deposed of his office on account of gross immorality, was succeeded by the still living professor Walther of St. Louis, Mo. Some of the Missourians had returned to Saxony, and formed at Dresden a Lutheranverein, which soon occupied a prominent position, under the leadership of pastor Ruhland. The latter soon made war against the Immanuel Synod as being un-Lutheran, and so likewise against the Separate Lutherans of Breslau. The Lutheran churches of the State he condemned altogether, and finally a split was caused among the Missourians themselves. The Separate Lutherans of Germany are now against each other. See Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Lütken, Franz Julius, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 21, 1650. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1676 rector of Brandenburg, in 1679 deacon at Magdeburg, in 1684 pastor primarius and provost at Stargard, Pomerania, in 1704 court-preacher and professor of theology at Copenhagen, and died Aug. 12, 1712. He wrote, Collegium Biblicum:—Commentarius in Epistolam ad Colossenses et Titum:—Dissertat. de Ideis in Mente Divina:—De Messia Davidis Filio:—De Zohar Antiquo Judeorum Monumento, etc. See Jocher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. Lütolf, Adolf, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born in 1824. He studied under Hirscher and Döllinger, and after having spent some years at St. Gall, Lucerne, and Solothurn, as teacher and as priest, was called, in 1868, to Lucerne as professor of Church history and canon of St. Leonhard. He died April 8, 1879, leaving Forschungen und Quellen zur Kirchengeschichte der Schweiz (Lucerne, 1871). (B. P.)

Lutterbeck, Johann Anton Bernhard, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Münster. In 1842 he was professor of Catholic theology at Giessen, but after the determination of bishop Ketteler, in 1851, to ordain no candidate who had pursued his theological studies at Giessen, Lutterbeck became a member of the philosophical faculty. After the Vatican Council he joined the Old Catholics, and died Dec. 30, 1882. He is the author of, Hermenien aus dem Gebiete der religiösen Spekulation (2d ed. Mayence, 1851):—Der neutestamentliche Lehrbegriff (1852, 2 vols.):—Die Clemensinen und ihr Verhältniss zum Unfehlbarkeitsdogma (1872):—Leopold Schmid über die religiöse Aufgabe der Deutschen (1875). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 842 sq. (B. P.)

Luxembourg, Baudoin de, a Franco-German prelate, brother of emperor Henry VII, was born in 1285. While quite young he lost his father, Henry IV, count of Luxembourg, and was educated with care by his mother, Beatrice of Avesnes, at the University of Paris, where he studied belles-lettres, philosophy, theology, and jurisprudence. He was consecrated archbishop of Treves in March, 1308, at Poitiers. In April, 1310, he assembled a provincial council at Treves. From this time Baudoin is no more noticed, except in military expeditions against rebellious chieftains. He died Jan. 21, 1354. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Luxembourg, Louis de, a French prelate, was proposed in 1414 for the bishopric of Therouanne. He declared himself for the English party, was made chancellor by Henry VI, in 1425, and attended in 1431 at the crowning of that prince as the king of France, at St. Denis. During several political excitements, and particularly during the time of an insurrection against the English, in April, 1436, this prelate took great interest in the cause of the English in France, thus gathering upon himself the hatred and displeasure of the French. He finally had to take refuge in the Bastille, and on its surrender retreated to Rouen, where he was made archbishop, and would have received the cardinal's hat, but would only accept it on condition of being nominated by the king of England. This prince gave him, some time afterwards, the bishopric of Ely, when he was obliged to take refuge in England. He died at Hartford, England, Sept. 18, 1443. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Luxembourg, Philippe de, a French cardinal, was born in 1445. He was the son of Thibault de Luxembourg, who, after having lost his wife, was received into orders, and became bishop of Mans. The first church which Philippe held in charge was that of Le Mans, which he obtained in 1477, after the death of his father. In 1483 he presided over Tours, and Feb. 8, 1496, was nominated as bishop of Therouanne, but was not appointed till Nov. 12, 1498. In 1516, after Philippe had occupied several more or less important positions in France, he became legate of the pope in that country. He was one of the richest prelates of the kingdom. He founded the College of Mans at Paris, and accomplished also several very extensive missions by order of the king, for which he had no regular allocations. He died at Le Mans, June 2, 1519. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Luxembourg, Pierre de, a French prelate, was born at the castle of Ligny-sur-Ornain, July 20, 1369. He began to study theology at Paris in 1377. While still a child, he was made canon of Paris in 1379, and of Cambrai in 1382. At the age of fourteen he was provided with the bishopric of Metz by Clement VII. At sixteen the same pontiff appointed him cardinal-deacon at Avignon. He died July 2, 1387, and was buried at the cemetery of St. Michael, at Avignon. There are a few books which have been erroneously attributed to him, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Luynes, Paul d'Albert de, a French prelate, was born at Versailles, Jan. 5, 1703. He had at first the name of count of Montfort, and was intended for the military career, but, renouncing it, entered a seminary, was received into orders, appointed abbot of Cerisy in 1727, and bishop of Bayeux in 1729. He held several synods, and organized missions, preaching himself. He became archbishop of Sens, Aug. 18, 1753. De Luynes assisted at the conclaves of 1758, 1769, and 1774. As an abbot of Corbie, he was appointed commander of the order of St. Esprit in 1759. He adhered to the acts of the assembly of the clergy of 1765. He died at Paris, Jan. 21, 1788, leaving several episcopal letters. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Luz (Judg. i, 26), Lieut. Conder suggests (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, i, 95), may be the present Khurbet el-Lusweiziyeh, a ruined site four and a half miles north-west of Banias, and consisting of basaltic stones scattered and in rough walls" (ibid. p. 120).

Luzzatto, Philoxene, a Jewish Orientalist, was born at Trieste, July 10, 1829. At a very early age he mastered different languages, and in 1849 published Le Samscritisme de la Langue Assyrienne. In 1850 he wrote, Études sur les Inscriptions Assyriennes de Persépolis, Hamadan, Van et Khorsabad:—Notice sur

Present Appearance of Lydda. (From Thomson's Southern Palestine and Jerusalem.)

Abou-Jousouf Hasdaï Ibn-Shaprouit (1852). While on his travels he was taken sick, but at length arrived at Padua, and died Jan. 25, 1854. The Mémoire sur les Juifs d'Abyssinie ou Fulaschas, was published after his death in the Archives Israélites of Paris. (B. P.)

Lyceæ, a festival among the Arcadians, celebrated in honor of Zeus Lyceus. It is said to have been instituted by Lycaon, the son of Pelasgus, who sacrificed a child on the occasion, and sprinkled the altar with its blood. Plutarch says that the Lycea was celebrated in a manner similar to the Roman Lupercalia.

Lydda. Ludd, the modern representative of this place, is briefly described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 252), and its traditional Church of St. George in detail (ibid. p. 267).

Lyell, THOMAS, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Virginia in 1775. While quite a young man he became a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church; and during that time was one of the chaplains to Congress. In 1804 he was ordained deacon in the Protestant Episcopal Communion, and became rector of Christ Church, New York city, which position he occupied until his death, March 5, 1848. Dr. Lyell was elected secretary of the convention of the diocese of New York in 1811, which office he continued to hold annually until he declined re-election in 1816. Chosen a deputy to the General Convention in 1818, he was elected successively to the position during twenty-six years. He was a powerful extempore speaker, and a preacher of more than ordinary ability. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1848, p. 302.

Lynch, PATRICK NIESEN, D.D., a Roman Catholic prelate and scholar, was born at Clones, County Monaghan, Ireland, March 10, 1817. In 1819 his parents came to America, and settled at Cheraw, S. C. At that time there was but one priest in the state, Dr. Gallagher, though Dr. England arrived next year to be the first bishop of Charleston, and opened St. John the Baptist's Seminary, at which Patrick Lynch was one of the earliest pupils. He was sent to the College of the Propaganda, Rome, where he was one of its most brilliant students, and was ordained priest and graduated doctor of divinity. In 1840 he returned to Charleston, and became assistant pastor of the cathedral, of St. Mary's Church, principal of the Collegiate Institute, and vicar-general. On the death of bishop Reynolds, in 1855, Lynch became administrator, and on March 14, 1858, he was consecrated bishop of Charleston. The civil war soon came, and with it the destruction of his cathedral, house, and other Church property in Charleston and throughout the state. The rest of his life was a constant toil with debt, which was too much for his naturally robust constitution and vigorous mind, and brought him prematurely to his end. He died in Charleston, Feb. 26, 1882. Bishop Lynch was noted for his quiet benevolence and literary activity. In 1848 he took charge of a hospital during the yellow fever, and in 1871, on another outbreak of the disease, was never absent from his post. He was a thorough scholar, and a devoted student of applied science. He was a contributor to magazines, author of letters to the Catholic World on the Vatican Council, articles on the Flood of St. Januarius, in the same, now published anonymously in book form, contributed to the American Catholic Quarterly Review, and edited and revised Deharbe's Series of Catechisms. He was pleasant and affable in social intercourse, and a fine orator. See (N. Y.) Catholic Annual, 1883, p. 57.

Lynd, SAMUEL W., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 23, 1796. He was baptized by Rev. Dr. William Staughton in 1820; was well educated, and in 1824 was called to the pastorate of a church in Philadelphia, from which he was soon laid aside by severe illness. For a time, he, with his wife, conducted a female institution in Baltimore. In 1831 he began his labors as pastor of the Sixth Street Church, Cincinnati, O., his ministry being eminently successful. He remained here until 1845, when he removed to St. Louis, Mo., and became pastor of the Second Church in that city. About 1848 he was elected president of the theological institute in Covington, Ky., and remained in this position until 1854, when he took up his residence on a farm near Chicago. His other pastorates were at Lockport, Ill., the North Church, Chicago, and the Mt. Auburn Church, Cincinnati, O. He died at Lockport, Ill., June 17, 1876. See Minutes of Ill. Anniversaries, 1876, p. 14. (J. C. S.)

Lyng, GEORG WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian of Norway, was born in 1827. In 1869 he was professor at Christiania, and died May 19, 1884. Lyng is the author of Hedenskubets Leonetölöb, i. e. a history of heathenism (1866). (B. P.)

Lyngwe, in Norse mythology, is an island in the sea Amtswartner, where the wolf Fenris is held by the chain Gleipner.

Lyon, George Armstrong, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Baltimore, Md., March 1, 1806. He graduated from Dickinson College, Pa., in 1824; spent one year in Princeton Theological Seminary, and was ordained by the Erie Presbytery, Sept. 9, 1829, pastor of the First Church, Erie, Pa., which office he held until his death, at Avon, N. Y., March 24, 1871. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 54.

Lyon, James Adair, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Jonesborough, Tenn., April 19, 1814. He graduated from Washington College in 1832, and afterwards from Princeton Theological Seminary; was ordained as an evangelist by the Holston Presbytery, and after serving, for five years, as a stated supply, the churches of Rogersville and New Providence, became pastor of the Columbus Church, Miss., where he remained six years. He then spent a year in foreign travel, and after his return was installed pastor of the Westminster Church, St. Louis, Mo. In 1850 he established a select high-school for young ladies there, which he taught three years, and returned to his old charge at Columbus. In 1870 he was elected professor of mental and moral science in the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, which position he held for ten years, when failing health compelled him to resign. As a writer, he contributed largely to the Southern Quarterly Review. He was moderator of the General Assembly, and repeatedly elected to important positions in connection with literary and theological institutions, among them to the presidency of Washington College, and the chair of didactic theology in Danville Seminary, Ky. He died at Holly Springs, Miss., May 15, 1882. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 31. (W. P. S.)

Lyser, a name common to a number of eminent Lutheran theologians of Germany, of whom we mention:

1. CHRISTIAN, doctor of theology, pastor and superintendent at Sangerhausen, who died Oct. 5, 1671, is the author of Dissensus Lutherorum et Janenistarum.

2. FRIEDRICH, who died in 1645, doctor of theology, is the author of Disp. Inauguralis de Dicto Apostolico Rom. iv, 22, 23.

3. FRIEDRICH WILHELM, son of Polycarp III, was born at Leipsic, Sept. 4, 1622. He studied at different universities, was in 1650 Saturday-preacher at Leipsic, in 1651 deacon at Halle, in 1662 superintendent at Langensalza, in 1664 cathedral-preacher at Magdeburg, and died Aug. 25, 1691.

4. JOHANNES, brother of Friedrich Wilhelm, was born Sept. 30, 1631. In 1664 he was inspector and pastor at Pforte. Being an advocate of polygamy, he was dismissed. He roamed about through Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Italy, and France. In the latter country he died, in 1684.

5. POLYCARP I (q. v.).

6. POLYCARP II, son of Polycarp I, was born Nov. 20, 1586, at Wittenberg, where he was also promoted as doctor of theology. He wrote, Centuria Quaestionum Theologicarum de Articulis Christianae Concordiae:—An Syncretismus in Rebus Fidei cum Calvinianis coli Possit, et in Politica Conseratione:—Comment. in Augustanam Confessionem et Formulam Concordiae:—Analysis Scholastica et Theologica in Epistolam ad Galatas:—Dissert. de Sacramentis. Lyser died Jan. 15, 1633.

7. POLYCARP III, was born at Halle, July 1, 1656. He studied at Jena and Leipsic, and commenced his academical career at the latter place in 1682. In 1685 he was pastor at Magdeburg, in 1687 superintendent, in 1690 doctor of theology, in 1695 general superintendent, and died Oct. 11, 1725.

8. WILHELM, born at Dresden, Oct. 26, 1592, studied at different universities, and died at Wittenberg, Feb. 8, 1649, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, Trifolium Verae Religionis Veteris Testamenti Adamiticae, Abrahamiticae et Israeliticae:—Summarium Locorum Theologicorum:—Systema Thetico-Ezegeticum:—Disquisitio de Praedestinatione:—Exercitationes 21 in Evangelium Joannis:—Diss. de Genealogia Christi ad Matth. i, 1-16. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Lyalius, (JOHANN HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born June 29, 1704, at Königsberg, Prussia. He studied at Halle, was in 1726 professor of Oriental languages at his native place, in 1730 doctor of theology, and died May 29, 1745. He wrote, Dissert. II de Historia et Usu Linguae Syriacae:—De Silentio Sacrae Scripturae:—De Commodis Christi Jugo ad Matth. xi, 30:—De Christo Homine ἀναπαρίτης ex 1 John iii, 5:—De Angelis Nativitatis Christi Praecone. Maarath. For this site Mr. Tyrwhitt Drake proposes (Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," April, 1874, p. 76) the Mons Mardas where St. Euthymius found ruins (Acta Sanctorum, ii, 306), now Khirbet Mird, near Mar Saba, on a round, isolated hill, containing the remains of an aqueduct, wells, and cisterns (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 212); but Lieut. Conder suggests (Quar. Statement, Jan. 1875, p. 13) an ancient site near Beit Ainüm, where a valley has the corresponding Arabic name, Wady el-Moghair. This latter ruin is laid down on the Ordnance Map, two miles north-east of Hebron, without any name attached. Later, however, Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 338) Brit Ummir, six miles north of Hebron, probably the Betumir of Eusebius (Onomast. s. v. Baalthamar). It is "a small but conspicuous village, standing on the watershed, and visible from some distance on the north. An ancient road passes through it. Half a mile north-east is a good spring, Ain Kufin. The mosque has a small tower to it. The surrounding neighborhood is covered with brushwood" (Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, iii, 303).

Mab, in poetic art, is queen of the fairies (q. v.).

Macarians. See MACARIUS EGYPTUS, and MACARIUS OF ALEXANDRIA.

Macarites is the name of a Jewish sect, whose founder is believed to have been Benjamin Nahavendi (q. v.), a Karaite, who flourished about the opening of the 9th century. Their most peculiar doctrine was that God is too elevated to reveal himself directly to man, and that revelation was therefore made by messenger—an angel, a vice-god. If the Bible speaks of God's manifestation to man, it refers, they held, to the manifestation of the divine being in the person of his messenger, who was the first being God created. This angel was the creator of the world, not God himself. (Quite like the evolution theory in our day, advocated by Mivart, who likewise holds that God was only indirectly the creator of the world.) In this and many other respects the Macarites much resemble the Mohammedan sect of Motizalites. See Filast, Gesch. d. Karäerthums, i, 26 sq.; Rule, Karaites, p. 105, 109; Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, v, 230 sq., 518 sq.

Macassar (and Bugia) Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. The Bugis and the Macassar dialects are the most prevalent of those spoken among the various native states comprised in the large island of Celebes. They both resemble the Malayan; the Bugis being the most cultured of the two, and possessing a separate alphabet. A translation in each of these dialects was begun by Dr. Leyden about the year 1810, but lived only to complete the version of the gospel of Mark, which has never been printed. In 1849 Dr. Matthes was sent out by the Netherlands Society to Celebes to study these languages, but the result has not transpired. See Bible of Every Land, p. 374.

Macbeth, a Scotch prelate, was probably bishop of Ross about 1126. He died in 1128. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 181.

Macdonald, JAMES MADISON, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Limerick, Me., May 22, 1812. In 1828 he entered Bowdoin College, but at the end of two years removed to Union College, Schenectady, entered the junior class, and was graduated with high honor in 1832. He then spent a year in the theological seminary at Bangor, Me., and thence to Yale Divinity School, graduating in 1835. He was licensed to preach, Aug. 6, 1834, and ordained pastor of the Third Congregational Church of Berlin, Conn., known as the parish of Worthington, April 1, 1835. In 1837 he accepted a call to the recently formed Second Congregational Church in New London; in 1841 to the Presbyterian Church at Jamaica, L. I.; in 1850 to the Fifteenth Street Church in New York city; in 1853 he was installed as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Princeton, N. J., and here he continued over twenty-two years. He died April 19, 1876. Dr. Macdonald was a man of untiring industry. In a high degree his ministrations were able, varied, and evangelical. As a preacher he was solid, dignified, instructive, earnest, and tender. He published a number of his sermons at various times, also about six volumes, among which the best known is My Father's House; or, The Heaven of the Bible. His greatest and most valuable work appeared since his decease, The Life and Writings of St. John. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1877, p. 9.

MacCaghwell (Lat. Cuvelinus), HUGH, an Irish Franciscan of the 17th century, studied at Salamanca, and lectured at Louvain. Urban VIII appointed him archbishop of Armagh and primate of Ireland. He died Sept. 22, 1626, in the fifty-fifth year of his age. He wrote, Scoti Commentaria in Quatuor Libros Sent. (Antwerp, 1620, 3 vols.):—Apologia Apologice Scoti contra Nic. Jansenium (Paris, 1623):—Duo Tractatus pro Tuenda Observantia (ibid. 1622). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Jeiler, in Wetzler u. Welte, Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Macfarlane, JOHN, LL.D., a Scotch Presbyterian minister, was born at Dunfermline, Fifeshire, in 1807. He was licensed to preach in 1830, and the following year was ordained to the pastorate of the Secession congregation of Kincardine-on-Forth. In 1840 he was called to Glasgow, where he remained till 1861, when he removed to London. Here he labored most faithfully and with much success for twelve years. He died Feb. 7, 1875. As a preacher Dr. Macfarlane was powerful, eloquent, and attractive; as a writer he was able and ready. His works are, Jubilee of the World:—Christian Missions to the Heathen (Glasgow, 1842):—Mountains of the Bible (2d ed. 1850; 3d ed. 1856):—The Night Lamp (1850, 1851, 1853):—The Hiding-Place (1852; 3d ed. 1854):—Why Weepst Thou? (1854). ern Makaur, is fully described by Tristram (Land of Moab, p. 271 sq.). The fortress stands on a round hill at the eastern end of a narrow and isolated ridge, on which the inhabited city must have been built. It is very different in character from any other ruins in Moab. Nothing remains but a few courses of stones above the foundations. But the whole building material has been collected by the hand of man into one prodigious mass on the crest of the ridge, where it remains in wild desolation, a monument of the vengeance taken by the Roman legions against the last desperate patriots of the Jewish revolts. The outline of the fortress may still be traced very clearly, and in it two dungeons, one of them deep, and its sides scarcely broken in. One of them must have been the prison-house of the Baptist.

MacHale. See MCHALE.

Machâtus, Saint, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the Isles in 498 and 518. To this saint there are many churches dedicated in Scotland. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 295.

Machir OF TOLEDO, who flourished towards the end of the 14th century, is the author of מכתב רובל, or an eschatology of Judaism, in three parts—the first treats of the sufferings in the Messianic time, of the advent of the Messiah, resurrection, last judgment, and world to come; the second treats of reward and punishment, paradise and hell; the third of the oral law (Rimini, 1526 and often); a Judeo-German translation appeared at Fürth in 1691, and the first part was translated into Latin by Hulsius, Tractatus de Messia (reprinted in his Theologia Judaica, Breda, 1653). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 285; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 190 sq., and his Bibliotheca Judaica Antichristiana, p. 61. (B. P.)

Mack, Martin Joseph, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 17, 1805. In 1832 he was professor of New-Test. exegesis at Tübingen, and in 1839-40 rector magnificus of the university. His publication of Die Einsegnung der gemischten Ehen (Tübingen, 1840) brought him in conflict with the government. He was deposed from his office, and relegated to the Ziegelbach parish in Württemberg. He died Sept. 24, 1885, leaving, Bericht über Strauss' kritische Bearbeitung des Lebens Jesu (Tübingen, 1837):—Commentar über die Pastoralbriefe des Apostels Paulus (2d ed. 1841). See Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 552. (B. P.)

Mack, William, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Flushing, L. I., July 29, 1807. He graduated from Union College, Schenectady, in 1831, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1834. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New York, Feb. 4 of that year; ordained at Rochester, Feb. 5, 1835; and subsequently was pastor at Knoxville and Columbia, Tenn. In 1858 he became a voluntary evangelist, devoting half his time to the Presbytery of Columbia, and the other half beyond its bounds. From the time of the division of the General Assembly, in 1861, he adhered to the southern portion. He was for some time president of Jackson College at Columbia. He died Jan. 10, 1879. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 31.

MacKenzie, Murdoch, a Scotch prelate, was born in 1600, received Episcopal ordination, and went as chaplain to a regiment under Gustavus Adolphus. After his return from Germany he became minister at Contin, next at Inverness, and afterwards at Elgin. He was made bishop of the see of Moray, Jan. 18, 1662. From this he was translated to the see of Orkney in 1677, where he continued until his death, in February, 1688. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 152-228.

MacLaren, John Finley, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Manlius, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Feb. 7, 1803. He graduated from Union College in 1825, studied three winters (1825-28) in Princeton Theological Seminary, was licensed in 1828, and ordained pastor of the Church at Geneva in 1830. He edited the Christian Magazine at that place, afterwards settled at Hagerstown, Md. (1845), and Pittsburgh, Pa. (1846). He was president for a time (1855-58) of the Western University of Pennsylvania. He died at Princeton, March 14, 1883. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 18.

Maclean, a Scotch prelate, was early minister at Morevern, Duikoon, and Eastwood, from which last charge he was advanced to the see of Argyll in 1680. He died there in 1687. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 292.

Maclean, Robert, a Scotch prelate, was probably bishop of the Isles about 1549. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 307.

Macleod, Norman, D.D., a Scotch Presbyterian minister, was born June 3, 1812, at Campbellton, a seaport of Scotland. He was educated at a school in Morven, and at Glasgow University, where he was exceedingly popular. In 1837 he obtained his first ministerial charge, the parish of Loudoun, in Ayrshire, which he served for five years. About this period the disruption of the Scotch Kirk took place, and in the controversy which preceded and followed, Mr. Macleod took an active part. He adhered to the Established Church of Scotland, and in 1843 was appointed to the parish of Dalkeith. In July, 1851, he was inducted minister of the Barony parish, Glasgow, which contained 87,000 souls. At that time he assumed the editorship of Good Words, designed as a popular periodical, with a spirit and aim decidedly Christian. Of his journey to the Holy Land in 1867, he gave a full account in his Narrative. He was also the author of several other popular works. In 1862 he was chosen by the General Assembly to represent the Church in India; and his reception, when he returned, was very warm. He was unanimously elected by the General Assembly to the office of moderator, in 1869. From 1871 his health gradually declined, and he died June 16, 1872. Dr. Macleod was a genial, large-hearted man, whose untiring energy and Christian philanthropy placed him in the first rank of public benefactors. See (Lond.) Christian Observer, December, 1876, p. 907; Memoir, by his brother (Lond. 1876).

MacMahon, Bernard, D.D., a Roman Catholic divine, was born in Ireland in 1816. He studied for the priesthood in France, and about 1842 went to Africa with the first vicar apostolic of Cape Colony, Mgr. Griffith, and he continued until the last to labor among the English-speaking Catholics of the colony. He was soon after made vicar-general, holding that position under bishops Grimley and Leonard, or to his death. He was a hard worker, a close student, and a model priest. Pius I appointed him domestic prelate. He died at Cape Town, Feb. 1, 1882. See (N. Y.) Cath. Annual, 1883, p. 117.

Macnaughton, Donald, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of Dunkeld in 1436, and died on his way to Rome the same year. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 87.

Madhavis, an order of Hindû mendicants, founded by Madho, an ascetic. They travel up and down the country soliciting alms, and playing on stringed instruments.

Madhwacharis, a division of the Vaishnava sect of the Hindûs, founded by Madhwacharya (q. v.). They have their headquarters at Udipi, where their founder erected a temple, and deposited an image of Krishna. Their appearance is thus described: "The ascetic professors of Madhwacharya's school adopt the external appearance of the Dandis, laying aside the Brahmanical cord, carrying a staff and a water-pot, going bare-headed, and wearing a single wrapper stained of an orange color with an ochrey clay; they are usually adopted into the order from their boyhood, and acknowledge no social affinities nor interests. The marks common to them and the lay votaries of the order are the impress of the symbols of Vishnu upon their shoulders and breasts, stamped with a hot iron, and the frontal mark, which consists of two perpendicular lines made with Gopichundana, and joined at the root of the nose like that of the Sri Vaishnavas; but instead of the red line down the centre, the Madhwacharis make a straight black line, with the charcoal from incense offered to Narayana, terminating in a round mark made with turmeric."

Madmannah. For this site Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 338) Um Deimeh, twelve miles north-east of Beersheba, consisting of "heaps of stones, foundations, and two or three caves" (Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, iii, 399); but the name has little resemblance.

Madon is perhaps the modern ruin Khurbet Madin (Conder, Tent Work, ii, 338), a quarter of a mile south of Hattin, near Lake Tiberias, consisting of "heaps of ruins, some well-dressed stones" (Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, i, 403).

Madrasses are colleges in Mohammedan countries, for the training of priests who are to officiate in the mosques.

Madrazo, José Madrazo y Aguda, a Spanish painter, was born at Santander, April 22, 1781. He studied at the Academy of Madrid, under David in Paris, and in Rome. Returning to the former city in 1818, he became director of the Academy, and afterwards of the museum. He died there, May 8, 1859. Among his principal paintings are Jesus in the House of Ananias; The Sacred Heart of Jesus; and The Seizure of Breda.

a temporary structure, the roof having several breaks or compartments, gradually decreasing in size as they approach the top, in the form of a pagoda, or of a pyramid composed of several platforms. There is one of these structures in the precincts of nearly all the wiharus (q. v.). In the centre of the interior area is an elevated platform for the convenience of the priests, and the people sit around it upon mats spread on the ground. The platform is sometimes occupied by several priests at the same time, one of whom reads a portion of the sacred books, in a tone between singing and reading. The Maduwa is also used for other purposes. In it there is a labyrinth made of withs ornamented with the coconut leaf; and the people amuse themselves by finding their way through its intricate mazes. In some instances lines are drawn upon the ground in an open space, and these lines are regarded as the limits of the regions assigned to particular dæmons. Dancers approach these lines and defy the dæmons, receiving the applause of the people for their boldness.

Magaw, SAMUEL, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1757. Having received ordination, he became a missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and served as such in Dover and Duck Creek, Del. In 1779 he was invited to St. Paul's Church, Philadelphia, but did not accept the rectorship until January, 1781. In 1786 the Rev. Joseph Pilmore became his assistant, but Dr. Magaw continued rector until 1804. He was vice-provost of the University of Pennsylvania from 1782 to 1791. About 1800 he aided in founding the Philadelphia Academy, which had a brief existence. He was secretary of several of the early conventions of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Pennsylvania. His death occurred in Philadelphia, Dec. 1, 1812. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 246.

Magraw, JAMES, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Bart Township, Lancaster Co., Pa., Jan. 1, 1775. He graduated from Franklin College, Lancaster, about 1799. After studying theology, he was licensed, Dec. 16, 1801, by the Presbytery of Middletown; preached as a missionary for a year or two; and was ordained April 4, 1804, pastor of the Church in West Nottingham, Cecil Co., Md. Here he remained till 1810, when a church was formed in Upper West Nottingham, which he also served till 1821. In 1822 he organized a church at Charlestown, of which he was pastor till his death, Oct. 20, 1835. Besides preaching, Dr. Magraw was engaged for many years in teaching. (J. C. S.)

Mailly, FRANÇOIS DE, a French prelate, was born at Paris, March 4, 1658. In 1698 he was appointed archbishop of Arles, and in 1710 he succeeded the famous Le Tellier in the archbishopric of Rheims. Mailly distinguished himself by his ardent zeal for the Roman see. When the bull Unigenitus was promulgated, he forced it upon his clergy. His pastoral epistles were often suppressed by the parliament. Pope Clement XI, in consideration of his great services, made Mailly cardinal without consulting first the court of France, and the latter forbade the archbishop to wear the insignia of his new dignity. But these prohibitory measures were not always carried out, and Louis XV allowed him to wear the cardinal's hat. Mailly died in the abbey of St. Thierry, Sept. 13, 1721. Main, THOMAS, D.D., moderator of the Free Church General Assembly of Scotland, was ordained pastor of the High Church in Edinburgh in 1839, which position he held until his death, May 23, 1881. In 1880 he was a delegate from the Free Church Assembly to the General Council of the Presbyterian Church held in Philadelphia. He possessed fine talents as a preacher, and proved himself a successful pastor.

Maison, JOHANN GEORG, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Neustadt-on-the-Aisch, May 24, 1730. He studied at Erlangen and Halle, and acted for some time as teacher at different schools. Makkedah. "El-Mughâr ('the Cave'), the site which captain Warren proposes for Makkedah, is a remarkable place, and one of the most conspicuous sites in the plain. A promontory of brown sandy rock juts out southwards, and at the end is the village, climbing up the hillside. The huts are of mud, and stand in many cases in front of caves; there are also small excavations on the north-east, and remains of an old Jewish tomb, with Kokim. From the caves the modern name is derived, and it is worthy of notice that this is the only village in the Philistine plain at which we found such caves. The proximity of Gedereth (Katrah) and Naamah (Na'aneh) to El-Mughâr also increases the probability that captain Warren's identification of El-Mughâr with Makkedah is correct, for those places were near Makkedah (Josh. xv, 41)"—(Conder, Tent Work, ii, 174). This position is defended at length by the same writer in the Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Soc." 1875, p. 165. The place is situated nine miles north-east of Ashdod, and is briefly described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, ii, 411, and its antiquities, ibid. p. 427.

of this isle till 1818, when the Rev. Messrs. Jones and Beaven were sent to labor among them by the Church Missionary Society. The translation of the Bible occupied the greater part of the time of the missionaries during eleven years. The New Test. was completed in 1825, and, after having been revised twice, was printed in 1830. Parts of the Old Test. was printed in 1832 and 1835, and about the latter year the whole of the Old Test. was printed at Madagascar. The persecution, well known in history, commenced about this time, and lasted till 1851. The Rev. Messrs. Freeman and Jones (formerly missionaries in Madagascar) had, in anticipation of the day when they might be enabled to resume their labors, employed themselves since their return to England in the complete revision of the Malagasi Scriptures. This revision has been accomplished, and, in the immediate prospect of the island becoming again open to the efforts of the Christian ministry, the British and Foreign Bible Society determined to print an edition of five thousand copies of the Malagasi Bible from the revised MS. This work was accordingly commenced, under the editorial care of the Rev. Mr. Griffiths (formerly a missionary on the island), with the aid of the Rev. T. W. Meller; but, after advancing as far as the completion of the New Test., with the Old Test. as far as the 10th chapter of Judges, it had been deemed advisable to suspend further progress. The revision of the text had advanced as far as the end of Job. This work given up in 1858 was again resumed, and the completion of the unfinished parts of the Old Test., left by the late Rev. Mr. Griffiths, together with a profusion of MS. corrections, very difficult to decipher, was happily brought to an end in 1864, through the able assistance of Mr. Sauerwein and the editorial superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. A revised edition of the Malagasi New Test., with marginal references, was printed at London in 1869, under the care of the Rev. R. G. Hartley, of the London Missionary Society, while the Old Test., under the editorship of the Rev. R. Toy, was published in 1871. For a long time the need of a thorough revision of the entire Bible in the Malagasi had been felt. From the report for 1873 we learn that a joint board, representing all the missions on the island, has been formed for the purpose of securing, as far as possible, a thoroughly accurate and idiomatic standard version of the Bible in the Malagasi tongue. This board has ever since been at work, and from the report for 1885 we learn that the preliminary revision of the Bible was completed Sept. 15, 1884. See Bible of Every Land, p. 386. For linguistic purposes, see Parker, A Concise Grammar of the Malagasy Language (London, 1883). (B. P.)

Malay Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. The Scriptures, either in whole or in part, were translated into Malayan several times. The first translation was made by John Van Hasel, a director of the East India Company, formed in 1602. When he had completed a version of the gospel according to Matthew, he handed over the MS. to Peter de Carpentier, the general of the company, and soon after, in 1612, another version, prepared by Albert Cornelison Ruyt, was delivered to the same individual, in order that the two versions might be compared. Ruyt's was preferred, and he now devoted himself to the completion of the New Test.; but only lived to translate as far as the close of the gospel of Mark. His MSS. were sent to Holland, and, were printed with the Dutch version at Enkhuysen in 1629, and again at Amsterdam in 1638. Van Hasel, far from being discouraged at the preference with which Ruyt's version was regarded, persevered with his translation, and completed a version of the four gospels, of which Luke and John were published at Amsterdam in 1646. Van Hasel also translated the Psalms, in concert with Justus Heurn, who, for fifteen years, presided over the Dutch Church in India. The first portion of this version was printed at Amsterdam in 1648, and the entire Psalter appeared in 1689. Heurn likewise translated the Acts of the Apostles into Malayan, and revised the gospels of Van Hasel and Ruyt, according to the Greek, or rather, perhaps, conformed them to the Low or Belgic version of 1637. This revision, together with the Acts, and the Dutch version in the margin, was printed at Amsterdam in 1651. This was reprinted at Oxford in 1677, at the expense of the Hon. Robert Boyle, and under the superintendence of Dr. Hyde, keeper of the Bodleian Library. A second impression of the same work, in every respect similar to the first, was printed at Oxford in 1704, and the copies were sent to the East for distribution. These, and all the editions above mentioned, were printed in Roman characters. At length, in 1668, the entire New Test. was printed at Amsterdam in Roman letters, translated by Daniel Brower. He lived and died in the East, he also prepared a version of the book of Genesis, which was printed in 1662, and again in 1687, at Amsterdam. A standard Malay version of the Old and New Test. Scriptures was commenced by Dr. M. Leidekker, a Dutch minister of Batavia in 1685. He translated most of the books of the Old Test. twice; and in the New Test. had advanced as far as the 6th verse of the 6th chapter of the epistle to the Ephesians, when he was called away in 1701. After his decease Petrus Van der Vorm was appointed to complete the work, which he did before the close of the year. In 1722 the Dutch government appointed four ministers to examine and correct the work. Besides Van der Vorm, there were Arnaldus Brandts, Cornelius Ninaher, and George Hendrick Wernly. The work was completed in 1728. Two copies appear to have been made, one in Roman, and the other in Arabic characters. The former was printed at Amsterdam (1731-33), under the care of the Rev. G. H. Wendly and Dr. Serrinus, aided by two Malay chaplains. The latter was published at Batavia in 1758, under the direction of the Dutch governor, Jacob Mossel. In 1813 George Livett, Esq., a resident at Amboyna, addressed the Calcutta Bible Society in behalf of the Amboynese Christians, who were almost destitute of Bibles. The society had three thousand copies of the Malayan New Test. printed at Serampore in 1814, the text being that of 1731. This edition was in Roman characters. But as there were Malayan districts where the Arabic was still in use, the same society determined upon printing two editions of the Scriptures, one in Roman, the other in Arabic letters. The former was completed in 1817, when the entire Bible from the text of 1731-33 left the press; the latter was not published until 1822, the text of 1758 having been carefully revised and corrected for that purpose by the Rev. Mr. Hutchings and major McInnes. While these editions were published further supplies of the Malayan Scriptures were prepared in London, at the earnest request of the Auxiliary Bible Society at Amboyna. In 1819 the New Test. in the Roman character, from the text of 1733, was printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society, under the care of professor Lee, and in 1822 the entire Bible from the same text was issued. In 1820 the Netherlands Bible Society supplied the Malays with the New Test. which was printed at Haarlem, and in 1824 the whole Bible was published for the Malays by the same society, in an edition of five thousand copies. These editions were printed in Arabic characters from the edition of 1758, under the superintendence of professor Wilmer. In 1822 the same society printed an edition of New Tests, and Bibles in the Roman character from the text of 1733. In 1830 the Calcutta Society printed, at Singapore, an edition of two thousand five hundred copies of Matthew's gospel, in Arabic characters, as the first step towards giving a fresh edition of the entire New Test. This measure was adopted in consequence of the desire manifested among the Western Malays themselves to read the Scriptures—a circumstance never known before, for the Bible had previously been urged upon them rather than freely accepted, and their Mohammedan prejudices had been deemed impregnable. In course quence of their increased demand for the "Englishman's Koran," the Calcutta Society published, in 1833, a revised edition of one thousand copies of the Gospels and the Acts, and one thousand five hundred copies of the entire New Test. from the edition corrected by Mr. Hutchings. The printing was carried on at Singapore, under the care of the Rev. Messrs. Thomson and Burn, of the London Missionary Society. Another version of the New Test., less literal and more idiomatic than former translations, was executed by the agents of the London Missionary Society and of the American Bible Society, at Singapore. Editions in both the Arabic and Roman characters were printed in 1856, under the care of the Rev. B. P. Keasberry. The latter had also undertaken a translation of the Old Test., of which he had already prepared a considerable part, when his death, in 1875, put a stop to the work. Since 1814 the Java Auxiliary Bible Society has contemplated the plan of publishing the New Test. in Low Malay, which is spoken in the lower parts of Java. An edition of the New Test. in the Low Malay, which was commenced by Mr. Robinson, a Baptist missionary, and completed by Dr. Medhurst, left the press at Singapore in 1833. Some Christians at Sourabaya prepared a translation of the Psalms, which was printed at Amsterdam in 1847, under the care of professor Vetti, by the Netherlands Bible Society. In 1877 the British and Foreign Bible Society published the translation of the book of Exodus of Mr. J. L. Marten, which the Rev. E. W. King, who brought it to England from Java, superintended. Malayalim Version of the Scriptures. The Malayalim is spoken along the western coast of Peninsular India, from cape Comorin to the borders of Canara, and from the sea to the western Ghats. This region, sometimes distinguished by the general name of Malayala, comprises the British district of Malabar, under the Madras presidency, and the territories of the several rajahs of Travancore, Cochín, and Coorg. The natives in general are Hindûs. When Dr. Buchanan, at the beginning of the present century, visited the Syrian Christians at Malayala, he found that several attempts had been made by them at different times, though without success, to effect a translation of the Scriptures into Malayalim, their vernacular language. At the suggestion of Dr. Buchanan the design was carried into execution, and the bishop, Mar Dionysius, engaged to superintend the translation. On his second visit to Travancore, in 1807, Dr. Buchanan found that the translation of the four gospels had been completed by Timapah Pillay and Rembar, a catanar or priest of the Syrian Church. The translation had been made from the Tarnul version of Fabricius, and an edition of five thousand copies of these gospels was printed at Bombay at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Timapah Pillay was subsequently placed under the superintendence of the Rev. Mr. Thompson, at Madras, in order to complete the translation of the New Test., which was accomplished in 1813. This version, however, did not prove satisfactory, and Mr. Spring, chaplain at Tellicherry, proposed to enter upon a complete revision of Timapah Pillay's version, so as to render it acceptable to the natives of Malabar; while Mr. Bailey, who was stationed at Cottayam, engaged to execute a new translation for the benefit of the inhabitants of Travancore. Both these translations were completed in 1819, and on examination Mr. Bailey's version was preferred by the Madras Bible Society, at whose expense the New Test. was published at Cottayam, in 1830. The translation of the Old Test. was likewise completed by Mr. Bailey the same year, and this work was submitted to a sub-committee, formed in 1832, in connection with the Madras Society, for the publication of a Malayalim version of the Old Test. In 1834 some parts of the New Test. were printed in London, under the care of Mr. Bailey, who had been compelled to visit England on account of his health. The remainder of the New Test. was printed by him at the mission-press in Cottayam. Complete editions of both the Old and New Test. in Malayalim have since been issued from the Cottayam press. The version previously in current use was, however, admitted to stand in need of further revision, and a publishing committee was appointed for the purpose. In the report for 1856 we read that the revision of the New Test. has been completed, together with that of the first three books of the Pentateuch. In 1858 the revision had proceeded as far as the end of the second book of Samuel, while in 1863 we are told that the Old Test. had been reprinted, with a few corrections. In 1871 we read that "the New Test., in this southern Indian language, is about to be revised, but the plan of operations has not yet been fully decided upon. The bishops and pastors in the Syrian Church of Malabar have undertaken to aid the English and German missionaries in the work." The meeting of delegates appointed for that purpose took place, according to the report of 1872, July 26, 1871, at Cannanore. The delegates present were the Rev. Messrs. Baker and Justus Joseph, of the Church Missionary Society, and Fritz and Miller, of the German Basle Mission. The work of the delegates progressed very slowly. In the report for 1877 we read that the revision of the New Test. was carried on as far as Heb. v, and, said the Rev. H. Baker, convener of the delegates, "I trust in a few months to see the end of the New Test., and shall hope to praise God for enabling me to do the little I have done towards this edition." His wish, however, has not been fulfilled, for to use the words of the report for 1879, "the Malayalim Revision Committee has lost its senior member, the Rev. H. Baker, of the Church Missionary Society, Cottayam. This, together with the dialectical differences in the language as spoken in North and South Malabar, has made the task very difficult. The revision has been carried on, however, in the New Test. to the end of James, the first two gospels having undergone a second revision." From the report for 1883 we learn that the revision of the New Test. had been brought to a close in 1882, and that an edition of eight thousand copies has been printed. The Old Test. is now in the course of revision. See Bible of Every Land, p. 145. For linguistic purposes, see Gundert, A Malayalim and English Dictionary. (B. P.)

Malbin, MEIER LEIBISCH, a Jewish author and rabbi, was born in Russia in 1810. In his early youth his intellectual powers focused the utmost admiration; in his sixteenth year his fluency in the Talmud was extraordinary, his memory enabling him to repeat folio after folio. When eighteen years of age he became rabbi at Wreschen, in the province of Posen. From Wreschen he was called to Kempen, and after a long residence there, to Bucharest. Being obliged to leave Roumania on account of his opposition to the Jewish Reform party, he returned to Russia. After a short residence there he went to Königsberg, in Prussia. Malbin died Sept. 8, 1879, at Kiev, on his way to a new position at Esenstockau, in Russia. He wrote commentaries on the Pentateuch, the five Megilloth, and Isaiah, for which see Lippe, Bibliographisches Lexikon (Vienna, 1881), s. v. In his expositions he proved himself not only an elegant Hebrew writer, but also a deep thinker. (B. P.)

Malcom, HOWARD, D.D., LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 19, 1799. He graduated from Dickinson College in 1813; entered Princeton Theological Seminary in 1818, and remained two years; was licensed to preach by Sampson Street Church, in Philadelphia, June 8 of the same year; became pastor in Hudson, N. Y., May 14, 1819; first general secretary of the American Sunday-school Union, and travelled widely in its service, but resigned this position, July 5, 1827. He soon after became pastor of Federal Street Church, Boston, Mass. In 1835 he went abroad as a deputy of the Baptist Triennial Convention, to visit its foreign mission stations in India, China, Siam, and Burmah, and on his return published, in two volumes, an account of his travels. Next, he was pastor of Sampson Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Nov. 25, 1849. He was president respectively of Georgetown College, Ky., and the University of Lewisburg, Pa., which latter position he left, Aug. 5, 1857. On account of an affection of the throat the later years of his life were devoted to the Baptist Historical Society. He died March 25, 1879. Dr. Malcom was president of the American Peace Society, and vice-president of the American Foreign Bible Society. Among his published volumes are, Bible Dictionary (1828, 1853):—Travels in South-eastern Asia (1839):—Extent of the Atonement (1830):—Theological Index (1870). He also edited many volumes. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 13.

Maldivian Version of the Scriptures. The Maldivian language is a very mixed one, containing more Cingalese, Hindustani, Sanscrit, and Arabic words than the Malay. The natives have two alphabets of their own, one very peculiar, the other resembling the Persian.

The four gospels were translated into Maldivian by Dr. Leyden, for the Calcutta Bible Society, but for various reasons it had not been printed up to 1860. See Bible of Every Land, p. 150.

Malek-taus, a deity adored by the Yezzelees (q. v.), in the Lebanon range. He was represented either as a cock, or a man with a cock's head.

Malgrin, JOHN. See ALGRIN.

Maliseet Version of the Scriptures. The Maliseet is a dialect spoken by the Indians of New Brunswick. The Maliseet Indians are, since 1870, in the possession of the gospel of John, which was translated by the Rev. S. T. Rand, and published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Before the publication of this gospel they were only acquainted with such fragments and quotations of Scripture as are found in the Roman mass-book. (B. P.)

Mallet, FRIEDRICH LUDWIG, a distinguished Reformed theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 4, 1793, at Braunfels, near Wetzlar. He studied at Herborn and Tübingen, and was in 1815 appointed assistant to pastor Buch of St. Michael's, at Bremen, whom he succeeded in 1817. In 1827 he was called to the pastorate of St. Stephen's, and died May 5, 1865. Mallet was a most excellent preacher, and a prolific writer. His publications, however, are mostly polemic, caused by the rationalism and infidelity which he sought to combat. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 849 sq.; Hupfeld, Friedrich Ludwig Mallet (1865); Meurer, Zur Erinnerung an Friedr. Ludw. Mallet (1866); Wilkens, Friedrich Mallet, der Zeuge der Wahrheit (1872); Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Mallinckrodt, PAULINE VON, foundress of the Sisters of Christian Charity, was born at Minden, Westphalia, June 3, 1817. She was the sister of Hermann von Mallinckrodt, the eminent leader of the Catholic party in the Prussian legislature, a speaker and politician of great power, who died suddenly in Berlin, May 26, 1874, aged fifty-three years. When living with her father in Paderborn, Pauline set up a little asylum for blind children. She resolved to secure a permanent organization for carrying out her designs, Aug. 21, 1849. In November, 1850, she took her vows, and soon the sisters of Christian Charity was established. For twenty years the new institution enjoyed the favor of both the civil and ecclesiastical authorities. In May, 1872, the laws against the Catholic Church were passed by the Prussian government, and every house not devoted exclusively to nursing the sick was closed, and its inmates dispersed. In April, 1873, mother Pauline yielded to the wishes of the German Catholics in America, took with her a detachment of sisters, and founded a house in New Orleans. In order to make proper provision for the American undertaking, she established another house at Wilkesbarre, Pa., which is for America what the house at Paderborn had been for Germany. In 1874 she received a request from the Chilean government to make a foundation in their country. In 1876 she went to Rome, and received the pope's approval of her congregation and the erection of two provinces for North and South America. She sailed for America in October, 1879, by way of Cape Horn, and visited every house in the two Americas. She then set out to visit her houses in Belgium, Germany, and Bohemia, returning to Paderborn in March, 1881. There she died, April 30 of that year. There were then (1881) twenty-eight houses of the sisters of Christian Charity in the United States, and forty in North and South America. See (N. Y.) Catholic Annual, 1882, p. 94.

Maltese Version of the Scriptures. The Maltese spoken by the natives of Malta is a curious mixture of Arabic and Italian, the grammar being Arabic, but a large number of Italian words have been grafted into the vocabulary. Many years ago the four gospels were translated into Maltese by Mr. Vargalli, and printed at the expense of the Church Missionary Society. Afterwards the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge had the work revised, and the remainder of the New Test. translated, by Dr. Camilleri, a native of Malta, and a clergyman of the Church of England. The book, however, did not meet with that acceptance which had been hoped for, owing not so much to any defects in the translation as to the awful ignorance of the people, and their benighted adherence to the priests. A deep interest having been taken by a few Englishmen living on the island in the spiritual welfare of this people, the question was again mooted of printing a gospel in the Maltese, as there are about 10,000 Maltese, principally women and children, country people and villagers, who read their own language. In 1870 a translation of Matthew's gospel was made by a native, and sent over to England. After the MS. had been examined and reported on by the editorial superintendent and by the Rev. Dr. Camilleri, it was printed under the editorship of the last-named gentleman, and the orthography was made as simple as possible, so as to present no difficulties to those who were able to read at all in their mother tongue. This was in 1871. In the report for 1872 we read: "The edition of Matthew in this language having proved a great boon to religious inquirers among the Maltese, it was resolved that the Acts of the Apostles should be printed. A third portion, namely the gospel according to John, has now been translated, and is about to be printed. The services of the Rev. Dr. Camilleri have proved exceedingly valuable in aiding the preparation of these works." The two gospels and the Acts are the only parts of the New Test. which the Maltese enjoy at present. See Bible of Every Land, p. 53. (B. P.)

Maluk Dasia, a subdivision of the Ramavandi Vaishnavas of Hindustan, founded by Maluk Dās, who lived in the reign of Akbar the Great, in the 16th century. They worship Vishnu, in the character of Rama, and accept as their chief authority the Bhagavat Gita. The adherents of this sect are said to be numerous, especially among the laboring and trading classes, to the latter of which their founder belonged. The principal establishment of this sect is at Kara Manikpur, the birthplace of the founder, and still occupied by his descendants; and besides this establishment they have six other Mutks at Allahabad, Benares, Bindraban, Ayudhya, Lucknow, and Jagunniath, which last is of great repute, because rendered sacred by the death of Maluk Dás.

Malumigists, a sect of Mohammedans who teach that God may be known perfectly in this world by the knowledge which men have themselves.

Malvoisin, WILLIAM, a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of the see of Glasgow in 1200. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 236.

Mamakura, a kind of bracelets worn by the natives of the Moluccas or Spice Islands, particularly Amboyna, and which the women regard as preservatives against all enchantments.

Mamiani (della Rovere), TERENZIO, count, a famous Italian philosopher, was born Sept. 15, 1799, at Pesaro. He studied at Rome, but had to leave his country on account of his participation in the insurrection of 1831. He went to France, but returned to Italy in 1848. In 1857 he was professor of philosophy at Turin, and in 1860 he was made minister of public instruction. In 1870 he took up his abode at Rome, and published the philosophical journal, La Filosofia delle Scuole Italiane. Besides, he wrote, Rinascimento della Filosofia Antica Italiana (Paris, 1834; 2d ed. Florence, 1836); — Dialoghi di Scienza Prima (Paris, 1846); — Confessioni d'un Metafisico (Florence, 1865, 2 vols.); — Psicologia di Kant (Rome, 1877); — La Religione dell'Avvenire (Milan, 1879); — Critica della Rivelazione (ibid. 1880); — Questioni Sociali (Rome, 1882). Mamiani died May 20, 1885. (B. P.)

Man, ALEXANDER, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Caithness in 1889, and was witness to a charter of the earl of Sutherland in 1400. He died in 1409. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 218.

Man of Sin. See SIN, MAN OF.

Manaboshoo, a deity worshipped by the Chippewa Indians, concerning whom legendary stories are told which closely resemble those related of Litalané (q. v.).

Manah, the tutelary god of the Hódhail and other tribes of ancient Arabia, occupying the country between Mecca and Medina. The idol was a large stone, the worship of which consisted of the slaughter of camels and other animals. Though the idol was destroyed by order of Mohammed, the rite is still continued.

Manchoo (also Mantchoo, Mandahou) Version of the Scriptures. The Manchoo belongs to Manchouria, an extreme region lying north of Corea and north-east of China proper. It is also the court language of Pekin. An imperfect and very unfaithful translation of part of the Scriptures into Manchoo is said to have been executed by some Jesuit missionaries; and in 1818 an abortive attempt towards the production of a version was made under the sanction of the governor of Irkutsk. The prosecution of this important work ultimately devolved upon Lipoffzoff, a learned member of the Russian Bible Society, who had resided fourteen years at Pekin, by appointment of the Russian government, with the view of studying the Chinese and Manchoo. The translation was carried on under the superintendence of Dr. Pinkerton, and in 1822 an edition of the gospel of Matthew was printed at St. Petersburg, at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The awful flood which occurred in that city in 1824 destroyed the greater part of this edition. The entire New Test. was published by the same society in 1835, the translation of Mr. Lipoffzoff having been revised by Mr. George Borrow, of Norwich. This edition, which is beautifully printed, was forwarded to London, and there it probably still remains, under the custody of the British and Foreign Bible Society, until a proper time comes for the distribution and circulation of the copies. See Bible of Every Land, p. 884. The language has been treated by Gabelentz, Eléments de la Grammaire Mandchoue (1833); Adam, Grammaire de la Langue Mandchoue (Paris, 1873); Harlez, Manuel de la Langue Mandchoue (ibid. 1884); Klaproth, Chrestomathie Mandchoue (ibid. 1828). (B. P.)

Manco Capac, the founder of the ancient Peruvian empire, was deified after his death, and altars were erected for his worship. Both he and his wife were regarded as children of the sun, who had been sent from heaven to earth, that they might found a kingdom.

Mandar, in Hindú mythology, is the great mountain which the gods carried into the milky sea, wound the snake Adiseechen about it, and by churning it produced the food of the gods, Amrita.

Mandingo Version of the Scriptures. The Mandingo is the most important language of modern Negroland, and predominates in many powerful states on both sides of the Gambia. The Rev. Mr. Macbrair, a Wesleyan missionary, was the first to undertake the translation of the Scriptures in this widely extended language. The gospel according to Matthew was printed in London under his superintendence, in 1838, by the British and Foreign Bible Society. The translation of the other three gospels is still in manuscript. See Bible of Every Land, p. 406. (B. P.)

Manès is a term by which the ancient Romans used to designate the souls of the departed. Sacrifices were offered in their honor, and a festival called Feralia (q. v.), dedicated specially to the Manes, was celebrated annually on Feb. 19.

Manger, SAMUEL HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Franeker in 1788, doctor and professor of theology, is the author of, De Siphra Deque Nomine רבירי (Utrecht, 1751); — Commentarius in Librum Prophetæ Hoseæ (Franeker, 1785). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 225; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 320. (B. P.)

Man-ho-pa, the Great Spirit, worshipped by the North American Indians, whom they propitiate by presents, and by fastings and lamentations during the space of from three to five days. Their traditions state that the great waters divide the home of the Great Spirit from the abode of the red man; but there is a very general belief among them that he resides in the extreme west.

Maniple (Lat. manipulum). Doubtless this was nothing more than a strip of the finest linen, attached to the left arm of the priest by a loop, with which to wipe the chalice previous to the first oblation, that is, at the offertory. Soon, however, it began to be enriched with embroidery, like the stole, and finally became merely an ornament worn by the priest and his assistants, just above the left wrist, at the celebration of the eucharist. It is now of the same width and color as the stole and the vestment or chasuble, fringed at the ends, and generally about a yard and a quarter in length. It has been kept up in the English Church ever since the alterations in the 16th century, ordinarily in the shape of a napkin folded like a band, for use at the eucharist; and at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, at Durham and Westminster, some of the ancient maniples can still be seen which have been occasionally worn.

Manks (or Manx) Version of the Scriptures. This language is spoken to some extent on the Isle of Man, the ancient Mona. It is characterized by the incorporation of many Scandinavian words, which were doubtless introduced during the continued sway of the Danes and of the Norwegians, who succeeded the Saxons in the government of the island. The present version of the Manks Bible was commenced in the jail of Castle Rushen by the excellent bishop Wilson, in concert with Dr. Walker, one of his vicars, in 1722. The gospel of Matthew was translated by Dr. Walker, and printed, under the direction and at the expense of the bishop, in London, in 1748. The other gospels and the Acts were left in a state of readiness for the press by this venerable bishop, who died in 1755. His successor, Dr. Mark Hildesley, entered with the utmost ardor and anxiety on the prosecution of the translation of the New Test., which was finally published in London in 1767, by aid of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. About the time of the completion at press of the New Test., the bishop made arrangements for the translation of the Old Test., dividing it for this purpose among twenty-four different individuals. When the work was completed it was committed for final revision to Dr. Moore and Dr. Kelly. The latter was then only eighteen years of age, but very proficient in the knowledge of Manks, which was his native language. Dr. Kelly transcribed the whole version, from Genesis to Revelation, for the press, and, in conjunction with Dr. Moore, corrected and revised the proof-sheets. In 1772 the Old Test. was completed and published, and in 1775 the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge published the second edition of the Manks Scriptures; other editions have since been issued by the same society. In 1810 the British and Foreign Bible Society published a stereotyped edition of two thousand copies of the New Test., and in 1819 the entire Bible was published by the same society. Since then no further editions of the Manks Scriptures have appeared, as the Bible in English is now in general circulation on the island. See Bible of Every Land, p. 166. (B. P.)

Mann, CARL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 22, 1806, at Königsbach, Baden. He studied at Tübingen; was in 1833 preacher at Wilhelmstadt, Württemberg; in 1842 at Hochstetten, Baden; in 1852 at Wörsingen, near Durlach, and died at Eppingen, Dec. 1, 1861. He published, Wie und wodurch is Martin Luther der grosse Bibel-Uebersetzer geworden? (Stuttgart, 1835);—Jubel-Büchlein der evangelischen Reformation in Württemberg (ibid. 1836);—Die augustinische Confession erklärt (Carlsruhe, 1842);—Evangelischer Confirmations-Unterricht (1850);—Was thut unserer Kirche noth? (1843);—Die Bibel als das Wort des lebendigen Gottes an die Menschheit (1855). See Wiener Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 788; ii, 303; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 851; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 302 sq. (B. P.)

Mannheim, in Norse mythology, was one of the nine worlds of Northern fable, the middle designed as the habitation of men.

Manning, Jacob Merrill, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Greenwood, N. Y., Dec. 31, 1824. He studied at Prattsburg, in 1850 graduated from Amherst College, and in 1853 from Andover Theological Seminary; was ordained pastor of the Mystic Church, Medford, Mass., Jan. 5, 1854, and dismissed Feb. 17, 1857. The latter year he was installed as associate pastor of Old South Church, Boston, and so remained until 1872, when he became the sole pastor. He became pastor emeritus, March 15, 1882, and died Nov. 29 of the same year. Among his published addresses and sermons are the following: The Death of Abraham Lincoln (1865);—Peace under Liberty (ed.);—Half Truths and The Truth (1873);—Helps to a Life of Prayer (1875), etc. See Conq. Year-book, 1883, p. 26.

Manning, John H., D.D., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated from Rutgers College in 1844, and New Brunswick Seminary in 1847; was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick the same year; was pastor at Spotswood from 1847 to 1854; South Brooklyn from 1854 to 1873, and thereafter remained without a charge until his death, Oct. 25, 1878. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 366.

Manning, Samuel, LL.D., an English Baptist minister, was born at Leicester, Nov. 26, 1821. He was educated at Bristol College, and spent a few terms of study in the Glasgow University. In 1846 he accepted the pastorate of the Church at Sheppart's Barton, Frome, where he remained fifteen years. His labors were eminently successful, and his influence was widely felt. He contributed to the Eclectic Review, the Christian Spectator, and other periodicals; and in 1857 took the entire editorial management of the Baptist Magazine. In 1861 he became book editor of the Religious Tract Society, an office which he was in a high degree qualified to adorn. His talents for the next fifteen years were devoted to the elevation of literature to the Christian standard. In 1876 he became secretary of the same society, and remained an efficient officer until the close of his life, Sept. 13, 1881. Among his publications are several illustrated volumes, viz.: Italian Pictures;—Swiss Pictures;—Spanish Pictures;—American Pictures;—Those Holy Fields;—and The Land of the Pharaohs. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1882, p. 307.

Manser, GEORGE B., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at New Haven, Conn., Aug. 8, 1803. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1827; studied law; for several years was secretary of civil and military affairs, but afterwards entered the ministry; and for about nine years was rector of the parish in Montpelier, Vt., which he himself had organized. In 1860 he took charge of St. Peter's Church in Bennington, where he remained until death, Nov. 17, 1862. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1863, p. 151.

Mansfield, RICHARD, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at New Haven, Conn., in 1724. In 1741 he graduated from Yale College, and devoted two years to study as a resident-graduate. For three years, from 1744, he was principal of a grammar-school in New Haven. In 1748 he was ordained in London by the archbishop of Canterbury, and received an appointment from the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts. Returning to America in 1749, he began his missionary work in Derby, Conn., in connection with West Haven, Waterbury, and Northbury, a position which he retained until his death, in April, 1820. In 1775 he was compelled to flee for a time from his churches and family to the town of Hempstead, because of his adherence to the English crown. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 131.

Mantchoo Version. See MANCHOO.

Mantelletum is a large cape of silk reaching from the neck to below the waist, with open spaces for the arms on each side. It is commonly worn over the rochet, and is no doubt the foreign equivalent to the English chimere. Anciently it was of scarlet satin in England. Foreign bishops commonly wear a mantelletum of purple silk, lined with silk of the same color, only lighter in shade. Abroad, in some places, monsignori, canons, vicars-general, apostolical protonotaries, and doctors in canon law wear the mantelletum; in which case it is usually of black, though sometimes of scarlet or brown silk. The mantelletum is by some affirmed to be the same as the mozette.

Mantelletum of Violet Silk (French).

Mantis, THE PRAYING, an insect said to have been worshipped formerly by the Hottentots. It derives its name from the erect position and motion it assumes when alarmed. It was regarded by the Hottentots as a creature of bad omen, and to kill, or even to injure it, was looked upon as in the highest degree unlucky.

Mantra, a secret, the communication of which forms the chief ceremony of initiation in all Hindū sects. It generally consists of the name of some deity, or a short address to him; it is conveyed by the teacher to the disciple in a whisper, and when once known, is carefully concealed from all the uninitiated. The word mantra is also employed generally to denote a spell or enchantment, and also a hymn or a prayer.

Manuscripts, Hebrew. That Hebrew MSS. existed at a very early time may be seen from the following passage in the Mishna (Sopherim, vi, 4): "R. Simon ben-Lakiah says, three codices (of the Pentateuch) were found in the court of the temple, one of which had the reading בְּיָדָיו, the other בְּיָדָיו, and the third differed in the number of passages wherein וַיָּא is read with a yod. Thus in the one codex it was written בְּיָדָיו, dwelling (Deut. xxxiii, 27), while the other two codices had בְּיָדָיו; the reading of the two was therefore declared valid, whereas that of the one was invalid. In the second codex, בְּיָדָיו was found (Exod. xxiv, 11), while the other two codices had בְּיָדָיו; the reading in which the two codices agreed was declared valid, and that of the one invalid. In the third codex there were only nine passages which had וַיָּא written with a yod (as it is generally written וַיָּא with a vav), whereas the other two had eleven passages; the readings of the two were declared valid, and those of the one invalid." The minute prescriptions contained in the Talmud concerning the material, color, letters, writing instruments, etc., for the manuscripts, only prove the fact that such manuscripts existed, otherwise St. Jerome could not have written "Veterum librorum fides de Hebraicis voluminibus examinanda est" (Epist. ad Lucium). The greatest care was exhibited in writing of MSS., and three mistakes were sufficient to make a copy worthless (Menachoth, fol. 29, col. 2).

When the study of the Talmud was no longer attractive amid the disorder and frequent closing of the Babylonian academies, and ulterior development of the traditions became exhausted, attention was more directed to Scripture. The number of MSS. increased, and to them the various systems of vowel-points and accents, together with the first elements of grammar, were appended. But not all of these MSS. are now extant, some are only known from the quotations made from them by different writers. In treating, therefore, of the different MSS., we shall have to speak of two kinds—of such as are lost, and of such as are extant.

A. LOST MANUSCRIPTS.

1. The Codex Hillel (q. v.).

2. The Codex Sanbuki (q. v.).

3. The Jericho Pentateuch. Concerning this חומש יריחו Elias Levita writes thus: "The Pentateuch of Jericho is doubtless a correct codex of the Pentateuch derived from Jericho. It discusses the plene and defective as חומש יריחו, 'the abominations' (Lev. xviii, 27), which is in this Pentateuch without the second vav. So also לְכָרִי, which occurs twice in the same chapter (Num. xiii, 13, 22), of which the first is plene (written in the Jericho codex), and the second defective."

4. The Codex Sinat (q. v.).

5. The Codex Ben-Naphtali. Moses ben-David Naphtali, a contemporary of Ben-Asher, flourished about A.D. 900-950. He distinguished himself by his edition of a revised text of the Hebrew Scriptures in opposition to Ben-Asher, in which he had no great success, inasmuch as the different readings he collated and proposed are very insignificant, and are almost entirely confined to the vowel-points and accents. The codex itself is lost, but many of its readings are preserved, e.g. by Kimchi in his Grammar and Lexicon, while a complete list of these different readings is appended to Bomberg's and Buxtorf's Rabbinic, and to Walton's Polyglot Bible. Fürst, in his Concordance, p. 137, sec. 48, has also given the variations between these two scholars.

The most important difference between Ben-Naphtali and Ben-Asher is the reading of שְׁלֹחַ ירושלמי, Song of Songs, viii, 6, as two words, while Ben-Asher reads it as one word, שְׁלֹחַ, both readings having the same meaning. In a very convenient form these variations are given by Bar and Dellizsch in their edition of the different parts of the Old Test., on Genesis, p. 81, Job, p. 59, Psalms, p. 186, Proverbs, p. 55, Isaiah, p. 90, Minor Prophets, p. 90, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Daniel, p. 91, 126, Ezekiel, p. 112.

Our printed editions have for the most part the reading of Ben-Asher: very seldom, however, that of Ben-Naphtali is found, with the exception of such codices as have the Babylonian system of punctuation, and which always follow Ben-Naphtali. The editions in which the reading שְׁלֹחַ (i. e. Ben-Naphtali's) is found are: Bomberg's Rabbinic (1517) and his quarto edition (1518), Stephen's (1543), Münster's (1546), Hutter (1587), Antwerp Polyglot (1571), Bragadui's Hebrew Bible (1614), Simon's (1767-1828), Jahn's (1806), Bagster's (1839), Basle edition (1837), Hahn-Rosenmüller's (1868).

B. EXTANT MANUSCRIPTS.

I. In order to have a correct opinion of the codices extant, the following points must be observed:

1. Whether the MS. was written for public or private use. Those written for public use, commonly called "synagogue rolls" or "sacred copies," were prepared with that care and minuteness of which prescriptions are given in the Talmud, while the others were less carefully made. They are written sometimes in the square, at others in the rabbinical character. Their size is entirely arbitrary. They are in folio, quarto, octavo, and duodecimo. Of those written in the square character, the greater number are on parchment, some on paper. As to the square character employed in the MSS., it has varieties. The Jews themselves distinguish in the synagogue roll (1) the Tam letter, with sharp corners and perpendicular coronules, used among the German and Polish Jews; (2) the Velsh letter, more modern than the Tam, and rounder, with coronules, particularly found in the sacred copies of the Spanish and Oriental Jews.

2. Whether the copyist, in writing and correcting the MS., had regard to some version or not. That such was sometimes the case may be seen from a MS. containing the Psalms, and belonging to the 15th century, known as Scaliger 8 (because Scaliger once had it), and preserved at the Academy of Leyden (comp. Heidenheim, in his Deutsche Vierteljahrsschrift, li, 460-468).

3. What its date is. The Jews employed different dates in their MSS. Some used the "Seleucidic" or "Greek" era (חשבון היונים), called also Ara Contractum (שנין שטריו), which was employed until the 11th century, and ceased entirely in the year A.D. 1511. Another computation was the reckoning from the destruction of Jerusalem (A.M. 3828, A.D. 68). A third computation was the era of the creation (לבריאת עולם), and was introduced by European transcribers. When it became more general, after the year of the world 4000, the 4000 years were gradually omitted. This system of mentioning only the hundreds and lower numbers was called "the small era" (לפרט קטן), abbreviated (לפ קטן), in contradistinction from the full numbering (לפרט גדול).

In order to find out to which year A.D. one of the years of the Seleucidic or Greek era, or of the Jewish computation, either from the creation or from the destruction, corresponds, it must be borne in mind that the Jewish civil calendar commences with the month of Tishri, corresponding to our September or October, and the Seleucidic era with the first of October, 812 B.C. Thus, e.g. the year 283 of the Seleucidic era would be the year 30-29 B.C., i. e. 812 - 283 = 29, allowing, however, some months because of the difference in the calendar 30-29.

In Jewish MSS. we frequently find the small era, or לפרט קטן. Thus cod. 2 of Kennicott has an epigraph which states that it was written in the year 64, that is 5064. By adding to this number the number 240 (i. e. the difference between the Jewish and Christian computation), we get 5304; deducting from this 4000 (i. e. the time from the creation to the birth of Christ), we get the year A.D. 1304; or the same date may be had by adding to the year 64 the number 240 = 304, combined with the fifth thousand = 1304. The date according to the era of the destruction of Jerusalem is found by adding 68 to the given date: thus the year 900 after the destruction would be 900 + 68 = 968, or A.D. 1885 would be the year 1517 after the destruction (i. e. 1885 - 68 = 1517).

4. Where the codices were written, as there is a difference between the Spanish and the German, the Eastern and Western codices.

(a) As to the Spanish and German codices, there is a great diversity of opinion. Kennicott and De Rossi speak of the German very highly, while Jewish authorities prefer the Spanish codices. Thus Elias Levita tells us, "Most of the correct codices I found to be Spanish, and it is upon these that I relied, and it is their method which I followed. . . . The Spanish codices are more correct than all other exemplars."

(b) As to the Eastern and Western codices. At the beginning of the Christian era there were two rival academies, one in Palestine and the other in Babylonia. Both had their Talmud (q. v.), respectively known as the Palestinian and Babylonian Talmud, but also their codices, in which they differed from each other. And thus we find in Rabbinical as well as in Biblical codices marginal notes, giving the passages where the Eastern and Western differ from each other. Thus, e. g. cod. Kennic. 516 (Florent. 13, Laur. iii, 3, scr. an. 1291), "The Western or Palestinian read עשרה, the Eastern or Babylonians read עשרה." These variations were first collected by Jacob ben-Chayim in the Rabbinic Bible (Venice, 1526), under the title, חלקי הכתובים. חכמינו שבו בניארץ ישראל וכן בני בבב. Chayim does not give the source from which he took these variations, but Morinus (Exercit. Biblic. p. 409, Paris, 1669 fol.) testifies that he saw a list of these variations in some MSS.

As to the Eastern and Western readings, which were published by Chayim, we must observe (1) that none occur in the Pentateuch; (2) that these readings only refer to letters and words (with two exceptions, viz. Jer. vi, 6, where the Eastern write עשרה עשרה, i. e. עשרה with a mappik, and Amos iii, 6, where they note עשרה עשרה, i. e. עשרה with a mappik); (3) they seldom change the sense, as for the most part they concern the omission or addition, or permutation or transposition, of quiescent letters (Lamen. v, 21, ירוהו is read by the Occidentals, while the Orientals have ירוהו); (4) there are two hundred and sixteen various readings in Chayim's Bible (and in all Rabbinic Bibles which followed that of Chayim), viz. Joshua, 11; Judges, 8; Sam. 10; Kings, 21; Isa. 18; Jer. 34; Ezek. 22; Minor Prophets, 13; Chron. 11; Psa. 8; Job, 12; Prov. 8; Ruth, 7; Song of Songs, 2; Eccles. 6; Lamen. 6; Esth. 4; Dan. 3; Ezra, 7.

(5) The European or Western Jews follow the reading of the Western (מערבית), and thus it happens that in the one or the other codex we find another reading from that of the Eastern codices. Thus, in 2 Kings xviii, 29, Nabal (q. v.) remarks on the reading ירוהו אהבם, לחציל (q. v.), that those codices which read ירוהו follow the Babylonian (בבל), but the Palestinian codices, which we follow, give in the list of variations ירוהו.

II. After these preliminaries, we will speak of the extant codices.

1. The Codex of Asher. See Asher Manuscript.
2. The Codex of Cahira. This codex contains the prophets, and is preserved at Cahira, in the synagogue of the Karaites. It was written in the year 827 after the destruction of the temple, or in the year 466 of the creation = A. D. 896.
3. Codex Kennic. 126. This codex contains the later prophets, and is preserved in the British Museum (Stoane, 4708). See Stoane Codex.
4. The Codices of Damascus and Guber. The former codex the late Dr. Moses Margulioth saw at Damascus, belonging to the family Farrhi. It is regarded as very sacred, and the Jews themselves are only allowed to look at it once a year, that is on the feast of הוריה הוריה, i. e. "the Joy of the Law," which takes place at the termination of the Feast of Tabernacles. Dr. Margulioth, who saw it, says that this codex "deserves the palm for beauty and execution." According to a notice added later on the title-page, it should belong to the 3d century. Another codex, Dr. Margulioth states, is at Guber or Juber, near Damascus. "There is a synagogue at that small place which is considered the most ancient in the world; and, moreover, Hebrew writers affirm that it is built over the cave of Elijah. The MS. there is by no means so fine a masterpiece as the Damascus one, but is certainly much older. A most awful anathema is written on the cover, against any one selling or stealing it" (Pilgrimage to the Land of my Fathers, i, 267).
5. Codices Kennicottian. Of these we enumerate the following:
 - (1) Cod. 590—containing the Prophets and Hagiographa, written about 1018 or 1019, now in the Imperial Library at Vienna.
 - (2) Cod. 536—containing the Pentateuch, Haphtaroth, and Megilloth [i. e. Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther] (Censura Bibl. Malatest. Patrum D. Franc. Convent. plut. xxix, cod. 2), of the end of the 11th century. It commences with Gen. ii, 13.
 - (3) Cod. 162—Joshua, Judges, Samuel (Florentine Biblioth. Laurent. plut. i, pars ii, cod. 45), of the beginning of the 12th century.

(4) Cod. 184—Prophets, with both Targums (Carlsruhe, Biblioth. publ.), A. D. 1106. This is the famous Codex Reuchlinianus, which has the epigraph: "In the year 486 A. M. and 1038 since the destruction of the temple." The Targum, according to this codex, has been published by Lagarde, Leipzig, 1872.

Besides these we may mention:

(5) Cod. 193—Pentateuch, without points (Mediolani Bibl. Ambros. G. 2), A. D. 1287, or somewhat earlier. Of various readings, the following are marked by De' Rossi: Exod. xii, 31, ויקרא פריצה, so also Sept., Vulg., Syr.

Lev. xii, 7, עליה חבון, Sam., Sept., Syr.

xxv, 35, ורח אחיך, Sam., Sept.

(6) Cod. 201—Prophets and Hagiographa, of the 12th century (Norimb. Biblioth. Eburni). Jeremiah follows the book of Samuel, and 1 Kings, Ezekiel, and Isaiah follows Jeremiah.

(7) Cod. 210—Bible of the 12th century (Parisii Biblioth. Reg. 10).

(8) Cod. 224—Prophets and Hagiographa, of the 12th century (Regiomonti Biblioth. Reg.).

(9) Cod. 266—Prophets, in large 4to, of the 12th century (Parisii San-German. 2). Jer. xxix, 19 to xxxviii, 2 and Hosea iv, 4 to Amos vi, 12 is wanting.

(10) Cod. 293—Pentateuch, with the Megilloth and Masorah in fol. A. D. 1144 (Toletan. Bayerum). The epigraph reads, "Written by בן דוד, i. e. 4904 A. M." Dent. vii, 13, נשבע ירוהו, confirming the reading of the Sam. and Sept.

(11) Cod. 531—Prophets and Hagiographa, with the Masorah and Targum, fol. 2 vols., A. D. 1193 (Bononie. Biblioth. S. Salvatoris Canon. Reg. 646, 647). The epigraph bears the date 963 (+240) = 1193.

(12) Cod. 526—Hagiographa, Joshua, Judges, Samuel, 4to, A. D. 1193 (Parisii Bibl. Regian. 48).

6. De Rossi's Codices. Of these we particularize the following:

(1) Cod. 634—fragments of Leviticus and Numbers, 4to, 8th century, containing Lev. xxi, 29 to Numb. i, 56. Lev. xxi, 4, ואיש, so Sept.

(2) Cod. 508—Pentateuch, in 4to, 9th or 10th century, commencing with Gen. xli, 14 to Dent. xv, 12. Exod. xxi, 20, בשבע is omitted, as in Sam.

xxii, 9, אובל הבוחה, Sam., Sept., Syr., Arab.

xxiii, 23, ורחמי ורחמי, Sam., Sept.

xxiv, 12, האבנים, Sam.

13, וירש וירושע, Sept. arabizant.

xxxvii, 5, לשאח אח הארץ כוח, Sam., Arab.

xxxix, 33, ובריהו, Syr., Arab.

Lev. i, 2, הצאן, Sam.

vii, 6, ראכל, omitted, Vulg.

(3) Cod. 262—Pentateuch, Megilloth, Haphtaroth, in fol., 11th or 12th century.

Lev. iv, 14, אלפתח אהל, Sept., Vulg.

v, 8, וחקריב הבחן, Sept.

xi, 40, רכבם בנדי ורחמי, Sept. (but not in the Complut. and Aldine).

xix, 27, ולא, Sam., Vulg., Arab.

Dent. i, 40, פני וסני לם, Sam.

iii, 14, ויארר, Sam., Sept., Syr., Arab., Targ., Jonathan.

חאריב, Sam.

vi, 2, וביניך, Sept., Vulg.

xxxiv, 2, כלארץ נפתלי, Sept., Syr.

(4) Cod. 274—Pentateuch, with points, 4to, 11th or 12th century: it ends with Dent. xxxii, 51, and has the Masorah finalis.

Gen. xxxi, 35, רחל אל אביה, Sept., Syr.

Numb. xxix, 11, ונסכה, Sept.

27, כספספס, Sept., Syr.

7. The Odesa MSS. In the year 1845 E. M. Primer published his Prospectus der der Odesaer Gesellschaft für Geschichte und Alterthümer gehörenden ältesten und rabbinischen Manuscripte, whereby a number of MSS. became known to the literary world. They were bought in 1863, and are now in the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg. A very accurate catalogue of them was published by Harkavy and Strack (Leipzig and St. Petersburg, 1876). Of these codices only two are of great importance, viz. one containing the later prophets, dated A. D. 916, and another containing a complete Old Test. with both Masorah, on 491 leaves, said to be a copy of Asher's codex (?). It is dated A.D. 1009. Of the latter, Bär and Dellitzsch availed themselves in their Hebrew-Latin edition of the Psalms and in the edition of Job, where a fac-simile of that codex is also given. The former has been published by H. L. Strack (Prophetarum Posteriorum Codex Babylonicus Petropolitinus, Lipsiae, 1876) in fac-simile, by means of photo-lithography, at the expense of the emperor Alexander II of Russia. The whole work was done in three years, and is a monument to the editor and his imperial patron. The text, surrounded with Masoretic notes, and furnished with the so-called Babylonian system of vocalization, occupies 449 folio pages. The Latin preface gives the history of the codex, and the critical annotations, which follow the text, are intended to help the student in the perusal of the same. The following list of various readings does not affect the vowel points, but merely the consonants. The reading of Van der Hooft is given first:

- Isa. i, 7, צריכם—צריכם, and so many codd., Syr., Arab.
 22, לסינים—לסינים, thus some older and modern editions, as Münster, Hutter, Michaelis, Hahn-Rosenmüller, Letteris, Bär-Dellitzsch.
 iii, 23, והגללים—והגללים, so a great many codd., all versions, Rashl, Kimchi, Ibn-Ezra.
 iv, 1, ושבחתי—ושבחתי, so some codd., Sept., Syr., Arab., Vulg.
 vii, 14, עמנו אל—עמנו אל, thus many codd. and editions, as Münster, Hutter, Clodius-Bürke-llu, Michaelis, Reineccine, Simonis, Hahn-Rosenmüller, Stier and Thiele's Polyglot, the Warsaw Rabbinic Bible.
 x, 16, יחיה—אדני, so many codd. and editions.
 xv, 2, כל—כל.
 גירועה, גירועה, so many codd., and editions of Athias, Clodius, Opliz, Michaelis, Reineccine, Simonis, Letteris, Bär-Dellitzsch.
 4, נפשו—נפשו.
 xvi, 7, חרשת—חרשת.
 10, ולא ירעז—לא ירעז, the א is found in many codd., Sept., Syr., Targ., Vulg., Arab.
 xix, 13, וחרשו—חרשו, many codd., Vulg., Targ., Norzi, and a great many editions.
 xx, 2, רגלך—רגלך, codd., Sept., Syr., Vulg., Arab.
 xxi, 12, אתה—אתה, so many codd.
 xxxviii, 2, לירחוק—לאדני, so many codd.
 xlix, 19, ואביני—ואביני.
 23, מעשה—מעשה.
 xxx, 6, עירי, Kethib, עירי, Keri—עירי, Kethib and Keri.
 xxxiii, 1, בגדי בך—בגדי בך.
 xxxiv, 13, קטשו—קטשו.
 xxxv, 9, יחיה—לא יחיה.
 xxxvi, 2, רב שקח—רב שקח.
 18, ולא—לא.
 xxxvii, 9, כל—אל.
 17, עיניך—עיניך, Sept., Syr., Vulg.
 28, אסרחן—אסרחן.
 xxxviii, 11, חלד—חלד.
 14, אדני—יחיה.
 18, ולא ישברו—לא ישברו.
 xxxix, 6, ולא יותה—לא יותה.
 xliii, 19, עתה—עתה.
 xlv, 24, אתי—מיאתי.
 xiv, 21, נוצצו—נוצצו, but by a later hand.
 xlix, 9, ולאשר—לאשר, many codd., Sept., Vulg., Syr., Targ.
 lvi, 9, רננו—רננו.
 lvi, 9, כי מי—כי מי.
 lvi, 1, אל יחיה—אל יחיה.
 lvi, 11, רעי—רעי, so many codd., Vulg., D. Kimchi, Abarbanel, Solomon ben-Melech.

lxiv, 3, ולא האזינו—לא האזינו, so many codd.

lxv, 20, ולא יחיה—לא יחיה.

22, ולא יעזי—לא יעזי.

lxvi, 2, אל דברי—על דברי.

17, אחר, Kethib, אחר, Keri—אחר, Kethib and Keri.

This very incomplete list from the prophet Isaiah (space prohibits our giving readings from the other prophets) is sufficient to show the great importance of this codex.

8. The Pirkovitch MSS. This famous collection of the Karaites Abraham Firkovitch (q. v.) was bought for the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg in the year 1862, and is also described by Harkavy and Strack in their Catalogue. Altogether this collection contains 146 MSS., of which 47 are synagogue rolls (1-5 on leather, 6-47 on parchment), three of which contain only the entire Pentateuch (No. 10, dated A.D. 940, 19, dated A.D. 920, and No. 47), and the rest manuscripts in book form (viz., No. 48-146; of which 48-123 are without translation, 124-146 with translation, the translations being either Arabic, Tartar, or Persian). In the several parts of the Old Test. edited by Bär and Dellitzsch, the prefaces also contain notices concerning manuscripts used by the editors.

The various readings found in the St. Petersburg manuscripts and in such as have of late come to light, but are enumerated by Bär and Delitzsch in the different parts of their Old-Test. edition, have been made use of by the latter, and are given in a very convenient form in the Appendices Criticæ et Masoreticæ, viz. Genesis, p. 74 sq.; Job, p. 33-56; Psalms, p. 83-123; Proverbs, p. 30-54; Isaiah, p. 65-82; Ezekiel, p. 73-107; Minor Prophets, p. 59-85; Daniel, p. 62-85; Ezra-Nehemiah, p. 99-119 (these last three books printed together). Of the St. Petersburg manuscripts, professor Delitzsch has also made use in his commentary on Song of Songs (p. 178-184) and Ecclesiastes (p. 425-435), published at Leipsic in 1875. A comparison of the Codex Babylonicus from the year 916, and of the MS. from the year 1009, with Hahn's edition of the Old Test., which in the main is a reprint of Van der Hought, has been made by Strack with reference to Isaiah, and the result was published in the Zeitschrift für luth. Theologie, 1877, p. 17-52. All these various readings do not essentially impair the authority of the Masoretic text, nor materially alter the meaning of any important passage. (B. P.)

Manwantara, a grand period of time in Hindû chronology, including seventy-one maha-yuga, or divine ages, being the reign of one Manu (q. v.), with his posterity of sons and grandsons. The reigns of the fourteen Manus who reigned in succession extended to one thousand maha-yuga, or one kulpa.

Manx Version. See MANNA.

Maori (or New Zealand) Version of the Scriptures. The Maori is the most cultivated of all the Polynesian dialects. See NEW ZEALAND. The first copies of portions of the New Test. were printed in 1832, having been translated by the Rev. Mr. Yate, but the first complete edition of the New Test. did not appear till 1840. A second was printed in 1842, and a third in 1844, all at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society. A revised edition by bishop Williams and the Rev. T. W. Meller was published more recently. The Old Test. was completed in 1856, the translation being that of the Rev. R. Maunsell. In 1859 a revision of the Bible was undertaken, which was completed in 1867. This revised edition has also been printed since. See Bible of Every Land, p. 383. (B. P.)

Maphrida, the second dignitary of the Jacobite Church (q. v.) in the East.

Maracaa, idols of the Brazilians. The word is a corruption of Tanurica, which is the name of a certain fruit about the size of an ostrich's egg, and shaped like a gourd. These idols, indeed, were nothing more than the fruit Tamaraca dressed up in beautiful feathers, and fixed on a staff, which the priests stuck in the ground, and ordered the people to bring food and drink before it.

Maras is the name given in the South Sea islands to a heathen temple. All were uncovered, and resembled oratories rather than temples. The form of the interior or area was frequently that of a square or parallelogram, the sides of which extended forty or fifty feet. Two sides of this space were enclosed by a high stone wall; the front was protected by a low fence, and opposite, a solid pyramidal structure was raised, in front of which the images were kept and the altars fixed. These piles were often immense. Within the enclosure, the houses of the priests and keepers of the idols were erected. Ruins of these temples are found in every situation; on the summit of a hill, on the extremity of a point of land extending into the sea, or in the recesses of an extensive and overshadowing grove.

Maramba, an idol of the negroes of Angola, Congo, etc., in Africa. It stands erect over against the temple dedicated to its peculiar service, in a basket formed like a bee-hive. To this divinity the negroes make particular application for success when they go hunting or fishing, and for the relief of such as are sick. Those also charged with crime are obliged to plead their cause before it. In order to do this the accused prostrates himself at the feet of the idol, embraces it with the profoundest veneration, and says, "Behold, Maramba, thy servant is come to justify himself before thee." If the defendant is guilty, he is said to fall dead on the spot. The devotees usually carry little images in small boxes about with them. Maramba always marches at the head of their armies, and he is presented with the first morsel, and the first cup of wine served at the king's table.

Marathi Version of the Scriptures. The Marathi, which is spoken by the Marathas or Mahrattas (q. v.), may be regarded as a link between the Sanscrit dialects of northern India and the languages of the Deccan. Some of the words and idioms are obviously of cognate origin with the Bengalee, while in others a notable approximation may be detected to the Tamil, Telinga, and the other languages of the South. Two different characters are used in writing Marathi, the Moshior Modhe, a kind of running hand, which is derived from, and still retains a strong resemblance to the Devanagari (or Sanscrit character), and the Balbooth or Balborah, which appears to be almost, if not quite, the Devanagari itself. The former, vulgarly termed Modi, is most generally understood, being employed in all transactions of business; but the latter is preferred for printing, because it possesses several letters in which the Modi is deficient; it is, besides, uniform and regular in appearance, while the Modi varies as much in style as the handwriting of different individuals in Europe.

A version of the Scriptures in Marathi was commenced at Serampore in 1804. The first few copies of the gospel of Matthew were printed in the Devanagari character, but this character was soon replaced by the Modi, as the more generally intelligible to the natives. This latter character was employed in all the subsequent Serampore editions. In 1811 the New Test. was completed, and in 1820 the Old Test. left the press. A second and revised edition of the New Test. appeared about the year 1825.

Another version of the Marathi Scriptures was commenced in 1817 by American missionaries, and in 1826 the entire New Test. was published by them, with the aid of the Bombay Auxiliary and the British and Foreign Bible Society. An improved and carefully revised edition of this Test. was printed in 1830. In 1834 the Bombay Bible Society undertook another revision of the Marathi New Test. and determined upon issuing an edition in the Balbooth character. The printing of this edition was commenced in 1835, but in the same year it was found necessary to print a separate edition of the gospels in the Modi, or current character, for the use of the lower class of natives.

While these editions of the New Test. were in course of preparation, the American missionaries, together with the Rev. J. Dixon of the Church mission at Nassuck, zealously prosecuted the translation of the Old Test. into Marathi, which was completed at the American mission press in 1855. Mr. Dixon, by whom the greater part of this important version was made, did not live to see the completion of this edition at press. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1863 we learn that the entire Bible has been revised, published, and put into circulation. In the report for 1881 it is stated that the revision of the entire Bible has again been inaugurated, with the assistance of Rev. Baba Padmanji. The revision work is still in progress. Marbury, ALEXANDER M., M.D., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector in Petersville, Md., for seven years preceding 1858, when he became rector of St. Paul's, Aquasco, in which relation he remained until his death in 1873. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1874, p. 188.

Marcellius, HENRICUS, a Jesuit, who died at Bamberg, April 25, 1664, wrote, Canones Explicanda Sacra Scriptura:—De Augustiano Corporis et Sanguinis Domini Sacramento:—Theologus Divinae Scripturae:—De Justificatione Christiana:—Commentarius in Librum Josue:—Testimonium Danielis de Regno Christi Inexpugnabili:—Enchiridium Militie Christianae. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (H. P.)

Marcello, BENEDETTO, an eminent Italian composer of sacred music, was born at Venice, July 24, 1696. He made a thorough study of music under various masters, and at the same time studied law and became an advocate, holding several offices under the government. He was a member of the Council of Forty, and treasurer at Brescia, where he died, July 17, 1739. His most esteemed work is his music for Giustiniani's version of Fifty Psalms, of which a fine edition was published by John Garth, of Durham, in eight volumes folio, with English words. His other works consist of oratorios, masses, cantatas, madrigals, and different parts of the Roman Catholic service. He also left a MS. treatise on music.

Marchant, JACQUES, a Roman Catholic theologian, who died at Convin, Belgium, in 1648, is the author of Rationale Evangelizantium (transl. into French by Ricard, Le Rationale des Prédicateurs de l'Évangile, Paris, 1876, 4 vols.):—Horium Pastorum (French, Le Jardin des Pasteurs), a treatise on faith, hope, and charity:—Virga Aaronis Florens (French, La Verge d'Aaron), on the sacerdotal life:—Candelabrum Mysticum, on the seven sacraments. Marchant's works were published in French by Ricard and Berton, in nine volumes. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Marcus, a Scotch prelate, was a native of Galloway, in Scotland, and was promoted to the see of the Isles in 1275, and consecrated the same year. He was also lord high-chancellor of Scotland. He held a synod at Kirk-Bradden in March, 1291, where thirty-nine canons were made. He died in 1303. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 800.

Marashah. The ruined site, Khurbet Merash, is three quarters of a mile south-west of Beit-Jibrin, and consists merely of "traces of ruins, cisterns, and caves" (Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, iii, 284).

Margetson, JAMES, D.D., an Irish prelate, was born in 1600, at Drighlington, in Yorkshire, and received his education in Peterhouse College, Cambridge; was promoted to the parish of Watlas, in 1635, was advanced to the deanery of Waterford; in 1637 to that of Derry, and in 1639 was made dean of Christ Church, Dublin. Throughout the troubled period of 1641 his charity and benevolence to the sufferers were singularly eminent. In July, 1647, he joined in a remonstrance to the commissioners of the English Parliament, praying liberty for the use of the common prayer in their respective churches, and rejecting the directory ordered to be used instead. Soon after, the war obliged him to flee to England, where he was thrown into prison. He finally was released, and sought refuge in London. When Charles II was restored to the throne, Margetson was selected to fill the metropolitan chair of the province of Dublin, and was consecrated Jan. 27, 1660. In 1662 he enforced the principle of jurisdiction and control over the pulpits of his diocese. About this time Margetson was one of the spiritual peers who voted for the third reading of the Act of Settlement. During the time he presided over the see of Dublin he liberally contributed to the repair of both its cathedrals. In 1663 he was translated to the province of Armagh. He was also afterwards chosen vice-chancellor of Trinity College, Dublin. He died in August, 1678. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 275.

Margoliouth, MOSES, Ph.D., LL.D., a minister of the Church of England, was born of Jewish parentage in 1818, at Suwalki, in Poland. In 1837 he arrived in England, and in the year following openly professed Christianity. In 1840 he entered Trinity College, Dublin, and, after completing his studies, was ordained in 1844. He held various positions in the Episcopal Church, and at the time of his death, Feb. 25, 1881, he was vicar of Little Linford, near Newport Pagnell, Bucks, England. He is the author of many works: Fundamental Principles of Modern Judaism Investigated (Lond. 1848):—The Jews in Great Britain (ibid. 1846):—A Pilgrimage to the Land of my Fathers (ibid. 1850, 2 vols.):—History of the Jews in Great Britain (1851, 3 vols.):—Abyssinia, its Past, Present, and Future (1868):—The Spirit of Prophecy (1864):—Sacred Minstrelsy: A Lecture on Biblical and Post-Biblical Hebrew Music (1863):—The Oracles of God and their Vindication (1870):—Vestiges of the Historic Anglo-Hebrews in East Anglia (ed.).—The Poetry of the Hebrew Pentateuch (1871):—The Lord's Prayer no Adaptation of Existing Jewish Prayers (1876). Besides, he left a great many works in MS. (B. P.)

Marie (Madeleine) DE LA TRINITÉ, the founder of a religious order, was born June 3, 1616, at Aix, in Provence. She was the daughter of a soldier, and having resolved at the age of fifteen never to marry, placed herself under the direction of a Capuchin, Yvan, who composed for her a book, entitled Conduite à la Perfection Chrétienne. With his assistance she founded, in 1632, the order of La Miséricorde. This order, beginning in 1637, at Aix, had considerable difficulties, being much opposed by the archbishop of that place, but approved by the bishop of Avignon, and sustained by the Jesuits. She died at Avignon, Feb. 20, 1678. The order of La Miséricorde was approved, in 1642, by pope Urban VIII, and followed the rule of St. Augustine. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Mariette, AUGUSTE FERDINAND FRANÇOIS, a French archaeologist, was born at Boulogne-sur-Mer, Feb. 11, 1821. While yet a very young man he was intrusted with the task of arranging the papers of his deceased cousin, Nestor l'Hôte, the companion of Champollion in Egypt from 1827 to 1829. Thenceforth Auguste Mariette became inspired with an eager interest in Egyptian archaeology, and devoted his attention to the study of hieroglyphic and Coptic literature. In 1849 he received a post in the Egyptian department of the Louvre, and was shortly afterwards sent to Egypt for the purpose of seeking and purchasing Coptic MSS. in the monasteries of that country. Soon after his arrival at Cairo he made the great discovery of the long-lost Serapeum, or burial-place of the sacred bulls. This, together with other undertakings, is graphically described in his own narrative, Le Serapeum de Memphis (Paris, 1857). He had not long returned to France when he was offered and accepted the appointment of conservator of monuments to the Egyptian government. In this position he undertook a long series of important excavations in various parts of Egypt. The magnificent temples of Denderah and Edfu were completely disinterred, and hundreds of thousands of valuable inscriptions were brought to light. The Sphinx was laid bare; the mysterious building known as the Temple of the Sphinx was discovered; extensive works were proceeded with at Karnak, Deir el-Bahari, Medinet Habu, and Abydos; but we cannot catalogue his archaeological achievements. The Bulak Museum, and the many magnificent volumes in which he has recorded the results of his labors, are, after all, the noblest monuments to his memory. His Denderah (1873-75, 5 vols.):—his Monuments Divers (1872):—his Abydos (1870):—his magnificent Karnak (1875):—Deir el-Bahari (1877):—Liste Géographique des Pylones de Karnak (1875), etc., bear witness to his extraordinary industry, and would alone be enough work and honor for any one man. He died at Cairo, Jan. 19, 1881. (B. P.)

Markham, William, D.C.L., archbishop of York, was born in Ireland in 1719, but was brought to England in his infancy, and at an early age entered Westminster School. He was afterwards sent to Christ Church College, Oxford, where he obtained the degree of M.A. in 1745. In 1750 he was appointed to the office of high master of Westminster School, the duties of which he discharged with great industry and success for about fourteen years. In 1759 he was made a prebendary of Durham, in 1764 resigned his mastership of Westminster, and in the following year was preferred to the deanery of Rochester, which, in 1767, he vacated for that of Christ Church. In 1771 he was consecrated bishop of Chester, and in 1777 translated to the archiepiscopal see of York, from which he was removed by death, Nov. 3, 1807. The virtues of this distinguished prelate were of a most benevolent and amiable kind. With great learning he was modest; and though raised to the highest station he was meek and humble. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1807, p. 789.

Marlow, Michael, a Church of England divine, was born near London, in November, 1758. He was educated at Merchant Taylor's School, from which he was elected to a scholarship at St. John's College in the eighteenth year of his age. He was admitted actual fellow in 1779; took the degree of B.A. April 5, 1780; that of M.A. Feb. 11, 1784; and became B.D. in April, 1789, being the vicar of St. Giles's, in the suburbs of Oxford, and tutor of the college. In March, 1795, he was unanimously elected president of St. John's, and presented by the society to the rectory at Handborough, near Woodstock. He took the degree of D.D. on March 24 of the same year; served the office of vice-chancellor of the university during four years, viz. from Michaelmas term, 1798, to the same term, 1802; and was preferred to the prebendal stall of Canterbury in 1808. He was nominated one of the select preachers of the university in 1805, and again in 1817; was likewise a delegate of accounts, one of the commissioners of sewers, and curator of the Sheldonian Theatre. He died Feb. 16, 1828. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1828, p. 222.

Marperger, Bernhard Waltherr, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hamburg, May 14, 1682. He studied at Altdorf and other universities, was in 1705 preacher at Nuremberg, in 1724 court-preacher at Dresden, and died March 29, 1746, a doctor of divinity. He wrote, Auslegung der ersten Epistel Johannis (Nuremberg, 1710):—Diss. Inauguralis de Nova Veritate cum Pietate (Altdorf, 1724; Germ. transl. by Gräff, Leipsic, eod.):—De Agno ad Aræ Cornua Ligando, ad Illustr. Psa. xciii, 8 (Dresden, 1784), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 341; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Marquesan Version of the Scriptures. The Marquesan is a dialect spoken in the Marquesas or Washington group of islands, situated about nine degrees south of the equator, at a distance of nine hundred miles north-east of Tahiti. Ever since 1797 various efforts have been made at different intervals to proclaim the glad tidings of the gospel in these islands. For a long period these attempts were rendered abortive, till at length, in 1854, the Rev. Messrs. Rodgeron, Stallworthy, and Darling, agents of the London Missionary Society, met with some encouragement in their endeavors to instruct the people, and reclaim them from idolatry. Mr. Darling devoted himself to the translation of the Scriptures, or, rather, to the adaptation of the Tahitian version to the Marquesan dialect. Single extracts of Scripture were published, but the first complete book of the New Test.—the gospel of John—was not published till 1866. This is up to date the only gospel printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. See Bible of Every Land, p. 380. (B. P.)

Marryat, Zephaniah, D.D., an English Independent minister, was born about 1684. He was first an assistant preacher at Union Street, Southwark, with Mr. Samuel Palmer, who had a controversy with the Rev. John Wesley's father, and succeeded as sole pastor in 1710. He became a master of Greek literature. In 1720 he acquired reputation by a published work, The Exalted Saviour, intended to correct prevailing errors on the Trinity. He superintended a large charity-school in Gravel Lane, and preached a Sunday-evening lecture at Lime Street. In 1743 he was chosen divinity tutor at an academy held in Plasterers' Hall, and was very successful. He was also one of the Merchant Lecturers. He died suddenly, Sept. 15, 1754. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iv, 199.

Marsden, J. B., an English divine, was born about 1803. He graduated from St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1827, and was ordained to the curacy of Burslem, Staffordshire, from whence he removed to the curacy of Harrow, Middlesex. From 1833 to 1844 he held the rectory of Tooting, Surrey, during the minority of his successor. From 1844 to 1852 he was vicar of Great Missenden, Bucks, and from 1852 to his death, in 1870, incumbent of St. Peter's, Birmingham. Mr. Marsden published, The History of the Early Puritans, from the Reformation to the Opening of the Civil War:—The History of the Later Puritans, from the Opening of the Civil War to 1662:—The Churchmanship of the New Testament:—Discourses for the Festivals of the Church of England:—The Law of Fasting, as set forth in Holy Scripture, a pamphlet:—Sermons:—The Coming of Christ:—Sermons from the Old Testament:—Christian Churches and Sects:—Life of the Rev. Samuel Marsden, of New South Wales:—Life of the Rev. Hugh Stowell, of Manchester:—Two Sermons on the Life, Ministry, and Death of the Rev. Richard Marks, author of The Retrospect. He was also editor of the Christian Observer from 1859 to 1869. Although not gifted as a preacher, he was a ripe scholar, and his writings demonstrate his ability as an author. See (Lond.) Christian Observer, August, 1870, p. 633; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Marselus, Nicholas J., D.D., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in Mohawk Valley in 1792. He graduated from Union College in 1810, and from New Brunswick Seminary in 1815; was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick, became pastor at Greenbush and Blooming Grove from 1815 to 1822, New York city from 1822 to 1858, and thereafter was without a charge until his death, May 5, 1876. His publications are, Translation of Elijah (1825):—The Good Old Way (1830):—Gospel Ministry (1842):—Ministerial Appeal (1850):—A Sermon (eod.). See Corwin, Manual of the Reformed Church in America, 3d ed. p. 367.

Marsh, Sidney Harper, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Dr. James Marsh, was born at Hampden Sidney, Va., Aug. 29, 1825. He graduated from Vermont University in 1846; from 1846 to 1851 was employed in teaching; and the following year attended Union Theological Seminary. After his ordination as an evangelist, May 1, 1853, he went to Oregon in the service of the Society for Promoting Collegiate Education; became principal of Tualatin Academy, at Forest Grove; was chosen president of Pacific University, when it was incorporated, in 1854, and held that office until his death, Feb. 5, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 28.

Marshall, Alexander Washington, D.D., an Episcopal minister, was born at Charleston, S. C., Aug. 10, 1798. He graduated from the General Theological Seminary in 1823, and in October of that year was ordained deacon, and took charge of St. David's Church, Cheraw, S. C. Having been ordained to the priesthood, March 14, 1830, he continued there until 1841, when he was called to the organization and care of a city mission, worshipping in St. John's Chapel, Charleston. He died in that city, Nov. 7, 1876. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1877.

Marshall, George, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Pennsylvania in 1806. He graduated from Jefferson College, and entered upon his ministry at Bethel in 1832, in which relation he continued until his death, April 30, 1872. Dr. Marshall was well known in western Pennsylvania as one of the leaders of the Presbyterian Church. In the councils of the Church he was always heard with respectful attention, and his words were direct and weighty. See Presbyterian, May 18, 1872.

Marsollier, Jacques, a French ecclesiastical writer, was born at Paris in 1647, and died at Uzès in 1724. He is the author of, Histoire de l'Origine des Dîmes, des Bénéfices et des Autres Biens Temporels de l'Eglise (Lyons, 1689);—Histoire de l'Inquisition et de son Origine (Cologne, 1693; based upon Limborch's Historia Inquisitionis);—Histoire du Ministère du Cardinal de Ximénez (Toulouse, 1693; Paris, 1739);—Histoire de Henri VII. Roi d'Angleterre (1697);—La Vie de St. François de Sales (1700);—Apologie ou Justification d'Erasme (1718);—Entretiens sur les Devoirs de la Vie Civile, et sur Plusieurs Points de la Vie Morale Chrétienne (1714). Martens, Karl Andreas August, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 18, 1774, and died March 17, 1832, at Halberstadt, doctor of theology and first preacher. He wrote, Ueber die symbolischen Bücher der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche, etc. (Halberstadt, 1830);—Ueber Pietismus, sein Wesen und seine Gefahren (ibid. 1826);—Theophanes oder über die göttliche Offenbarung (ibid. 1819);—Eleutheros, oder Untersuchung über die Freiheit des menschlichen Willens (Magdeburg, 1823);—Jesus auf dem Gipfel seines irdischen Lebens (Halberstadt, 1811). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 835, 365, 369, 482, 550; ii, 159; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 855. (B. P.)

Martensen, Hans Larsen, one of the most prominent Danish Lutheran theologians, was born Aug. 9, 1808, at Flensburg. He studied at Copenhagen, and in 1832 passed the ecclesiastical examination and received a gold medal. The same year he received from the government a travelling scholarship, and visited Berlin, Munich, Vienna, and Paris, giving particular attention to the study of the philosophy of the Middle Ages. On his return to Denmark, in 1836, he became a licentiate in theology, submitting a thesis on the Autonomy of the Human Conscience, which was afterwards translated from the Latin into Danish (1841), and into German (1845). The next year he began to lecture to the younger students in the University of Copenhagen on moral philosophy. The material of these lectures was published in his Outline of a System of Moral Philosophy, in 1841. His lectures on Speculative Dogmatics, from 1840, when he became professor ordinarius, awakened extraordinary interest. "It was a new and unheard-of gospel, in charming language, that flowed from his inspired, enrapturing lips. Not merely did the students contend with one another for places in his lecture-room, but men advanced in years, of various callings, were found regular hearers." His popularity became greater still when, in 1845, he became court-preacher, and his Hegelianism began to give a coloring to the conscience of his generation. The public was thoroughly prepared to receive his doctrines gladly when, in 1849, he published the most successful and famous of his contributions to theological literature, his Christian Dogmatics, which has been translated into most European languages, even into modern Greek, and has exercised as wide an influence on Protestant thought as any volume of our century. In Germany it has enjoyed a popularity even wider than in Scandinavia, and has been honored by a formal refutation from the propaganda at Rome. It was not, however, unchallenged at home, a severe attack upon it having been made by professor Rasmus Nielsen, supported secretly by Kirkegaard (q. v.). In 1854, when bishop Mynster died, Martensen, who had refused the bishopric of Sleswig, accepted the primacy of Denmark, and began his administrative labors in the Church with acts of great vigor and determination. He became in consequence cordially detested, and violently attacked by all those sections of the Danish Lutheran body which wavered to this side or to that from a hierarchical orthodoxy. A great part of Martensen's time and energy henceforth was taken up with polemics against Grundtvig, Nielsen, the Catholics, and the Irvingites. Many of his later writings are of this purely controversial character, his Exposure of the So-called Grundtvigianism, which he styled "a leaven, but not a principle," his Catholicism and Protestantism, against the claims of the Vatican Council, his Socialism and Christendom. The time at his command, after faithful administration of his duties, was, during his earlier years, devoted to the preparation of his System of Christian Ethics (1871-78; German, 1878-79; English, 1878-82), and his final scientific work in the line of his early studies of the mystics, on Jacob Böhme (1879; German, 1882; English, by T. Rhys Evans, 1885). As a fitting conclusion of his literary activity, he published his Autobiography (1883). Dr. Martensen died, Feb. 3, 1884, and was buried with great solemnity in his own cathedral of Our Lady. The king and the Conservative party knew what they owed "to the rigid Tory prelate, whose face was set like a flint against the modern spirit in politics, in literature, in philosophy. He was a great man, a man who did honor to Denmark. It is not the critics of his own country only, it is the more impartial Germans, who have declared Hans Larsen Martensen to be the greatest Protestant theologian of the present century." See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 856; Quarterly Review (Lond. April, 1884); Lutheran Church Review (Philadelphia, Pa., July, 1884); Expositor (Lond. and N. Y., Jan. 1885). (B. P.)

Martigny, Alexandre, a French archæologist, was born April 22, 1808, at Sauvigny, France. He received holy orders in 1832, and died Aug. 19, 1880, at Belley. He is the author of the famous Dictionnaire des Antiquités Chrétiennes (Paris, 1864; 2d ed. 1877). In 1865 he published a French translation of De Rossi's Bulletino di Archeologia Cristiana. (B. P.)

Martin (better known as abbot Chaffrey), a Roman Catholic French writer, was born at Abries in 1813. In 1839 he received holy orders, and was appointed professor at the seminary in Embrun. He was honorary canon of different chapters, and died at Paris in 1872. He published, Le Panorama des Prédicateurs (1851-55, 3 vols.; 8th ed. 1864);—La Bibliothèque des Prédicateurs (1867-68, 4 vols.);—Théologie Morale en Tableaux (1857);—Répertoire de la Doctrine Chrétienne (1857; 2d ed. 1859-63, 3 vols.);—Portraits Littéraires des Plus Célèbres Prédicateurs Contemporains (1858);—Mois de Marie des Prédicateurs (eod. 2 vols.);—Sermons Nouveaux sur les Mystères de Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ (1860, 2 vols.);—Vies des Saints à l'Usage des Prédicateurs (1861-68, 4 vols.). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v. (B. P.)

Martin, Benjamin N., D.D., a Presbyterian minister and educator, was born at Mt. Holly, N. J., Oct. 20, 1816. He graduated from Yale College in 1837, and from Yale Divinity School in 1840. After serving the Congregational Church in Hadley for five years, he was installed pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church in Albany, N. Y. In 1852 he was appointed professor of logic, intellectual and moral philosophy, in the University of New York city, which position he held until his death, Dec. 26, 1883. Among the clergy and literary circles professor Martin enjoyed a large acquaintance. He was very popular among the students, and gave up his whole time to the university. He contributed largely to many religious journals, and was the author of several books. One of his many lectures was delivered before the Yale Theological School, entitled The Theology of the Doctrine of the Forces. See N. Y. Observer, Jan. 3, 1884; Cong. Year-book, 1884, p. 30. (W. P. S.)

Martin, Bon-Louis Henri, a celebrated French historian, was born at St. Quentin, Feb. 20, 1810. He studied at Paris, and like all the other young men of his epoch, fell under the influence of the romantic school, and commenced his literary career with writing verses for periodicals. But he soon betook himself to his life-long study of the history of France. Paul Lacroix suggested that Martin should help him in preparing an immense historical work in forty-eight volumes. It was not to be a history of France, but a collection of extracts from chronicles and histories, extending from the earliest period to 1830. The first volume appeared in 1833, when Martin's colleague deserted him, and he concluded the book in 1836. He then wrote the first volume of a history of Saisons; and believing his studies had fitted him for the task, he commenced the prodigious labor of writing a complete history of France. His interest in the history of the Gauls makes his first volumes the most attractive of all. As successive editions were called for, he spent his time in painstaking revisions of his history, incorporating every new discovery, and keeping his book, up to the fourth edition, in 1878, entirely abreast of the knowledge of the time. In 1878 and 1879 he published a history of France from 1789 to 1830, in four volumes, as a sequel to his great work. In 1878 he was elected a member of the Académie Française, in place of Thiers. Martin died Dec. 14, 1883. With him expired the last of the great historians bred in the school of Thierry. See Hanotaux, Henri Martin (Paris, 1885). (B. P.)

Martin, Conrad, a Roman Catholic prelate of Germany, was born May 18, 1812, at Geismar, Prussia, and studied under Allioli and Dollinger, as well as under Gesenius, Tholuck, and Tuch. For some time religious instructor at Cologne, Martin was, in 1844, appointed professor and inspector of the clerical seminary in Bonn. In 1856 he was elected bishop of Paderborn, and from that time was the obedient servant of the papal see. As a member of the Vatican Council, he belonged to those bishops who advocated the infallibility of the pope. He was the first who openly protested against the Prussian May-laws of 1873, and thus he came in conflict with the government. He was fined, and finally imprisoned at Wesel. He escaped into Belgium, and died in exile, July 19, 1879, at St. Guibert. He was buried at Paderborn. He wrote, Lehrbuch der katholischen Religion für höhere Lehranstalten (5th ed. Mayence, 1873);—Lehrbuch der katholischen Moral (5th ed. ibid. 1865);—Die Wissenschaft von den göttlichen Dingen (3d ed. ibid. 1869);—Die Arbeiten des vatikanischen Konzils (Paderborn, 1870);—Vaticani Concilii Documentorum Collectio (ibid. 1871);—Drei Jahre aus meinem Leben (Mayence, 1877), describing his imprisonment and escape;—Blicke ins Jenseits (ibid. 1877);—Zeitbilder (ibid. 1879, posthumous). (B. P.)

Martin, Jacques, a Protestant theologian of Geneva, was born in 1794. While yet a student, he was obliged to take part in the campaigns against Germany, which the first Napoleon inaugurated. He fought in the battles at Leipsic and Waterloo, and in 1815 went to Geneva. For two years he followed commercial pursuits, and then betook himself to theological study. In 1818 he was enrolled as a student, and in 1822 graduated, presenting for his thesis, L'Unité de la Foi.

Martin soon distinguished himself, both as an instructor and pulpit orator, and his writings were not only often reprinted, but some of them, as L'Oraison Dominicale, were even translated into other languages. He died in 1874. See Rouvier, Jacques Martin, Prédicateur Patriote, in the Étranges Religieuses (1877), and the same in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Martin, James, D.D., an Associate minister, was born at Albany, N. Y., May 12, 1796. He graduated from Union College, Schenectady, in 1819, and after a course in theology in the theological seminary of Philadelphia, was licensed Sept. 2, 1822, and soon after took charge of an Associate Reformed congregation at Albany. He edited the Religious Monitor in 1833. In 1842 he was elected professor of didactic theology and Hebrew in the theological seminary at Cannonsburg, Pa. He died June 15, 1846. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iii, 112.

Martin, Johann, a Reformed theologian, who died at Groningen in 1665, is the author of, Analys Populæ in Malachiam Prophetam;—Analys Populæ in Epistolas ad Philippenses et Thessalonicenses. See Benthem, Holländischer Kirchen-Staat: Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Martin (Paschout), Joseph, a Protestant theologian, was born at Nîmes, Oct. 14, 1802. He studied at Geneva, was for some time pastor at Luneray, and in 1828 at Lyons, where he labored with his former classmate, Adolphe Monod. In 1837 he was called to Paris, but after two years of work was obliged to retire from the active ministry for a time on account of an incurable disease. In 1839 he commenced publishing a monthly journal, entitled Le Disciple de Jésus Christ. In 1853 he founded L'Alliance Chrétienne Universelle, on the following basis: "Love of God, the Creator and Father of all men; love of all men, the immortal creatures and children of God; love of Jesus Christ, the son of God and Saviour of mankind." Adolphe Monod was the first who wrote against the principles of this journal. In 1851 the consistory of Paris appointed the younger Athanase Coquerel as his assistant, and made him retire, under the pretext of heresy, in 1864. In spite of the protests of his medical advisers, Martin resumed his ministerial functions. In 1868 he succeeded Athanase Coquerel, the father, as president of the presbytery, and died May 24, 1873, at Loges, near Versailles. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Martin, Samuel, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Chestnut Level, Lancaster Co., Pa., Jan. 9, 1767. He was converted in his twenty-second year, graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1790, was licensed by the Baltimore Presbytery in May, 1793, and soon after was installed pastor of the congregation at Slateridge, York Co., laboring there faithfully for five years, and then accepted a call from the congregation at Chaneford, where he remained until 1812. He died June 28, 1845. Dr. Martin published several sermons: two in which the doctrine of election is proved and illustrated (1806); one on Regeneration, printed in the Spruce Street Lectures; and one entitled Children are an Heritage of the Lord. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 118.

Masada. The ruins of this stronghold, now called Sebbek, are minutely delineated in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 417 sq.). See also Tristram, Land of Moab, p. 46 sq. The following, from Conder's Tent Work (ii, 140), embraces the chief points:

"The rock of Masada measures 350 yards east and west, by 690 yards north and south, and its cliffs are 1500 feet in height above the plain on the east. Two paths lead up to the plateau on the top, that on the east being a winding ascent, now almost impassable, but by which captain Warren went up; this is apparently the path called the 'Serpent' by Josephus. The second path, on the west, ascends from a narrow sloping bank of white marl, which is about 1000 feet high, and which Josephus calls the 'White Promontory'; upon this rises the great ramp, about 800 feet high, which the Romans piled up against the rock during the siege, a work so laborious that it seems almost incredible that human efforts could have accomplished it in so short a time. At the top of the ramp is the masonry wall which the besiegers built as a foundation for their engines, before discovering the great tragedy that had been enacted within the fortress, where the garrison had fallen by one another's swords.

"A fatiguing climb brought us to the plateau at the top. Here is a polished archway, indicative of Crusading masonry, and scored with the tribe-marks of the Jāhālū and Itshādīdīh Arabs, which were on a former occasion mistaken by a distinguished Frenchman for planetary signs.

"We fell to work at once with tape and compass to plan and describe the ruins. The buildings are principally on the north-west part of the rock, and they are of various dates. The most ancient appear to be the long rude walls, resembling the buildings at Herodium (Jebel Fureidīa), but the majority of the masonry is to be ascribed to the Christians of the 5th or 12th centuries. There is a chapel on the plateau, and also a cave, in which I found a curious inscription with crosses, which is, apparently, a new discovery. It is painted in red, and resembles some of the 12th and 13th century inscriptions near Jericho.

"The most extraordinary feature of this wonderful place has yet to be noticed. The Romans in their attack on Masada followed the same method which had reduced Jerusalem. They surrounded the unhappy Jews with a wall of circumvallation. Looking down from the summit, the ruins of this wall—a drystone parapet, running across the plain and up the southern hill-slopes—could be distinctly traced.

"Two large camps, also walled with stone, lay spread out behind this line on the west and east, and six smaller ones, like redoubts, on the low ground; the entire length of the wall was not less than 3000 yards, as measured on our plan, and the whole remains almost as it was left eighteen hundred years ago."

Masbotheans, the disciples of Masbotheus, who is said by some of the ancients to have been a follower of Simon Magus (q. v.).

Maasius, HECTOR GOTTFRIED, a Lutheran theologian, was born April 13, 1653. He studied at different universities, went to France in 1682 as chaplain to the Danish embassy, and was made in 1685 doctor and professor of theology at Copenhagen. He died Sept. 20, 1709, leaving, Défense de la Religion Lutherienne:—Bericht vom dem Unterschied der lutherischen und reformirten Lehre:—De Profanatione Hostiarum Consecratæ:—De Pallio Pauli:—Schediæsmata Triæ Sacra, Scilicet 1, De Contentu Concilii Tridentini; 2, De Polymathia Scripturæ Sacrarum; 3, De Synopaxia Pauli. Mason, Charles, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born July 26, 1812, at Portsmouth, N. H. He graduated with honor from Harvard College in 1832; studied theology at the General Theological Seminary, New York city; was ordained deacon and priest by bishop Griswold; became rector of St. Peter's Church, Salem, Mass., in May, 1837; and of Grace Church, Boston, in 1847, which position he held until his death, March 23, 1862. For a long time he was a member of the standing committee of the diocese, and was prominent in various missionary enterprises. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1862, p. 735.

Mason, Cyrus, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Nassau, N. Y., July 19, 1798. He graduated from Union College in View from the Summit of Sebbek.

1824; spent two years in Princeton Theological Seminary; was ordained by the Presbytery of New York, Dec. 7, 1826, pastor of Cedar Street Church, New York city; in 1835 became pastor of the Beneficent Congregational Church, Providence, R. I.; in 1836 professor of political economy and ethics in the University of New York, a position which he retained until 1850. He died in New York city, May 28, 1865. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 50.

Mason, Sumner R., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Cheshire, Berkshire Co., Mass., June 14, 1819. He was for two years a member of Yale College (1838-40); then became a member of the First Baptist Church in New Haven, and devoted the next seven years to teaching, most of the time in Nashville, Tenn., where he was licensed to preach, Sept. 7, 1844; and studied theology under Rev. Dr. Howell. He was ordained pastor of the First Baptist Church, Lockport, N. Y., Aug. 22, 1849; then became pastor of the First Baptist Church in Cambridge, Mass., March 4, 1855, where he continued an able and successful minister until his death, Aug. 26, 1871. A volume of his sermons and essays, edited by Rev. A. Hovey, D.D., with a sketch of his life and character, by Rev. O. A. Stearns, D.D., was issued by the Riverside (Cambridge) press in 1874. (J. C. S.)

Massaroon, Robert, D.D., an Irish Methodist preacher, was born at Londonderry in 1790. He joined the Methodist society in his eighteenth year, and in 1811 entered the ministry of the Irish Conference. He was a pious, prudent, intelligent, and devoted Methodist preacher for nearly fifty years, and, in 1859, from failing health, became a supernumerary, but as a scholar and gentleman he continued to labor as treasurer of the Methodist Annuitant Society and Auxiliary Fund, and closed his useful life in Dublin, March 8, 1871. He filled several official positions in Irish Methodism, was an able advocate of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and a useful guide to young ministers in studying the original text of the Holy Scriptures.

Massoeh, Stephen C., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, first appears in the records as a missionary in St. Louis, Mo., in 1857, and remained there until 1859, when he was appointed to the "Mission of the North-west," which was then under the jurisdiction of Joseph C. Talbot, D.D., missionary bishop. Dr. Massoeh was especially to minister to the Germans and Bohemians in Osage, Neb. Shortly after, he removed to Arago, devoting himself to the same work, and remained in this sphere of labor until 1866, when he removed to Baltimore, Md. In 1868 he was a resident of Covington, Ky. He died May 30, 1870. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1871, p. 118.

Mastricht, Peter von, a Dutch theologian, was born in 1630. He studied at Duisburg and Utrecht, was for some time professor of Hebrew and of theology at Frankfurt, and in 1689 professor at Duisburg. In 1677 he was called to Utrecht, and died Feb. 10, 1706. He wrote, Theologia Theoretico-Practica (2 vols.):—Exercitationes Analyticae et Exegeticae ad Esa. liii.—Synlogma de Fide Suleifica:—Vindiciae Veritatis et Autoritatis Sacrae Scripturae in Rebus Philosophicis contra Wittichium:—Academiae Ultrajectinae Votum Symbolicum. Matahiti (Maou Roa), the ripening or completing of the year, a festival regularly observed in Huahine, Polynesia. Men, women, and children attended this festival, but the females were not allowed to enter the sacred enclosure. They held a sumptuous banquet annually, the time of which was regulated by the blossoming of reeds. When the prayers were finished at the mure, and the banquet ended, each individual returned to his home or family mure to offer special prayers for the spirits of departed relatives, that they might be liberated from the po, or state of night, and ascend to rohutomoao, the mount Meru of Polynesia, or return to this world, by entering into the body of one of its inhabitants.

Matamoros, Manuel, a Spanish Protestant, was born Oct. 8, 1835, at Lepe, in the province of Huelva. In 1850 he entered the military school at Toledo, but the life of the soldiers which he witnessed there caused such a dislike for a military career that he left the school and went to Malaga, where his mother was then residing. On a visit to Gibraltar he casually attended a service held by Francisco de Paula Ruet (q. v.), who impressed him so deeply that Matamoros bought a New Test., which convinced him of the errors of Romanism. Through Ruet, Matamoros came into relations with a committee in Edinburgh, and later, with one in Paris, which prosecuted the evangelization of Spain. He went, under commission of the latter, to Granada, Seville, and Barcelona (1860). At Granada he became acquainted with José Alhama, a hat-maker, who had been converted through the instrumentality of an American tract, and was preaching the gospel. When arrested letters were found on his person from Matamoros, Morin, Carrasco, and Gonzalez, all of whom were likewise imprisoned. Two years Matamoros was kept at Granada awaiting his trial. Through the influence of a deputation of the Evangelical Alliance, and the efforts of queen Elizabeth of Prussia, Matamoros was released, May 28, 1863, on condition that he should leave the country. He went on a visit to England, where he was cordially welcomed, and afterwards to Lausanne, where he attended the theological seminary. On a visit to Pau, in southern France, he made the acquaintance of an American lady, whom he induced to establish there a Spanish school. Returning to Lausanne in May, 1866, he died just a few days before the time set for his ordination, July 31, and two years before his country was opened to Protestant missions (1868). His name will not be forgotten beside that of Ruet, Carrasco, Alhama, and other evangelists in Spain. Mateer, Joseph, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Hill Head parish, County Down, Ireland. He graduated from Belfast College, and after removing to the United States entered Princeton Theological Seminary, remaining one year, and then went to the Western Theological Seminary, where he graduated in 1854. He was ordained, and installed pastor of the church of Leatherwood, Pa., and also of the Licking Church. After twenty-one years of successful labor he was released, and installed over Sligo Church, from whence he was transferred to New Bethlehem, where he remained till 1881. He died in Bethlehem, Oct. 1, 1883. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1884, p. 38.

Mat'h, the residence of a monastic community among the Hindûs. It consists of a number of buildings, including a set of huts or chambers for the Ma-haut or superior, and his resident Chêlus or disciples; a temple sacred to the deity whom they worship, or the Samâdh, or shrine of the founder of the sect, or some eminent teacher; and one or more sheds or buildings for the accommodation of the mendicants or travellers who are constantly visiting the Mat'h, both ingress and egress being free to all. The number of permanent pupils in a Mat'h varies from three or four to thirty or forty; besides whom there is also a considerable number of out-door members. Most of the Mat'hs have a small endowment of land, which they either let at a fixed rental, or cultivate on their own account. Besides this they often receive generous contributions from lay votaries, alms gathered by members who go out to seek them, and the profits arising from traffic covertly carried on.

Mathêma (μάθημα, a lesson), a name usually given in the ancient Greek writers to the creed, probably because the catechumens were obliged to learn it.

Mather, R. Cotton, LL.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at New Windsor, Manchester, Nov. 8, 1806. He graduated from Glasgow University, studied two years at Homerton Theological College, was ordained June 1, 1833, and the same year proceeded to India in the service of the London Missionary Society, settling in Benares, where he resided till May, 1838, then left for Mirzapore, in order to establish a new mission in that city, laboring there the rest of his missionary life with great success. He wrote tracts, theological treatises, and works of a varied character, both in Hindû and Urdu. He died April 21, 1877. See (Lond.) Evangelical Magazine, July, 1877, p. 420; (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 325.

Mathieu, Jacques Marie Adrien Césaire, a French prelate, was born at Paris, Jan. 26, 1796. He first studied law, but afterwards betook himself to the study of theology, entered the seminary of St. Sulpice, was ordained priest, and became secretary to the bishop of Evreux in 1823. In 1833 he was appointed bishop of Langres, and in the following year he was raised to the archiepiscopal see of Besançon. In 1850 he was made cardinal. As a member of the senate he was a zealous defender of the rights of the Church, and, in spite of the interdict of the government, he published the papal encyclical of Dec. 8, 1864. Mathieu died at Besançon in 1875. Of his brochures we especially mention Le Pouvoir Temporel des Papes Justifié par l'Histoire (1863). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Matsyavātara, in Hindû mythology, is the incarnation of Vishnu as a fish, the Maja-fish, with the surname Cakṣa. The fable is told as follows: Brahma had fallen asleep; the giant Haja-griwa stole from the sleeping god the four Vedas, the laws of the world, and the lawless world now sank into the kingdom of evil. Then Vishnu saved the world in the form of a fish, by following the giant, who hid under the sea, and compelling him to surrender the books.

Matthews, John, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Guilford County, N. C., Jan. 19, 1772. He was licensed to preach in 1801, by the Presbytery of Orange, and crossed the desert country to Natchez, Miss., acting as a missionary there. In April, 1803, he returned to North Carolina, and shortly after received a call to the churches of Nutbush and Grassy Creek, where he continued till 1806, then removed to Martinsburg, Va., and after a year resigned this for the charge at Shepherdstown. Here he continued till 1836, preaching as stated supply of this Church and that of Charlestown, and frequently also at Harper's Ferry. He next took a charge at Martinsburg and Charlestown, and when the theological seminary was established at Hanover, Ind., he was invited to become professor. He died at New Albany, May 19, 1848. His publications are, Letters on the Divine Purpose, and The Influence of the Bible.

Matthews, John Daniel, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Shepherdstown, Va., June 9, 1809. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1827, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1831. He was ordained an evangelist by the Presbytery of Georgia, became a stated supply of St. Mary's in 1832, and subsequently of the Second Church, Philadelphia. In 1838 he was installed pastor of Opequan and Cedar churches, Va. He became pastor of the Church at Norfolk in 1837, and after five years removed to the McChord Church, Lexington, Ky. After this he supplied the churches of Hopewell, Paducah, and Henderson. For six years he was superintendent of public instruction in Kentucky, after which he supplied the churches of Jackson Street, Mobile; Second Church, Baltimore; New York Avenue Church, Washington City; Portland Avenue Church, Louisville, Ky., and Dennison, Tex. He died at Dallas, March 7, 1884. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1884, p. 13.

Matthews, Joseph M'Dowell, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Augusta County, Va., Dec. 8, 1804. At the age of ten he removed with his parents to Kentucky, and, settling on a farm, was given a thorough private academical education, which he increased by personal effort. He joined the Church at the age of eighteen, was licensed to preach in 1825, in 1827 began a school or academy for boys in Hillsborough, O., which he continued till 1831, when he entered the Ohio Conference. In 1831-32 he served the Church in Chillicothe, and in 1833 in Cincinnati. There his health failed, and he retired to a farm, where he spent nearly six years. In 1839 he opened the Oakland Female Seminary, where he did noble work until 1856, when he took charge of the Hillsborough Female College. In 1860 he became president of Jessamine Female College, Nicholasville, Ky., but in 1863 returned to Hillsborough, and opened a private boarding-school. In 1872 he again accepted a call to the presidency of Hillsborough Female College, where he remained until ill-health led him, in 1877, to resign his office, and retire to his home in the suburbs of Hillsborough, where he died, Aug. 5, 1879. See Minutes of Annual Fall Conferences, 1879, p. 15.

Matthews, Robert C., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Shepherdstown, Va., April 2, 1822. He was educated in Illinois, where he practiced law until he was converted, then, after a year or two in the theological seminary, was ordained and installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Monmouth, Ill., Dec. 20, 1852. His labors in this Church were attended with great success. He died there, Nov. 15, 1881. See N. Y. Observer, Dec. 1, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Matthiä, Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1584. He studied at Strasburg and Giessen, was in 1614 rector at the gymnasium in Durlach, in 1618 professor of theology at Altdorf, in 1629 professor at Sora, in Denmark, in 1639 at Leyden, and in 1641 pastor of the Lutheran congregation at the Hague. In 1645 he resigned his position, retired to Utrecht, and died Jan. 22, 1655. He wrote, Ezercitationes Metaphysicæ xii:—Methodica Scripturæ Sacre Loca Indicandi Ratio:—Historia Patriarcharum:—Analysia Typica Evangelii Matthæi:—Antilogie Biblicæ, etc. See Moller, Cimbria Litterara; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Matthiä, Wolf Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Denmark, was born Jan. 28, 1734. He studied at Kiel, was in 1762 military preacher, in 1770 pastor at Rendsburg, in 1778 member of consistory, and died Jan. 29, 1787. He wrote, Diss. Historia Samuelis, Sauli et Davidis, ad Amorum Rationes Digesta (Kiel, 1752):—Beschreibung der Kirchenverfassung in den Herzogthümern Schleswig und Holstein (Flensburg, 1778-86, 2 vols.):—Schriftmässige Betrachtung über das Leiden und Sterben Jesu Christi (ibid. 1786). Mauli fata (altar-raising), a religious ceremony in Polynesia. Numbers of figs, with abundance of plantains, were placed upon the altars, which were newly ornamented with branches of the sacred miro, and yellow leaves of the cocoanut-tree. These rites extended to every maræ in the island, and were designed to secure rain and fertility for the country gained by conquest or recovered from invasion.

Mauksisch, JOHANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 14, 1617. He studied at Leipsic, and died at Dantzic, June 8, 1669, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, Note Philologico-Theologica Notitium Dei Naturalem ex Selectis Scripturæ Dictis Explicantes:—Paulina anti-Calviniana, Absolutum Decretum per Totam Epistolam ad Romanos Elidens:—Scripta anti-Pupistica:—Ezercitationes de Universalis Gratia:—De Ecclesia in Genere:—Programmata de Promissione Messie ex Ps. xl, de Adventu Messie ex Pau. xiv, 7, etc. See Witte, Memoria Theologorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Maulavi, the name usually given to a Mohammedan priest in India.

Maupertuy (or Maupertuis), JEAN-BAPTISTE DROUET DE, a French ecclesiastical writer, was born at Paris in 1650. He was educated at the Jesuit college of Louis-le-Grand, and for a time dedicated himself to poetry and literature. In spite of his talents he did not achieve anything, owing to the life of dissipation which he led, and which cost him not only his fortune but the best part of his life. At the age of forty he renounced the joys of this world and led a retired life. In 1692 he retired to the abbey of Sept-Fons, and five years later was made a priest by the archbishop of Vienne. He returned to Paris, and died at St.-Germain-en-Laye, March 10, 1736. He wrote, Pensées Chrétiennes et Morales (1703):—Histoire de la Réforme de l'Abbaye des Sept-Fons (1702):—Les Sentiments d'un Chrétien Touché d'un Véritable Amour de Dieu (1716):—L'Histoire de la Sainte Église de Vienne. Besides, he translated into French the Institutions of Lactantius; Salvianus's treatise on Providence, etc. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Maurer, FRANZ JOSEPH VALENTIN DOMINIK, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Rottweil, Feb. 14, 1795. In 1820 he received holy orders, but in 1821 joined the Evangelical Church. For some time he was collaborator at the Thomas School in Leipsic, but afterwards retired to Stuttgart, devoting himself entirely to literary work. He died in 1856. He published, Commentar über das Buch Josua (Stuttgart, 1831):—Commentarius Grammaticus Criticus in Vet. Testamentum (Leipsic, 1832 sq.; vol. i contains all the historical books, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Lamentations; vol. ii, Ezekiel, Daniel, and the minor prophets; vol. iii, Psalms and Proverbs). There is great disproportion in the mode of treatment. All the historical books from Genesis to Esther are comprised in two hundred and fifty pages, and it is only after Isaiah that the treatment begins to be more ample, and is then really valuable. Maurer's work was continued by August Heiligstedt. Besides, Maurer published, Praktischer Cursus über die Formenlehre der hebr. Sprache (Leipsic, 1837):—Kurzgefasstes hebräisches u. chaldäisches Wörterbuch (Stuttgart, 1851). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 14, 194, 208; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 861 sq.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 385 sq. (B. P.)

Mauritian Creole Version of the Scriptures. This version is intended for the mixed population of Mauritius. A translation of the gospel of Matthew was made by the Rev. S. H. Anderson, who was born in Mauritius, and spent thirty-two years on the island, ten of which he was minister to the Protestant negroes. The same gentlemen also states that the Mauritian Creole is spoken by 350,000 of the 360,000 inhabitants of the island, and that it is the only medium of communication among all the languages and dialects of the island. Mr. Anderson's translation was published during the year 1884 by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and as the report of that society for 1885 states, "the whole consignment was bought up before it was even unpacked, and that half of it was secured by bishop Royston for the inhabitants of Seychelle." (B. P.)

Mauritii, FRIEDRICH MAXIMILIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Basle, Aug. 17, 1724. He studied at Halle, was for some time private tutor, in 1757 rector at Minden, in 1768 professor of theology and member of consistory at Butzow, and died March 5, 1799. He wrote, Diss. de Perseverantia Credentium Usque ad Finem (Halle, 1753):—Verauch einer Erklärung der schweren Stelle Zuch. xii, 11-14 (Rinteln, 1764, 1772):—Die Göttlichkeit der heiligen Schrift (Minden, 1765):—De Incarnatione Filii Dei (Butzow, 1769-72):—Quantum Interit, Jesum Resurrexiisse (ibid. 1770):—De Inhabitatione Dei (ibid. 1775). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Mauritius, CASPAR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 2, 1615. He studied at Rostock and Königsberg, was in 1644 professor at Rostock, in 1650 doctor of theology, in 1662 pastor at Hamburg, and died April 14, 1675. He wrote, Ezercitationes anti-Calvinianæ, anti-Socinianæ, Logicæ, Politicæ:—In Formulæ Concordiæ:—Theses de Confessione et Absolutione Privata:—Dissertationes de Gratia Irresistibili:

Mauritus, a Scotch prelate, was first abbot of Inchaffray, and became bishop of the see of Dunblane in 1319. He was bishop there in 1333. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 175.

Mauro ura (the red sash), a very sacred relic, held in the highest estimation by the natives of Tahiti, one of the Society Islands. It "was a piece of network, about seven inches wide and six feet long, upon which the red feathers of the parrot were neatly fastened. It was used at the inauguration of their greatest kings, just as the crown is with us, and the most honorable appellation which a chief could receive was, Arii mauro ura, 'King of the Red Sash.' A new piece, about eighteen inches in length, was attached at the inauguration of every sovereign; to accomplish which several human victims were required. The first was for the mau raa titi, or the stretching it upon pegs in order to attach to it the new piece. Another was necessary for the fatu raa, or attaching the new portion; and a third for the pia raa, or twitching the sacred relic off the pegs. This not only invested the sash itself with a high measure of solemn importance, but also rendered the chiefs who wore it most noble in public estimation." See Williams, Narrative of Missionary Enterprises in the South Sea Islands.

Mausolæum, a name originally applied to the magnificent sepulchre erected by Artemisia, at Halicarnassus, B.C. 352, to the memory of her husband, Mausolus, king of Caria. The term has now come to denote any costly tomb.

Maut (or Mut), a chief Egyptian goddess, the wife of Amen-Ra, and the second member of the great Theban triad. She was considered as the mother goddess par excellence, or the great receptive female principle; and she was generally represented as seated upon a throne, wearing either the Phœnix, or sacred double crown, or else the body and plumes of a vulture as her head-dress. She was dressed in a long robe, often richly ornamented, and she held in her right hand the usual Crux-ansata, and in her left the papyrus staff of the goddesses. Her chief titles were, "The Mother," "The Lady of Heaven," and "The Regent of all the Gods." The vulture was both her symbol and her sacred bird. Her analogues were in some of her attributes the Hera and Cybele and Thermuthis of the Greeks, and possibly the Bona Dea of the Romans.

Maxwell, John, D.D., a Scotch prelate, was first minister at Murthlack, and then in the city of Edinburgh in 1620. He was advanced to the see of Ross in 1633; deprived in 1638, and fled to England for protection. He died Feb. 14, 1646. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 203.

Maxwell, Robert, a Scotch prelate, was rector of Forbolton in 1521, and soon after provost of the collegiate church in Dumbarton. He was bishop of Orkney till after 1536. He built the stalls in his cathedral, and furnished the steeple with a set of bells. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 223.

May, Johann Heinrich (1), a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 5, 1653. He studied at Wittenberg, was professor of Oriental languages at Giessen, and died Sept. 3, 1719, doctor of theology. He published, De Canone Veteris Test. (Giessen, 1689):—Animadversiones et Supplementa Cocceji Lexicon (Frankfort, 1689, fol.; 3d ed. 1714):—Diss. IV de Sacra Scriptura (ibid. 1690):—Selectiora Vet. Testamenti Oracula Explicata, etc. (eod.):—Biblia Hebraica (ibid. 1692):—De Lustrationibus et Purificationibus Hebræorum (ibid. eod.):—De Salis Usu Symbolico (ibid. eod.):—Theologia Davidis (ibid. 1693):—Ebraice Lingue Eju-

Mayan Version of the Scriptures. Mayan is the vernacular of a tribe of Indians inhabiting Yucatan, a peninsula to the east of Mexico, projecting northward between the gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean sea. In 1864 only a part of the gospel of Luke was published by the British and Foreign Bible Society in this dialect. In 1869 the gospel of John was printed in England, the translation having been made by the Rev. R. Fletcher. See Bible of Every Land, p. 468. (B. P.)

Mayer, Georg Karl Wilhelm, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1807 at Aschbach, Franconia. He received holy orders in 1837, was cathedral chaplain at Bamberg in 1838, in 1842 was appointed professor of theology at the lyceum, in 1862 member of the chapter, and died July 22, 1868. He wrote, Geist und Natur im speculative Systeme Günther's (Bamberg, 1842):—Der Mensch nach der Glaubenslehre der alten Kirche (1854, 5 vols.):—Commentar über die Briefe des Johannes (Vienna, 1851):—Aechtheit des Evangeliums nach Johannes (ibid. 1854):—Die patriarchalischen Verfassungen und die messianischen Psalmen (Nördlingen, 1859):—Messianische Prophezeiungen (Vienna, 1863-66, 2 vols.). (B. P.)

Mayerhoff, Ernst Theodor, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Neuruppin, Dec. 5, 1806, and died at Berlin in December, 1837, licentiate and private lecturer in theology. He published, Die Petrinischen Schriften (Hamburg, 1835):—Johann Reuchlin und seine Zeit (Berlin, 1830):—Die Wahlenser in unsern Tagen (ibid. 1834):—Anagarius oder der Anfangspunkt des Christenthums in Schweden (ibid. 1837; transl. from the Swedish of H. Reuterdaahl):—Der Brief an die Colosser (published after the author's death by L. Mayerhoff, ibid. 1838). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 91, 578, 833; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 863. (B. McAll, Robert Stephens, LL.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Plymouth, Aug. 2, 1792. He was educated at Hoxton Academy and at the University of Edinburgh, studying medicine chiefly. At the age of twenty-one he became pastor at Macclesfield. In January, 1827, he accepted the charge of the Mosley Street Church, Manchester, where he died, July 27, 1838. He was a preacher of rare eloquence. See (Lond.) Evang. Magazine, January, 1839, p. 1.

McAuley, CATHERINE, foundress of the Sisters of Mercy, was born at Stormanstown House, County Dublin, Ireland, Sept. 29, 1787. When of age she formed a regular system for the distribution of food and clothing to the needy, and called in the lame and blind to partake of her bounty. She also erected, in 1824, a large building in a fashionable quarter of Dublin. She made a novitiate in the Presentation Convent in Dublin, professed Dec. 12, 1831, and was appointed by the archbishop superior of her order, the objects of which were, the education of the poor and the protection of good women in distress. When the cholera visited Dublin, in 1832, she and her sisters nursed the hospital patients until they recovered. The women admitted into her houses of refuge were taught various useful employments, and, as soon as possible, provided with good situations. Her order developed rapidly. Many ladies of distinction joined it. Houses were established in London. Ten houses were founded in Ireland during her lifetime, and two in England, and in the course of forty years there were over two hundred convents of the order in Great Britain, United States, Newfoundland, South America, Australia, and New Zealand, with more than three thousand sisters. She died in Dublin, Nov. 11, 1841. Her life has been written by Mother Austin of New Orleans (New York, 1866). See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1882, p. 73.

McBride, JOHN, a very prominent minister of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland during its early history, who suffered persecution from the Established Church because he boldly advocated the rights of Independency, was a native of Ireland, educated at the University of Glasgow, where he was enrolled in 1666. About 1670 he was ordained by the Presbytery of Tyrone to the pastoral charge of the congregation of Clowe, in the county of Armagh, where he officiated nearly twenty years. In 1694 he succeeded Rev. Patrick Adair as minister of the Belfast congregation, where he labored until his death in 1718. He was a popular preacher, and an able and expert disputant. See Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland.

McCabe, Edward, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born in Dublin in 1816. In 1856 he was appointed parish priest of St. Nicholas, one of the poorest and most populous localities in Dublin. Archbishop Cullen appointed him one of his vicars-general in 1863, transferring him to the important parish of Kingstown. In 1877 Dr. McCabe, as bishop of Gadara in partibus, was appointed bishop-auxiliary. He was confirmed cardinal by the pope, March 24, 1879, and died Feb. 10, 1885.

McCabe, James D., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector of a church in Wheeling, Va., in 1853; in 1857 he was serving in Baltimore, being rector of St. Stephen's; in 1861 he was rector of St. James's Parish, Tracy's Landing, Md., where he remained until 1867, when he was chosen rector of Zion Church, in Urbana; to this charge was added the pastorate of St. Peter's, Montgomery County, in 1871. In 1873 he officiated in Baltimore without regular charge. He died Aug. 1, 1875, aged sixty-seven years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 149.

McCabe, John Collins, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, ordained deacon in 1847, was rector for many years in Hampton, Va., until 1855 or 1856; then he became rector of the Church of the Ascension, Baltimore, Md., remaining until 1860, when he accepted the rectorship of St. James's Church, West River, and remained until 1863. Subsequently he went to Virginia, and, immediately after the civil war in the South, became rector of St. Matthew's Church, Bladensburg; in 1868 was rector of St. Ann's, Middletown, Del.; in 1873 rector of Trinity, Chambersburg, Penn. He died

Feb. 27, 1875, aged sixty-five years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 149.

McCaffrey, JOHN, D.D., a Roman Catholic scholar and divine, was born at Emmittsburg, Md., Sept. 6, 1806. He was educated at Mount St. Mary's College and Theological Seminary at that place, was ordained deacon in 1831, priest in 1838, and was almost immediately made president of that college, a position which he resigned in 1871. He was twice offered the mitre, but declined. He died at the college, Sept. 25, 1881. See (N. Y.) Cath. Annual, 1883, p. 64.

McCarrell, ALEXANDER, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Hanover, Washington Co., Pa., Sept. 22, 1817. He graduated from Washington College in 1841, after which he entered upon a course of theological training. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Washington in 1845, and ordained an evangelist; served for a time the churches of Wolf Run and Unity as a stated supply, and afterwards at Claysville, where he was installed, Dec. 6, 1852. He died there, April 18, 1881. See Nevin, Presb. Encyclop. a. v. (W. P. S.)

McClintock, JOHN DAVID, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Nicholas County, Ky., Feb. 24, 1836. He graduated from Hanover College, Ind., in 1858, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1862; was licensed by Philadelphia Central Presbytery the same year, and ordained an evangelist, April 11, 1864, by Ebenezer Presbytery, at Augusta, Ky. He first supplied the Church of Flemingsburg in 1862; in November, 1863, went to Cabell County, Va., and supplied the Western (now Huntington) Church, doing evangelistic work until April, 1865, when he took charge as stated supply of Catletsburg Church, Ky., in connection with Huntington Church; was installed pastor of the latter Church, June 7, 1873, by Greenbrier Presbytery, and released May 15, 1876; installed pastor of Columbus Church, Miss., by the Presbytery of Tombeckbee, April 29, 1877, a relation which he held until his death, Dec. 12, 1881. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 54.

McCloskey, John (1), D.D., a Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., March 20, 1810. He studied at Mount St. Mary's College and Seminary, Emmittsburg, Md.; was ordained priest, Jan. 9, 1834; studied two years in Rome, and one in France, and on his return became pastor of St. Joseph's Church, New York. In 1841 he became first president of St. John's College, Fordham; in 1842 resumed the rectorship of St. Joseph's Church; in 1843 was coadjutor of bishop Hughes; in 1847 first bishop of Albany; in 1864 archbishop of New York; in 1875 cardinal-priest, and in 1878 cardinal. He died Oct. 10, 1885. Cardinal McCloskey was a very energetic prelate, establishing religious and charitable houses in his diocese, and actively promoting the interests of his Church.

McCloskey, John (2), D.D., a Roman Catholic divine, was born at Carlow, Ireland, in 1817, soon after which his parents settled in Brooklyn, N. Y. In 1830 he entered Mount St. Mary's College, Emmittsburg, Md., where he was ordained, Dec. 13, 1840, and at the solicitation of the college authorities was allowed to remain as professor. He was made vice-president in 1841, and on the retirement of Dr. McCaffrey, in 1871, was chosen president, which position he held for seven years. On the appointment of Dr. Watterson to the bishopric of Columbus, in 1880, he once more resumed the presidency. He was connected with the college for thirty-five years, devoting heart and soul to his work, and never taking a vacation. He was kind to all, over-indulgent, and beloved by all. He died at Emmittsburg, Dec. 24, 1880. See Catholic Annual, 1883, p. 61.

McCluskey, JOHN, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Lancaster Valley, Chester Co., Pa., June 17, 1795. He received his early education at the common schools in Washington County, and graduated from Jef-erson College in 1822. After leaving college he was a year and a half a teacher in the academy at Newtown, Bucks Co. He next taught for a year at New Hope, when, at the invitation of the Rev. Dr. Ezra Styles Ely, he went to Philadelphia, and spent a year studying theology under his guidance. In November, 1825, he entered Princeton Seminary, and remained a year, when he was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia. After supplying for six months the Church of West Alexander, he accepted a call to become its pastor, and was ordained Oct. 8, 1828. In 1854 he became an agent for the Presbyterian Board of Education; in 1855 assistant pastor of the Church at Neshaunim, Bucks Co., and in 1858 pastor elect of the Church at Smyrna, Del. He founded there a church school, in 1864 a female school in West Philadelphia, and in 1870 a school in Hightstown, with the special view to the education of the children of missionaries free of charge. In the same year he returned to West Philadelphia, and for four years was associate principal of the Mantua Academy. He spent several years at Wooster, O., from whence he returned to Philadelphia, where he died, March 31, 1880. See Neerol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 24. (W. P. S.)

McCOWN, BURR HARRISON, D.D., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Bardstow, Ky., Oct. 29, 1806. He was educated at St. Joseph's College, in his native place, was converted, and joined the Methodists in early life. Before his majority he entered the Kentucky Conference, and in 1830-31 was stationed at Louisville. In 1834 he was professor of ancient languages in Augusta College, and in 1844 occupied a similar position in Transylvania University. He afterwards taught at Goshen Academy, Forest Academy, and Pine Hill, where he died, Aug. 29, 1881. Dr. McCown was an interesting preacher, a diligent student, an impressive instructor, and an earnest Christian. See Minutes of the M. E. Church South, 1881, p. 285.

McCron, JOHN, D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born in Manchester, England, Oct. 23, 1807. In 1831 he arrived in America. For some time he and his wife were engaged as teachers in Mechanicsburg, Pa. After a course of study in the Gettysburg Theological Seminary, he was inducted, in 1839, into the Lutheran ministry. Having been sent, the same year, as a missionary to Pittsburgh, he organized the first English Lutheran Church in that city. From that time he continued to serve a number of congregations in Pennsylvania, Ohio, New Jersey, New York, and Maryland, the longest period of service having been given to Baltimore, where he spent twenty years. Leaving Baltimore, he became principal of the female seminary at Hagerstown, where he remained two or three years. In 1846 he was a delegate to the World's Evangelical Alliance in London. While residing in Baltimore he co-operated with Drs. Seiss and Passavant in editing the Evangelical Psalmist, a book of tunes adapted to the Lutheran Hymn-book, published in Philadelphia in 1860. He died in Philadelphia, April 28, 1881. See Lutheran Observer, May 6, 1881.

McCullough, JOHN W., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was employed as a professor in Nashville, Tenn., in 1853 and 1854. In 1858 he was teaching in Baltimore, Md., and the following year was rector of St. Mary's Hall, in that city, a position which he held until 1861. While in Tennessee he was a member of the standing committee of the diocese; was a delegate, in 1855, to the General Convention; served on the missionary and education committees of his own diocese, and held various other important positions. In 1861 he removed to Waverley, N. Y. In 1864 he was rector of St. Paul's Church, Alton, Ill., and remained in that parish until his death, at Waverley, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1867. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1868, p. 104.

McDaniel, JAMES, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born near Fayetteville, N. C., in 1808. He united with the Church in 1827, and soon after began to preach. Chiefly through his instrumentality the Church in Fayetteville was formed, and he was called to be its pastor, in which relation he continued for thirty-six years, and then was pastor, for six years, of the First Church in Wilmington, during a part of the time acting as editor of a religious journal. For nineteen years he was president of the North Carolina Baptist State Convention, organized in 1830. He died in 1870. "Dr. McDaniel possessed in a rare degree the gifts and graces of the orator, and many are the traditions of the pathos and power of his preaching in his younger days." See Cathart, Baptist Encyclop. a. v. (J. C. S.)

McDonnell, RICHARD, D.D., LL.D., an Irish clergyman and collegian, was born at Douglas, County Cork, Ireland, in 1787. He graduated from Trinity College in 1805, and became a fellow in 1808. He studied law at first, was called to the Irish bar, then took holy orders; in 1816 was elected professor of oratory by competitive examination; became senior fellow in 1836; bursar for many years, and in 1852 was appointed provost, which office he held till his death, Jan. 24, 1867. Dr. McDonnell's administration of fifteen years was marked by improvements in the undergraduate course, and by a great advance in the status of the college. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1867, p. 589.

McElhenny, JOHN, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Lancaster District, N. C., in March, 1781. He graduated from Washington College, Va.; studied theology there under Dr. Baxter; was licensed in 1808 as an evangelist; became pastor at Lexington the same year, and died in that relation, Jan. 2, 1871. See Nevin, Presb. Encyclop. a. v.

McElhiney, GEORGE, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born near Londonderry, Ireland, in 1799. He studied first in London, next at Paris, and then under Rev. E. D. Barry, of Baltimore, Md.; when nineteen years old, he began the study of theology under Rev. Dr. Wyatt, of the same city. In 1820 he was ordained, and began his labors in the parish of St. James, Baltimore County. In 1826 he removed to a parish in Charles County, and shortly after visited Europe. On his return home he resumed charge of his first parish, and in September, 1829, went to Princess Anne parish, Somerset County. In October, 1834, he became rector of St. Anne's Church, Annapolis, and so continued until his death, May 2, 1841. As an agent in behalf of the convention to obtain funds for the support of the episcopate, he secured more than $50,000. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 646.

McElroy, JAMES, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was a native of Ireland, and was educated in Trinity College, Dublin. He was ordained by bishop Chase in 1829, and officiated successively in Ohio, Virginia, and California. During the five years preceding his death he occupied the St. Paul's Mission in San Francisco. He died in Oakland, Cal., June 21, 1880. See Whittaker, Almanac and Directory, 1881.

McElroy, JOSEPH, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Newville, in the Cumberland valley, Dec. 29, 1792. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1812, and studied theology in New York under Dr. John M. Mason. He was licensed in 1815 by the Presbytery of Monongahela; began preaching in Pittsburgh, and established the First Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church there. After laboring successfully for seven years, he was called to succeed Dr. Mason in the Scotch Presbyterian Church, New York. He was among the most eloquent preachers in that city. For the last five years of his life he was emeritus pastor of the Scotch Church. He died in New York, Sept. 16, 1876. See Presbyterian, Sept. 30, 1876. (W. P. S.)

McEwen, ABEL, D.D., a distinguished Congregational minister, was born at Winchester, Conn., Feb. 13, 1780. He graduated at Yale College with honors in 1804, and was settled pastor in New London in 1806, which was his only pastorate, as he retired from the active duties in 1854, but preached occasionally afterwards, and died Sept. 7, 1860. Dr. McEwen originated the New London County Home Missionary Society, was a strong advocate of temperance, Sunday-schools, and education. Over four hundred solid and exhaustive essays delivered by him in the New London County Preacher's Meeting are preserved. He published, Half-century Sermon:—Biographical Sketches of Litchfield County Ministers:—Congregationalists in their Relation to Other Religious Sects. See Cong. Quarterly, 1863, p. 263.

McFarland, Francis, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, Jan. 8, 1788. His parents came to America in 1793. He graduated at Washington College, Pa., in 1818, and spent over one year thereafter at Princeton Theological Seminary. He was ordained evangelist by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, N. J., Aug. 1, 1822; became pastor at Bethel, Va., and died at Staunton, Oct. 10, 1871. He was for six years secretary of the Board of Education of the Old-school Presbyterian Church. See Presbyterian, Oct. 28, 1871; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 24.

McFarland, Francis Patrick, D.D., a Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Franklin, Pa., April 6, 1819. He studied at a private academy in his native town, and then at Mount St. Mary's Seminary, Emmitsburg, Md. He was ordained priest in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, by archbishop Hughes, May 18, 1845, and was for one year thereafter professor at St. John's College, Fordham. Thence he went to St. Joseph's Church, New York city, where he remained three months, when he was transferred to the pastorate of the church at Watertown, N. Y. In 1851 he was appointed pastor of St. John's Church, Utica, and remained there until his election to the episcopacy of Hartford, March 14, 1858. This diocese then included Connecticut and Rhode Island, and Providence was the seat; but in 1872 Hendricken was appointed to the see of Providence, and McFarland removed to Hartford, where he died, Oct. 12, 1874. Bishop McFarland was modest, dignified in office, zealous, and studious. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1875, p. 105.

McGill, John, D.D., a Roman Catholic prelate, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 4, 1809. During his childhood his parents moved to Bardstown, Ky., where, at the College of St. Joseph, John was educated. He studied law, was admitted to the bar, and practised his profession there and at New Orleans. He then embraced the sacred calling, studied two years at St. Mary's College, Baltimore, and on his return to Bardstown was ordained priest, June 13, 1830. He subsequently studied at Rome, became missionary in Kentucky, and was the zealous colleague of Dr. Spalding. His Conferences on the dogmas of the Church, at Bardstown, made him distinguished as a controversialist. He was editor of the Catholic Advocate, pastor at Lexington, Ky., and on the division of Virginia into two dioceses, and the translation of bishop Whelan to Wheeling, Dr. McGill was appointed bishop of Richmond, and consecrated, Nov. 10, 1850. His labors were great. As a learned and convincing preacher he was pre-eminent. His controversial sermons were, it is said, unsurpassed. He took an active part in the councils of Baltimore for twenty years, and was an earnest member of the Council of the Vatican. While attending its sessions his health failed him, he returned home, and died at Richmond, Va., Jan. 14, 1872. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1873, p. 42.

McGuire, Edward C., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born in the borough of Winchester, Va., in 1793. In 1813 he officiated for one year as lay-reader in the Church at Fredericksburg, when he was ordained deacon, and after a rectorate of forty-five years at St. George's Church in that city he died there, Oct. 8, 1858. Dr. McGuire was a very successful minister of the gospel. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1859, p. 680.

McHale, John, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born in 1791 at Tubber-na-vine, County Mayo, Ireland. After completing his education, he became lecturer and professor of dogmatic theology at Maynooth, holding the position about eleven years. He was then named coadjutor-bishop of Killala, "cum jure successionis," and consecrated with the title of bishop of Maroma "in partibus infidelium." On the death of Dr. Kelly he was promoted to the archiepiscopal see of Tuam, which he held until his death, Nov. 7, 1881. He published Evidences and Doctrines of the Catholic Church, 1827, which was translated into French and German. He translated sixty of Moore's Irish Melodies into the Irish language, retaining the same metre as the originals. In 1861 he produced a large octavo volume, comprising six books of Homer's Iliad, with an Irish translation in heroic metre. (B. P.)

McJilton, John N., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Baltimore, Md., in 1805. He was ordained deacon in 1841: was for a long time chaplain of the Maryland Hospital, in that city, and subsequently had the rectorship of Mount Zion Church added to his labors; in 1867 he was rector of that Church and of the Church of the Messiah; in the following year he went to New York city, officiating there until 1874, after which he resided, without special work, in that city until his death, April 13, 1875. See Prot. Epic. Almanac, 1876, p. 149.

McKeen, Silas, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Corinth, Vt., March 16, 1791. He received his preparatory studies at Haverhill Academy, and his theological studies were conducted by Rev. Stephen Fuller at Berkshire. He was ordained pastor of the Church in Bradford in 1815, where he continued twelve years; the following year he was reinstalled, remaining there twenty-four years. Subsequently he became acting pastor of the Church at Fairlee, and four years thereafter returned to Bradford, where he died, Dec. 10, 1877. He was moderator of the General Convention of Vermont in 1846. Dr. McKeen published several sermons and addresses. (W. P. S.)

See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 50.

McKinney, Samuel, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1805. Many years before removing to Texas he resided in Tennessee, where the early part of his ministerial life was spent. He became a member of the Presbytery of Brazos, and a leading minister of the Southern Presbyterian Church, indefatigable in advancing all its interests. He was the first president of Austin College, Texas. He died at Huntsville, Nov. 27, 1879. (W. P. S.)

M'Kown, J. Le Grange, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Guilderland, N. Y., Aug. 13, 1824. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, and reared in the Reformed Church, but at the age of fourteen united with the Methodists. At seventeen he entered Troy Conference Academy, and later graduated from Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., in 1849. He was admitted to the Oneida Conference the same year, but ill-health soon obliged him to retire from regular pastoral work, though not from active duty. For eight years he gave his energies to the education of youth, during which time he was professor of Newark Wesleyan Seminary, president of Richmondville Union Seminary, of Cooperstown Seminary, and of Pittsburgh High School. His health improving, in 1858 he was stationed at Union Chapel, Cincinnati. Thence he was transferred to the New York Conference in 1859, and appointed in turn to Trinity Church, New York city; Washington Street, Poughkeepsie; St. James's Church, Kingston; and St. James's Church, New York city. In 1867 he was stationed in the city of Dubuque, and in 1868 at Union Chapel, Cincinnati, O. His subsequent fields of labor were: president of Albion College, Mich., 1871; pastor of Third Street Church, Rockford, Ill.; Wabash Avenue and Ada Street churches, Chicago; Hedding Church, Jersey City, N. J.; Roseville; and in 1878 he was appointed to Milton - on - the - Hudson, New York Conference, but died before entering upon his work, in Roseville, May 2, 1879. He was refined, amiable, studious, and thorough. He excelled as a pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 45.

McLain, William, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ohio, and served several churches as pastor. His last charge was the First Presbyterian Church of Washington city, D. C., which position he resigned to become financial secretary of the Colonization Society, with which he was identified for many years. He died at Washington, Feb. 15, 1873, aged sixty-six years. See (N. Y.) Presbyterian, March 1, 1873. (W. P. S.)

year. Dr. Meharry was a plain, practical, bold, and uncompromising preacher; a man of great energy, an indefatigable worker. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1879, p. 16.

Mehdivia, a Mohammedan sect in India, who take their name from believing their Wali or saint to have been the promised Mehdi or Mahadi. A pretender arose, who claimed to be the twelfth Imam. He was born at Benares, in the year A.D. 1443, and declared himself to be the Mahadi, at the black stone at Mecca, about A.D. 1495. He died at Khorassan, in the year A.D. 1505, after which his followers dispersed, without, however, giving up their belief in the reappearance of their leader as the long-expected Mahadi. They were subjected to a severe persecution by Aurungzebe, but are still found in small communities in various parts of India.

Mehring, Heinrich Johann Friedrich, a Protestant theologian, who died at the age of eighty-one years, May 3, 1879, at Papendorf, near Pasewalk, where he occupied one and the same pastorate over fifty-six years, is the author of, Das Sündenregister im Römerbrief, oder neue Erklärung der Stelle, Rom. i, 8-32 (Wriezen-on-the-Oder, 1854):—Der Brief Pauli an die Römer (Stettin, 1858, 1 part). Meinwerk, bishop of Paderborn from 1009 to 1036, was of noble descent. He was educated at Halberstadt and Hildesheim, and became royal chaplain under Otto III. Henry II made him bishop, and took him to Italy in 1013. Meinwerk also accompanied Henry's successor, Conrad II, to Italy in 1026, and by the services which Meinwerk thus rendered he greatly advanced the cause of the Church. By the munificence of his royal patrons he was enabled to devote much of his time in the interest of the school and in founding new monasteries. He died June 5, 1036, but was not canonized until 1376. His life is found in Pertz, Monumenta Germaniæ, xi, 104-161. Melcher, JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic prelate, studied and took his doctor's degree at Modena, was ordained in 1830, and became chaplain to the court. In 1843 he came to America with bishop Rosati, and was stationed at Little Rock, Ark., whence he was transferred to St. Mary's Church, St. Louis, Mo., of which diocese he became vicar-general. He remained pastor there until he was made the first bishop of Green Bay, Wis., July 12, 1868. He introduced several working orders, such as the Ursulines, Franciscan Tertiaries, Servites, etc. Dr. Melcher died Dec. 20, 1873, at the age of sixty-six, leaving a flock of 60,000 and sixty-nine churches. Melech, SALOMO IBN-, a Jewish writer of the 16th century, was a resident at Constantinople, where he published, in 1554, his תקנת יפה, "The Perfection of Beauty," scholia on the Hebrew Bible. It has been repeatedly edited, but the best edition is that of Amsterdam (1685, fol.), with Abendana's additions. It is a very valuable contribution to grammatical exegesis, since it is brief and condensed, giving almost exclusively grammatical and lexical explanations, for the most part from Kimchi's writings. It has been highly valued among Christians, and several parts of it have been translated into Latin; that on Canticles, by Chr. Molitor (Aldorf, 1659); on Joshua and Malachi, by Nik. Köppen (Greifswalde, 1708, 1709); on Ruth, by J. B. Carpaov, reprinted in his Collegium Rabbinico-Biblicum (Leipsic, 1705); on Jonah, by G. Chr. Burcklin (Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1697), Joh. Leusden (ibid. 1692), and E. Chr. Fabricius (Göttingen, 1792); on Obadiab, by Brodberg (Upsala, 1711), etc. See Fürst, *Bibl. Mellor, ENOCH, D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Salendine Nook, near Huddersfield, Nov. 20, 1828. He studied in Huddersfield College, graduated A.M. from the University of Edinburgh in 1845, and afterwards studied theology in the Lancashire Independent College. About the close of the year 1847 he accepted the pastorate of the church at Square Road, Halifax. His fame as a preacher spread rapidly, and he was frequently invited to larger fields of usefulness. In 1861 he became pastor of the church at Great George Street, Liverpool, where he achieved signal success. In 1867 he returned to his former charge in Halifax, where he met with a hearty welcome, and continued to labor until the close of life, Oct. 26, 1881. He was active in the interests of his denomination, and was often called to positions of honor in that connection. He published, The Atonement; its Relation to Pardon, etc.:—Ritualism and its Related Dogmas:—Priesthood in the Light of the New Testament. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 315.

Melo, DAVID ABENATAR, a converted Spanish Jew, was born about the middle of the 16th century. Of his early life we know nothing beyond the fact that for several years he was an inmate of the prison of the Inquisition. Whether he was committed there because, as Milman states, he was baptized, and was suspected of not being a true Christian, or in order to crush out of him the betrayal of some of his kindred, or, as Kayserling states, because he translated some of David's Psalms into Spanish, is very difficult to say. He was released in 1611, and found a refuge in Holland, where a great many of his countrymen and co-religionists had settled. He soon became the head of the synagogue at Amsterdam, lecturing at the same time at the Academy of De los Pintos. Melo, whom Barrios calls "traductor harmonioso del Psalterio misterioso," is especially known as the translator of the Psalms into Spanish, which were printed at Frankfort in 1626, under the title, Los Psalmos de David en Varias Ninas, and which leads to the supposition that he went thither on his way to Holland, and spent some time there. Membership IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, CONDITIONS OF. We may premise in general that, with the exception of the Quakers or Friends (q. v.), the one essential and universal mode or sign of admission to Church communion is baptism (q. v.), and that all bodies of Christendom, except the so-called Baptists (q. v.), administer the rite to infants as well as to adults, the parents or friends of the former engaging, either formally or presumably, as sponsors (q. v.), the future assumption of the baptismal vows on the part of the children baptized, who meanwhile occupy a subordinate or preparatory stage of membership as catechumens (q. v.).

1. Basic Principles.—1. Of an Ideal Character.—The Church of God, in its broadest sense, consists of all who, whether on earth or in heaven, have been redeemed by Jesus Christ, and quickened by the Holy Spirit, and have not, by resistance of the Spirit, forfeited God's favor. The visible Church is the whole number of those who, on earth, participate, in some degree, in the common Christian life, faith, and organic fellowship. The conditions of church-membership will vary according as the visible Church, in the form it was designed to assume, be regarded as one, universal, unchangeable, and divine, or otherwise. Again, the Church may be viewed as uniform in its standard of ethical and spiritual life, but diverse in its dogmatic and organic fellowship. The dividing lines of membership must, therefore, depend largely upon the following ideals:

(1) The Christian Life.—What is it? When does it begin? Here comes in the question of infant or adult membership. See PÆDO-BAPTISM. The term "life," like the term "death," is ambiguous, meaning both the hidden force which renders spontaneous action possible in a favorable environment, in forms of existence above the mineral, and the activity resulting from that force. When a man loves God and his neighbor he is said to be spiritually alive; but this must mean that he exhibits in action a force, the existence of which must have preceded the display of it. Unless we are Pelagians, we must attribute the origin of spiritual life, the capability of spontaneous religious activity, to the influence of God's Spirit on the human mind. Accurately to determine the moment when life begins is as difficult in the spiritual as in the physical realm: all that can be done is to fix a period beyond which it is not reasonable to believe that the life-giving contact is delayed. Put that period of ἀνωθεν γέννησις, or birth from above, at baptism, and the conditions of membership will assume one aspect: put it at the moment of conscious self-surrender and faith, and they will assume another. "Life," however, means not merely capacity for spontaneous action, but, also, action itself—living. He is alive who acts holily. He is dead who lives in sin. On our conceptions of what the divine standard of living is, and of the time when and the means by which the transition from mere capacity for living to actual living, the moral change, renewal, or conversion, occurs, will depend the conditions of membership in our churches. Is there such a divine and unchangeable standard? Does it, if it exists, cover principles only, or overt acts alone, or motives also? How far are motives capable of being tested by Church authorities? Is the beginning of Christian living coincident with such faith as secures reverent obedience to known divine law, or with the faith that gives assurance of acceptance? To what extent is individual liberty in the application of fundamental principles of holy living admissible? If the relation of Christian love to amusements or business is doubtful, have Church authorities the right to excommunicate him in whom spiritual life may still exist, and whom God may still, in a measure, approve? A just separation from the Church of Christ is separation from Christ. Is it right to enforce, in what professes to be the Church of Christ, rules that would be legitimate only in a voluntary club, organized for special purposes within the Church, but not coterminous with the Church? On the decision given here will greatly depend the conditions of membership in Christian organizations.

(2) The Ideal of Doctrine.—One department of church work is, by the application of truth, to lead into action the latent spiritual capability implanted by the Spirit of God. This implies the instruction of those formally enrolled in the organization. What shall they be taught? Has Christianity any one, universal, unchangeable, and divine standard of doctrine? If so, is it confined to facts, or does it embrace theories, also? What are the facts? How much, if any, of this code of doctrine must be demanded of members of the Church? On the answer to these questions will also depend the conditions of membership.

(3) The Christian Ideal of Organic Fellowship.—Is there a divinely authoritative standard of organic Church relations? Are divine blessings promised to Christians in their organic capacity, or in their individual capacity only? If a divinely approved standard of life and truth are universally imperative, and if failure to reach that standard is an object of mercy only when circumstances have rendered perfection impossible in him who, nevertheless, sought conformity to that standard, can the preservation, propagation, and enforcement of life and truth in the world be left to purely voluntary religious organizations, guerilla warfare, and free-lances? Or is there one visible organism, superior to all clubs and societies, the heir of special promises, so long as it is faithful to its obligations, and one, a just excision from which is excision from God? Though our Lord did not condemn him who cast out devils, even when he followed not the disciples, were not his preparatory instructions, his special commission, and his peculiar promises given to the disciples whom he was organizing? Let covenant blessings, with corresponding obligations, be attached, even if they are not exclusively so, to a visible organism; and introduction into that organism must bring at once, if they have not been received before, the promised blessings; and these blessings are then to be retained, not sought for, unless, after the reception of them, they have been forfeited. Let covenanted blessings be the inheritance of individuals only, apart from all organic connection, on the occasion of personal acts; then, prior to those acts, it cannot be assumed that such blessings are ever given, even when the individuals concerned are the infant children of believers; while the discredit thrown upon any organic connections possible prior to the personal actions must react on the conditions of membership assumed subsequently to these acts.

2. Principles of a Practical Character.—(1) The terms of Church membership further depend upon the source whence we derive our knowledge of the constitution of the Christian Church. The life of one of the original apostles continued beyond the date of the "Acts of the Apostles," and of the Epistles: must the form of the Church which existed prior to the writing of these books be authoritative, and the form which history shows to have probably arisen with his sanction be ignored? Is the constitution of the Church one of cast-iron? When was it cast? At the close of the New-Test. canon? After the first three general councils? After the first seven? Or, is there a living Spirit, ever present with the Church, guiding it by Scripture, by reason and common-sense, by history and the evident necessities of spiritual life in changing circumstances? Is our knowledge of the constitution of the Church gained from the Bible alone, or from the Bible and something else? The conditions of membership will be determined by the answers given to these questions.

(2) These conditions are affected, also, by principles of Scriptural interpretation. What language did the Saviour use? If he speaks of "water and the Spirit," is his word to be interpreted by Hebrew or by Greek analogies? If he uses the term βαπτισμα, or if his reporters use it in rendering the word he may have employed, must the Church limit her conduct by the latest edition of Liddell and Scott? Or are the words of New-Test. Scripture to be regarded as so much the product of the Holy Spirit that all modifying human literary elements are eliminated from them? Is there a development of practice indicated even in the New Test., and must any given passage be interpreted as of perpetual obligation by etymology, apart from the light thrown upon it by this principle of development? Have we any right to say that the governing office of the apostolate was to be changed, but that the introduction of Christian families, as well as adult converts, into the Church was to lead to no change? In a word, must the practices which are legitimate in the Church be limited by a system of interpretation based upon a bald literalism? Or may rites and ceremonies vary when interpretation judges of the obligation of such forms by the light thrown upon the Scriptures from the thousand avenues of a living, perpetually-speaking Providence, so long as the decision is not contrary to the spirit and principles of the New Test.? These questions will suggest the bearing of hermeneutics on membership in the Church.

II. Illustrations of these Principles in the Practice of Different Denominations.—1. Ancient Episcopal Churches.—These include the Greek or Eastern Church, with its various branches, the Roman Church, the English or British Church, and the National Churches of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway.

(1) The Greek or Eastern Church.—"Previous to baptism, the child, though not two months old, must be solemnly initiated into the Church, as a catechumen, through the medium of its sponsors, when exorcism is used." Four prayers, with blowing on the child's mouth, forehead, and breast, and commands to the evil spirit to depart and return no more, precede the trine immersion or affusion of baptism. In Alexandria and the Syrian, or Jacobite, Church affusion exists. Among the Armenians both forms are united. The Copts, in exorcism, make the sign of the cross thirty-seven times. Chrism, or anointing with holy oil, follows immediately after baptism, and answers to confirmation in the Western Church. Within seven days after this another washing occurs, followed by tonsure, or cutting the hair in the form of a cross. Confession four times in the year is prescribed, but is generally practiced but once, as is also communion. In the absence of a priest or a deacon, lay baptism is recognized, if it has been administered in the name of the Trinity. Chrism only is enforced where such baptism has taken place. The Montenegrin Church in South Albania, however, re-baptizes Roman Catholics. The popular impression that the Greek Church recognises the baptism of no other Church is denied by Archbishop Platon, in his supplement to M. Duten's Cours des Mœurs, ii, 170: "Baptismus aliarum ecclesiarum Christianarum non irritum esse putamus, et qui ex iis ad nos veniunt, non iterato baptismo, sed solo sacro chrismate inunctos, recipimus." ("We do not consider the baptism of other Christian churches invalid; and we receive those who come to us from them only by anointing them with the holy chrism, without repeating their baptism.") Submission to the faith of the Church is demanded. The communion is administered in both kinds, even to infants, bread and wine being mixed together, and given in a spoon by the officiating priest. Adult candidates then reverentially salute the clergy by hand-kissing, and are congratulated by their friends as orthodox Christians.

No Russian who has been educated in the Greek Church can lawfully depart from it.

(2) The Roman Church.—The leading conditions of membership in this Church are involved in her definition of the term "Church," as "the society of the faithful who are baptized and united, by the profession of the same faith, participation in the same sacraments and the same worship, to each other, and who are under one head in heaven, viz. Christ, and one head on earth, viz. the pope, his vicar." "The Church, though it consists of good and bad members, does not include heretics, schismatics, or (at least in the full sense of membership) persons severed from her unity by the greater excommunication." "Whether 'pure schismatics' (i. e. persons holding the full faith of the Church, but separated by schism) may still be called members of the Church" is a question "agitated in the theological schools." Baptism is believed to be "the origin of spiritual life, and the door of entrance into the Church." The candidate is presented at the door of the church-building, receives catechetical instruction, submits to exorcism, has salt put into his mouth, and the sign of the cross made upon different parts of his body, is touched on ears and nostrils with saliva, renounces Satan, his works and pomps, is anointed with oil, and makes profession of his faith, by sponsors in the case of infants, before baptism. Baptism is by trine affusion. Then follow chrism, robing in white, holding a burning light, and receiving a name of some saint. Confirmation with a chrism of olive-oil and balsam, in the form of a cross, with prayer and imposition of hands, in the name of the Trinity, follows either immediately or, as is usual, at from seven to twelve years of age. Confession at least once a year is imperative. The greater excommunication is reserved only for the most heinous offences.

(3) The Church of England.—This Church regards the spirit and principles of the Bible as forever binding; but she refuses not the guidance of subsequent Providential direction. Her terms of membership are founded upon the following principles. The Church's ideal of life, doctrine, and order, as given by Christ and his apostles, is divine and, wherever possible, imperative. Life is most important; and, while order is not indifferent, it may need to yield to the demands of truth and life. Hence she does not exclude from the pale of the Church those who, for the sake of truth and life, have believed themselves compelled to violate even her own historic order, but accepts their acts of baptism, if performed with water in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and considers all thus baptized to be members of Christ's Church. Where the obstacles to truth and life which rendered the preservation of order morally impossible have been removed, she regards a return to the primitive apostolic order imperative for the maintenance of unity. Hence, while endeavoring to remove from herself those obstacles, when she sees them to be such, she abstains from such interchanges of membership as would imply that the division of the Church on diverse bases of life, doctrine, or order is normal or ordinarily legitimate. Her first condition of membership is baptism. In this, the sign of the cross is made on the forehead. It may be administered by lay hands, and in any of the various modes. Before baptism, the divinely imparted capacity for spiritual action and enjoyment may, in her opinion, as truly exist as after it; but, inasmuch as the Christian covenant, in Matt. xxviii, 19, 20, is regarded as given to Christians in their collective capacity, and not as individuals only, it is believed that, in baptism, the covenant blessing is surely given. This blessing of the vitalizing Spirit is called "regeneration," not because the moral change now commonly so called is therein wrought, but because the divine capacity for holy living, then, at least, certainly imparted, but impossible by mere human nature, is then, also, first openly manifested or declared, just as natural birth first openly manifests the life which was before concealed. Hence, her second condition of membership, confirmation, is an opportunity given, after instruction, publicly to assume those responsibilities for which candidates are supposed to have been previously prepared by that faith which, working by love, brings the divinely imparted capacity into action, producing the moral change, renewal, or conversion demanded. Church membership is, therefore, a home privilege, with spiritual power believed to be graciously conferred prior to all personal choice, to counteract inherited tendencies of evil, and to enable the child, from the beginning, to see and discharge the duties of Christian faith and love, a privilege to be retained, and not first to be sought after a period of alienation more or less prolonged. Provision is made for the admission of adults by baptism, if this has not been previously given, and by confirmation. She imposes upon candidates no dogmatic theories, but only the facts embodied in the Apostles' Creed. Her moral demands cover no "doubtful disputations," but only the faith and love which are essential to Christianity. Her ceremonial demands enforce no more than attendance upon prayer, the word and the two sacraments of our Lord. Her law of discipline for the punishment and exclusion of lay offenders is, unfortunately, so greatly obstructed by legal considerations as to have become almost obsolete. Believing that she represents, not a voluntary society, but the Church of God, having maintained her historic connection in all essentials with the Church of apostolic times, she considers those baptized by her as hers until they die or are formally excluded or dismissed.

(4) On the principle that the majority of the members of a Church, in their corporate action, are and remain the same Church, the established churches of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway may be classed among ancient episcopal churches, though called Lutheran. In their terms of membership they do not essentially differ from other episcopal churches.

2. Modern Episcopal Churches, and Quasi-Episcopal Churches, Originating since the Reformation, and Committing the Rights of Ordination and Supervision to One Man, Assisted by Others.—(1) The Scottish Episcopal Church.—The origin of this may be dated from the revival of episcopacy by Charles II, in 1661. Its terms of membership are similar to those of the English Church.

(2) The Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States.—This was founded as a separate body in 1784, and has the same conditions of admission as the English Church; but an intention to be confirmed as soon as possible suffices, in certain cases, to secure membership. The use of the sign of the cross in baptism may, on request, be omitted. Letters of transfer to other denominations are sometimes given.

(3) Moravians (European, origin, 1727; American, 1800).—In Europe, baptism, with laying on of hands, introduces children into the Church as catechumens, among whom, prior to admission as full members, adult converts take their place. In America, full membership involves a profession of faith in the Bible as the word of God, confidence in the forgiveness of the candidate's sins, determination to follow holiness and to obey the Church, and reception in open congregation by the pastor, after opportunity has been given for the statement of objections to the reception. Retention of membership depends upon obedience to laws, some of which forbid the sale or use of intoxicants, or the renting of property to liquor-dealers, or signing petitions favoring them, and union with secret societies. Exclusion is by a vote of the class, or congregation, after admonition and examination. Transfer to other bodies may take place "by a vote of the charge," and a certificate signed by the pastor.

(4) The English Wesleyans.—To be members of the society, persons are required to desire salvation, to meet in class, to avoid evil and do good, according to the de-nominal standard of evil and good, and attend "the ordinances of God." The communion is not refused to godly persons, though they belong to the congregation only, and not to the society. Baptized children are not members of the Wesleyan organism, and are sometimes sent, for confirmation, to the Church of England.

(5) The Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States of America.—The conditions of membership in this Church are less affected than in other Methodist churches by the transition from a voluntary society of adults formed for a special purpose to a self-governing Church. Membership begins by reception as a probationer, on giving evidence of desire for salvation from sin. After six months, on commendation of the leaders and stewards, baptism having been received, and satisfactory assurances of faith and loyalty having been given to the preacher in charge before the Church, full membership is conferred. Members of other bodies are received, on recommendation from the proper authorities, and on assurance of loyalty to the principles and practices of the M. E. Church. Baptized children of Methodist parents, though regarded as in visible covenant relation with God, and as objects of the Church's care, do not seem to be in any sense members of the Methodist Church until, after having attended class for six months, they are publicly received in regular form. After reception into full membership, attendance upon class-meeting, while strongly recommended, is no more imperative than attendance upon other useful services. For crimes duly proved, members may be expelled; after removal to parts unknown, the name may be dropped; on transference by certificate to another denomination, and on withdrawal while character is unimpeached, membership ceases.

(6) The Methodist Church of Canada.—This conforms to the conditions of membership among the English Wesleyans, attendance upon class-meeting being essential, dancing and similar amusements being forbidden, and children, though baptized, not being members of the organization.

(7) The Wesleyan Methodists of the United States (dating from 1842).—This adds to the usual Methodist conditions of membership special rules against secret societies, as Freemasons, Odd-Fellows, etc., intoxicants and tobacco.

(8) Apostolic Catholic Church (dating from 1832).—In addition to baptism, "the conditions under which any person can become a member of one of the congregations gathered under the restored apostleship" are "that he should fully and heartily recognise the authority of this apostleship, so that he can sincerely work with it, submit to the commandments of the apostles, recognise the grace of Christ in them, and all the ministries authorized by them. Should any, after more or less time, lose their confidence in these restored ministries, and separate themselves from the congregations, they are still remembered and prayed for as negligent or lapsed members, and their names are kept on a separate register."

(9) Reformed Episcopal Church.—Baptism and confirmation admit to this Church persons born of parents within its pale. Communicants of other denominations are received by letter or other satisfactory evidence of membership, confirmation being optional with them. As no discrimination between denominations is made, there seems to be no guarantee that even baptism has been duly received. Assent to the principles, doctrine, discipline, and worship of the Church is demanded. Membership may cease during life by presenting a written statement of intention to withdraw, or by exclusion by the Church courts for offence. Some differences of practice exist in different localities.

3. Presbyterian Churches, in which the Right of Ordination Resides in a Body of Presbyters.—These churches are governed by principles which do not differ fundamentally, though they differ in details and in verbal expression, from those of episcopal churches. "The basis of Church membership is the covenant of grace which Christ condescends to make with his people, of which covenant faith is the essential condition, and baptism the visible sign; and, as infants cannot in their own person exercise faith, their membership must in the first instance rest upon the faith of their parents, until they come to an age intelligently and voluntarily to embrace and profess Christ themselves." "Every child of believing parents is by his birth a citizen of God's kingdom and an heir of its privileges, subject to the condition of subsequent personal faith." One parent, at least, or one guardian, in the absence of parental custody, if "presumptively believing," must make "an express engagement to train the child to godliness." Children are to be taught the Catechism, the Apostles' Creed, and the Lord's Prayer, to pray and to obey Christ. Baptized children are under the government of the Church. In baptism, there is a grace "conferred by the Holy Ghost;" yet the grace of regeneration is not necessarily connected with baptism, but is so in the case of "such as that grace belongeth unto." "The first element in the process of regeneration is the quickening power of the Holy Spirit exerted directly on the soul." These principles differ not substantially from those of the Church of England, which can be properly understood only when viewed in their relation to Pelagianism. Hooker defines regeneration as "that infused divine virtue of the Holy Ghost which gives to the powers of the soul their first disposition towards future newness of life;" and he says that "grace is not absolutely tied to sacraments," but that, in sacraments, "God imparts the saving grace of Christ to all that are capable thereof." Though differences of opinion may exist as to the appropriateness of words to the representation of facts, yet, on the facts themselves, both Presbyterians and the Church of England seem very nearly to agree. Among Presbyterians, unbaptized adults are received on profession of faith in Christ and on baptism. The enforcing of doctrinal conformity to the theological standards is not necessary or universal. The faith in Christ demanded is not necessarily such as brings assurance of forgiveness. Proper letters from other evangelical churches admit to membership. Censures are given for offences against lawful authority, nature, and Christianity, and excommunication awaits contumacy. These principles generally apply to Presbyterian churches in all lands, the Reformed Presbyterian Church, the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, etc. The Dutch Reformed Church makes confirmation the public reception of members after examination in Bible and Church history and doctrine. Presbyterian Lutherans consider confirmation to be the public reception of candidates, with the blessing of the minister, after a doctrinal examination; but variety of practice arises from the large congregational liberty allowed. The United Presbyterians of the United States prescribe rules against the use of hymns, secret societies, and open communion.

4. Congregational Churches, or those in which each Congregation is Supreme over its own Affairs.—(1) Orthodox Pædobaptist Churches.—Credible personal faith in Christ and consecration to his service are the sole conditions of entrance, the individual Church being the judge of such credibility. Children, prior to personal faith and consecration, are in no sense members, but are to be watched over, that they may become such. Opinions and practice differ as to what children are eligible for baptism, whether those of members only, or others. Absence for a year in parts unknown, transfer to other churches, and, in some instances, resignation without transfer, lead to erasure of the name from the church roll; and contumacious offences lead to exclusion by the Church. The Evangelical Union, or Morisonians, differ from other Congregationalists chiefly in the Arminian doctrines professed, and in making saving faith, on which members are accepted, to be such that it is not only invariably accompanied by assurance of acceptance, but that it renders prayer before it, and for it, an offence.

(2) Orthodox Antipædobaptist Churches.—"The Baptist theory is that the Church should consist of persons in whom the divine life has been begun by regeneration, and who have been baptized on profession of their faith in Christ as their Saviour." Hence, on profession and immersion, if the profession satisfies the local Church, membership is conferred. Exclusion is similar to that in pædobaptist churches. Some Baptists in England do not regard baptism with water as essential to membership. Free-Will Baptists receive baptized persons of other evangelical churches on testimony of a letter of recommendation by vote of the local Church. Seventh-Day Baptists add to the usual conditions of membership a trine immersion, with laying on of hands and prayer, and the observance of the seventh day of the week, instead of the first. "Disciples of Christ" demand immersion on profession of faith in Christ, and acceptance of the Bible as the rule of faith and morals. Exclusion is the act of the congregation, on conduct judged by them intolerable. Mennonites baptize none before eleven or twelve years of age, and then by pouring water on the head. Strict Mennonites prohibit head-ornaments, fine clothing, and rich furniture, and advocate the separation of the excommunicated from social intercourse.

(3) Unitarians.—These are generally Congregationalists, though in Transylvania they are Episcopal, and in Ireland Presbyterian. In the United States the authority that receives into membership is, in many cases, a circle of persons known as the "Church," inside of a larger organization known as the "Society" or parish. Baptism, and the signification to the pastor of a wish to join, with, in some churches, a public recognition by giving "the hand of fellowship," usually admits to membership; but intimation to the pastor of a desire for membership, and consent of his advisers, it is probable, would admit to fellowship, even without baptism or public reception. In many congregations the renting of a sitting, and qualifying for a vote in parish business by accepting the by-laws of the congregation, entitle to all the privileges of membership. There is no form of exclusion. Simple forms of covenant sometimes exist. "An unformulated consensus of opinion, a fidelity in public worship, a reverential support of the Lord's Supper, a deep interest both in piety and ethics, and a readiness in benevolent work," are not always absent from even such loose bonds of union.

(4) Universalists.—Persons, whether baptized in Universalist churches or not, of years of discretion, usually sixteen, are received by a majority vote of the congregation, after application has been made one month previously, in open meeting of the Church, in person, by a friend, or by letter. Strangers must present evidences of Christian faith and character. The only profession of faith authorized by the whole body is given in three articles, which recognize (a) the Bible, as containing a revelation of God's character, and man's duty, interest, and destiny; (b) one God of love, revealed in one Lord, Jesus Christ, by one Holy Spirit of grace, who will finally lead all men through holiness to happiness; and (c) the obligation of good works arising from the inseparable connection of holiness and happiness.

5. Miscellaneous.—(1) European Protestant Churches. i. National Reformed Churches of France and Switzerland.—(a) Children, after baptism, are first instructed, then examined before the pastor, or the presbyterial assembly (conseil presbytéral), or consistory, then received publicly, often after profession of personal faith, and finally admitted to communion at Easter. (b) Adults from without, on introduction, declare to the assembly and the pastor adhesion to the general principles of the Church, bear a share in the expenses, and, unless in the case of foreigners, must enjoy civil and political rights. Excommunication is pronounced from the pulpit, in general terms, without a particular application. ii. Lutheran National Church.—Nearly the same system exists here. iii. Free Churches.—Admission is said to be by public profession of faith. Uniformity of practice does not exist among the Reformed churches. In some cases, in Free churches, rebaptism of converts exists, generally by affusion, but, in the case of Baptists, by immersion.

(2) New Church, or Swedenborgians.—Baptized infants receive full membership by confirmation on arriving at years of discretion. Members coming from without are usually baptized, though opinions and practice on rebaptism are not uniform. In excluding members, in addition to the directions in Matt. xviii, 17, the following principle prevails: "He who differs in opinion from the minister ought to be left in peace, so long as he makes no disturbance; but he who makes disturbance ought to be separated."

(3) Friends, or Quakers.—Membership for persons native to the body is a birthright, but it confers rights of work and service on committees only after proved steadfastness. Admission of persons from without is by request, examination by a committee of similar sex with the candidate, and acceptance by the following monthly meeting. Exclusion is only after contumacious resistance of official efforts for reform, the final one of which is the presentation of a written "testification" before the monthly meeting. This follows a failure of two official interviews between the offender and the committee appointed in the case. Only after a second failure to secure reform is official record made of offences.

(4) Plymouth Brethren.—Application must first be made through one of the brethren to a Saturday meeting of the leaders of the various assemblies of the place. The candidate is then visited by leading men, and rigidly examined on doctrines and separation from all other Christian bodies. Satisfactory examination results in recommendation to the Saturday meeting; and, if approved, the person enters next Lord's Day by communing. The mode of baptism is an open question. Fellowship or excision, among "Close Brethren," relates not to one assembly, but to all in the world. From decisions of the Saturday meeting there is no appeal. The chief and most influential Saturday meeting is that of London, England. Among "Open Brethren," individual assemblies are not bound by the excisions of others. "Brethren" avoid the use of the term "members," as of an organization.

(5) The Reformed Church in America.—This demands baptism, profession of faith before the consistory, composed of pastor, elders, and deacons, or a letter of recommendation from some other church.

(6) The Evangelical Association.—This body holds, in addition to the ordinary rules of admission to Methodist churches, that traffic in liquor is unlawful.

(7) The "Church of Christ".—This adopts, as necessary terms of membership, belief that Jesus is the Son of God, repentance and a righteous life, profession of faith by word of mouth, and immersion in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

(8) The "Church of God".—This body, believing that immortality and incorruptibility arise from the likeness of Christ's resurrection, which, with them, means being immersed, make immersion, with the ordinary demands of Congregational churches, imperative for membership.

(9) "Christians" (or the Christian Connection).—This demands no more than a profession of Christian faith and a corresponding life, the congregation being the judge of the life, and the person himself of the faith.

This list of organizations, calling themselves, as a whole, or in part, the Church of Christ, is by no means complete; but a sufficient number has been given to show on what comparatively unimportant grounds the majority of sectarian differences are based, and to suggest the question whether, in our reaction from corporate intolerance, we have given due weight to the calm statements of Christ, and the earnest pleadings of St. Paul, on the subject of the unity of Christ's body, the Church. For further particulars, see each religious body in its alphabetical place. (J. R.)

Memmi, SIMONE (called also Martini), an eminent Italian painter, was born at Siena in 1285, and was probably a pupil of Giotto. He was invited by the pope to Avignon to do some work for him. His great picture in St. Peter's has perished, but there are several of his works in the churches at Florence, Pisa, and Siena. In the Campo Santo of Pisa are several frescoes of the history of St. Ranieri, and the far-famed Assumption of the Virgin amid a Choir of Angels. His large pictures may be seen at Florence, among which are several of Christ, of St. Peter the martyr, and St. Domenico. There are some more of this class of pictures in the churches of Siena. Memmi died at Avignon in 1344. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Menachem BEN-SALOMO, of France, a rabbi who lived in the 12th century, is the author of מנחת מנחם, a dictionary of the Hebrew language, written about 1148. Specimens of this lexicon were published by Dukes in קבץ על יד (Esslingen, 1846). He also wrote a commentary on the Pentateuch, entitled שכל טוב, a specimen of which, under the title חוכמת מנחם, was published at Hamburg in 1784 (in a Latin translation by Delitzsch, in his Jeshurun sive Langage [Grimma, 1838], p. 184-188). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 353; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 218; Zunz, Zur Geschichte und Literatur, p. 71 sq., 108. (B. P.)

Menageot, FRANÇOIS GUILLAUME, an eminent historical painter, was born in London, July 9, 1744, and was instructed under Deshayes, Boucher, and Vien. He carried off the grand prize of painting in 1766, and visited Rome with the royal pension. In 1780 he was chosen an academician, and afterwards appointed professor. In 1800 he returned to Paris, and became professor of the Academy of Painting. He has a fine picture in the sacristy of the Church of St. Denis. He died Oct. 4, 1816. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Menche, HEINRICH GOTTLIEB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 24, 1799. He studied at Marburg, entered the ministry in 1820, was pastor at Röddenau, Hanover, from 1851 to 1882, and died June 21, 1884, at Mtinden, doctor of theology. (B. P.)

Mende Version of the Scriptures. The Mende is spoken by a considerable population to the south and south-east of Sierra Leone. A version of Matthew had been prepared at an early period by American missionaries, who had settled on the border of the Mende country. A translation of the four gospels was made by the Rev. J. F. Schön, of the Church Missionary Society, the standard alphabet of Prof. Lepsius (q. v.) being adopted for the version. Mr. Schön was aided in the work of translation by Harvey K. Ritchell, of the Mende country. In 1871 the Acts of the Apostles were printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society; the translation having been made by the Rev. H. Johnson, a native African clergyman. In 1872 the Epistle to the Romans was published. The remainder of the New Test. is still in manuscript. (B. P.)

Menga, ANTONIO RAPHAEL, a distinguished painter, was born at Auszig, in Bohemia, March 12, 1728, and studied the works of Raphael at Rome when but thirteen years of age. In 1744 he was appointed painter at Dresden by the emperor Augustus, with a salary. His first great work was The Holy Family, which was exhibited at Rome, and gained him great reputation. In 1754 he received the direction of the new academy at Rome, and in 1757 was employed by the Celestines to paint the ceilings of the church of St. Eusebius. In 1761 he was invited to Madrid by Carlos III., and granted a liberal pension. He executed, among other works, The Descent from the Cross and The Council of the Gods, for the king's court. He returned to Rome, where he was engaged by Clement XIV. to paint in the Vatican a picture of Janus Dictating to History, and The Holy Family. After an absence of three years he returned to Madrid, where he commenced his celebrated work in the dome of the grand saloon of the royal palace at that place. But his health was failing, and he died at Rome, June 29, 1779. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Mentzer, JOHANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Jahmen, in Upper Lusatia, July 27, 1658. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1691 preacher at Merzdorf, in 1698 at Hauswalke, in 1696 at Kemnitz, near Bernstadt, and died Feb. 24, 1784. He wrote about thirty-four hymns, some of which are translated into English, as Lob sei dir, treuer Gott und Vater (in Chorale Book for England, No. 8, "I praise Thee, O my God and Father"); O dass ich tausend Zungen hätte (by Mills, in Horæ Germanicæ, p. 189, "Oh that I had a Thousand Voices!"); Wer das Kleinod will erlangen (in Lyra Germanica, ii, 222, "He who'd make the Prize his Own"). See Otto, Lexikon der oberlausitzischen Schriftsteller, ii, 581-584; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 220 sq. (B. P.)

Menzel, Karl Adolph, a German historian, was born at Grünberg, Dec. 7, 1784. He studied at Halle, was in 1809 professor and in 1814 pro-rector at St. Elizabeth's, in Breslau. He died Aug. 19, 1855. He is the author of Staats- und Religionsgeschichte der Königreiche Israel und Juda (Breslau, 1853):—Religion und Staatsidee in der vorchristlichen Zeit (edited by Wuttke, Leipzig, 1872). (B. P.)

Menzel, Wolfgang, a German historian and critic, was born at Waldenburg, June 21, 1798. He studied at different universities, was for some time teacher at Aarau, went in 1824 to Heidelberg, in 1825 to Stuttgart, and died April 23, 1873. Of his many works we only mention, Christliche Symbolik (Mayence, 1854, 2 vols.):—Kritik des modernen Zeitbewusstseins (2d ed. 1873):—Die vorchristliche Unsterblichkeitsfrage (1869, 2 vols.). His Denkwürdigkeiten were published by his son Karl (Bielefeld, 1877). (B. P.)

Mepeham, SIMON, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Meopham, in Kent, and educated at Merton College. He devoted himself chiefly to the study of the sacred Scriptures, and became a Biblical divine. He was ordained priest at Canterbury on St. Matthew's day, 1297, and became rector of Tunstall, in the diocese of Norwich. He was elected archbishop on Dec. 11, 1327, and received the temporalities from the king at Lynn on Sept. 19, 1329. His attention was chiefly directed to the state of morals and discipline in the Church. We occasionally find him interposing his good offices to effect a reconciliation between parties at variance. His endeavor to compel diocesans to attend to their spiritual duties rendered him anything but popular among his suffragans. Notwithstanding, he was in all things respectable, in nothing great. But the age demanded something more than respectable mediocrity, and Simon Mepeham, by confining himself to his religious duties, was regarded as mean-spirited by those who looked, in his position, for one who could lead them in temporal as well as in spiritual things. He died Oct. 12, 1838. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, iii, 492 sq.

Merage, LKILAT AL (the night of the ascension), a night accounted sacred by the Mohammedans, because in it the prophet made his famous journey to heaven. It is commemorated on the 28th of the month Regeb.

Mercado, MOSES ben-Israel de, a rabbi of Amsterdam, who flourished in the 17th century, is the author of קהלת ורחלים, or a commentary on Ecclesiastes and the Psalms, published after the author's death by Jacob de Mercado (Amsterdam, 1658). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 368. (B. P.)

Meredith, WILLIAM C., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector of Tillotson Parish, Curdsville, Va., for many years, until 1861, when he became rector of Christ Church in Winchester, and remained in this pastorate until his death, Nov. 1, 1876. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 150.

Mergilet, ANDREAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 17, 1659, and died March 21, 1696, at Mühlfeld. He is the author of, Biblidu, etc.:—Sententia Insignes Patrum Ecclesie:—Papa Homo Peccati. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 368; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Meria—pujah, an annual festival among the Khonds in Orissa, in which human sacrifices were offered until the practice was forbidden by the British government. The victims are called merius, and consist of Hindûs procured by purchase in the plains by the Panwas, a class of Hindû servitors. The design of this barbarous ceremony was to propitiate Bura-Pennou (q. v.), their earth-god, and thus to secure a favorable harvest.

Mérode, FRANÇOIS XAVIER MARIE FRÉDÉRIC GHISLAIN DE, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Brussels in March, 1820. He was descended from a noble Spanish family, and entered the Belgian army in 1841, serving with distinction as a volunteer in Algeria under marshal Bugeaud. He began the study of theology at Rome in 1848, and took priest's orders in 1850. He was then appointed chamberlain to the pope and canon of St. Peter's, and in 1860 was made minister of military affairs. He resigned this office in 1865, in consequence of a disagreement with cardinal Antonelli, but was appointed archbishop of Melitene, June 22, 1866, and private almoner to the pope. He opposed the dogma of papal infallibility in 1869, but in 1870 accepted the decision of the Vatican Council. He died at Rome, July 24, 1874. His wealth was largely devoted to the founding of charitable institutions, to the improvement of the streets and squares in Rome, and to archaeological excavations.

Meronoth. It has been suggested (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 814) that this may be represented by Khurbet Marrina, a ruined site seven miles north of Hebron.

Merom. Tristram (Bible Places, p. 230) identifies this site with that of Murussu, about four miles north-west of Bethshan, remarking that "it would command the passage from the plain of Jezreel to the Jordan;" but there do not seem to be any traces of antiquity there (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, ii, 85).

Merrick, JOHN AUSTIN, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was a missionary in 1853, in Fort Ripley, Minn.; in 1857 he was rector in Paris, Ky., being pastor of St. Peter's Church, and professor of Oriental and Biblical literature in Shelby College. In 1866 he became rector of St. Luke's Church, Hastings, Minn.; in 1866 was president of the Sewanee Mission and Training School, in Winchester, Tenn. The next year he went to San José, Cal., as a missionary. The year following he was a professor in St. Augustine College, Benicia. In 1870 he was officiating in Martinez; in 1872 he removed to West Farms, N. Y., where he resided without charge until his death, July 16, 1877, aged fifty years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 169.

Merrick (or Meryek), ROWLAND, an English prelate of the 16th century, was born at Bodding, Anglesea, was educated at Oxford, where he became principal of New Inn Hall, and afterwards a dignitary in the Church of St. David's, and here he and others, in the reign of Edward VI, violently prosecuted Robert Farrar, his diocesan, and prevailed so far that the latter was imprisoned (see Fox, Acts and Monuments, an. 1555). Dr. Merrick was consecrated bishop of Bangor, Dec. 21, 1559, and died Jan. 24, 1566. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 509.

Mésenguy, FRANÇOIS PHILIPPE, an ascetic writer of France, was born at Beauvais, Aug. 22, 1677. He was educated at Paris, and when the famous Rollin (q. v.) had charge of the college at Beauvais, Mésenguy was tutor there. Under Rollin's successor he became sub-principal of the college, but being opposed to the bull Unigenitus, had to resign. At last he retired to St.-Germain-en-Laye, and died Feb. 19, 1768. He published, Le Nouveau Testament Traduit en Français, Avec des Notes Littérales (Paris, 1729, 1752, 3 vols.):—Vies des Saints (1730, 6 vols.; new ed. 1740, 2 vols.):—Abregé de l'Histoire et de la Morale (1728):—Abregé de l'Histoire de l'Ancien Testament, etc. (1737-88, 3 vols.):—Missel de Paris (1738):—Le Processional de Paris (1739):—Expositions de la Doctrine Chrétienne (1744, 6 vols.):—Exercices de Piété (1760):—La Constitution Unigenitus (1748), etc. See Lequeux, Mémoire de Feu M. l'Abbé François-Philippe Mésenguy, in Nécrologie des Plus Célèbres Défenseurs et Amis de la Vérité, vi, 202-218; Picot, Mémoires du Dix-Huitième Siècle, vol. iv; Notice Historique sur les Rites de l'Eglise de Paris; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Mesha and Meshiana, ancestors of the human race according to the system of the ancient Persians. Ahriman (q. v.) and Ormuzd (q. v.) were the primary principles of creation, and from the antagonism which the universe thus presented man was the only exception. Ahriman, the evil principle, had no other resource but to slay Kaiomorts, the primitive human being, who was at once man and woman. From the blood of the slain Kaiomorts sprang Mesha and Meshiana, who were soon seduced by Ahriman, and became worshippers of the Ders, to whom they offered sacrifices. Evil was thus introduced into the world, and the conflict between the good and evil principles extended also to man.

Messianic Hope. By way of supplement to the article MESSIAH (q. v.), we give in general outlines a history of the expectation of the Messiah as developed in the apocalyptic writings.

Of the deepest influence upon the development of the messianic idea were the prophecies of Daniel, the essence of which is the reign of the pious (see ii, 44; vii, 14, 27). The apocrypha of the Old Test. contain but few messianic allusions, because, for the most part, they are historical or didactic, and not prophetic. But this does not mean that the messianic idea was not entertained by the authors. Besides the hope of a return of the dispersed of Israel (Baruch, iv, 36, 37; v, 5-9; 2 Macc. ii, 18), of a conversion of the Gentiles (Tobit, xiii, 11-18; xiv, 6, 7), and the perpetual existence of the Jewish nation (Ecclus. xxxvii, 25; xlv, 13), we also find the idea of an everlasting kingdom of the house of David (Ecclus. xlvii, 11; 1 Macc. ii, 57).

The richer, however, flows the stream of messianic prophecies in the oldest Jewish Sibylline Oracles (q. v.), especially iii, 652-794. Very few messianic comments are found in the groundwork of the Book of Enoch (q. v.; see xc, 16-38), but more in the Psalter of Solomon (q. v.; see Psa. xvii, 11; xviii, 6-9), and in the Assumption of Moses (q. v.). The messianic time is also depicted in the Book of Jubilees (q. v.). All these documents prove sufficiently that the messianic hope had not been dead in the last centuries before Christ, and this is corroborated by the Targum of Onkelos and Jonathan. Another important witness is Philo, who, in De Exeritationibus, § 8, 9 (ed. Mang. ii, 435 sq.), and De Promissis et Pœnis, § 15-20 (ibid. ii, 421-428), speaks of the messianic hope.

But, aside from these witnesses, we have the New Test., which fully proves that the messianic idea in the time before Christ was by no means extinguished in the consciousness of the people (see Matt. xi, 3; xvi, 13 sq.; xxi; Mark viii, 27; xi; Luke vii, 19, 20; ix, 18 sq.; xix; John xii). For the time after Christ we need no evidence. The many political events prove, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the people expected the beginning of the kingdom of God on earth. Josephus himself confesses that the messianic hope was one of the most powerful instruments in the insurrection against Rome, although, to please the Romans, he referred the messianic prophecies to Vespasian.

As for the messianic hope after the destruction of Jerusalem, the apocalypses of Baruch and Ezra give ample descriptions. What is expressed there finds its reflection in the Jewish prayer called Shemoneh Esreh (q. v.), especially in the 10th, 11th, 14th, 15th, and 17th petitions. Thus far the historical outline. We come now to the systematic arrangement of messianic dogmatics.

1. Signs of the Last Times.—Almost everywhere, when reference is made to eschatology, we meet with the same thought, that the beginning of the time of salvation is to be ushered in by great tribulations. The basis for these speculations was no doubt Dan. xii, 1, "There shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time." Thus originated in the rabbinic dogma the doctrine of the חבלי המשיח, "the birth-pains of the Messiah" (see Matt. xxiv, 8: πάντα δὲ ταῦτα ἀρχὴ ὧν εἶναι). Glowing descriptions of the signs of the last times are found in Orac. Sibyll. iii, 795-807 (comp. 4 Ezra v, 1-13; vi, 18-28; ix, 1-12; xiii, 29-31; Apocalypse of Baruch, lxx, 2-8; Book of Jubilees [see Ewald's Jahrbüchern, iii, 23 sq.]; Mishna, Sota, ix, 15). See also Matt. xxiv, 7-12, 21; Mark xiii, 19; Luke xxi, 23; 1 Cor. vii, 26; 2 Tim. iii, 1; and comp. Schöttgen, Horæ Hebraicæ, ii, 509 sq., 550 sq.; Bertholdt, Christologia Judæorum, p. 45-54; Gfrörer, Das Jahrhundert des Heils, ii, 225 sq. 300-304; Oehler, in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. ix, 436 sq. (2d ed. ix, 666); Harnberger, Real-Encyclop. art. "Messianische Leidenszeit," p. 735-738.

2. Elijah the Forerunner of the Messiah.—From Mal. iii, 23, 24 (A. V. iv, 5, 6) it was inferred that the prophet Elijah was to return to prepare the way for the Messiah. This idea is already presupposed, Ecclus. xlviii, 10, 11 (see also Matt. xvii, 10; Mark ix, 11; also Matt. xi, 14; xvi, 14; Mark vi, 15; viii, 28; Luke ix, 8, 19; John i, 21). The object of his message is to make peace on earth (see Mishna, Eduyoth, viii, 7), and to harmonize differences (Baba Mezia, iii, 4, 5; i, 8; ii, 8). Besides these things, he was to anoint the Messiah (Justin, Dial. cum Tryph. c. 8, 49), and to raise the dead (Sota, ix, 15 a. f.). Besides Elijah, some also expected the prophet like Moses (Deut. xviii, 15; comp. John i, 21; vi, 14; vii, 40), while still others thought that Jeremiah (Matt. xvi, 16) was to be the forerunner of the Messiah. In Christian writings, Enoch is mentioned as one who was to come back (Ec. Nicodemi, c. 25; see also Thilo, Codex Apocryph. Nov. Testamenti, p. 756-768). On the forerunner of the Messiah, comp. Schöttgen, u. s. p. 533 sq.; Lightfoot, Horæ Hebr. on Matt. xvii, 10; Bertholdt, u. s. p. 58-68; Gfrörer, u. s. p.

Sibyll.* 1st ed. ii, 513-516; Der Prophet Eliu in der Legende (Frankel's Monatschrift, 1863, p. 241-255, 281-296); Elias who was to Come (Journal of Sacred Literature and Biblical Record, new series, 1867, x, 371-376); Castelli, Il Messia secondo gli Ebrei, p. 196-201; Weber, System der alt-synagogalen palästinischen Theologie, p. 337-339.

3. Appearance of the Messiah.—After these preparations, Messiah comes. It is by no means correct to say that pre-Christian Judaism expected the Messiah only after the judgment, and that through the influence of Christianity the idea had become prevalent that the Messiah himself was to judge his enemies. For in the books of Baruch and Ezra, Enoch, and in the Targums, in the Psalter of Solomon, and in Philo, Messiah appears everywhere as conquering hostile powers.

As to his names, the common one is the Anointed; the Messiah (Enoch xlviii, 10; lii, 4; Baruch xxix, 3; xxx, 1; xxxix, 7; xl, 1; lxx, 9; lxxii, 2; Ezra vii, 28, 29, where the Latin translation is interpolated; xii, 32: "unctus"); Greek, χριστός κριτής (Psalt. of Sol. xvii, 36; xviii, 68), Hebrew, מָשִׁיחַ (Mishna, Berachoth, i, 5), Aramaic, מְשִׁיחָא (ibid. Sota, ix, 15), or מְשִׁיחָא בְּלִיבָא (in the Targums). Peculiar to the Book of Enoch are: "the Son of man" (xlv, 1-4; xlviii, 2; lxii, 7, 9, 14; lxiii, 11; lxix, 26, 27; lxx, 1), and the "Elect One" (xlv, 3, 4; xlix, 2; li, 3, 5; lii, 6, 9; liii, 6; lv, 4; lxi, 8; lxii, 1). Very seldom is he called the "Son of God" (cv, 2; 4 Ezra vii, 28, 29; xiii, 32, 37, 52; xiv, 9), and only once he is called "Son of the woman" (Enoch lxii, 5). He was to come from the tribe of David (Psalt. of Sol. xvii, 5, 23; Matt. xxii, 42; Mark xii, 35; Luke xx, 41; John vii, 42; 4 Ezra xii, 32; Targum on Isa. xi, 1; Jer. xxiii, 5; xxxiii, 15). Hence "Son of David" is the common designation of the Messiah (in the New Test. after υἱὸς Δαυὶδ, in the Targum on Hosea iii, 5: בֶּרֶךְ דָּוִד, in the Shemoneh Esreh, 15th petition, צִדְקָה דָּוִד). As belonging to the tribe of David he must also be born at Bethlehem, in the city of David (Micah v, 1, and the Targum in loco; Matt. ii, 5; John vii, 41, 42).

Whether the pre-Christian Judaism thought of the Messiah as a mere man or as a being imbued with higher power, especially whether it ascribed to him pre-existence, cannot be decided with certainty. In general it can be said that he was expected as a human king and ruler, but endowed with special gifts and powers by God. This is especially evident from the Psalter of Solomon (xvii, 23, 47, 35, 41, 46, 42). The same idea we find in Orac. Sibyll. iii, 49. But his pre-existence is also described in the Book of Enoch, xlv, 1; lxii, 7; xlviii, 8, 6; xlv, 1, 3; xlix, 2-4; comp. also 4 Ezra xii, 32; xiii, 26, 52. And this idea of pre-existence cannot be ascribed to Christian influences, because it fully harmonizes with the Old-Test. idea concerning the Messiah (comp. Micah v, 1; Daniel vii, 13, 14).

4. The Last Enemies.—On the appearance of the Messiah the enemies of the Israelites and of God will muster their forces for a last decisive conflict. The picture which Ezekiel drew of the armies of Gog and Magog, and the representation given in Daniel xi, are abundantly reproduced in Orac. Sibyll. iii, 668 sq.; 4 Ezra xiii, 33 sq.; Enoch xc, 16, except that the conflict does not concern the Messiah, but the congregation of God. In general, it is supposed that the leader in this conflict is the antichrist, who is called in rabbinic writings Armilus (אַרְמִילּוּס).

5. Destruction of the Enemies.—From the dangers which will thus gather round them the Israelites are to be delivered by the signal destruction of their foes. Comp. Assumptio Mosis x; Enoch xc; Orac. Sibyll. iii, 652 sq.; Psalt. of Sol. xvii, 27, 39; Apoc. Baruch xxxix, 7-xl, 2; lxx, 9; lxxii, 2-6; 4 Ezra xii, 32, 33; xiii, 27, 28, 53-58.

6. Renovation of Jerusalem.—Since the messianic kingdom is to be founded in the Holy Land, Jerusalem must be renewed. This renovation will take place by purifying the holy city from the Gentiles, who now live in it (Psalt. of Sol. xvii, 25, 38). Besides this view there was another, that there already existed in the pre-messianic time a more glorious Jerusalem than the earthly one, with God in heaven, and that this was to come down on earth at the beginning of the messianic time (Enoch liii, 6; xc, 28, 29; 4 Ezra vii, 26; Apoc. Baruch xxxii, 4). See also Schöttgen, De Hierosolymu Cælesti (Horæ Hebr. i, 1205–1248); Meuschen, Novum Testamentum ex Talmude, p. 199 sq.; Wetstein, Novum Test. ad Galatas, iv, 26; Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, ii, 839 sq.; Bertholdt, u. s. p. 217–221; Gfrörer, u. s. ii, 245 sq. 308; Weber, u. s. p. 356 sq.

7. Gathering of the Dispersed.—That the dispersed of Israel should have part in the messianic kingdom and return to Palestine was a matter of course, even though there were no prophecies of the Old Test. In a poetical manner this is described (Psalt. of Sol. xi, xvii; Baruch iv, 36, 37; v, 5–9; Philo, De Exsecrationibus, § 8, 9; 4 Ezra xiii, 39–47). As this hope was so general, it is strange that rabbi Akiba should have doubted the return of the ten tribes (Sanhedrin, x, 3 s. f.).

8. The Kingdom of Glory in Palestine.—The messianic kingdom has, it is true, the messianic king at its head, but its supreme ruler is God (see Orac. Sibyll. iii, 704–706, 717, 756–759; Psalt. of Sol. xvii, 1, 28, 51; Shemoneh Esreh, 11th benediction; Joseph. War, ii, 8, 1). Hence it is often called the kingdom of God (βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, so especially in the New Test. by Mark and Luke; Orac. Sibyll. iii, 47, 48; βασιλεία μεγίστη ἀθανάτων βασιλεὺς; see Psalt. of Sol. xvii, 4; Assumptio Moysis x, 1, 8). Besides, we also find “kingdom of heaven,” βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν. For the latter expression, see Schöttgen, De Regno Calorum (Horæ Hebr. i, 1147–1152); Lightfoot, Horæ ad Matth. iii, 2; Wetstein, in Matth. iii, 3; Bertholdt, u. s. p. 187–192; De Witte, Biblische Dogmatik, p. 175–177; Tholuck, Bergpredigt, p. 66 sq.; Fritzsche, Evang. Matthæi, p. 109 sq.; Kuinoel, in Matth. iii, 3; Wichelhaus, Commentar. zu der Leidensgeschichte (1855), p. 284 sq.; Keim, Geschichte Jesu, ii, 83 sq.; Schlirer, Der Begriff des Himmelreiches aus jüdischen Quellen erläutert (Jahrbücher für prot. Theologie, 1876, p. 166–187); Cremer, Bibl. Theolog. Wörterbuch, s. v. βασιλεία.

To the glory of the messianic kingdom belongs, above all things, the dominion over the world (see Isa. ii, 2 sq.; xlii, 1–6; xlix, 6; li, 4, 5; Jer. iii, 17; xvi, 19 sq.; Micah iv, 1 sq.; vii, 16 sq.; Zeph. ii, 11; iii, 9; Zech. viii, 20 sq.; and especially Dan. ii, 44; vii, 14, 27). This hope has also been held by later Judaism, but in a different manner; see Orac. Sibyll. iii, 698–726, 766–783; Philo, De Præm. et Pæn. § 16; Enoch xc, 80, 37; Psalt. of Sol. xvii, 32–35. Otherwise the messianic time, mostly on the basis of Old-Test. passages, is represented as a time of pure joy and happiness. There is no war (Orac. Sibyll. iii, 871–880, 751–760; Philo, De Præm. et Pæn. § 16; Apocal. Baruch, lxxiii, 4, 5). Even the wild beasts serve man (Orac. Sibyll. iii, 787–794; Philo, u. s. § 15; Targum on Isa. xi, 6). Earth is very fertile (Orac. Sibyll. iii, 620–623, 743–750; Baruch, xxix, 5–8); men are rich and well to do (Philo, § 17, 18); they become nearly one thousand years old, and yet do not feel their age, but are like boys (Ewald, Jubilers, iii, 24). All enjoy bodily strength and health; women bear children without pains, etc. (Philo, § 20; Baruch lxxiii, 2, 8, 7; lxxiv, 1). But these external gifts are not the only ones. They are but the consequence of the fact that the messianic congregation represents a holy people, sanctified by God, and led in righteousness by the Messiah. He allows no unrighteousness to dwell among them, nor is any one who knows malice in their midst. Hence they are all holy (Psalt. of Sol. xvii, 28, 29, 36, 48, 49; xviii, 9, 10). The life in the messianic kingdom is a perpetual λατρεύειν Θεῷ ἐν δούλῳ καὶ δικαιοσύνην ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ (Luke i, 74, 75).

With this kingdom of glory in Palestine the eschatological expectation generally closes; indeed, many regard it as without an end. But afterwards the messianic kingdom is described as of a limited period, and in the Talmud the duration of this time is a matter of debate (Sanhedrin, fol. 99, col. 1). The same view we find in the Apoc. Baruch xl, 3, and 4 Ezra xii, 84; vii, 28, 29. Wherever, therefore, a temporal duration is ascribed to the messianic kingdom, at the end of the time a renovation of the world and the last judgment is still expected.

9. Renovation of the World.—The hope of a renovation of heaven and earth is founded on Isa. lxxv, 17; lxxvi, 22 (see also Matt. xix, 28; Rev. xxi, 1; 2 Pet. iii, 13). Accordingly, a distinction was made between the present world and the world to come, מַדְבָּר וְעוֹלָם הָעוֹלָם; in the New Test., ὁ αἰὼν οὗτος and ὁ αἰὼν ὁ μέλλων or ὁ ἐρχόμενος. But there was a difference of opinion. Some would make the new world commence with the beginning of the messianic time (Enoch xlv, 4, 5), others with its end (4 Ezra vii, 80, 31). In accordance with these different views, the messianic time is either identified with the world to come, or is still reckoned to the present world. But the older and more original view is the one which identifies the days of the Messiah with the world to come. On the “world to come,” see Mishna, Berachoth, i, 5; Psal. i, 1; Kiddushin, iv, 14; Baba Mezia, ii, 11; Sanhedrin, x, 1–4; Aboth, iv, 1, 16; v, 19; Apoc. Baruch xlv, 15; xlviii, 50; lxxiii, 8; 4 Ezra vi, 9; vii, 12, 13, 42, 48; viii, 8. Comp. also Rhenferdus, De Saeculo Futuro (in Meuschen, u. s. p. 1116–1171); Witsius, De Saeculo hoc et Futuro, u. s. p. 1171–1183; Schöttgen, u. s. p. 1153–1158; Lightfoot, ad Matth. xii, 32; Wetstein, ad Matth. xii, 32; Koppe, Novum Test. vi; Epist. ad Ephes. Exc. i; Bertholdt, u. s. p. 38–43; Gfrörer, u. s. ii, 212–217; Bleek, Hebräerbrief, ii, 1, 20 sq.; Oehler, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. ix, 484 sq.; 2d ed. ix, 664 sq.; Geiger, Jüdische Zeitschrift, 1866, p. 124; Weber, u. s. p. 354 sq.

10. General Resurrection.—Before the last judgment is held, a general resurrection of the dead occurs. In general, there was a firm belief in the resurrection of the dead, which is for the first time intimated in Dan. xii, 2, and this belief was held by all who were more or less influenced by Pharisaism. Only the Sadducees denied the resurrection (Joseph. Ant. xviii, 1, 4; War, ii, 8, 14), and the Alexandrian theology substituted for it an immortality of the soul (Wisdom of Sol. iii, 1 sq.; iv, 7; v, 16). The time between death and resurrection is for the righteous a time of preliminary happiness, and for the wicked a preliminary state of misery. The literature on that subject is very rich. See Bertholdt, u. s. p. 176–181, 203–206; Gfrörer, u. s. 275–285, 308 sq.; Herzfeld, Gesch. d. Volkes Israel, iii, 307–310, 328–333, 349–351, 504–506; Langen, Das Judenthum in Palästina, p. 338 sq.; Rothe, Dogmatik, ii, 2, 68–71, 298–308; Oehler, Theologie des Alten Testaments, ii, 241 sq.; Hermann Schultz, Alttestamentliche Theologie, 2d ed. p. 718 sq. 807 sq.; Hamburger, Real-Encyklop. ii, 98 sq. 11. Last Judgment. Eternal Blessedness and Damnation.—A last judgment after the end of the messianic period can only be thought of where the messianic kingdom is of a finite duration (see Baruch i, 4; 4 Ezra vii, 33–35). God himself is the judge of all men (Baruch li, 4, 5; 4 Ezra vi, 2). In general it may be said that all Israel have a part in the future world (Sanhedrin, x, 1), with the exception of the wicked in Israel (x, 1–4). They, together with Israel's enemies, go down into the fire of Gehenna (Baruch xlv, 16; li, 1, 2, 4–6; 4 Ezra v, 1–8, 59). As a rule this damnation is regarded as everlasting; but there is also the view which ascribes a limited duration of hell-punishment (Mishna, Eduyoth, ii, 10). The righteous and pious will be received into paradise, and will behold the majesty of God and of his holy angels. Their face shall shine like the sun, and they shall live forever (Baruch ii, 3, 7-14; 4 Ezra vi, 1-3, 68-72; Assumptio Mosis x, 9, 10).

Messmer, JOSEPH ANTON, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 17, 1829, and died at Munich, Dec. 23, 1879, doctor and professor of theology. He published, Ueber den Ursprung, die Entwicklung und Bedeutung der Basilika in der christlichen Baukunst (Leipzig, 1854);—Johann Michael Sailer (Mannheim, 1875);—Dr. Joseph Hubert Reinkens, katholischer Bischof (Linz, 1874). Metatron, an angel frequently mentioned by rabbinical writers, and to whom they ascribe superior prerogatives. He is said to be "the king of angels," and to "ascend to the throne of glory above nine hundred firmaments to carry up the prayers of the Israelites." He is supposed by some to have been the angel who conducted the Israelites through the wilderness, and by others to have been Enoch.

Metawillah, a heretical Mohammedan sect, who maintain that the allegorical and not the literal meaning of the Koran is binding on the faithful. They are found principally in the district lying to the south and east of Tyre, in the regions contiguous to the sources of the Jordan, and in Cale-Syria proper. They are Sliites, and recognise the supreme Imâmât of Ali (q. v.).

Metcalf, KENDRICK, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, devoted nearly the whole of his active life to educational work. For many years he was Hobart professor of the Greek and Latin languages and literature in the Hobart Free College, Geneva, N. Y. For some time he was a member of the standing committee of his diocese. In 1867 he was elected professor of rhetoric, and chaplain of the college. The following year he was Horace White professor of rhetoric and English literature, a position which he retained until his death, Oct. 30, 1872. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 134.

Meurer, MORITZ, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 3, 1806, at Pretzsch, on the Elbe. He studied at Leipzig, was in 1833 teacher at the seminary in Weissenfels, in 1834 deacon at Walsenburg, in 1835 archdeacon, and in 1841 pastor. He died at Callenberg, May 10, 1877. He is the author of biographical sketches on Luther, Catharine von Bora, Melancthon, Bugenhagen, Myconius, etc. Besides, he published, Moses, der Knecht Gottes (Walsenburg, 1836);—Der Tag zu Schmalkalden (Leipzig, 1837); Der Kirchenbau vom Standpunkte und nach dem Bruch der lutherischen Kirche (ibid. 1877). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 876; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Mevlevies, an order of rigid Mohammedan monks. The novice receives his preliminary training in the convent kitchen during the period of a thousand and one days, after which he is received into the order. Their doctrines are chiefly those of the Persian Sûfis (q. v.). Contrary to the teachings of the prophet they have introduced music and dancing into their worship. They are the best endowed of all the orders of Moslem monks; yet they use only the coarsest fare and the plainest raiment, while they distribute much of their revenue in alms to the poor. They are the Dancing Dervishes of Turkey, and consist chiefly of the higher class of Turks. See DERVISH; MOHAMMEDANISM.

Mexican RELIGIOUS BELIEFS AND FABLES. The wondrous country lying between North and South America was long inaccessible, and much told of it was fabulous, until A. von Humboldt and some modern travellers lighted up the darkness which hung over the country. The Mexicans accepted four world periods, according thus singularly with the Greeks and the Romans: the first is called Atonatiuh, the period of water; it began with the creation of the world, and its destruction by the flood; the second, Tlaltonatiuh, the period of earth, closed with an earthquake, which ended the human race, and the sun belonging to this period; the third is called Ehekatoniatiuh, the period of air, in which men and the sun perished in a frightful storm; the fourth is called Tletonatiuh, the period of fire, the period in which we live, and which will end by a universal destruction by fire. At the end of each period all men perished except a few pairs; they did not die, but were changed into fish, apes, and, lastly, into birds. The Noah of the Mexicans was called Coxcox, and his wife Xokiquetzal. They saved themselves in a small ship, and landed on the mountain Colhuacan. Their children learned from wise birds languages so different that they could not understand each other. The protecting goddess of the human race, Omecihuatl, lived in a splendid city of heaven; she gave birth to many children, and lastly to a stone knife, which the children threw to the earth, whereupon sixteen hundred heroes (demi-gods) sprang from it. These had no human beings about them, for all of the latter had perished by the catastrophe of the third period. They, therefore, sent a herald to their mother in heaven, to give them power to produce children. The mother told them to get a bone of a dead human being from the god of the infernal region, and if they would sprinkle it with their blood men would be produced, but they should beware of the owl. Xolotl, one of the demi-gods, received a bone from Mictlantecuhtli, and, heeding the warning, fled as fast as he could, pursued by the god. They sprinkled the bone with their blood, and a boy and a girl were formed, who propagated the extinguished race. However, from this originated the horrible custom of human sacrifices. The sun was still lacking. The heroes collected about a great fire, and said, whoever should jump in first would become a sun. Nanahuatzin sacrificed himself, and soon appeared as the sun. But he said he would not move until all the heroes had been slain. The hero Xolotl then killed them all, and finally himself. Their dress fell to their servants, men, and the Spaniards found in various temples clothes, divinely worshipped, which were said to belong to these demi-gods. In the same manner the moon originated; because the fire was not so intense it did not receive such splendor. The Mexicans hold the souls of men to be immortal; fallen warriors and mothers dying in childbirth come into the house of the sun, where they live in pleasures. The number of deified heroes, kings, and demi-gods soon reached three thousand. They had also a distinct idea of a supreme being, Teotl (god), sprung from himself, the originator of all things. A being opposed to the latter was Tlalteuolotl, i. e. the sensible owl. The Mexicans believed this demon appeared to torture men and frighten them. Besides this good and this evil principle there were three classes of gods; to the first belonged the mother of all gods, the god of providence, the deities of the constellations, of the elements, of war, of hunting, of fishing, of contracts, of punishment, of protection, etc.; to the second class belonged the gods of time; to the third class the family gods. Their idols were placed in their temples, and priests and priestesses placed over them, and sacrifices made. The supreme, or at least the most worshipped of their gods was the bloodthirsty Huitzilopochtli.

Mexican (or Aztec) Version of the Scriptures. At a very early period efforts were made to provide the Mexicans with the Word of God in their own vernacular. Didacus de Santa Maria, a Dominican friar, and vicar of the province of Mexico (1579), is said to have translated the epistles and the gospels into Mexican; and Louis Rodriguez, a Franciscan friar, prepared a translation of the Proverbs and other fragments. But of these translations nothing is known at present. In 1829 Mr. Thomson, agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, caused a translation of the New Test. to be made—a movement which the bishop of Puebla not only favored, but also consented to superintend. Three persons were appointed by the bishop to execute the translation, but unhappily the bishop died in 1830, and the only portion of Scripture that has hitherto been printed in Mexican consists of the gospel of Luke, which Dr. Pazos Kanki had translated about the year 1829. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for the year 1870, we see that at the request of Mr. J. W. Butler, a native Mexican has been engaged to revise or retranslate the gospel of Luke. The version was made, and after having been committed to an independent person for examination, was printed. This is the only part of the Mexican Scripture now extant. See Bible of Every Land, p. 405. (B. P.)

Meyboom, Ludwig Tuxon Petrus, a Dutch theologian, was born at Emden, April 2, 1817. He studied at Groningen, where he also took his degree as doctor of theology. In 1854 he was called to Amsterdam, in spite of the protest of the orthodox party, and died Nov. 13, 1874. Meyboom belonged to the so-called Groningen school, which believes in a personal God, the historic Christ, the immortality of the soul, and the incessant energy of the Holy Spirit in the Church. He published, De Ideis et Rebus in Facto Positis, in re Christiana apte Coniunctis (Groningen, 1840):—De Francisci Hemsterhuis Meritis (ibid. eod.):—History of the Kingdom of God (1852-54, 3 vols.):—Life of Jesus (1854 sq.):—Principles of the Neo-Christian Tendency (2d ed. 1874). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 877. (B. P.)

Meyer, Christian Gottlob, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was a convert from Judaism. From the preface of Prof. Semler, given to the German translation of Levita's Massoreth ha-Massoreth, we learn that Meyer, who was a native of Posen, was admitted into the Church by the Rev. Dr. Schultze of Halle. After his baptism Meyer studied theology at Halle, and here it was that he translated Levita's work, at the instance of Semler. After having completed his studies Meyer was admitted into the ministry, and in 1783 was called to the pastorate at Dassensee, in the duchy of Grubenhagen. Besides Levita's work, he also published Sententia Rabbinorum de Successione ab Intestato et Testamentaria (Halle, 1775). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 870; Levita, Massoreth ha-Massoreth (Germ. transl. 1772). (B. P.)

Meyer, Gottlob Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Lübeck, Nov. 29, 1768. In 1801 he was university preacher at Göttingen, in 1804 professor and preacher at Altdorf, and in 1813 doctor and professor of theology at Erlangen. He died May 19, 1816, leaving, De Notione Orci apud Hebræos (Lübeck, 1798):—De Fodere cum Jehova (Göttingen, 1797):—Versuch einer Hermeneutik des Alten Testaments (Lübeck, 1800):—Grundriss einer Hermeneutik des Alten und Neuen Testaments (Göttingen, 1801):—Geschichte der Schriftklärung seit der Wiederherstellung der Wissenschaften (1802-1808, 5 vols.):—Apologie der geschichtlichen Auffassung der historischen Bücher (Sulzbach, 1811). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 871; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 104, 106-111, 294-335, 588; ii, 96, 177. (B. P.)

Meyer, Heinrich August Wilhelm, a famous German exegete, was born at Gotha, Jan. 10, 1800. He studied at Jena, passed his candidate's examination in 1821, and in 1823 was installed pastor at Osthausen. In 1829 appeared the first part of his work on the New Test., including the Greek text and a German translation. In 1830 followed his Libri Symbolici Ecclesie Lutherane. In the same year, having previously obtained citizenship in the kingdom of Hanover, Meyer was appointed pastor at Harste, near Göttingen. In 1832 appeared the second part of his work on the New Test., containing the commentary on the synoptic gospels. The original design was to embrace the whole commentary in two large volumes, but this he soon found to be impracticable; besides, he discovered that his own strength and time would not be sufficient to complete the work without assistance; accordingly he secured the services of Drs. Lünemann, Huther, and Döderlein. In 1837 he was called as superintendent to Hoya, where he remained only four years. In 1841 he was called to Hanover, where he spent the rest of his life as member of consistory, superintendent, and head pastor of St. John's Church. In 1845 Meyer received the degree of doctor of theology from the faculty of the University of Göttingen. In 1848 he gave up his pastorate, retaining only his position in the consistory. In 1861 he was made member of the superior consistory, but in 1865 he retired from public life on a pension, which he received from the government. He died June 21, 1873.

Meyer's reputation beyond Hanover rests upon his commentaries on the New Test., and the excellence of his work was acknowledged not only in his own land, but in England and America, through Clark's translation. Meyer lived to see many editions of his work appear, and continued, down to the time of his death, to work diligently, making improvements. He grew with his work, and in each stage of his growth he expressed himself in his commentaries just as he felt. His study of the New Test. produced in him a more perfect experience of the saving grace and truth of the Gospel. As is the case with most scholars, Meyer became somewhat more dogmatical in his old age. The student who compares the last editions of the commentary with the first will find wide differences: Meyer was constantly correcting himself, and with relentless honesty removing from his work what he had come to regard as defects. Since his death, the continuation of Meyer's commentary in new editions has been intrusted to Prof. Weiss in Berlin, who has associated himself with such scholars as Wendt, Henrici, Sieffert, and others. See a biographical sketch of Meyer by his son, in the fourth edition of the Commentary on the Philippians; Düsterdieck in Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 879. (B. P.)

Meyer, Johann Andreas Georg, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hildesheim in 1768, and died March 29, 1841, doctor of theology. He wrote, Ueber das Verdienst des Christenthums (Erfurt, 1793); — De charismate rōn γλωσσῶν (Hanover, 1797); — Versuch einer Vertheidigung und Erläuterung der Geschichte Jeau (1805); — Natur-Analogien, etc. (Hamburg, 1839). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 896, 399, 550; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 879. (B. P.)

Meyer, Johann Matthias von, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Ansbach in 1814. In 1839 he was vicar, in 1843 director of the teacher's seminary at Schwabach, in 1844 preacher at Nördlingen, in 1849 at Munich, and in 1855 dean there. In 1872 he was made member of the superior consistory, and became its president at the death of Harless (q. v.). Meyer died Sept. 15, 1882, doctor of theology, and member of the council of the Bavarian empire. He published a few sermons, for which see Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 880. (B. P.)

Meyer, Louis Georg Frédéric, a Lutheran minister of France, was born at Montbeliard, Jan. 1, 1809. He studied at Strasburg, was in 1829 teacher in Switzerland, in 1831 professor of French at Leipsic, and in 1838 he accompanied two young men to Paris, and took up his abode in the house of John Monod. In 1837 he succeeded Mr. Boissart as pastor of the Lutheran Church at Paris, was in 1857 president of consistory and ecclesiastical inspector, and died Oct. 11, 1867. Meyer advanced the cause of home missions within his church, and originated many institutions. After his death were published Sermons, Lettres et Fragments. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Meyr, Melchior, a philosophical writer of Germany, was born June 28, 1810, at Ehringen, near Nördlingen. He studied at Munich and Heidelberg, and died at Munich, April 22, 1871. Of his many writings we mention, Die Religion des Geistes (Leipsic, 1871); — Gott und Sein Reich (Stuttgart, 1860); — Drei Gespräche über Wahrheit, Güte und Schönheit (1863); — Die Fortdauer nach dem Tode (2d ed. Leipsic, 1875); — Die Religion und ihre jetzt gebotene Fortbildung (1871). After his death Bothmer and Carrière published from his manuscripts Gedanken über Kunst, Religion und Philosophie (Leipsic, 1874). (B. P.)

Mezger, Karl Ludwig Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Schonndorf, March 18, 1810. In 1845 he was professor at the seminary in Schöenthal, and died Oct. 16, 1885, doctor of theology. He is the author of Liber Ruth ex Hebraico in Latinum Versus Perpetuam Interpretatione Illustratus (Tübingen, 1856); — Hilfsbuch zum Verständniss der Bibel (1879). (B. P.)

Mezzachullans, a Mohammedan sect who believe that those who have any knowledge of God's glory and essence in this world may be saved, and are to be reckoned among the faithful.

Miall, Edward, an English Independent minister and journalist, was born at Portsmouth in 1809. He was educated at the Dissenters' College at Wymondley, Herts, and served for three years an Independent congregation at Ware, and afterwards one at Leicester. In 1841 he went to London, and established the Nonconformist, a paper in the interests of religious equality, becoming proprietor and editor, a position which he continued to occupy until his death, April 30, 1881. He was several times a representative in Parliament, and wrote numerous works on political and ecclesiastical subjects.

Mic-Mac Version of the Scriptures. The Mic-Macs, or Souriquois of French writers, are a North-American-Indian tribe, inhabiting the peninsula of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward's Island, and the eastern portion of New Brunswick. A version of the Bible into that language is of recent origin. The gospels of Matthew and John were the first portions issued in 1854, by the British and Foreign Bible Society. In 1856 the book of Genesis and the gospel of Luke were also published, the translations being made by the Rev. S. T. Rand, who continued the work. Several portions of the Old Test., and the entire New Test., are at present published. The language has been treated by Maillard, Grammar of the Mic-Mac Language (1864). (B. P.)

Michmarsh. On this interesting locality, Lieut. Conder remarks as follows (Test Work, ii, 112 sq.):

"The site of the Philistine camp at Michmarsh, which Jonathan and his armor-bearer attacked, is very minutely described by Josephus. It was, he says, a precipice with three tops, ending in a long, sharp tongue, and protected by surrounding cliffs. Exactly such a natural fortress exists immediately east of the village of Michmarsh, and it is still called 'the fort' by the peasantry. It is a ridge rising in three rounded knolls above a perpendicular crag, ending in a narrow tongue to the east, with cliffs below, and having an open valley behind it, and a saddle towards the west on which Michmarsh itself is situate. Opposite this fortress, on the south, there is a crag of equal height and seemingly impassable; thus the description of the Old Test. is fully borne out—'a sharp rock on one side, and a sharp rock on the other' (1 Sam. xiv, 4).

"The southern cliff, as we have noticed above, was called Seneh, or 'the anencia,' and the same name still applies to the modern valley, due to the anencia-trees which dot its course. The northern cliff was named Bozez, or 'shining,' and the true explanation of the name only presents itself on the spot. The great valley runs nearly due east, and thus the southern cliff is almost entirely in shade during the day. The contrast is surprising and picturesque, between the dark, cool color of the south side and the ruddy or tawny tints of the northern cliff, crowned with the gleaming white of the upper chalky strata. The picture is unchanged since the days when Jonathan looked over to the white camping-ground of the Philistines, and Bozez must then have shone as brightly as it does now, in the full light of an Eastern sun." (See illustration on following page.)

Michon, Jean Hippolyte, a French abbot and religious writer, was born at La Roche-Fressange in 1806. He pursued his theological studies at the seminary of St. Sulpice in Paris, accompanied De Saulcy to the East in 1860 and 1860, and was honorary canon of Angoulême and Bordeaux. He died in 1881, leaving, La Femme et la Famille dans le Catholicisme (1845); — Apologie Chrétienne au Dix-Neuvième Siècle

Middeldorpf, HEINRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Hamburg, Aug. 2, 1788. He commenced his academical career at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder, was in 1811 professor of theology at Breslau, in 1814 member of consistory, and died in 1837, doctor of theology. He published, Nahum übersetzt mit Anmerkungen (Hamburg, 1808):—Symbola Exegetico-Critica ad Librum Ecclesiast. (Frankfurt, 1811):—Commentatio de Institutis Literariis in Hispania (Göttingen, 1812):—Cursus Hexaplaris in Jobum (Breslau, 1817):—Comm. de Prudentio et Theologia Prudentiana (1823, 1826):—Co-dez Syriaco-Hexaplaris (1835). Middin. For this site Tristram suggests (Bible Places, p. 87) Khurbet Mird, two miles north-east of Mar Saba, the Mons Mardes of the Middle Ages, a ruin on a strong hill, with an aqueduct, wells, and arches (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 212).

Midgard, in Norse mythology, is the earth, the habitation of men, as Asgard is the dwelling of the Asas.

Midrash. By way of supplement, we add here the following works, belonging to the Midrashic literature:

I. Exegetical. 1. Agadath Bereshith, on Genesis, in eighty-three sections (Venice, 1618). See Zunz, Gottesdienstliche Vorträge, p. 256; Steinschneider, Catalogus Librorum Hebr. in Bibl. Bodl. 3727–3729.

2. Moses had-Darshan of Narbonne, of the 11th century, wrote annotations on some books of the Bible. Raymund Martini often quotes him in the Pugio Fidei. See Zunz, u. s. 287–298; Pusey, in Introduction to liii. Chapter of Isaiah, according to the Jewish Interpreters, vol. ii (Oxford, 1877); Neubauer, The Book of Tobit (ibid. 1878), p. vii–ix, xx–xxiv.

3. Midrash Hashkem, on the Pentateuch, probably of the 10th century (Zunz, p. 281). The part pertaining to Exodus was edited after a Munich MS. by Freimann, also with the Latin title, Vehishir, Opus Continentis Midrashim et Halachoth, etc. (Leipsic, 1873).

4. Midrash Jonah, published at Prague in 1695. See Zunz, p. 270, 271.

II. Halachic Midrash, viz. Sheel-toth (i. e. questions) of Rabbi Acha of Shabcha (about 750), on laws and usages, as contained in the Pentateuch. Best edition is that published at Dyhrerrufurth in 1786, with the commentary of Jessiah Berlin or Pik (q. v.). See Zunz, p. 56, 96, 343; Steinschneider, p. 4330.

III. Historical Haggadoth, viz. 1. Seder Olam (q. v.).

2. Megillath Taanith, a calendar containing the non-festive days of the 2d century. Comp. Schmilg, Ueber Entstehung und historischen Werth des Siegeskalenders Megillath Taanith (Leipsic, 1874). See Braun, Entstehung und Werth der Megillath Taanith, in Grätz, Monatsschrift, 1876, p. 875–884, 410–418, 445–460; Wolf, *Bibl. 3. Josippon (q. v.).

4. Sepher ha-Jashar, a history from Adam to the Judges, written, perhaps, in the 12th century (Venice, 1625). See Zunz, p. 154–156; Steinschneider, p. 3581–3586.

5. Midrash Yayyasu, wars of the sons of Jacob with the Canaanites and Esau, printed in Beth ham-Midrash (ed. Jellinek), iii. See Zunz, p. 145.

6. Pesach-haggada, for the Easter festival. See Zunz, p. 126; Steinschneider, p. 2671.

7. Midrash Petirath Aaron, and 8. Midrash Petirath Moshe, on the last days of Moses and Aaron. See Zunz, p. 146; Steinschneider, p. 3996–4000; Beth ham-Midrash, i, vi.

9. Kethib Eldad had-Dani (i. e. the Book of Eldad the Danite), towards the end of the 9th century, and containing the fable of the Jews beyond the river Sambation. See Beth ham-Midrash, ii, iii, iv; Steinschneider, p. 4934; Zunz, p. 139.

10. Sepher Zerubbabel (q. v.).

11. Abba Gorion treats of the narrative as contained in the Book of Esther, printed in Beth ham-Midrash, i. See Zunz, p. 279.

12. Megillath Antiochos, on the Wars of the Asmonæans. See Zunz, p. 134. The Hebrew was often printed, see Steinschneider, p. 1382–1388. The Aramaic text was first published by Filipowski at the end of his Choice of Pearls (London, 1851); then by Sluzki (Warsaw, 1863), and by Jellinek in Beth-ham-Midrash, vi. A new edition is in the course of preparation by Charles H. H. Wright, The Megillath Antiochos, a Jewish Apocryphon with the Chaldee Text, etc.

13. Midrash Ele Ezkerah, so called from the first words, "These will I remember." Ps. xlii, 5 (Hebrew text), describes the martyrdom of ten eminent teachers. See Zunz, p. 142^a; Steinschneider, p. 3730-3732; Beth ham-Midrash, ii, vi.

IV. Of a purely legendary character are: 1. Midrash Vayosha, the tradition about Arnilus (the Roman anti-christ). See Zunz, p. 282; Steinschneider, p. 3734-3739; Beth ham-Midrash, i.

2. Midrash Ezerh had-debaroth, on the Ten Commandments. See Zunz, p. 142^d; Steinschneider, p. 3751, 4986^b; Beth ham-Midrash, i.

3. Chibbur Maanioth (i. e. story-books). See Zunz, p. 130^b; Steinschneider, p. 3869 sq.; on the numerous Hebrew and Judæo-German story-books, see ibid. p. 3869-3942.

V. Ethical Midrashim, viz. 1. The Alphabet of Ben-Sira. See SIRA.

2. Derech Eretz and Derech Eretz Sutta. See TALMUD (vol. x, p. 184).

3. Thumma de Be-Elijahu, a mélange from the Bible, Talmud, and Prayer-books, thrown into the form of instructions by the prophet Elijah. See Zunz, p. 112-117; Steinschneider, p. 4111, 4112.

4. Midrash Themura. See Zunz, p. 118; Steinschneider, p. 3793; Beth ham-Midrash, i.

Migas, JOSEPH, Ben-Meir Ibn-Hal-Levi (also called Harum [הרמ], from the initials of מִיגַשׁ אֲבִיב, Rabbi Ibn-Migas), one of the greatest Talmudical scholars of his time, was born at Granada in 1077. When twelve years of age he went to Cordova to attend the lectures of Isaac ben-Jacob Alfasi (q. v.), with whom he stayed for fourteen years. The master who gave him the ordination (סמיכה) was very proud of this scholar, of whom he used to say, that even in the age of Moses none could be found like him, and he appointed him as his successor in the presidency of the College of Cordova, which post he held for thirty-eight years (1103-41), until his death. His renown attracted many students, even from Egypt. From all parts his Talmudical decisions were sought for, and the greatest ornament of his school was the celebrated Moses Maimonides (q. v.).

He wrote novellas and decisions, which are enumerated by Fürst. See Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, vi, 116 sq.; Braunschweiger, Gesch. d. Juden in den romanischen Staaten, p. 61 (Witzburg, 1865); De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico Degli Autori Ebrei (Germ. transl. by Hamburger), a. v.; Lindo, History of the Jews in Spain and Portugal, p. 55; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 378. (B. P.)

Migdal-el. Mujeidel, with which Tristram (Bible Places, p. 274) and Conder (Tent Work, ii, 338) identify this place, lies three and three quarter miles north-west of Tibnin, and is a considerable village, with ancient wine-presses, sarcophagi, cisterns, etc. (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, i, 137).

Migdal-gad. The supposed modern representative of this site, el-Mejdel, three miles north-east of Ascalon, is an important place of 1500 inhabitants, but without signs of antiquity (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, ii, 410).

Migne, Jacques Paul, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born at St. Flour, Cantal, France, Oct. 25, 1800. He was educated at the theological seminary in Orleans, acted for some time as professor at Châteauneuf, and after his ordination served as curate in the diocese of Orleans. In consequence of a controversy with his bishop respecting his (Migne's) book upon the "Liberty of the Priests," he went to Paris, and started L'Univers Religieux, later called simply L'Univers. In 1833 he sold his interest in the paper, and went to Petit Montrouge, near Paris, where he soon built up an enormous printing establishment, to which he gave the name "Imprimerie Catholique." From this proceeded the famous Patrologia Cursus Completus sive Bibliotheca Universalis, Integra, Uniformis, Commoda, Economica Omnium SS. Patrum, Doctorum, Scriptorumque Ecclesiasticorum qui ab ævo Apostolico ad Uagum Innocentii II Tempora Floruerunt (Latin series, 221 vols., 1844 sq.; 2d ed. 1878 sq.; 1st Greek series, 104 vols.; 2d ed. 58 vols., both since 1857).—Collection des Oraisons Sacrées (100 vols., 1846-48), etc. In 1868 this immense establishment was burned to the ground. Migne died Oct. 25, 1875, at Paris. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v.; Vapereau, Dictionnaire des Contemporains, ed. 1880, p. 1290. (B. P.)

Mikela, WILLIAM S., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Orange County, N. Y., May 18, 1820. He graduated at Madison University in 1843, and from the theological department of the same institution in 1845; soon after became pastor in Rondout, N. Y., remaining there four years; then at Sing Sing six years; next at the Sixteenth Street Church, New York city, and had a successful ministry for seventeen years; and finally of the East Church, in the seventh ward of the same city, where he died, June 20, 1883. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. a. v. (J. C. S.)

Miles, Henry, D.D., an English Presbyterian clergyman, was born in 1699, and entered the ministry in early life. He was the minister of a church at Tooting, Surrey, for many years; a learned and ingenious man of considerable ability, and an eminent Christian. His skill in natural science led to his being elected a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1737 he was chosen assistant minister at the Old Jewry Church, where he preached once on the Lord's Day for seven years, but resigned in 1744, and confined himself to Tooting, where he died, much regretted, Feb. 10, 1763. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 384.

Miles, James Browning, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Rutland, Mass., Aug. 18, 1822. He graduated from Yale College in 1849, and from Yale Divinity School in 1854, having one year (1852) attended the Theological Seminary at Andover; also, from 1852 to 1854, acting as tutor in Yale College. He was ordained pastor of the First Church, Charlestown, Mass., Jan. 2, 1855, from which he was dismissed in October, 1871, to become secretary of the American Peace Society. About the same time he became secretary of the International Code Society. He died at Worcester, Nov. 13, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 431.

Miller, Ebenezer, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, graduated from Harvard College in 1722; obtained ordination in England in 1727; became a missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and as such was made rector of the Church in Braintree, Mass., Dec. 25, 1727. He died Feb. 11, 1763. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 110.

Miller, Josiah, an English minister, who died Dec. 22, 1880, at London, where he had for a long time been secretary to the London City Mission, is best known for his writings on hymnology. His first volume in this branch of religious literature, Our Hymns, their Authors and Origin, appeared in 1866; three years later a second edition was published, under the altered title of Singers and Songs of the Church (Lond. 1869), which has also been reprinted in New York. (B. P.)

Miller, Samuel, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Princeton, N. J., Jan. 23, 1816, being the son of professor Samuel Miller of Princeton College. He graduated from the college there in 1833, and the theological seminary in 1844, having been tutor in the college for several years in the meantime. He studied law, and while engaged in its practice prepared a full report of the great suit between the Old and New School branches of the Presbyterian Church at the time of the disruption. He was ordained in 1844, and after serving as stated supply at the Presbyterian Church at Mount Holly, N. J., for many years, became pastor in 1850. He also established a classical school of a high order, which continued there from 1845 to 1857. From 1858 he was stated supply at Columbus for twenty years, and for four years of the churches of Zuckerton and Bass River. He was relieved from the charge of Mount Holly Church in 1873, but continued to supply various pulpits. In 1880 he was installed pastor of the Church of Oceanic, where he labored until failing health obliged him to resign. He died at Mount Holly, Oct. 12, 1883. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1884, p. 32. (W. P. S.)

Miller, CYRUS TAGGART, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Paris, N. Y., May 4, 1819. He graduated from Williams College in 1844, and from Union Theological Seminary in 1847; was ordained in 1848, and in 1849 went out as a missionary to Ceylon, having charge of the Battacotta Seminary. In 1855 failure of health obliged him to return. From 1856 to 1858 he was stated supply at Berkshire, N. Y., and in 1860 was chosen president of the Oahu College, in the Sandwich Islands, where he remained four years, and then resided for a year at Ware, Mass. In 1865 he went as agent of the Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions to California, where he established in Brooklyn a female seminary. He died in California in 1884.

Minot, THOMAS, an Irish prelate, was consecrated archbishop of Dublin on Palm Sunday in 1363. In 1366, the revenues of the preceptor of St. Patrick's having been much reduced by the invasion of the Irish from the mountains, he united to that dignity the Church of Kilmactallagh. This addition was for the purpose of enabling the incumbent to live hospitably, give alms, and answer the expenses and charges of his office. About 1370 Minot repaired part of St. Patrick's Church, which had been destroyed by fire. In 1373 he was one of those who advised the customs and assessments imposed, and other arbitrary measures enforced by William de Windsor, lord deputy. In 1374 he erected the Church of Rathallagh into a prebend, and in 1375 had the royal mandate to attend a council to consider and provide against the hostilities of the O'Briens of Thomond, who invaded Munster. But in June of 1375 he died in London. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 138.

Mira Baia, a subdivision of the Vallabhacharis (q. v.), originated by Mirā Bai, who flourished in the reign of Akbar, and was celebrated as the authoress of poems addressed to Vishnū. She was the daughter of a petty rajah, the sovereignty of a place called Mertā. Further than that her history is enveloped in fable.

Mirus, ADAM ERDMANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 26, 1656. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1684 conrector at Zittau, and died June 8, 1727. He wrote, Philologia Sacra (Leipsic, 1699):—Philologia Biblica (1713):—Isagoge Biblica (1687):—Summarium Ebraeae Linguae xxi Tabulis Inclusum (1719):—Onomasticum Biblicum sive Lexicon Nominum Propriorum (1721):—De Ebraeorum Sectionibus Legalibus et Prophet. (1683):—Biblisches Antiquitäten-Lexicon (1727):—Kurze Fragen aus der freien Mechanik und Bankunst der Ebräer (1713):—Kurze Fragen aus der Heraldica Sacra (1719):—Kurze Fragen aus der Musica Sacra (1707), etc. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 381; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Misler, JOHANN NICOLAUS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1615. He was archdeacon at Marburg, was in 1652 professor of theology and Hebrew at Giessen, in 1654 doctor of theology, and died Feb. 20, 1688. He wrote, Scrutinium Scripturae Sacrae:—Synopsis Theologica Totius Christianae Religionis:—Theognosia sive de Deo Triuno et dōgma Incarnato:—Speculum anti-Jesuiticum:—Dias. V de Sacra Scriptura ex Joh. r. 39:—De Dicto Prophetico Esa. liii. 4:—De Mystero Sanctae Trinitatis. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Mitchell, Jacob Duché, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 2, 1806. When eighteen years of age he entered the College of New Jersey, where he graduated in 1827, and in the same year went to Princeton Seminary and studied two years there. He was licensed to preach by the Oneida Presbytery, Sept. 18, 1829: first labored in Albany, and was ordained as an evangelist, Nov. 17 of the same year. He afterwards served at Shepherdstown, Martinsburg, and Smithfield, in Jefferson Co., Va. In this early period of his ministry, and for years following, when he labored far and wide in Virginia as a revival preacher, all testimonies agree that he exhibited extraordinary pulpit power. In 1832 he became pastor at Lynchburg. From 1835 to 1837 he served as secretary of the Central Board of Foreign Missions for Virginia and South Carolina. In 1858 he became pastor at Peaks, near Liberty, Va., where he labored for fourteen years, having very great success in winning souls. Next he went to Alexandria and labored as an evangelist in the Chesapeake Presbytery, and in 1873 and 1874 acted as general agent for Hampden Sidney College. He died June 28, 1877. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1878, p. 23.

Mitchell, John S., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born on Block Island, R. I., in 1800. In his twenty-third year he entered the Genesee Conference; from 1837 to 1842 was agent of the American Bible Society in Maryland; in 1850 was transferred to the New York East Conference, in which he took prominent appointments as pastor and presiding elder; in 1864 was secretary of the Freedmen's Relief Association, and finally superintendent of missions in Virginia and North Carolina. He died at Newburgh, N. Y., Sept. 16, 1882. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1883, p. 93.

Mithrion, a temple of Mithras, the Persian sun-god.

Mitternacht, JOHANN SEBASTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hardeleben, in Thuringia, March 30, 1613. He studied at Jena and Wittenberg, and was in 1638 pastor at Teutleben, Thu-

ringia. In 1642 he was rector at Naumburg, in 1646 at Gera, and died Feb. 25, 1679. He wrote, Grammatica Ebraea:—De Nativitatis Domini Anno, Mense ac Die:—Notæ Philologicæ, Theologicæ, Chronologicæ et Historicæ in Fabricii Historiam Sacram:—De Abrahami Nomine et Patria Ur:—De Tempore et loco Effusionis Spiritus Sancti ad Actor. ii, 1:—Explicatio Philologica Dicti ex Proverb. xxii, 15:—Διάκρισις Philologica Jobi xxiii, 11, 12:—Item in Locum ad Hebræos cap. xiii, 7. Mizpeh of Benjamin. Respecting this place Lieut. Conder remarks (Tent Work, ii, 117):

"There are plenty of Mizpehs in Palestine, but in positions quite inapplicable, whereas, in the right direction there is no name of the kind (so far as has yet been discovered), for Sh'afat is not apparently derived from Mizpeh, but is a name very like that of Jehosaphat, and the natives of the place say that it was called after a Jewish king. In crusading times the town seems to be also mentioned under the title Jehosaphat.

"The early Christians placed Mizpeh in quite another direction, and Nob at Beit Naba, which is famous in the history of Richard Lion-Heart. Their site for Mizpeh was near Soba, west of Jerusalem, and here we found a ruin with the title Shafa, which in meaning is equivalent to the Hebrew Mizpeh; but this place cannot be described as 'over against Jerusalem,' and its recovery is thus a matter of minor interest.

"There is one other site which has been proposed for Mizpeh, though it is merely a conjecture, and not a name which might lead to the identification: this site is the remarkable hill called Neby Samwil, north of Jerusalem. The place is conspicuous from the tall minaret which crowns the old crusading church on the summit, and within the church is the cenotaph now revered by the Moslems as the tomb of Samuel—a modern monument covered with a green cloth.

"The crusaders, with their usual contempt for facts, fixed on this hill as the ancient Shiloh: they also called it Ramah, and added besides a title of their own. 'Two miles from Jerusalem,' says Sir John Maundeville, 'is Mount Joy, a very fair and delicious place. There Samuel the prophet lies in a fair tomb, and it is called Mount Joy because it gives joy to pilgrims' hearts, for from that place men first see Jerusalem.'

"The tradition which places Samuel's tomb here seems, however, to be only recent. Rabbi Benjamin of Tudela, who is a tolerably safe guide as regards Jewish sacred sites, discredits the story and speaks of a change of site. 'When the Christians took Ramleh, which is Ramah, from the Mohammedans,' says the rabbi, 'they discovered the sepulchre of Samuel the Ramathi near the Jewish synagogue, and removed his remains to Shiloh, where they erected a large place of worship over them, called St. Samuel of Shiloh to the present day.'

Neby Samwil is fully described in the Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 12, 149.

Moabitic Stone. See MESHA.

Mobah, what may be either done or omitted, according to the law of Mohammed, as being indifferent.

Mobaedians, a name given to the followers of the famous Mohammedan impostor Borkai or Mokanna (q. v.). They made an insurrection in the province of Khorassan against the caliph Mahadi, who, however, at length defeated them. Their name is derived from an Arabic word signifying white, the color of their dress, by which they were distinguished from the adherents of the caliph, who were clothed in black garments.

Mobeds are the officiating priests among the Parsees of India. They read the holy books in the temples, and superintend all the religious ceremonies, but being themselves unlearned, they seldom understand the meaning of what they read, or the prayers they recite. The mobeds are distinct from the dustûrs, who are doctors and expounders of the law. There is also an inferior order of clergy among the Parsees, called hirbeds, who have immediate charge of the sacred fire, and sweep and take care of the temple. The priests receive their office by inheritance, and have no fixed salary; but are paid for their services. Many of them follow secular employments.

Moberley, GEORGE, D.D., D.C.L., an English prelate, was born in St. Petersburg in 1803. He was educated at Winchester School, and graduated from Balliol College, Oxford, in 1825; was for some years tutor and fellow there; in 1835 was appointed head-master of Winchester School; in 1866 rector of Brixton, in the Isle of Wight; in 1868 a canon of Chester; in 1869 bishop of Salisbury, and died July 7, 1885. Dr. Moberley was the author of numerous sermons and essays, also one of the five clergymen who published revised versions of several parts of the New Test.

Möbius. See MÆBIUS.

Modin. El-Medieh, the modern representative of this place, famous in the Maccabean history, is fully described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, ii, 341 sq. (See illustration on p. 732.)

Moffat, Nicol de, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of the see of Glasgow in 1268. He died at Tinningham, in East-Lothian. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 241.

Moffat, Robert, D.D., an eminent English missionary, was born at Inverkeithing, Fifeshire, Scotland, Dec. 21, 1795. He was originally a gardener, and was brought up within the fold of the Secession Church, to which his parents belonged. In 1816, having resolved to become a missionary to the heathen, he offered his services to the London Missionary Society, and arriving at Cape Town in 1817, immediately proceeded beyond the boundaries of Cape Colony to Namaqualand, where he entered upon his labors at the kraal of Africaner, a chief whose name had long been a terror to the people of the neighboring districts of the colony, but who had lately become a convert to Christianity. Here Moffat labored for three or four years with great success, Christianity and civilization advancing together. But the situation being unsuitable for a principal mission-station, he travelled and labored at several stations in succession in the countries to the north and north-east of Cape Colony. His remarkable personal adventures and hair-breadth escapes in these journeys are graphically described in his work, Missionary Labors and Scenes in Southern Africa (Lond. 1842, 8vo), which he wrote and published during a visit of several years to Britain, rendered necessary by the state of his health. In America also Mr. Moffat's book made many friends for the African, and our missionary labors in that field were largely inspired by his appeals. During his stay in England Moffat also carried through the press, at the expense of the British and Foreign Evangelical Society, a version of the New Test. and the Psalms in the Bechuana language. In 1842 he returned to his labors in Africa, and continued his work there, with great success, till 1870, when he returned to Scotland. In 1873 he received a public gratuity of £5800 as a testimonial of his missionary services. He died near London, Aug. 9, 1883. Besides the publication already mentioned, we have from him the Bechuana Hymn-book (Lond. Relig. Tract Soc. 1843, 18mo). Moffat's Farewell Services were edited by Dr. Campbell, and published in 1843 (8vo). Moffat's daughter was the wife of the celebrated missionary and traveller, the late Dr. Livingstone. See Yonge, Pioneers and Founders (Lond. 1872, 12mo); Bayard Taylor, Cyclop. of Mod. Travel (N. Y. 1856), p. 561 sq.; Miss. Cyclop. (ibid. 1873, 8vo), s. v.; Christian at Work, Aug. 16, 1883; Life and Labors (N. Y. 1883); (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1884, p. 311.

Ruined Tomb at Medleh.

Mogon, a pagan deity, mentioned by Camden in his Britannia as having been worshipped anciently by the Cadeni, who inhabited that part of England now called Northumberland. In the year 1607 two altars were found in that district, bearing inscriptions declaring them to have been dedicated to that god.

Mohawk Version of the SCRIPTURES. The Mohawk was spoken by the Indian tribes west of the falls of the Niagara. For the benefit of these peoples the British and Foreign Bible Society published Isaiah and the gospels of Luke and John in the vernacular of the Mohawk Indians, while the Pentateuch and Psalms are translated but not yet published. See Bible of Every Land, p. 456. (B. P.)

Mokanna. See ATHA BEN-HAKEM.

Mokissos, an order of deities of the negroes of Congo, Angola, etc., in Africa. They are a kind of genii or spirits, and are in subordination to a superior being, called by the natives Zamban-Pongo. Their idols are composed either of wood or stone; a few are erected in temples or chapels, but the much greater part in the public streets and highways. Some are in the form of four-footed beasts, others are like birds. To these the negroes bow, and offer sacrifices to appease their anger, or to obtain their favor.

Mokludjye, a sect of the Ansarians (q. v.).

Moladah. Khurbet el-Müh, the probable representative of this locality, is seven miles and three quarters south-west of Tell Arad, and thirteen and a quarter east of Beersheba. It is briefly described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 415), and more fully by Tristram, Bible Places (p. 19), as follows:

"The two wells are in the shallow val'ey, very finely built of marble, about seventy feet deep, their sides scored with the ropes of the water-drawers of many centuries. The ground around is strewn with records of the Roman occupation. Fragments of shafts and capitals, probably the support of roofs that covered the wells, and eight large marble water-troughs, lie around the mouths. There are traces of pavement. Just to the south of the wells stands a small isolated 'tell' or hill, covered with ruins, and now used as a burying-ground of the Dhulam tribe. This hill was the fortress of the city below, spoken of by Josephus; and we could clearly trace the circuit of the wall that once surrounded it, nearly square in shape, and still in places three or four feet high. The traces of buildings and fragments of walls cover an extensive area both south and north of the citadel; and near its foot, on the south-east, are the outlines of a building, probably a Byzantine church. The other ruins seem to belong to an earlier and silder period, and are perhaps the remains of the town of Simeon."

Molhedites, a name sometimes applied to the ASSASSINS (q. v.).

Molitor, WILHELM, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 24, 1819, at Zweibrücken. He first practiced law, but in 1849 betook himself to the study of theology at Bonn, received holy orders in 1851 at Spire, was in 1857 cathedral dean and in 1864 doctor of theology, a distinction conferred on him by pope Pius IX. In 1868 the same pope called him to Rome as consulter to the Vatican council. Molitor died Jan. 1, 1880, at Spire. He published, Ueber kanonisches Gerichtsverfahren gegen Kleriker (Mayence, 1856); — Die Immunität des Domes zu Speyer (ibid. 1859); — Fastenpredigten (1871); — Predigten auf die Sonn- und Festtage des katholischen Kirchenjahres (3 vols.); also, in connection with Hülskamp, Papst Pius IX in seinem Leben und Wirken (3d ed. 1873). (B. P.)

Moll, Carl Bernhard, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Wolgast, Pomerania, Nov. 20, 1806. He studied at Berlin and Greifswalde, and entered the ministry in 1830 at Naugard. In 1834 he was called to Löknitz, near Stettin, in 1845 to Stettin, in 1850 as professor of theology to Halle, and was made, in 1860, general superintendent of the province of Prussia. He died Aug. 17, 1878, at Königsberg, leaving, Die gegenwärtige Noth der evangelischen Kirche Preussens (Pasewalk, 1843); — Das Heil in Christo in Predigten (Halle, 1852); — Das System der praktischen Theologie im Grundriss dargestellt (1853); — Christologia in Epistola ad Hebræos (1854-55); — De Justo Attributione Dei Discrimine (1855); — Zeugnisse vom Leben in Christo in Predigten (1856). For Lange's Bibelwerk he wrote the commentary on the Psalms and on the Epistle to the Hebrews. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 892 sq. (B. P.)

Moll, Willem, a Dutch theologian, was born Feb. 28, 1812, at Dort. He studied at Leyden, and in 1837 pastor at De Vuursche, in the province of Utrecht, in 1844 at Arnheim, in 1846 professor of theology at Amsterdam, and died Aug. 16, 1879. He is the author of, Kerk geschiedenis van Nederland voor de Hervorming (Utrecht, 1864-71, 6 vols.):—Geschiedenis van het kerkelijke Leven der Christenen gedurende de zes eerste Eeuwen (Amsterdam, 1844-46, 2 vols.; 2d ed. Leyden, 1855, 1857):—Angelus Merula, De hervormer en Martelaar des Geloofs (1851):—Johannes Brugmann en het godsdienstig Leven onzer Vaders in de vijftiende Eeuw (1854). Moll founded the society which from 1856 to 1863 published the Kalender voor de Protestant in Nederland. See Acquoy, Levensbericht van Willem Moll, in Jaarboek van de Koninklijke Akademie van Wetenschappen, 1879, p. 66-137; Rogge, Willem Moll, in Mannen van Beteekenis in onze Dagen, 1879; Nippold, Die römisch-katholische Kirche im Königreich der Niederlande (Leipzig, 1877), p. 486-489; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. Möller, Arnold, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 9, 1791, at Duisburg. In 1817 he was military preacher at Münster, in 1829 pastor at Minden, and died in 1858. He published, Für christliche Erbauung (Ratisbon, 1832, 2 vols.):—Biblisches Schatzkästlein zur täglichen Erbauung christlicher Pilger (1831):—Tabor und Sinai (Münster, 1834):—Der Tisch des Herrn (2d ed. 1852):—Das Evangelium für Kinder (1839):—Friedrich Adolph Krummacher und seine Freunde (Bremen, 1849, 2 vols.):—Der liturgische Theil des evangelischen Gottesdienstes in den preussischen Ländern (Bielefeld, 1850):—Hilfsbuch für den liturgischen Theil (3 parts, 1851-52). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 893 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 544; ii, 255, 270, 287, 310, 333, 337, 368, 392, 396. (B. P.)

Möller, Jens, a Danish theologian, was born in 1779, and died Nov. 25, 1833, doctor and professor of theology at Copenhagen. He published, Theologisk Bibliothek (Copenhagen, 1811-21, 20 vols.):—Niue theol. Biblioth. (1821 sq. 20 vols.):—Tidskrift for Kerke og Theolog. (1832, 1833, 4 vols.):—Compendium theologie symbol. eccles. Lutheranae. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 12, 338. (B. P.)

Möller, Johann Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Erfurt, Nov. 13, 1789. He studied at Göttingen, was in 1814 professor at the teachers' seminary in his native city, in 1815 deacon, in 1829 pastor, in 1831 senior of the Evangelical ministerium, and in 1832 member of consistory. In 1843 Möller was called as general superintendent to Magdeburg, and died April 20, 1861. He wrote, Commentatio in verba Christi, Matt. xii, 12-14 (Erfurt, 1835):—Handreichung der Kirche an die Schule (2d ed. Magdeburg, 1852):—Kritisch-evangelische Unterweisung (ibid. 1855):—besides he published a number of sermons. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 895 sq.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Möller, Martin, a Lutheran hymn-writer of Germany, was born Nov. 11, 1547, at Leissnitz, Saxony. In 1572 he was called to the ministry at Kesselsdorf, and in 1575 to Sprottau, Lower Silesia. In 1600 he was appointed pastor primarius at Görlitz, in Upper Lausatia, and died March 2, 1606. Besides his Praxis Evangeliorum, a practical exposition on the gospels of the Christian year (1601, 4 vols.), he wrote several hymns, some of which are translated into English, as Nimm von uns Herr, du treuer Gott (in Jacobi, Psalmodia Germanica, i, 123, "Remove from us, O faithful God"), O Jesu, siis wer dein gedunkt (ibid. i, 130 sq., "When thought brings Jesus to my sense"), Ach Gott, wie manches Herzeleid (Chorale Book for England, No. 136, "Ah God, my days are dark indeed"). See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, ii, 211 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Molungo, the name given to the Supreme Being by some of the tribes of Central Africa.

Molybdomancy (from μόλυβδος, lead, and μαν- reia, divination), a species of divination among the ancient heathen, in which they drew conjectures concerning future events from the motions and figures presented by melted lead.

Mondari Version of the Scriptures. The Mondari is spoken by the Koles of Chota Nagpore, Bengal Presidency. The Rev. N. Nottrott, of the German Missionary (Gosner's) Society, translated the gospel of Mark into the Mondari in 1875, which was printed in 1876 by the Calcutta Auxiliary. In 1879 the gospel of Luke was printed, and between 1881 and 1882 the gospels of John and Matthew followed. The work of translation was done by the missionary already mentioned and the Rev. L. Beyer. Each translator revised the work of the other by the help of native assistants. (B. P.)

Mone, Franz Joseph, a Roman Catholic writer of Germany, was born May 12, 1796, at Mingolsheim, near Bruchsal. He studied at Heidelberg, commenced his academic career there in 1817, was professor in 1819, and from 1826 also first librarian of the university. In 1827 he accepted a call to Louvain, but returned to Heidelberg in 1831. Mone died at Karlsruhe, March 12, 1871, leaving, Geschichte des Heidenthums im nördlichen Europa (Heidelberg, 1822-23, 2 vols.):—Latvianische Hymnen des Mittelalters (Karlsruhe, 1855-57, 3 vols.):—Lateinische und griechische Messen aus dem 2. bis 6. Jahrhundert (1850). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 514. (B. P.)

Mongolian Version of the Scriptures. In the Mongolian there exist different versions:

I. The Buriat, or Northern Mongolian, for the Buriats about lake Baikal, in Siberia, and for the Kalka tribes of Mongolia. In 1824 the New Test. was printed at St. Petersburg, under the superintendence of Dr. Schmidt, who, with the aid of two learned Buriats, had commenced the translation, but during the work one of the Buriats died. The surviving Buriat was afterwards associated with Messrs. Swan, Stallybrass, and Yuille, missionaries at Selingsinsk, in the translation of the Old Test. and the revision of the New Test. The Old Test. was translated from the Hebrew, with constant reference to such critical apparatus as could be obtained. The style of writing adopted in this version holds a middle place between the vulgar colloquial language of the people, which varies in different districts, and the abstruse modes of expression employed in some of their books. It is above the common business dialect, but not so much higher as to place the subject beyond the reach of any one of common understanding. The Old Test. was completed at Khodon, in Siberia, in 1840, and during the same year Messrs. Swan and Stallybrass accomplished a fresh translation of the New Test. from the original Greek, based on the version previously made. An edition of this Testament was completed at press in 1846 at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society, while a reprint of it was undertaken in 1878 by the Academy of Sciences at St. Petersburg, under the editorship of Mr. Schiefner, in the Mongolian type instead of the Manchu character, reducing thereby the size of the book by two thirds. This edition was completed at press in 1880, under the editorship of Mr. Pozdnieff, professor of Mongolian in the St. Petersburg University, who had taken the place of superintendent after the death of professor Schiefner.

II. The Kalmuck, or Western Mongolian, for the Kalmucks of the Don and Volga, in Russia, and Eleuths, Kalmucks, and Soungars, of Mongolia. In this dialect there exist translations of the gospels of Matthew and John and of the Acts of the Apostles, published between 1815 and 1822. Concerning these efforts of translation and the Kalmucks themselves we read the following in the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for the year 1877: "The Kalmucks are a Mongolian tribe, inhabiting the great salt steppe of the province of Astrakhan, about whose mode of life and habits not much is known in Western Europe. While it is not likely that they, at the present time at least, in any way answer to the description given of themselves to the patriarch Nikon by thirty of their chiefs, as recorded by Macarius, and quoted by dean Stanley in his Eastern Church—where, being brought into the presence of the patriarch, they are represented as saying to him, 'When we have conquered a man, we cut away his nose, and then carve him into pieces and eat him. Good Lord, whenever you have any men deserving of death, do not trouble yourself about their guilt or punishment, but give them us to eat, and you will do us a great kindness'—they are certainly in a very low state of civilization, even though their chiefs are sometimes educated in Russian schools. Mission work was begun among them early in the present century, and by the preaching of the Gospel and circulation of the Scriptures, parts of which had been translated into Kalmuck by the missionary Conrad Neitz, and others, and subsequently revised by Dr. Schmidt, laboring under the auspices of the emperor Alexander I, and of the British and Foreign Bible Society, a number of conversions took place. But days of trouble and persecution fell upon the mission, and in a recent letter the pastor of the Moravian settlement of Sarepta, founded with the express purpose of evangelizing the Kalmucks, informs your agent that at present no thorough knowledge of Kalmuck is possessed by any of the brethren. A search made in the archives of the village revealed the presence of a few copies of the gospels of Matthew and John, besides a number of Kalmuck tracts. A copy of each of the gospels having been sent by your agent to London, specimen pages of a reduced and convenient size have been printed by the photographic process. These were forwarded to Sarepta, and we now await the result of their critical examination by learned Kalmucks, if there be any, and to know the opinions of the brethren themselves. Should these be deemed satisfactory, and the committee otherwise see fit to proceed with the printing of the Scriptures in the vernacular of this tribe, future reports may contain something more interesting and instructive about the progress of Bible work among its members." From the report for the year 1880 we learn that the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society at St. Petersburg has been authorized to employ M. Pozdnieff and archpriest Smirnoff to translate the gospel of Matthew. M. Pozdnieff, as an eminent Kalmuck scholar, will make the translation, and archpriest Smirnoff, who lives among the Kalmucks, will see that the words and idioms are suited to the people. On this plan there is reason to hope that an excellent translation will be produced, and the question of proceeding with the other books of the New Test. will depend on the manner in which the gospel of Matthew is received. In the report for 1884 we read the gratifying statement that the committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society have authorized the publication of an edition of two thousand copies of the New Test. prepared by professor Pozdnieff. New type has been cut at the expense of the above society and cast at the expense of the academy.

III. The Southern, or Kalkhas Colloquial. In this dialect, used in Chinese Mongolia, the gospel of Matthew has been translated by the Rev. J. Edkins and Dr. J. J. Schereschewsky, aided by a native Lama, and was printed in 1872 under the care of the Rev. J. Edkins, of Peking. This is the only part now extant. See Bible of Every Land, p. 337.

For the study of the language, see Schmidt, Grammatik der mongolischen Sprache (1831); Zwick, Grammatik der westmongolischen Sprache (1851); Castren, Versuch einer burjatischen Sprachlehre (1857). (B. P.)

Monod, HORACE, an eminent French Protestant minister, the youngest son of Jean (q. v.), was born in Paris, Jan. 20, 1814. He studied at Lausanne and Strasbourg, and in 1838 was deacon at Marseilles. In 1842

he was appointed member of consistory, and died July 13, 1881. For forty years he preached in the same church with great success. He published eight volumes of Sermons and a French translation of Hodge's Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Monoism. See MONADOLGY.

Monson, ABRAHAM, a Jewish savant who flourished towards the end of the 16th century, was a native of Egypt, and died at Constantinople. He wrote מ"ש, i. e. Decisiones et Responsa, which are incorporated in Salomo Cohen's Decisiones (Salonica, 1596) and in those of Joseph di Trani (Constantinople, 1641). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 388; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. iii, 52; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Montandon, AUGUSTE LAURENT, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Clermont-Ferrand in 1803. He studied at Geneva, was for some time pastor at Luneray, and accepted a call in 1832 to Paris as pastor adjunctus. He published Récits de l'Ancien et du Nouveau Testament, and took a great interest in the different religious organizations, especially in the work of the Bible Society, to which he rendered great services. Montandon died in 1876. (B. P.)

Montefiore, SIR MOSKES, a Jewish philanthropist, was born Oct. 24, 1784. He was an opulent merchant of London, and was successively knighted and raised to a baronetcy for his public labors; having served as sheriff of London in 1837, and also high-sheriff of Kent. He went in 1840 on a benevolent mission to the East, and on others in 1840 and 1867, in behalf of his oppressed brethren. In the latter year he founded a Jewish college at Ramsgate. In 1875 he visited Jerusalem the seventh time. He died at Ramsgate, July 28, 1885. See his Centenary Biography, by Lucien Wolf (Lond. 1884; N. Y. 1885); The American Hebrew, Oct. 9, 1885.

Montet, JOSEPH, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Milhau, Aveyron, in 1790. He studied at Lausanne and Geneva, and was made a licentiate of theology at the latter place, on presenting Disputatio Theolog. de Authentia Librorum Novi Testamenti, in 1813. In 1814 he was called as pastor to Réalmont, Tarn; in 1825 he was made professor of Church history at Montauban, and dean of the faculty in 1835. In 1865 he retired from active duty, and died Feb. 24, 1878. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Montfort, SECT AT. In the 11th century a mystic Christian sect appeared in the north of Italy, having its headquarters at Montfort, in the neighborhood of Turin. Their presiding officer was one Gerhard, who was called upon by Heribert, archbishop of Milan, to give an account of his doctrines. They were considered heretics, and subjected to great persecution, which they bore with the spirit of martyrs; but the sect made little progress.

Montgomery, ROBERT, a distinguished English missionary, was born at Bangor, Aug. 19, 1811. He studied at Edinburgh, was licensed by his presbytery about the end of 1841, and a few weeks afterwards was set apart for the mission to India. In 1843 he was stationed at Poorbunder, on the western coast, and three years later was transferred to Surat. He early acquired a scholarly knowledge of Gujarati, into which he translated the Epistle to the Romans and the prophecy of Isaiah; likewise two little volumes by Dr. Barth, entitled, Scripture Stories of the Old and New Testament. He also prepared a Dictionary, English and Gujarati, which stands now as a help to all students of that language. He wrote several hymns, three of which are included in the Gujarati Book of Praise. When he returned in broken health in 1876, advantage was taken of his presence to appoint him moderator of the General Assembly. He was one of the delegates at the general missionary conference in London in 1879. Montgomery died in November, 1880. (B. P.)

Moodie, WILLIAM, D.D., a Scotch Presbyterian minister, who died June 11, 1811, in the fifty-third year of his age, was one of the ministers of St. Andrew's Church, Edinburgh, from 1787, and professor of Hebrew and Oriental languages in the University from 1798. He was a man of considerable literary acquirements, very popular as a preacher, and the author of several works. A volume of his Sermons has been published, to which is prefixed a biography of the author (Edinburgh, 1813, 8vo). See Fasti Eccles. Scotica, i, 73.

Moody, JOHN, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Dauphin County, Pa., July 4, 1776. After graduating from Princeton College, in 1796, he studied theology with Rev. James Snodgrass, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Carlisle in 1801. In 1803 he was ordained by the same presbytery pastor of Middle Spring, where he remained until his death, in 1857. During the latter years of his life he was unable to perform his ministerial work. He was a laborious, faithful, and successful pastor. See Alexander, Princ. Col., 18th Cent.

Moore, John L., D.D., a pioneer Baptist minister, was born in Lewis County, N. Y., Feb. 17, 1803. He was converted at the age of twenty-two; graduated from the Hamilton Institute in 1831; was ordained the same year at Watertown; visited and preached in several of the larger towns of Ohio, under the direction of the Home Mission Society; and in 1834 settled in Piqua, in that state, spending half his time with a new church at Troy. Next he was pastor at Dayton for two years, and then, for eight years, was in the service of the Ohio Convention, acting a part of the time as an agent of the college at Granville, now Denison University. After a short pastorate in Springfield, he devoted himself to promoting the interests of the theological seminary at Fairmount. In 1855 he became an exploring missionary in Ohio, and finally gave up public life, preaching occasionally. He died in Topeka, Kansas, Jan. 23, 1878. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 812. (J. C. S.)

Moore, Smith William, D.D., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born Nov. 1, 1818, in North Carolina. He was converted in 1837, and entered Randolph-Macon College in 1838, but was obliged to leave a few months before graduation. He then taught school in Tennessee for two years, preaching in the meanwhile, and joined the Tennessee Conference in 1844, when he was ordained deacon. From 1849 to 1852 he was professor in the Female Institute at Athens, Ala., when he was elected president, which position he resigned in 1853 to accept the vice-presidency of La Grange College. After a few months he resigned this position, and being transferred to Memphis Conference, became president of Bascom Female Seminary, a position he retained several years. One year he was agent of the Book and Tract Society, and at the same time one of the editors of the conference paper, Christian Advocate. In 1866 he was appointed president of Andrew College at Trenton, Tenn., where he continued four years. The remainder of his life was given to the itinerancy, his last appointment being Central Church, Memphis, in 1879. He died at Brownsville, Sept. 2, 1880. Dr. Moore was a polished scholar, skilled theologian, and faithful Christian. His preaching was clear, strong, instructive, and impressive. He was generous, kind, studious, prayerful, laborious, pure in heart, chaste in speech, consistent in life, catholic as well as evangelical, and profoundly earnest as a minister of the gospel. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1880, p. 167.

Moore, Thomas Verner, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Newville, Pa., Feb. 1, 1818. He graduated from Dickinson College in 1838; became agent for the Pennsylvania Colonization Society; graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1842; was ordained pastor at Carlisle the same year; was settled at Greencastle in 1845; the First Church, Richmond, Va., in 1847; editor of the Central Presbyterian, and pastor of First Church, Nashville, Tenn., in 1869, and died there, Aug. 5, 1871. He was moderator of the General Assembly in 1867. His chief published works are, Commentary on Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi (N. Y. 1856);—Evidences of Christianity:—Occasional Sermons. His contributions to religious journals were numerous. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 124; Nevins, Presb. Encyclop. s. v.

Morabites, a Mohammedan sect found chiefly in Africa. They were founded about the 8th century by Mohaidin, the last son of Hossein, who was the grandson of Mohammed. They live in sequestered places, like monks, either separately or in small communities; are very licentious in their habits, and follow many practices utterly opposed to the Koran.

Moraht, ADOLPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 28, 1805, at Hamburg. He studied at Halle and Göttingen, and for nine years acted as teacher at his native place. In 1838 he was deacon at Mölln, in the duchy of Lauenburg, in 1846 pastor, and died Dec. 6, 1884. He published, Versuch einer Methodik des Religionsunterrichtes (2d ed. Merseburg, 1833):—Harfenklänge, eine Sammlung christlicher Gedichte (Lüneburg, 1840), besides a number of sermons. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol., 903; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 296. (B. P.)

Moravia, ANDREW DR., a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Moray from 1224 to 1242, in which year he died. This prelate laid the foundation of that magnificent church which was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and ordered to be the cathedral church of Moray forever. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 138.

Moray, David, a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of the see of Moray in 1299, at Arignou. He died Jan. 20, 1326. This prelate founded the Scots College at Paris in 1325. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 140.

Moray, Gilbert, a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of the see of Caithness in 1222. He died at Scrabister in 1245, after having built and consecrated the cathedral church of Caithness, at Dornoch. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 207.

Morning Hymn. In the Apostolical Constitutions mention is made of a hymn for the morning, which is there, however, called the morning prayer. Other writers term it the hymn, the angelical hymn, and the great doxology. It ran in these words: "Glory be to God on high, on earth peace, good will towards men. We praise thee, we laud thee, we bless thee, we glorify thee, we worship thee by the great High Priest, thee the true God, the only begotten, whom no one can approach, for thy great glory. O Lord, heavenly king, God the Father Almighty: Lord God, the Father of Christ, the immaculate Lamb, who taketh away the sin of the world, receive our prayer, thou that sittest upon the cherubim. For thou only art holy, thou only, Lord Jesus, the Christ of God, the God of every created being, and our King. By whom unto thee be glory, honor, and adoration." This hymn was used daily in the ancient morning service, and is still used in the modern Greek Church.

Morrison, JOHN HUNTER, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Walkill Township, Orange Co., N. Y., June 29, 1806. He studied at Bloomfield Academy, N. J.; graduated from Princeton College in 1834; and from the theological seminary there in 1837; and was ordained the same year. Soon after, he sailed for India, and thenceforward his whole ministerial life was spent in the foreign missionary work, in connection with the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, including two brief visits to his native land. During one of these, in 1863, he was elected moderator of the General Assembly. It was at his suggestion, while in India, that the first week of January was set apart for united prayer for the conversion of the world to Christ. He lived and labored successively at Allahabad, Agra, Sabathu, Simla, Ambala, Lahore, Rawal Pindi, Dehra Doon, and died at the last-named place, Sept. 16, 1881. Dr. Morrison was a man of rare devotion to his work. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 86.

Morse, INTREPID, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector of St. Paul's Church, in Steubenville, O., for many years, until 1865, when he removed to Gambier. He died Feb. 15, 1866. See Prot. Epis. Almanac, 1867, p. 101.

Morse, JAMES, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Newburyport, Mass., Oct. 25, 1779. After acquiring the rudiments of an education at the public schools of his native town, he commenced to learn the joiner's trade; but in his seventeenth year entered Harvard College, and graduated in 1800. He taught the grammar-school in Brookline after leaving college, and began the study of theology. Soon after, he was employed as lay-reader at Cambridge, and some time later completed his theological course under bishop Bass. He was ordained deacon, July 3, 1808; became assistant to the bishop in St. Paul's Church; in November following rector; and died in that position, April 26, 1842. Among his literary remains are a number of published sermons, addresses, etc. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 492.

Mortar, a broad bowl of brass, latten, or copper, either with a pricket for a thick lighted taper, or else filled with a mixture of perfumed wax and oil, in which a broad wick was kept burning both at festivals and funerals.

Mosche, GABRIEL CHRISTIAN BENJAMIN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Grossen-Erich, in the principality of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, March 28, 1723. He studied at Jena, and for some time assisted his father in the ministry. In 1748 he was preacher at Erfurt, and lecturer at the university, in 1759 superintendent at Arnstadt, in 1773 preacher at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, and died Feb. 8, 1791. He published, De Anno Sexagesimo Judaica Sacro (Jena, 1744); — De Summa Summi Numinis Sapientia in Dilectu Legatorum (Erfurt, 1750); — Commentatio de Contemplatione Mortis Atque Resurrectionis Jesu Christi Erga Hominis Amor (ibid. 1758); — De Reditu Christi in Vitam (Arnstadt, 1759); — Triplex Gloriae Coelestis Magnitudo (ibid. 1768), besides a number of sermons and ascetical works. und neunzehnten Jahrhunderts, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 192; ii, 196, 291. (R. P.)

Moslems, a name derived from the Arabic verb salama, to be devoted to God, and applied to those who believe in the Koran, and who, in the Mohammedan sense, form the body of the faithful.

Motu Version of the Scriptures. The Motu is a dialect spoken by the natives round Port Moresby, New Guinea, hence it is also called the Port Moresby or New Guinea dialect. The Rev. J. Chalmers translated the first three gospels, and of these the gospel of Mark has been carefully revised by the Rev. W. G. Lawes, and an edition of five hundred copies was printed at Sydney during the year 1881 by the New South Wales Auxiliary to the British and Foreign Bible Society. Mr. Lawes, who is preparing other portions for the press, says, concerning the gospel of Mark: "This is the first portion of the Scriptures translated into any language of south-east New Guinea. The Dutch missionaries at Doreby, at the extreme north-west of the island, I think, translated a portion into the language spoken there, but, with that possible exception, this is the beginning of the work of translation on New Guinea." From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1883, we learn that the gospel of Mark, which has been circulated, is more widely read than was expected. The gospels of Matthew and Luke were also revised by Mr. Lawes, and printed at Sydney in 1882, while the gospel of John, which he translated himself, was published in 1884. (B. P.)

Moulinié, CHARLES ETIENNE FRANÇOIS, a Swiss Protestant theologian, was born July 23, 1757. He studied at his birthplace, Geneva, and was ordained in 1781. In 1793 he was pastor at Saconnet, in 1794 at Dardagny, and from 1795 to 1829 at Geneva. He died Aug. 3, 1836. Moulinié was a prolific writer, who left seventeen volumes in manuscript to the library of the ministers' association at Geneva. Of his published works are to be mentioned, Lait de la Parole (1789), a catechism; — Notice sur les Livres Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament (1828). See Gautier, Notice sur la Vie et les Ecrits de M. le Pasteur Moulinié, in the Chrétien Évangélique of Lausanne, 1866, p. 535 sq.; 648 sq.; Henri de Goltz, Genève Religieuse au dix-neuvième Siècle, p. 122; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Moultan (or Wuch or Ooch) Version of the Scriptures. This dialect is spoken north of Sindh, between the Indus, Chenaub, and Gharra rivers. There exists a version of the New Test. in that dialect, which was printed at Serampore in 1819. (B. P.)

Mozah is probably represented by the modern Khurbet Beit-Mizza, situated one mile north of Kulonigoh (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 17; comp. Conder, Tent Work, i, 25).

Mpongwe Version of the Scriptures. The Mpongwe is spoken by a West-African tribe, for which various detached portions of the Scriptures have been translated by the missionaries of the American Board of Missions, and several editions of these portions of the Old and New Test. have been issued by the American Bible Society. Mücke, AUGUST PHILIP, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born May 29, 1783. In 1805 he was appointed pastor of the Reformed Church in Accum, the only Reformed congregation in Oldenburg, and celebrated his seventy-fifth anniversary in 1880. He died Feb. 13, 1882, being at the time the Nestor of the Protestant clergy of Germany. He published, Die Dogmatik des 19. Jahrhunderts (Gotha, 1861); — Die heutige Unionscontroverse, etc. (Leipzig, 1872); — Das apostolische Glaubensbekenntnis (Berlin, 1873). (B. P.)

Muenschner, JOSEPH, D. D., an Episcopal minister, was born at Providence, R. I., Dec. 21, 1798, of German descent. He graduated from Brown University in 1821, studied one year at Andover Theological Seminary, and was admitted to priest's orders March 13, 1825, his first parish being South Leicester, now Rochdale, Mass., where he remained until 1827, when he became rector of St. John's Church, Northampton. For two years (1831-33) he was rector of Trinity Church, Saco, Me., and then was professor of sacred literature in the Episcopal Seminary at Gambier, Ohio. From 1841 to 1854 he was rector of St. Paul's Church at Mt. Vernon, and remained at that place without parochial charge until his death, Feb. 16, 1884. Dr. Muenschner had a decided musical taste, and in 1839 published Church Choir, a collection of sacred music. For several years he was editor of the Gambier Observer and the Western Episcopalian, and contributed largely to theological reviews and religious periodicals. In 1865 he published a Manual of Biblical Interpretation, in 1866 a Revised Version of the Book of Proverbs, in 1870, Orthography and Pronunciation of the English Language. See Necrology of Brown University, 1883-84. (J. C. S.)

Muhlenberg, William Augustus, D.D., LL.D., a distinguished Protestant Episcopal clergyman, great-grandson of Dr. Henry Melchior, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 16, 1796. He entered the University of Pennsylvania when but fourteen years of age, and graduated in 1814. Having pursued a course of theological study, he became a clergyman in the Episcopal Church in 1817, and for five years was assistant rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, being associated with bishop White. In 1821 he became rector of St. James' Church in Lancaster; in 1828, principal of St. Paul's College in Flushing, L. I.; in 1846, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, in the city of New York; in 1858, superintendent and pastor of St. Luke's Hospital, New York (which he was largely instrumental in founding, as also the church village of St. Johnland, on Long Island), holding this office until his death, April 8, 1877. In 1824 there appeared in the Episcopal Recorder, of Philadelphia, his admirable hymn, entitled, "I would not live away," which has been incorporated into nearly every standard church hymn-book. Many years afterwards, when he was the editor of the Evangelical Catholic, Dr. Muhlenberg explained the circumstances of its history. He was the author of, Church Poetry (1823):—Music of the Church (1852):—The People's Psalter (1858). His life was devoted to public labors of Christian evangelism and philanthropy. See his Life and Work, by Anne Ayres (N. Y. 1880). (J. C. S.)

Mühlhüsser, Carl August, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1825, at Kleinkems, in Baden. He studied at Heidelberg, was for some time vicar and deacon at Carlsruhe, and in 1852 pastor at Sulzfeld. In 1857 he was called as member of the ecclesiastical council to Heidelberg, but retired in 1864, when the liberal party had obtained its influence upon ecclesiastical affairs. He went as pastor to Wilferdingen, where he died Jan. 20, 1881. Mühlhüsser seemed to have been predestinated to be the leader of the Christian party of his country. Everywhere his counsel was asked for, and his work was appreciated by the Bonn University, which honored him with the doctorate of divinity. He published, Die christliche Weltanschauung (Heilbronn, 1876): Christenthum und die Presse (ibid. eod.):—he also edited R. Rothe's Erste Brief Johannes praktisch erklärt (Wittenberg, 1878). (B. P.)

Muir, James, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Cumnock, Scotland, April 12, 1757. After the usual course of classical and philosophical studies at the University of Glasgow, at which he graduated in 1776, he prosecuted his theological studies at Edinburgh. In 1781 he was ordained an evangelist and sent to Bernuda, in 1785 joined the New Brunswick Presbytery, and in 1789 became pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Alexandria, Va., where he died, Aug. 8, 1820. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 516.

Muir, John, a famous Sanscrit scholar, was born at Glasgow in 1810. He studied at his native place, and in 1828 went to Bengal in the service of the East India Company, where he interested himself in the moral and religious welfare of the natives, and for this purpose published, among other works, in 1839, A Sketch of the Argument for Christianity against Hindûism, and Examination of Religions. In 1853 he returned to his native country. He died March 8, 1882, at Edinburgh. Muir's main work is Original Sanscrit Texts, on the Origin and History of the People of India, their Religion and Institutions (Lond. 1868-73, 5 vols.), which is indispensable for the student of ancient Hindû life and thought, dealing principally, as it does, with the Vedic period of Indian literature. The first volume discusses the legendary accounts of the origin of the caste; the second, the primitive home of the Hindûs; the third, the opinions of Hindû writers on the Vedas; the fourth, the contrast between Vedic and later Hindû theology; and the fifth, the cosmological and mythological conceptions of the Indians in the Vedic age. (B. P.)

Muirhead, Andrew, a Scotch prelate, was first rector of Codzow, and next preferred to the see of Glasgow in 1455. He was one of the commissioners who went to England in 1462, in order to negotiate a truce between the two nations. He died Nov. 20, 1473. This prelate founded the vicars of the choir at Glasgow, and beautified the cathedral. He also established a hospital, which he dedicated to St. Nicholas. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 252.

Mullens, Joseph, D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born in London, Sept. 2, 1820. He gave his heart to the Saviour at the age of fifteen, and joined the Church a year later. He was educated at Cowart College, and in 1841 graduated B.A. from the University of London. In 1842 he was accepted for service by the London Missionary Society. He then studied for a time in Edinburgh University. He was ordained Sept. 5, 1843, and sailed for India on the 9th. On his arrival at Calcutta he entered the institution at Bhowanipore, and in 1846 became pastor of the native church there, in which office he continued for twenty years. He rendered important service to the society by the collection of carefully prepared statistics. In 1866 he returned to England to assist Dr. Tidman in the foreign secretaryship of the society. This office he held till his death. In 1870 he visited America to attend the annual meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions. In 1873 he visited Madagascar in the interest of the mission there. While making a journey to the heart of Africa to establish the mission at Tanyanyika he died, July 10, 1878. Dr. Mullens is the author of, Twelve Months in Madagascar (Lond. 1873):—Vedantism, Brahmanism, and Christianity:—Religious Aspects of Hindûism:—Missions in India, and several other works on missionary subjects. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 342.

Müller, Alexander, a Roman Catholic canonist of Germany, who was born at Zell in 1780, and died at Mayence in 1844, is the author of, Encyclopädisches Handbuch des gesammten in Deutschland Kirchenrechts (Erfurt, 1829-32, 2 vols.):—Ueber die Nothwendigkeit der Reorganisation des Corpus Evangelicum (Leipzig, 1830):—Das Christenthum nach seiner Pflanzung und Ausbreitung, etc. (1831):—Hauptcharakter und Grundfehler des römischen Katholicismus (eod.):—Febronius der Neue (1838):—Der Erzbischof von Köln in Opposition mit dem preussischen Staatsoberhaupt, etc. (eod. 2 vols.). Müller, Christian Gottfried, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 28, 1747, at Zölbitz, near Marienburg. In 1780 he was rector at Schleitz, in 1786 at Naumburg, in 1788 at Zeitz, and died Aug

10, 1819, leaving, De Usu Versionis Vulgatæ (Schleitz, 1782–85):—Formula Augustinæ Confess. (Leipsic, 1808):—Reformationsgeschichte der Stadt Zeit (1817):—Observat. in 5 Loca Cypriani (Gera, 1777). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 109, 320, 802, 906; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 405. (B. P.)

Müller, Johann Georg (1), a Roman Catholic prelate of Germany, was born at Coblenz, Oct. 15, 1798. He studied at different universities, took holy orders in 1821, and received the degree of doctor of theology in 1827. In the same year he was professor of Church history and canon law at the clerical seminary in Treves, in 1847 was elected bishop of Münster, and died in 1870. He published, Ueber die Aechtheit der zwei ersten Kapitel des Evangeliums nach Matthäus (Treves, 1830):—Die bildlichen Darstellungen im Sinectuarium der christlichen Kirchen (ibid. 1835). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 86, 636; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 916. (B. P.)

Müller, Johann Georg (2), a Swiss theologian, was born at Basle in 1800, and died there in 1875, doctor and professor of theology. He published, Blicke in die Bibel, etc. (Winterthur, 1828–30; new ed. 1840):—Ueber die Texteskritik der Schriften des Juden Philo (Basle, 1839):—Des Juden Philo Buch von der Welterschöpfung (Berlin, 1841):—the art. Philo in the first edition of Herzog's Real-Encyclop.:—Die messianischen Erwartungen des Juden Philo (Basle, 1870):—Erklärung des Barnabasbriefes (Leipsic, 1869). After his death Riggenbach and Orelli published Des Flavius Josephus Schrift gegen den Apion. Text und Erklärung (Basle, 1877). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 916; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 406. (B. P.)

Müller, Johann Tobias Immanuel, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1804, and died Aug. 19, 1884, at Fürth, dean and Church counsellor. He edited Veit Dietrich's Hauspostille (Nördlingen, 1845), and is best known by his edition of Das evangelische Konkordienbuch, etc. (Stuttgart, 1860 and often). (B. P.)

Müller, Julius, a Protestant theologian of Germany, and brother of Karl Otfried (q. v.), was born at Brieg, in Silesia, April 10, 1801. He studied jurisprudence at Breslau and Göttingen, according to the wish of his father, and at both universities Müller's dissertations gained prizes, so that in 1871 the faculty at Göttingen made him doctor of laws. But the ideal of a higher life was presenting itself to his mind, and he betook himself to the study of theology at Göttingen. He soon felt that the then Göttingen theology could not satisfy him, and so returned to Breslau, in 1822, to continue his theological studies. While Tholuck was on a visit to Breslau, Müller, at the suggestion of a friend, visited him. He afterwards carried on a correspondence with Tholuck, whose personality, rather than theology, influenced him. In the spring of 1823, Müller, by the urgent advice of Tholuck, went to Berlin, where Strauss, Neander, and Tholuck, but not Schliermacher, met the demands of his heart and mind. In 1825 he was called to the pastorate of Schönbrunn and Rosen, near Strehlen. Here he wrote his Zur Beurtheilung der Schrift: die katholische Kirche Schlesiens (Breslau, 1827). A second edition was soon called for. Soon after, he came into conflict with the ecclesiastical authorities, by refusing to introduce the new liturgy, and in May, 1830, announced this as his final decision to the "consistorium." His official relations to the Church were thus endangered; but he was happily delivered from the inconvenience of a removal from his pastorate by a call, in 1831, to Göttingen, as university-preacher, with the promise of a professorship as soon as he should publish a learned book. In 1832 he commenced his academical career by publishing Lutheri de Prædestinatione et Libero Arbitrio Doctrina. He soon was made professor. In 1834 an urgent call as professor of systematic theology to Marburg could not be refused, and when Müller preached his last sermon in Göttingen (March, 1835), Lücke, in behalf of the university, presented him with the degree of doctor of divinity. The contributions which Müller made to the Studien und Kritiken after 1833 prepared the way for the work which has immortalized his name, Die christliche Lehre von der Sünde (Engl. transl. The Christian Doctrine of Sin, Edinburgh, 1877, 2 vols.), of which several editions have been published. In 1839 Müller accepted a call to Halle, where, with Tholuck, he became the chief centre of attraction to the students. In 1850 he founded, in connection with Neander and Nitzsch, the Deutsche Zeitschrift für christl. Wissenschaft und christliches Leben, to which he contributed many valuable articles, which, for the most part, have appeared in his Dogmatische Abhandlungen (Bremen, 1870). In the summer of 1878 he resigned his professorship, and died Sept. 27 of the same year. A provision of his will stipulated that all his manuscripts should be destroyed. His works, besides those already mentioned, are De Miraculorum Jesu Christi Natura et Necessitate (Marburg, 1839):—Lutheri et Calvini Sententiæ de Sacra Cena Inter se Comparatæ (Halle, 1853):—Die evangelische Union, ihr Wesen und göttliches Recht (Berlin, 1854), besides several volumes of sermons. Münch, Ernst Hermann Joseph von, a distinguished Roman Catholic historian of Germany, was born at Rheinfelden, Oct. 25, 1798. He studied at Freiburg, was in 1819 teacher at Aarau, in 1824 professor at Freiburg, in 1828 professor of Church history and canon law at Liege. In 1831 he accepted a call to Stuttgart as librarian to the king, and died June 9, 1841. He published, Die Heerzüge des christlichen Europa wider die Osmanen (Basle, 1822–26, 5 vols.):—Franz von Sickingen's Thaten (Stuttgart, 1827–29, 3 vols.):—Sammlung aller älteren und neueren Konkordate (1830–31, 2 vols.):—Geschichte des Mönchtums (1828, 2 vols.):—Allgemeine Geschichte der katholischen Kirche (1838):—Römische Zustände und katholische Kirchenfragen (eod.):—Denkwürdigkeiten zur politischen Reformations- und Sittengeschichte, etc. (1839):—Allgemeine Geschichte der neuesten Zeit (1833–35, 6 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 696, 701, 747; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 920; especially the author's Erinnerungen und Studien aus den ersten 37 Jahren eines deutschen Gelehrten (Carlsruhe, 1836–38, 3 vols.). (B. P.)

München, Nicolaus, a Roman Catholic canonist, who died at Cologne, Jan. 29, 1881, doctor of theology and cathedral-provost, is the author of, Ueber die Bestrafung der Geistlichen nach dem Entwurfe des Strafgesetzbuches für Preussen (Cologne, 1848):—Die Amtsentfernung der Geistlichen (ibid. eod.):—Das kanonische Gerichtsverfahren und Strafrecht (2d ed. 1873, 2 vols.). (B. P.)

Münchmeyer, August Friedrich Otto, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1807. He studied at Göttingen and Berlin, was pastor at Katlenburg, in Hanover, and finally at Buer, near Osnabrück. He died Nov. 7, 1882. Münchmeyer belonged to the orthodox party in the Lutheran Church, and published, Gedenkbuch für Konfirmanden (12th ed. 1882):—Das Amt des Neuen Testaments nach der Lehre der Schrift und der Bekenntnisse (Osterode, 1853):—Das Dogma von der sichtbaren und unsichtbaren Kirche (Hanover, 1854):—Zur Kirchenregimentsfrage (ibid. 1862):—Huschke und Mejer (1864):—Die Offenbarung St. Johannis (1870):—Harfenklänge (1855). Munier, David, a Protestant theologian of Geneva, was born in 1798. He studied at his birthplace, and was admitted to the ministry in 1819 on presenting De Evangelio Primitivo. In the same year he went to Havre and then to Paris. In the latter place he made the acquaintance of Cousin, and Jean Monod. In 1825 Munier was called to Chêne, in the neighborhood of Geneva, and in 1826 he commenced his lectures on the New Test. at the theological faculty at Geneva, where he was rector from 1832 to 1837. In 1853 he founded The Société des Protestants, and took a lively interest in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the Church. His public life has been divided into three periods: from 1825 to 1847 a partisan in the Church and the academy; from 1847 to 1862 a religious conciliator; from 1862 to 1872 a laborious veteran. He died Oct. 9, 1872. His discourses were on The Parables (1838):—The Miracles (1841):—The Reading of the Bible (1850):—The Dignity of Christianity in History (1853), etc. See De la Rive, in the Journal de Genève; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. Murch, William Harris, D.D., an English Baptist minister, was born at Honiton, Devon, May 17, 1784. He was baptized in May, 1802, by Rev. Dr. Rippon, and united with the Carter Lane Church, London. Subsequently he became assistant pastor with the celebrated John Foster, and then sole pastor of the Church at Sheppard's Barton, Frome. In 1827 he was appointed president and theological tutor at Stepney College, London. In 1844 he resigned his post on account of ill-health, and a year afterwards became pastor of the Church in Rickmansworth, Herts, where he remained till 1851. After preaching in and around London for a few years he removed, in 1856, to Bath, where he died, July 12, 1859. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1861, p. 100. (J. C. S.)

Murray, Andrew, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of the see of Ross in 1213, but refused to be consecrated. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 185.

Murray, George, D.D., a bishop of the Church of England, the second son of lord George Murray, bishop of St. David's, was born in 1784. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, graduating B.A. in 1806. In 1814 he was consecrated bishop of Sodor and Man, and in 1827 was transferred to the diocese of Rochester, which was then but a small bishopric, comprising ninety-six benefices; but under the administration of bishop Murray the number was augmented to five hundred and sixty-four. He died Feb. 16, 1860, being at the time the senior of the English bishops. He was a churchman of the old school, and held himself aloof from extremists. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1860, p. 184.

Musgrave, George Washington, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Oct. 19, 1804. He studied at the classical academy of the Rev. Dr. Wylie, and although he did not enter college on account of ill-health, he pursued his studies privately under the tuition of Rev. Dr. Archibald Green, and finally entered Princeton Theological Seminary in 1825, and spent nearly two years there. In 1828 he was licensed by the Third Presbytery of Baltimore, and in 1830 was ordained pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church of that city. He continued there twenty-two years, laboring with great success. In 1836 he was chosen a director of Princeton Theological Seminary, and continued in that relation until the time of his death. He was also a trustee of Princeton College. Having received the appointment of corresponding secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, he resigned his pastoral charge and removed to Philadelphia. He was also corresponding secretary of the Board of Domestic Missions. He finally accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the North Tenth Street Church, Philadelphia, where he labored until 1868. Having resigned the post of corresponding secretary of Domestic Missions, he was reappointed, and continued until the board was removed to New York. He was elected moderator of the Old School General Assembly in the same year. Dr. Musgrave took a prominent part in the convention which met in Philadelphia in 1867, composed of delegates from both branches of the Presbyterian Church, the object of which was to promote the reunion of the two. He was a delegate to the First General Council of the Presbyterian Church in Edinburgh in 1879. He was also president of the Presbyterian Historical Society. Dr. Musgrave was a man of warm attachments and strong convictions, honest in his views, and fearless in maintaining them. He died at Philadelphia, Aug. 24, 1882. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 22. (W. P. S.)

Muskokee (or Creek) Version of the Scriptures. The Muskokee is spoken by the Creek Indians, who possess in their vernacular the gospels of Matthew and John, the epistles of John, James, Titus, and Ephesians—all published since 1868 by the American Bible Society. In 1879 the printing of the Acts of the Apostles was commenced at the New York Bible House. (B. P.)

Mussard, Pierre, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Geneva in 1627, where he also studied theology. In 1654 he was ordained, was in 1656 minister at Lyons, and attended the national synod at Loudun (1659-1660). In 1669 he was president of the provincial synod held at Is-sur-Thil, and in 1675 he accepted a call as pastor of the French Church at London. He died in 1686. Besides two volumes of sermons and other minor works, he published Les Conformités des Cérémonies Modernes (Leyden, 1667; new ed. Amsterdam, 1744; a German transl. was published at Leipsic, 1695). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 624; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Naamah. Na'ameh, the latest proposed representative of this place, is merely described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 408) as "a small mud village on low ground."

Näbe, Friedrich August Adolph, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1800 at Döbris, near Zeitz. In 1824 he was catechist at St. Peter's, in Leipzig, and private lecturer there; in 1833 deacon at Königstein, and died in 1855. He published, Norum Testamentum Græc. etc. (Leipsic, 1831):—Compendium Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ (1832):—Brevia in Nov. Test. Commentarius (1837):—Stimmen der Andacht, etc. (1844). Nachtigal, Johann Karl Christoph, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Halberstadt, Feb. 25, 1753. He studied at Halle, and in 1773 accepted a call as teacher at the cathedral school of his native place. In 1808 he was made a doctor of theology, in 1812 general superintendent, and died June 21, 1819. He is the author of, Chrestomathia Hebraica, etc. (Halle, 1783):—Die Gesänge David's (Leipsic, 1796):—Exegetisches Handbuch des Alten Testaments (1797–1800, 9 parts):—Kohelth (1798–1799, 2 vols.). Nadab, the ecclesiastical head of the Mohammedans in Persia. His office corresponds to that of the Mufti (q. v.) in Turkey, but with this difference, that the nadab can divest himself of his spiritual functions, which the mufti cannot do.

Nadhamians, a heretical Mohammedan sect, which maintained that God could do evil, but that he never does it, lest he should appear a wicked and imperfect being.

Nagas, a class of Hindû mendicant monks who travel about in a nude state, but armed with warlike weapons. They are not limited to one sect, there being Faishnara and Suira Nagas. The Sikh Nagas, however, differ from those of the other sects by abstaining from the use of arms, and following a retired and religious life.

Nagel, Johann Andreas Michael, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 29, 1710, at Sulzbach, Bavaria. He studied at Altdorf, Jena, and Leipsic, commenced his academical career at Altdorf in 1737, was in 1740 professor, and died Sept. 29, 1788. He wrote, De Modo Disputandi Doctorum Judæorum, etc. (Altdorf, 1737):—De Lingua Aramæa (1739):—Conjugationes Aramææ, etc. (eod.):—De Lingua Orbis Babylonici (1740):—Observationes in Genes. i, 1 (1741):—In Genes. i, 2 (1742):—De Ludis Sæcularibus Romanorum, etc. (1743):—De Tribus Codicibus Manuscriptis Ebraicis (1749):—De Stilo Mosis (1755):—Diss. ad Genes. xix, 26 (eod.):—Ad Genes. xlii, 24 (1756):—Ad Amos xii, 11 (1757):—Ad Malach. ii, 15 sq. (1765):—Ad 1 Reg. xx, 14 (1766):—Ad Nehem. viii, 8 (1772), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (where 149 titles of his writings are given); Fürst, *Bibl. Nagel, Leopold Julius, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1809 at Stecklin, Pomerania. He studied at Halle and Berlin, was preacher at Kolzow, and afterwards military preacher at Stargard. In 1848 he resigned his office and joined the separate Lutherans (q. v.). In 1853 he was called to Breslau, the main seat of the independent Lutherans, and died Jan. 17, 1884. He published, Die Errettung der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche in Preussen (2d ed. Erlangen, 1868):—Die

Kämpfe der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche in Preussen (Stuttgart, 1869). (B. P.)

Nägelsbach, Carl Wilhelm Eduard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died Feb. 9, 1880, at Gunzenhausen, Bavaria, doctor of theology, is the author of, Der Prophet Jeremias und Babylon (Erlangen, 1850):—Was ist christlich? (Nuremberg, 1852):—Der Gottmensch, die Grundidee der Offenbarung (1853):—Der Prophet Jeremia (Bielefeld, 1868):—Der Prophet Jesaja (1877), the last two works for Lange's Bibelwerk:—Hebräische Grammatik (4th ed. 1880):—Gedanken über die Wiedergeburt (1871). (B. P.)

Nagle, Nano, foundress of the Presentation order, was born at Ballygriffin, on the banks of the Blackwater, Ireland, in 1728. She was educated in Paris, and while in that city, in 1750, resolved to devote herself to the poor children of her native country. She privately opened schools, first in Dublin and then at Cork. She afterwards assumed the habit of the Ursulines; but since that order undertakes principally the education of the children of the wealthier classes, Miss Nagle left them, and recruited new auxiliaries, who became the root of a new order which was approved after her death by pope Pius VI, in 1791. She also established an asylum for aged females, and the splendid building in the neighborhood of the South Presentation Convent, Cork, is the result of her work. There were in 1873 fifty convents of the Presentation order in Ireland. Miss Nagle died April 26, 1784. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1874, p. 83; De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 368; Life of Miss Nano Nagle, by the late Rev. Dr. Coppinger (Dublin, 1843); Dublin Review, 1844, p. 363.

Naglfar, in Norse mythology, is the greatest ship of the world, built out of the nails of the dead, and designed to bring the inhabitants of Muspelheim to combat against the Asas, when Ragnarokr, the destruction of the world, begins.

Nahalal. Malul, the site proposed by some for this place, is described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (i, 274) as "a mud village on a hill, with open ground on the west, where stands the prominent ruin Kusar ez-Zitr."

Nain. Nein, the present representative of this place, so interesting in New-Test. history, is thus described in the Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey (ii, 86):

"This little village stands on a small plateau at the foot of Jebel ed-Duhy, in a position elevated above the plain. It is of stone and mud, with a little mosque called Mukam Sidna Aisa on the north. There are numerous traces of ruins, extending beyond the boundary of the modern hamlet to the north, showing the place to have been once larger; but these ruins have a modern appearance. There is a small spring north of the village: a second, Atn el-Baz, exists on the west, and beside it are rock-cut tombs, much defaced, and a tree." (See illustration on following page.)

Nakib, the chief of the Emirs (q. v.) among the Turkish Mohammedans, who is held in great respect as being the head of the descendants of the prophet, and has the power of life and death over the other emirs.

Nama Version of the Scriptures. The Nama is spoken in Namaqualand (q. v.). In 1815 the Rev. C. Albrecht commenced a translation of the gospel of Matthew into the Nama, but it does not appear that he completed the version. Ten years subsequently a translation of the gospels was effected by the Rev. Schmelen, of the London Missionary Society, which was printed at Cape Town at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society. In 1846 the gospel of Luke was printed, having been retranslated by Mr. Knudsen, a Rhenish missionary. These two translations differed from each other chiefly in this, that in the former no signs whatever are used to represent the various clicks which occur so frequently in the language, while in the latter this important omission is supplied. A new effort towards a translation was again made by a missionary of the Rhentish Society, the Rev. G. Krönlein. The British and Foreign Bible Society having consented to meet the expense of printing an edition of the New Test., the translator went to Europe for the purpose of carrying the work through the press, which was completed in 1866. In addition to the New Test., Mr. Krönlein translated the Psalms, which were printed during the year 1872. On Oct. 25, 1881, Mr. Krönlein completed the translation of the Old Test., early portions of the same having been begun on May 23, 1873. The translator is now revising into one harmonious whole the entire books of the Old Test. See Bible of Every Land, p. 430.

Namazi, the five prayers which the Mohammedans repeat regularly every twenty-four hours. Tradition says that the prophet was commanded by God to impose upon his disciples the daily obligation of fifty prayers. By the advice of Moses he solicited and obtained permission to reduce them to five, which are indispensable. The times of prayer are, 1. Daybreak; 2. Noon; 3. Afternoon; 4. Evening; and 5. The first watch of the night. On Friday (their Sabbath) a sixth prayer is added, to be repeated between daybreak and noon. If the prayers are not repeated at the prescribed hours they are useless. The arrival of each of the hours of prayer is publicly announced by the Muezzin (q. v.).

Nasi, the name given by the Jews to the president of the great Sanhedrim, who was held in high respect by the court. Moses is said by the rabbins to have been the first to fill the office. Till the captivity the sovereign or chief ruler acted as Nasi, but after that time the two offices became entirely distinct, the right of holding the office of Nasi belonging to the descendants of Hillel.

Nasr was one of the five gods of the ancient Arabians, mentioned in the Koran. He was the supreme deity of the Arabs of Yemen, and, as the name signifies an eagle, he may have been the sun-god.

Nassau, CHARLES WILLIAM, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, April 12, 1804. His early education was received in that city and at the academy of Joseph P. Engles. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, July 6, 1821, and spent the following year in studying Hebrew under Dr. Banks. In November, 1822, he entered Princeton Seminary, but ill-health caused him to leave in one year. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, April 23, 1824; was stated supply at Norristown, Norriton, and Providence from April 23, 1825, until he was ordained by the same body, Nov. 16 following. He had charge of a school for boys at Montgomery Square, Pa., and was professor of Latin and Greek in Lafayette College. During the eight years spent here he supplied the Durham Church. He was president of Lafayette College for one year, and was proprietor and principal of a female seminary at Lawrenceville, N. J., for twenty-four years. He died Aug. 6, 1878. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 21.

Nast, JOHANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 17, 1722, at Leonberg, Württemberg. For some time he acted as professor at the gymnasium in Stuttgart, in 1789 he was pastor at Plochingen, and died Dec. 24, 1807. He is the author of, Historisch-critische Nachricht von den sechs ersten deutschen Bibel-ausgaben, etc. (Stuttgart, 1767);—Litterarische Nachricht von der hochdeutschen Bibelübersetzung, etc. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 172; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 929. (B. P.)

Natâles Episcopâtus. See NATAL DAYS.

Natigay, a household god of the Mongolian Tartars, is the guardian of families, and presides over the products of the earth. Every house has an image of Natigay, with his wife and children; the former is placed at his left, and the latter in front of him. No one presumes to eat at dinner till Natigay and his family are first served. The entertainment consists in giving the mouths of the images a thorough greasing, after which the fragments are thrown out of doors, for the accommodation of some unknown spirits.

Nativitarians, a name given by Danæus to a heretical sect of the 4th century, who denied the eternal generation of the son of God, maintaining that he was eternal as God, but not as the son of God.

Nativity, CHURCH OF THE, at Bethlehem. Of this antique memorial of our Saviour's birth we extract a general account from one of the latest authorities (Conder, Tent Work, i, 282 sq.):

"The tradition which indicates the grotto in the old basilica at Bethlehem as the site of the stable where Christ was born, is the most venerable of its kind in existence, the place being noticed by Justin Martyr in the 2d century. It is almost the only site which we can trace earlier than the time of Constantine, and the tradition seems to me credible, because, throughout this part of Palestine, there are innumerable instances of stables cut in rock, resembling the Bethlehem grotto. Such stables I have planned and measured at Tekoa, 'Aziz, and other places south of Bethlehem, and the manners existing in them leave no doubt as to their use and character.

"The credibility of this tradition thus appears to be far greater than that attaching to the later discoveries, by which the enthusiastic Helena and the politic Constantine settled the scenes of other Christian events; and the rude grotto with its rocky manger may, it seems to me, be accepted even by the most sceptical of modern explorers.

"The Church of the Virgin stands inside a fortress monastery, in which Latin, Greek, and Armenian monks find a common retreat. The basilica was erected, according to contemporary evidence, by order of Constantine, and is thus the oldest church in Palestine, and perhaps in the world. It has escaped destruction on every occasion when other churches in Palestine were overthrown, and the greater part of the work is stated, by competent authority, to be of the original design. In the 11th century, when the mad Caliph Hakim destroyed the Holy Sepulchre churches, the Bethlehem basilica was spared; in 1099 the Crusaders sent a detachment of troops to protect it, and it thus again escaped, nor was it destroyed in the 13th century, although threatened by the Moslems. In this basilica, therefore, we have the only undisturbed erection of the time of Constantine in Palestine, and its value cannot be overrated.

"Architectural authorities are of opinion that our information as to the progress of Byzantine art in the East is still very imperfect. M. de Vogüé has done much to elucidate the subject, in his work on the great buildings of northern Syria, many of which are dated with exactitude. In Palestine we have two valuable examples, one of 4th century, and one of 6th century architecture—the basilica at Bethlehem, and Justinian's fortress on Gerizim, with which we may compare ruins of unknown date; and in the first we find M. de Vogüé's opinion confirmed, with respect to the slowness with which Byzantine art developed in style in the East, in comparison with the more rapid progress of the Western Romanesque.

"The basilica is, moreover, interesting because its general plan resembles, very closely, the description given by Eusebius of Constantine's buildings over the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. On the west was an atrium or outer court, parts of the outer walls of which and shafts of its columns still remain. A narrow vestibule or narthex, entered by a door scarcely four feet high, leads into the basilica itself, which consists of a nave and four aisles, with four rows of eleven columns each, a total breadth of about thirty yards, and a length about equal.

"The aisles have flat roofs, above the pillars, which are nineteen feet high, but the nave has a clerestory, with walls some thirty feet high above the capitals, and a pointed roof. A wall has been built across the east end of the basilica, separating off the chancel, which has three apses, north, south, and east, and which forms the Greek church. Beneath the chancel is the grotto of the Nativity. North of the basilica is the more modern Latin chapel of St. Catherine, from which a staircase leads down to vaults communicating with the grotto.

"The pillar shafts are monoliths of red and white marble, painted with figures of saints, now dim with age, and scrawled over with the crests and titles of knightly pilgrims of the Crusading ages. The capitals are of the Corinthian order, debased in style, with the cross carved on the rosettes of each. The wall above was once decorated all over with glass mosaic, fragments of which still remain, representing scenes in our Lord's life, portraits of angels and of Scripture characters, with arabesques and Greek inscriptions. These mosaics, with those on the chancel walls, were executed by order of the Greek emperor, Manuel Comnenus, in the middle of the 12th century. The roof above, once painted and gilded, was put up in 1489, the fine rafters having been given by Philip of Burgundy, the lead (stripped off later by the Moslems to make bullets) by Edward IV of England; and the work was executed in Venice, and brought on camels from Jaffa. Further restorations were made in 1478, and again in 1679 and 1842, but the majority of the work appears to belong to the original structure of the time of Constantine."

The following detailed description of the holy places in the Church is taken from Porter's Handbook for Palestine, p. 201 sq.; see also Bädeker, Palestine, p. 244 sq.; Wilson, Lands of the Bible, i, 390 sq.

"On the south side of the church we first descend a narrow staircase hewn in the rock, lighted by a glimmering lamp placed in a niche on the right hand, before a picture of the Virgin. This staircase leads to a low vault, on entering which we turn suddenly to the right into a long, narrow passage. Proceeding a few steps, we have on the right the altar and tomb of St. Eusebius—not the historian. Passing this, we enter a small oblong chamber, extending north and south at right angles to the passage. Taking first the south end, we have on the east side the altars and tombs of SS. Paula and Eustachia (her daughter), with rude pictures of the two saints over them. Opposite this, on the west, is the tomb of St. Jerome, having over it a portrait of the great father resting on a lion. From the north end of the chamber we ascend by three steps to another square vault, some twenty feet on each side and nine high, surrounded by a stone dat. This is the study of Jerome—now a chapel, with an altar on its eastern side, and an old painting above it, representing the saint writing and the lion at his feet. 'Here it was,' says Geramb, 'that the illustrious recluse passed a great portion of his life: here it was that he fancied he heard the peals of that awful trumpet which shall one day summon all mankind to judgment incessantly ringing in his ears: here it was that with a stone he struck his body, bowed by the weight of years and ansterities, and, with loud cries, besought mercy of the Lord; and here too it was that he produced those laborious works which have justly earned him the title of the Father of the Church.' This is a spot which the biblical scholar and the ecclesiastical historian will regard with peculiar interest, for there can be no doubt that for many years it formed the home and the study of that remarkable man whose name it bears.

"Returning to the chapel we first entered, we observe on its eastern side, behind a massive column, an altar, said to mark the spot where twenty thousand children murdered by Herod's order were buried, now called, for this reason, the Altar of the Innocents. A rude painting over it represents the massacre.

"Adjoining the Chapel of the Innocents on the south is a narrow vault, to which we ascend by five steps; this is called the Chapel of Joseph, being the place where the husband of Mary is said to have retired at the moment of the nativity. From this we enter a crooked, narrow passage, some twenty-six feet long, and on reaching the end of it we find a door on the left opening into the west end of "The Chapel of the Nativity, a low vault, apparently hewn in the rock, thirty-eight feet long by eleven wide. At the east end is a small semicircular apse—the sanctum of the whole building. On approaching it we find a marble slab fixed in the pavement, with a silver star in the centre, round which are the words, HIC DE VIRGINE MARIA JESUS CHRISTUS NATUS EST, 'Here Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary.' Round the star are suspended sixteen silver lamps, continually kept burning, and behind them, along the sides of the apse, are little gilt pictures of saints. Over the star is a plain altar, without picture or ornament. It is common to all the sects, and each must dress it, when about to celebrate mass, with the requisite trappings.

"In the angles of the grotto beside the apse are two staircases, that on the south leading up to the Greek Chapel, and that on the north to the Armenian; both in the choir of the basilica. Just in the angle between the flight of stairs on the south, and the side of the grotto, is the small chapel of the Præsepium or 'Manger.' On its west side is the place of the manger, now represented by a marble trough. The real Præsepium, as the Latins tell us, was long ago carried away to Rome, and is deposited in Santa Maria Maggiore. Over the place is a good painting by Maello, of date 1781, representing the Virgin and Child, with the Shepherds. On the opposite side of the grotto is the station of the wise men, marked by an altar having a painting, apparently by the same artist.

"These various grottoes are minutely measured off by rule and line, and distributed piecemeal among the rival sects. Many a keen and bitter contest there has been for a few inches of a wall, or the fraction of an altar; and more than once the question of the opening and shutting of one of the doors has well-nigh involved Europe in war!"

Nazareth. The latest descriptions of this memorable place may be found in Conder's Tent Work (i, 188), and the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (i, 275, 328).

Neale, ROLLIN HEBER, D.D., a distinguished Baptist minister, was born at Southington, Conn., Feb. 13, 1807. He graduated from Columbian College, Washington, in 1830, and from the Newton Theological Seminary in 1833; for a short time was pastor in South Boston and New Haven; and in 1837 of the First Baptist Church in Boston, where he remained, with great usefulness, nearly forty years. He died Sept. 18, 1879. (J. C. S.)

Neander, Conrad, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who lived at the beginning of the 17th century, belonged to the most excellent Hebraists of his time, and translated into Hebrew The Epistles of the Christian Year (Leipsic, 1586):—Luther's Smaller Catechism (Wittenberg, 1599):—The Nicene and Athanasian Confession (ibid.); besides, he wrote, De Omnibus Accentibus Hebr. qui in Sacris Bibliis Reperiuntur (Leipsic, 1598):—Elementule Ebraicum (1590):—Tabule Nova Conjugationum Hebraicarum (1596). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. ii, 26. (B. P.)

Neander, John, a Presbyterian minister, was born of Jewish parentage, Nov. 12, 1812, at Neubrück, in the province of Posen. He was educated in accordance with Talmudical Judaism, and in 1835 was called to Bremerlehe, near Bremerhaven, to occupy a rabbinical position there. In 1838, however, he joined the Church at Bremen, and became a missionary to the Jews. In 1845 Neander arrived in New York, and, as in Germany, labored among the Jews. In 1846 he was ordained by the Dutch Reformed Church, and in 1852 settled at Brooklyn, N. Y., where he organized the First German Presbyterian Church, in which he labored for more than thirty years. He died Nov. 6, 1885. (B. P.)

Neballat. Its modern representative, Beit Nebala, is "a village of moderate size at the edge of the plain, with a well to the east, and containing cisterns with large cut stones" (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, ii, 296, 306).

Nebo (Ezra ii, 29; Neh. vii, 33). For this site Lieut. Conder proposes (Tent Work, ii, 339) Nūba, seven miles north-west of Hebron, described in the Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey (iii, 309) as "a small village perched on a low hill, with a well about a mile to the east."

Nebo, Mount. This vicinity is included in the reduced Map of the Ordnance Survey east of the Jordan, and is described by Lient. Conder in the Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," Oct. 1881, p. 275 sq. It was also visited by Dr. Merrill, and his investigations (East of the Jordan, p. 241 sq.) confirm the views expressed by us under the art. PISGAH. Tristram remarks (Bible Places, p. 349), "A recent traveller has endeavored to show that Jebel Shiaghah, the spot where these ruins stand, is Pisgah. The arguments adduced would be equally conclusive in behalf of any of the many flat-topped mounds of the neighborhood, one of which must have been Pisgah, although its Arabic equivalent, Feth-khah, seems to have dropped out of the local nomenclature."

Necker, THEOPHIL, a Protestant minister, was born at Trieste, May 7, 1830. He was a prominent member of the Church at Geneva, where he was the means of founding the Evangelical Society and of promoting the cause of the Young Men's Christian Association. He labored for the cause of the evangelical schools, not only in Geneva, but also in Bohemia and Moravia, where he went for this special purpose. He also visited England and France to promote the kingdom of God, and during the winter of 1870 and 1871 he labored among the Protestant French prisoners in Germany. In fact, there was no branch of home mission work in which he was not engaged, and his sudden death, Jan. 10, 1881, was a heavy loss to the Evangelical Church in Geneva. (B. P.)

Niel. For this place Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 339) Khurbet Yamin, a ruined site eight and a half miles east by south from Acre, described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordinance Survey (i, 822) as "a terraced hill, with heaps of stones on the top; the masonry hewn but small; on the north is a well."

Neill, HENRY, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Oct. 15, 1815. He entered the University of Pennsylvania in 1829; made a profession of religion in 1832; entered upon a post-graduate course at Amherst; in 1836 became tutor or assistant teacher in Andover Theological Seminary; in 1839 was ordained pastor at Hatfield, Mass.; subsequently was pastor at Lenox, Mass., Detroit, Mich., and New Brunswick, N. J.; in 1873 organized a Presbyterian Church at Bryn Mawr, near Philadelphia, and died there, April 21, 1879.

Nekab. For this place Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 339) the present Khurbet Seyadeh, four miles south-west of Tiberias, described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordinance Survey (i, 405) as "ruined Arab houses, all basaltic and apparently modern." Tristram states (Bible Places, p. 278), "But a far more satisfactory identification has been recently discovered in Nakib, a site in the Ard el-Hamma, the plain between Tabor and the sea of Galilee." This is precisely the situation of Seyadeh, but the name Nakib does not appear there on the Ordinance Map.

Nekir, in Mohammedanism, is one of the two angels who wake up every dead body, and ask for the faith of its former possessor. If he be true, he is refreshed with the dew of paradise, and laid to rest again; but if he is not favorable to Islam, he is whipped with two iron rods until he yells aloud, and then is cast into a snake's nest, where poisonous reptiles gnaw at him until the resurrection.

Nelson, JOHN, D.D., a minister of the Free Church of Scotland, was born in Edinburgh, in October, 1820. After graduating from Edinburgh University, he studied at Berlin, Bonn, and Heidelberg. He became pastor at Greenock in 1851, and exercised there a useful ministry of twenty-six years. In 1855 he visited America, and published, as the result of his observations, an Essay on National Education in the United States and Canada. He travelled extensively on the Continent, officiating as pastor of several of the Free churches. He also spent some time in Egypt, Palestine, and Syria, his failing health requiring repeated respite from labor.

He was an earnest advocate for the union between the Free and the Reformed Presbyterian churches in Scotland. He died at Abden House, Edinburgh, Jan. 26, 1878. (W. P. S.)

Nelson, Reuben, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Andes, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1818. He was converted at the age of fifteen, at seventeen was licensed to exhort, at eighteen to preach, studied the next year, and in 1840 entered the Oneida Conference. He preached one year on Otsego Circuit, and one on Westford, serving meantime as principal of the Otsego Academy, at Cooperstown. In 1844 the Oneida Conference founded the Wyoming Seminary, at Kingston, Pa., and Mr. Nelson was chosen its first principal, which office he filled for twenty-eight years, with but one year's exception, during which he was presiding elder of Wyoming District. In 1872 he was elected agent of the Methodist Book Concern, in New York city, which office he held till his death, Feb. 20, 1879. Nengonese (or Maré) Version of the Scriptures. The Nengone is spoken in the Loyalty Islands. In 1854 a mission was commenced on the island of Maré, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. The missionaries, the Revs. S. M. Creagh and J. Jones, devoted themselves assiduously to the task of translating portions of the Scriptures into the native language. The Nengonese New Test. was published in 1865 at the Maré mission press. In 1867 a second edition was issued at Sydney under the care of the Rev. J. Jones. In 1869 a revised edition was printed in England, whilst the books of Genesis and Exodus were printed at Maré. In 1874 the Book of Psalms had been added to the translations and editions of Scripture already existing, and was issued from the press in 1877, under the care of the Rev. S. M. Creagh. From the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1885 we learn that the translation of the entire Pentateuch is now undergoing revision. See Bible of Every Land, p. 394. (B. P.)

Nepalese (or Kharpoora) Version of the Scriptures. Nepalese is the principal dialect prevailing in Nepal (q. v.), and was exclusively used by the higher castes. It is becoming prevalent throughout the whole country, and is rapidly superseding the other dialects. In 1812 a version was commenced at Serampore, and an edition of 1000 copies of the New Test. was issued in 1821. Of late a new translation of portions of the New Test. into this dialect was made by the Rev. W. Stuart. In 1850, 1000 copies of Luke were printed, and in 1852 a revised edition of 1000 was sent to press, together with 1500 of the Acts of the Apostles. From the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1885 we learn that the Scotch Mission at Darjeeling has printed Genesis, Exodus, Proverbs, the Gospels, and Acts. See Bible of Every Land, p. 121. (B. P.)

Newhall, Fales Henry, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Saugus, Mass., June 19, 1827. He was converted at the age of twelve; graduated from Wesleyan University, Conn., in 1846; taught for several years thereafter; joined the New England Conference in 1851, and occupied several of its most important appointments; in 1863 became professor of rhetoric and English literature in his alma mater; in 1867-68 travelled and studied in Europe; in 1871 returned to the itinerant work as a pastor; in 1873 was elected president of the Ohio Wesleyan University, but soon experienced an attack of insanity, from which he never afterwards fully recovered. He died April 6, 1883. Dr. Newhall was an eloquent speaker and writer. He published a number of sermons, essays, etc. See Alumni Record of West. University, 1882, p. 77, 610; Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1883, p. 91.

Newman, William, D.D., an English Baptist minister, was born in 1772, and early in life became a member of the Church at Waltham Abbey, Essex. For some time he was an associate with the eminent John Ryland, as a teacher. In May, 1794, he was ordained pastor of the Church at Bow, and subsequently, on the establishment of the Baptist College at Stepney, was chosen its president and theological tutor. For the prosperity of this seat of learning he labored most faithfully for many years. He died Dec. 22, 1835. See Baptist Union, 1836, p. 19. (J. C. S.)

Newton, Alfred, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Colchester, Conn., Nov. 11, 1803. He graduated from Yale College in 1828, was tutor there from 1831 to 1834, and in the latter year graduated from the Divinity School. In the spring of 1835 he was invited to supply the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church in Norwalk, O., and was ordained the same year; was installed pastor July 24, 1838, and sustained that relation until Aug. 1, 1870. He remained as pastor emeritus of the Church and a resident of the town till his death, Dec. 31, 1878. See Obit. Record of Yale College, 1879.

Newton, Roger, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Durham, Conn., May 23, 1737. He graduated from Yale College in 1758; studied theology under Rev. Elizur Goodrich; was constituted pastor of the Church in Greenfield, Nov. 18, 1761; and died Dec. 10, 1816. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 513.

Newton, Thomas Henry, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., June 25, 1821. He graduated from Lafayette College in 1846, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1849; was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, and was ordained an evangelist by the same presbytery, Nov. 13, 1850, but was never settled as a pastor. In 1849 he began to labor on the island of St. Thomas as a chaplain, under the appointment of the Seaman's Friend Society; in 1859 as chaplain at St. Louis; in 1863 was missionary in south-western Missouri, where he organized a church at Linn Creek. He afterwards resided, in infirm health, at Carlinville, Ill. The last two years of his life were spent near Richmond, Va. He died at Waverly Station, Nov. 19, 1880. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 69.

Nezib. The modern representative of this site, Beit-Nuzib, is laid down as a ruin on the Ordnance Map, eight miles north-west of Hebron, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (iii, 324) as consisting of "cisterns and caves, foundations and ruined walls, with a few pillar shafts. . . . The buildings seem to date back to the Byzantine period, judging from the character of the masonry; but the cisterns and caves are perhaps earlier."

Ngunese Version of the Scriptures. Ngunese is a language spoken on the island of Nguna, one of the Sandwich Island group, which lies six miles north of Efate, and has a population of about a thousand souls; but from Nguna fourteen islands are visible, with a population of about seven thousand five hundred souls, who use the same language, or dialects of the same. The islands, with their population, are as follows: Efate, 8000; Lelapa, 100; Mossa, 200; Pele, 200; Nguna, 1000; Emau, 500; Mataso, 100; Emae, 800; Ewose, 80; Valea, 20; Tongariki, 200; Buninga, 150; south end of Epi, 150. On Emae and the Tonga group different languages are spoken on each side of the islands, but the Ngunese is understood throughout them all. In 1881, at the request of the New Hebrides Mission Synod, the British and Foreign Bible Society published an edition of two thousand copies of the gospels of Matthew and John. The translation was made from the Greek by the Rev. Peter Milne, a missionary of the Presbyterian Church of New Zealand, and who for ten years has labored chiefly on Nguna, Pele, and Mataso, each of these islands having a church and a school, with a church attendance of one hundred and fifty, and an attendance at school of one hundred. (B. P.)

Niasian Version of the Scriptures. Niasian is spoken on the island of Nias, which lies near Sumatra, and contains a large population, estimated by the Rev. J. Denninger at eighty thousand souls. Up to the year 1871 nothing had been done for the island in the way of printing; but Mr. Denninger, of the Barmen Evangelical Missions, who labored for many years in this and the adjoining island, committed the language to writing, prepared a grammar in it, and translated some parts of the Scripture. In 1873 the British and Foreign Bible Society printed the gospel of Luke, and this is at present the only part of Scripture extant. (B. P.)

Nichols, Samuel, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born Nov. 14, 1787. He graduated from Yale College in 1811; was ordained by bishop Hobart in 1813; from 1815 to 1837 was rector of St. Matthew's Church, Bedford, Conn.; resigning this charge, he retired from the active ministry, and died in Greenfield, July 17, 1880. See Whittaker, Almanac and Directory, 1881, p. 174.

Nicholson, Edward G., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, appears in the records, in 1864, as having a parish in the city of Mexico; the following year he removed to Kentucky; in 1870 he became a resident of New York city, where he remained until his death, Sept. 1, 1872, at the age of fifty-four years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1873, p. 133.

Nicholson, Joseph B., D.D., an English divine, antiquarian, and author, was born in 1795. He graduated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, in 1820; in 1826 became domestic chaplain to his royal highness the duke of Clarence; in 1835 he was appointed rector, and in 1846 rural dean of St. Albans, where he continued till his death, July 27, 1866. He was also appointed surrogate for the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and in 1862 was nominated an honorable canon of Rochester Cathedral. Dr. Nicholson was a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, of the Royal Astronomical Society, and a member of the Numismatological Society; was vice-president of the Archaeological and Architectural Society; a magistrate for St. Albans and the county of Hertford. In 1851 he published the first edition of a work entitled, The Abbey of St. Albans, and soon after an enlarged edition. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopaedia, 1866, p. 596.

Nickels, Christopher Mardenborough, D.D., a

Congregational minister, was born at Pemaquid, Me., Jan. 18, 1805. He graduated from Brown University in 1830, for one year thereafter was principal of an academy in Haverhill, Mass., and in 1835 graduated from the Andover Theological Seminary, spending a year meantime as tutor of Latin and Greek in Brown University. The last-named year he became the minister of the Congregational Church in Gloucester, Mass., where he remained for nearly thirteen years, and was greatly blessed in his work. For the benefit of his wife's health he went to New Orleans, and while there preached at the Bethel, and founded a seamen's home. In the summer of 1850 he came back to the North, and for five years had charge of the Congregational Church at Barre, Mass.; next of the Central Presbyterian Church, Newark, N. J., a position which he resigned on account of ill-health, in 1864, and then spent a year in Europe and the East. In 1867 went abroad the second time, and after seven years he took up his residence in Newark, N. J., whence he removed to Princeton, and finally to New London, Conn., where he died, July 10, 1878. See Brown University Necrology, 1879-80. (J. C. S.)

Nicolai, Johann, a Lutheran theologian, who died at Tübingen, Aug. 12, 1708, is the author of, Libri 4 de Sepulchris Hebraeorum (Leyden, 1706);—De Juramentis Hebraeorum, Græcorum, Romanorum, Aliorumque Populorum (Frankfort, 1700). Niermeyer, Antoine, a Dutch theologian, was born Sept. 2, 1814, at Vlaardingen, Holland. He studied at Leyden, and was in 1840 called to the pastorate at S'Heer-Arendskerk, Zeeland. His leisure he devoted to the exegesis of the New Test., and in 1846 and 1850 received the golden medal from the Hague Society for the Defence of the Christian Religion, by presenting papers on the authenticity of Paul's epistle to the Ephesians, and on the writings of John. These exegetical labors induced the theological faculty to honor their author with the doctorate of theology, and when his teacher, Van Hengel, died (1853), Niermeyer was appointed his successor. He died April 10, 1855. Niermeyer's principal works are, Authenticité de l'Épître aux Ephésiens (1847-48, 2 vols.):—État Actuel de la Critique du Nouveau Testament, a poem (1849):—Magasin de Critique et d'Exégèse (Leyden, 1850-52, 3 vols.):—Authenticité des Écrits Johanniques (1852-53, 2 vols.). Nisbet, Henry, D.D., a Scotch Congregational minister, was born at Launceston, Glasgow, in 1817, of devout parents. He joined the Church in 1835, graduated at Glasgow University, studied two years (1836-37) at the Theological Hall of Glasgow, offered his services to the London Missionary Society, attended Cheshunt College for two sessions, and, in 1840, in company with his fellow-student and co-worker, Dr.

George Turner, was ordained and appointed to Tanna, an island in the New Hebrides, whither they at once sailed. Here they carried on operations for a short time, but on account of an insurrection among the natives were obliged, under cover of night, to flee for life. They landed at Samoa, set out afresh on their missionary life, and soon met great success. In 1844 they established the Samoan Mission Seminary, which sent forth more than six hundred native agents before Dr. Nisbet's decease, May 9, 1876. He possessed a well-stored mind, and was humble, cultured, and eminently adapted to his work. See Cong. Year-book, 1877, p. 402.

Niuean (or Savage Island) Version of the Scriptures. Niue is a lone island four hundred miles from any other land, the nearest groups being the Friendly Islands, in the west, and the Samoan, in the north. In 1849, after long opposition, a Samoan teacher was received in the island. In the course of time, amid his evangelistic labors, he translated the gospel of Mark, which was sent to the missionaries of Samoa, and, after revision, printed by them. When, in 1861, the Rev. W. G. Lawes and his wife went to Niue as the first missionaries, taking with them the printed gospel, they found that the other three gospels and Acts had been translated by the native teachers. The translation was revised by the Rev. G. Pratt, of Samoa, and printed at Sydney, together with the epistle to the Philippians and John's epistles, in 1862, by the New South Wales Auxiliary. The New Test. was completed by Mr. Lawes and printed at Sydney in 1867. The book of Psalms, also translated by Mr. Lawes and revised by the Rev. Mr. Pratt, was printed in 1869 or 1870. The whole has been once more revised, and, together with the books of Genesis and Exodus, was printed in London in 1873, under the superintendence of Mr. Lawes. From the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for the year 1882 we learn that the society has published, not only a new edition of five thousand copies of the New Test. and Psalms, but also three thousand copies of the Pentateuch as prepared by Mr. Lawes, who continues the translation of the other books of the Old Test. Nob. The probable representative of this place, acquiesced in by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 120), and substantially also by Conder (Tent Work, ii, 117), is laid down on the Ordnance Map as Khurbet es-Samu, at less than half a mile north-east of Shafat, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (iii, 125) as "heaps of ruins; a cistern fourteen paces by four, with a rubble roof; and a crumbling building, apparently modern. There is a remarkable knoll of rock in the place, whence the name 'ruin of the heap.' The top of this knoll is surmounted by the remains of a small vaulted chamber. There are also a few rock-cut tombs on the south-east, now closed."

Nobbe, MASON, D.D., a Congregational and afterwards a Presbyterian minister, was born at Williamstown, Mass., March 18, 1809. He studied at Stockbridge Academy; graduated from Williams College in 1827; spent a year in New York city in studying modern languages and in teaching; went to Princeton Theological Seminary in 1828, and spent one year; became a tutor in Williams College, continuing his theological studies; was licensed June 14, 1831, by Berkshire Congregational Association, while a tutor, and was ordained by the same body, Feb. 15, 1832, at Williamstown. His successive fields of labor were as follows: Presbyterian Church in Washington, D. C., from 1832 to 1839; Eleventh Church in New York city, from 1839 to 1850; associate pastor with Rev. Dr. Duncan, of the Independent Presbyterian Church of Baltimore, Md., in 1850 and 1851; principal of a young ladies' seminary in Washington, D. C., from 1851 to 1853, at the same time gathering and organizing the Sixth Street Church; chaplain in the navy, from 1853 to 1861; supply to the First Congregational Church of Williamstown, Mass., in 1865 and 1866. On returning to Washington, in 1870, the Sixth Street Church elected him to be its pastor, and without being installed he thenceforward served until his death, Oct. 24, 1881. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 24.

Nobilio (or Nobilia), FLAMINIO, an Italian theologian, who died at Lucca in 1590, edited, at the instance of pope Sixtus V., Vetus Testamentum juxta LXX (Rome, 1587):—and translated the Septuagint into Latin; Vetus Testamentum Secundum LXX Latine Redditum (ibid. 1588). He also wrote Annotationes in Veteris Testamenti LXX Interpretes, which are found in the London Polyglot. See Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Nodhamiana, a heretical Mohammedan sect, who, to avoid falling into the error of making God the author of evil, asserted that neither directly nor indirectly, permissively nor authoritatively, had God any connection whatever with evil. They denied also the miraculous character of the Koran.

Nolasque, St. PIERRE, a French monk, founder of the order of the Beata Maria Virgo de Mercede pro Redemptione Captivorum, was born in 1189 at Le Mas des Saintes Puellas, in Languedoc. In 1228, Nolasque, in company with some other knights and priests, organized the order mentioned above, the special object of which was to redeem Christian captives in Mohammedan countries in extreme cases, when there was danger of a conversion to Islam, even with the sacrifice of liberty and life. At first the order occupied a portion of the royal palace at Barcelona, but in 1232 a splendid monastery was built and dedicated to St. Eulalia, the patroness of Barcelona. The order was confirmed by Gregory IX, in 1230, and soon spread over Spain, Italy, and France. Nolasque died in 1256, and was canonized by Urban VIII in 1628. By Benedict XIII, the order was transformed into a common mendicant order (1725), and a century later it was swept away by the revolution. See Acta Sanctorum Bolland. ad 31. North, SIMEON, D.D., LL.D., a Congregational divine, was born at Berlin, Conn., in 1802. He graduated from Yale College in 1825; was tutor there the following year, professor of languages in Hamilton College, N. Y., from 1829 to 1839, and thereafter president until 1857. He died Feb. 9, 1884. Dr. North was the author of several sermons, etc.

North American Indians, RELIGIOUS IDEAS OF. It is not necessary to separate all the small tribes according to their religious usages, for they had much in common, and will here be treated accordingly. They do not believe that a dryad was thought to inhabit every tree, but the natives believed in protecting spirits of the woods and trees. These spirits were called, among the northern tribes, Nantena (singular Okki). Among the Iroquois the whole company of spirits was called Ayotkon, or Hondatkons (singular Manitu). As ruler of all good spirits Tharonhiaonagou was worshipped, who was the grandson of the goddess of all evil, Atahentsik. Both were regarded as living in the land of the blessed. Exalted over these was the great spirit who dispensed grace; he could do as much good as he pleased, but no evil, although he could hinder evil. But only those receive his grace who do good and abandon evil. Sun, moon, and stars, and the natural forces, are objects of nature. In dreams the great spirit sends protecting beings, who are guides all through life. Only in Virginia was there a visible representation of supreme beings—a human figure, with an apron, in a sitting posture. There are many of these, who are called Kiwusa, and are considered protectors of the dead. In the southern part of North America the cultus took another form. There idolatry was rife, and there were priests, temples, and bloody sacrifices. In Florida the first male born was brought as a sacrifice to the sun, and this shows the transition to the Mexican cultus. In all acts of worship, politics, or friendship, the tobacco-pipe played a noteworthy part. The natives were also persuaded of a future life; but their ideas concerning it were taken from their present existence. They believed in a continuation of life, but with higher joys and all possible success in hunting, fishing, and war; therefore they buried with the dead his clothes and weapons, nourishment for the journey, and even his pipe and tobacco. They assembled around the dead, and praised his deeds of bravery and valor. All his friends and relatives visited him, and after a meal, which was first handed to the departed, the aboriginal Americans left their village and journeyed away without the dead, who became a prey to the wild animals. Others, who had permanent dwelling-places, buried their dead in various ways. A singular practice, only found among the North American tribes, was the voluntary death of aged people. When they became sick, they awaited their death with the greatest composure. Their physicians informed them that they were unable to heal them. Then the dying made the necessary arrangements, and died joyfully and without fear. This was the natural death. But to old people, who could not fish and hunt, life became a burden. The father usually ordered his son to kill him with the club. Then the friends, relatives, and children accompanied him into the woods. Two dogs were killed, that their souls might herald the coming of a warrior into the other world. The old man then smoked a pipe, conversed with his friends, sang his song of death, and gave the sign to his son, whereupon the latter slew him with his club. A small hut was then built over the buried body. The friends of the departed gave away all his goods, even the most costly and precious. Their sorrow was touching. They tortured themselves in the fleshy parts of their body, and sometimes lost so much blood that they died themselves. Often, when a child died, its mother killed herself in the hope of nourishing it beyond death, for they feared that without such nourishment the child would die a second time. The cosmogony of the North American tribes differed from the others in that men were first created and then the world. All human beings originated from woman, and the Turtle tribe, living in the central point of the world, was the first and noblest. See INDIANS, AMERICAN.

Northalis, RICHARD, an Irish prelate, was born in London, and became a Carmelite friar. He obtained a high reputation for his preaching, learning, and acquirements, and attracted the notice of the king, who advanced him to the bishopric of Ossory in 1386. About 1390 he was constituted a commissioner by the king to inquire into the state, losses, abuses, and government of Ireland; in particular, to report how and on what security Nigel O'Neill was enlarged. In 1391 and 1394 he was employed by the same monarch in the quality of an ambassador to pope Boniface IX, and was appointed chancellor of Ireland in 1393. Having spent nine years in the prelacy of Ossory, he was, in 1396, promoted to the archbishopric of Dublin. He died July 20, 1397. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 149.

Norton, AUGUSTUS THEODORE, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Cornwall, Conn., March 28, 1808. He graduated from Yale College in 1832; studied theology privately; was licensed as an evangelist; labored first at Windham, N. Y., and afterwards at Griggsfield, Naples, Pittsfield, and Atlas, in southern Illinois. He organized the Second Presbyterian Church in St. Louis, Mo., and in 1839 was called to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church in Alton, Ill., where he labored for nineteen years. In 1859 he was appointed district secretary of Church Extension and Home Missions for the West, and was enabled in due time to report every church in his field as supplied with a minister. In 1879 he published a large volume of seven hundred pages, on the History of the Presbyterian Church in Illinois. He died at Alton, April 29, 1884.

Nott, JOHN, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Albany, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1801. He graduated from Union College in 1823. In the autumn of the same year he entered Andover Theological Seminary, where he studied until June, 1825. He then entered Princeton Seminary, June 30, and studied there until September, 1826. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Albany, May 3, 1827, and ordained as an evangelist the same month. He was tutor in Union College from 1830 to 1839, and was assistant professor of rhetoric in the same institution for fifteen years. From 1839 to 1841 he was stated supply to the Church at Rotterdam, N. Y. Thence he went to the South as stated supply of the churches of Goldsboro' and Everettsville, in North Carolina. Returning to the North, he became supply of the Dutch Reformed Church at Auriaville, Montgomery Co., N. Y. He died at Fonda, May 13, 1878. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 23.

Novitiöl is a name applied by Tertullian to catechumens, because they were just entering upon that state which made them candidates for eternal life.

Nubian Version of the Scriptures. From the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1885 we learn that an edition of five hundred copies of the gospel of Mark has been published for the benefit of the Mohammedans in and around Dongola, East Africa. This version, made in the Fadidja dialect, was prepared by the late professor Lepsius (q. v.), and published as an appendix to his Nubian Grammar. From the latter it was republished, with permission of the translator's son and of the publisher, in Roman characters, under the editorship of professor Reinisch, Vienna. (B. P.)

Nupé Version of the Scriptures. Nupé is spoken in a territory of Central Africa situated between Yoruba on the south-west and Hausa on the north, divided into two portions by the river Rowara, which runs through it from a north-westerly direction, till it winds its way southerly after it has cleared the bases of the Rennell mountains. The south-west portion of Nupé is a belt of land not more than twenty-five miles from the river's bank to its boundary with Yoruba land at Saregi, formerly a mutual place of meeting in their hunting expeditions between the two tribes, but now it is an important town, inhabited by both tribes, the Yorubas, however, being the more numerous and influential. The breadth of the northern portion of Nupé is much larger, or some three or four days' journey across, or about sixty or seventy miles broad towards Hausa from the river's bank. The extreme length of the country from Kpatatshi, the last town of Nupé on the boundary of Busa, on the upper parts of the river to the tribes of Is'itakotsi, next to Muve, and Bidon of Kakanda, on the lower parts of the river, is about one hundred and sixty miles. Such is the geographical position of the Nupé country, as described by the Rev. S. Crowther, who, in connection with the Rev. J. F. Schön, translated the first seven chapters of Matthew in the Nupé, which, at the request of the Church Missionary Society, were published in 1860 by the British and Foreign Bible Society as the first instalment of an entirely new translation in a language spoken over a vast extent of country. At present there are extant the gospels of Matthew and Mark in the Nupé. (B. P.)

Nutting, Rufus, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Old Groton, Middlesex Co., Mass., July 28, 1793. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1818, and for several years thereafter took charge of a young ladies' seminary at Catskill, N. Y.; in 1821 became principal of Randolph Academy, Vt., which position he held seven years, meantime completing his theological course under the celebrated Dr. John Holt Rice. In 1828 he became professor of languages in the Western Reserve College at Hudson, Ohio; in 1840 resigned his chair, and two years later removed to Romeo, N. Y., taking charge of the branch of the State University then located there. In 1847 he established an academy at Lodi Plains, Washtenaw Co., Mich.; in 1870 removed to the city of Detroit, where he died, July 12, 1878. (W. P. S.)

O'Brien, John, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, rector of Zion Parish, Pontiac, Mich., died at that place, Dec. 13, 1864, aged seventy-one years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1865, p. 140.

O'Brien, Matthew, D.D., a Roman Catholic clergyman, was a native of Ireland, where he enjoyed a high reputation as a preacher. About 1800 he came to New York, and was attached to St. Peter's Church. He afterwards left New York in consequence of difficulties which arose, and died in Baltimore, Oct. 20, 1816. Dr. O'Brien published Sermons on the Most Important Subjects of Morality and Religion (Cork, 1798). See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Catholic Church in the United States, p. 351.

O'Bryan, WILLIAM, the founder of the Bible Christian Societies, was born at Gunwen, in the parish of Luxulion, Cornwall, Eng., Feb. 6, 1778. At the age of seventeen he obtained a clear manifestation of God's pardoning mercy, and almost immediately began to preach. In 1809 he was engaged as a supply in the place of a Wesleyan minister. In 1810 he was formally excluded from the Wesleyan Methodist Society for preaching in an irregular way, and in 1814 he relinquished business in order to devote himself wholly to the work of the ministry. Hearing that there were fourteen parishes in the east of Cornwall and the west of Devon in which there was no evangelical preaching, he visited them. His labors were successful, souls were converted. He organized the first class, or society, which afterwards received the appellation of Bible Christians, at Shebbear, in the county of Devon, Oct. 9, 1815. Twenty-two persons gave their names. At the session of the first conference held at Baddash, Launceston, Aug. 17, 1819, he was elected president. He filled this office each succeeding year until 1828. Unpleasant circumstances arising between himself and the brethren, in 1829 he left the conference. At the conference in 1830 William O'Bryan sought reconciliation with his brethren, and a satisfactory union was effected. Afterwards he left the denomination of his own free will. He came to the United States, crossed the Atlantic between New York and England several times, and died at a good old age, in New York city. His remains are interred in Greenwood Cemetery Brooklyn. See Jubilee Volume of Bible Christians (1865); BIBLE CHRISTIANS.

Ochiltree, MICHAEL, a Scotch prelate, was dean of the Church of Dunblane in 1425, and was made bishop in 1430. He was bishop at Dunblane in 1489 when he appended his seal to a solemn agreement between the queen-dowager and a committee of parliament, about the keeping of the young king, James II. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 177.

O'Connor, MICHAEL, D.D., a Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Cork, Ireland, Sept. 27, 1810. He was educated at Queenstown, and entered the Propaganda at Rome in 1833. He became president of the Roman Catholic Seminary of St. Charles Borromeo, Philadelphia, Pa., in 1838. He was consecrated bishop of Pittsburgh in 1848, translated to the see of Erie, Pa., in 1853, and referred to his former diocese in 1854. He resigned his episcopal office and united with the Jesuits in 1860. He died at Woodstock College, Md., Oct. 18, 1872.

Odenheimer, WILLIAM HENRY, D.D., a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 11, 1817. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1835, and from the General Theological Seminary in 1838; was ordained deacon by Bishop Onderdonk, of Pennsylvania, in the same year, and presbyter in 1841. After this he became rector of St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, of which he remained pastor until his election as bishop of the diocese of New Jersey, April 27, 1859. The consecration to this office occurred Oct. 13 of the same year, in Richmond, Va. In 1874, when the diocese was divided, Bishop Odenheimer selected the "northern" portion. He died at his residence in Burlington, N. J., Aug. 14, 1879. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 170.

Oelreich, BERNHARD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Itzehoe in 1626. He studied at different universities, was in 1664 court-preacher at Stockholm, in 1665 doctor of theology, and in 1668 pro-chancellor and professor of theology of the academy at Lunden. He then went to Bremen as superintendent and pastor, and died March 30, 1686. He wrote, De Testamento Christi non Violando;—De Angelo;—De Sacra Scriptura;—De Ecclesia Lutheranæ. O'Hanly, Samuel, an Irish prelate, was a nephew of Donat O'Hanly, and became a Benedictine monk. He was a native of Ireland, and succeeded to the archbishopric of Dublin in 1095. He died July 4, 1121. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 41.

Ojibway Version. See CHIPPEWAY.

Old Man of Obi, a remarkable idol of the Ostiac Tartars, who live near the river Obi. It consists of wood, and has a nose resembling the snout of a hog, in which is a hook of iron. The eyes are made of glass, and the head is embellished with a large pair of horns. Its devotees oblige it to change its place of residence every three years, transporting it over the Obi from one station to another with great solemnity, in a vessel made for that purpose. When the ice dissolves, and the river overflows its banks, the Ostiacs flock to this idol in a body and beseech it to prove propitious to their fishery. If the season fails to answer their expectations they load the god with a myriad of reproaches, and insult him as an old, impotent, and despicable deity; but if they prove successful in fishing, the god is allowed part of the booty.

Oliver, George, D.D., an English divine, was born at Papplewick in 1782, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1803. He took orders, and in 1809 became head-master of King Edward's Grammar-school at Great Grimsby. He became vicar of Scopwick in 1831, incumbent of Wolverhampton in 1834, rector of South Hykeham in 1847, and died at Lincoln, March 8, 1867. He filled the highest offices in the Masonic order, and wrote numerous works on local ecclesiastical history and Freemasonry, for which see Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Ollier, Pierre, a Protestant theologian of Montauban, was born at that place in 1578. In 1606 he was pastor at Saint-André de Valborgne, in 1610 at Alais, and in 1621 at Montauban, where he died Oct. 5, 1645. He was the successor of Pierre Bérauld in the theological chair, and wrote La Conférence de St. Antoine entre Pierre Ollier, et Pascal (Montauban, 1624). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Ollivant, Alfred, D.D., an Anglican prelate, was born at Manchester, England, in 1798. He studied at St. Paul's school, London; graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1821, and became a fellow. In 1820 he was elected Craven University scholar, and in 1822 Tyrwhitt Hebrew scholar. He was vice-principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, from 1827 to 1843, and from 1843 until 1849 held the regius professorship of divinity at Cambridge. He became bishop of Llandaff in 1849, and died Dec. 16, 1882. He published a number of sermons and some other practical works. He was a member of the Old Test. company of the Bible Revision Committee.

Olmstead, Lemuel Gregory, LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Maltaville, N. Y., July 5, 1808. He graduated from Union College in 1834, and pursued his studies in the Western Theological Seminary. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Beaver in 1837, and ordained by the Presbytery of Erie, April 20, 1848. He then visited Europe, sojourning in Rome for several years. His principal business was teaching. During the war of the rebellion he acted as chaplain for some three years. He died March 18, 1880. As a scientific scholar and antiquarian Dr. Olmstead has had few equals among his brethren of the Presbytery. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 54.

Olshausen, Justus, a famous German Orientalist, brother of Hermann, was born May 9, 1800, at Hohenfelde, Holstein, and studied at Kiel, Berlin, and Paris. In 1823 he was professor at Kiel, and in 1845 member of the Danish Academy of Sciences. Four years after Holstein was annexed by Denmark, in 1848, Olshausen was deposed of his professorship. He was appointed, in 1853, head-librarian and professor of Oriental languages at Königsberg; in 1858 he was called to a position in the ministry for education at Berlin, from which he retired in 1874. Olshausen died Dec. 28, 1882. Besides his contributions to the monthly reports of the Berlin Academy of Sciences, Olshausen published, Emendationen zum Alten Testament (Kiel, 1826):—Zur Topographie des alten Jerusalem (1833):—Erklärung der Psalmen (Leipzig, 1858):—Lehrbuch der Hebr. Sprache (Brunswick, 1861):—Die Pehlevi-Legenden auf den Münzen der letzten Sassaniden (Leipzig, 1843):—Ueber den Charakter der in den assyrischen Keilschriften erhaltenen semitischen Sprache (Berlin, 1866). Oncken, John Gerhard, D.D., a German Baptist minister, was born in Varet, in the grand duchy of Oldenburg, Jan. 26, 1800. He went to England in his youth, and was converted. The British Continental Society sent him in 1823 as a missionary to Germany, his labors being principally confined to Hamburg and Bremen, and the province of East Frisia. In 1828 he became the agent of the Edinburgh Bible Society. He and six others were immersed, April 22, 1834, in the river Elbe, near Hamburg, by Rev. Barnas Sears, then of the Hamilton Theological Seminary, pursuing his studies in Germany. At the close of 1879 there were in Germany 16,602 members of Baptist churches, and the gospel was preached in 1178 preaching stations. Later statistics would largely swell these numbers. Mr. Oncken was ordained soon after his baptism, and

"his life was one of apostolic toil and blessed success in spreading the gospel through Germany." His pastoral relation with the Church at Hamburg always remained, and that city was made the centre of his evangelistic labors. He frequently visited England to solicit funds to carry on his work in Germany, and in 1853 came to the United States for the same purpose. He died Jan. 1, 1884, in Zurich, where he had resided for two years. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 869. (J. C. S.)

Oneirocritica (from ὄνειρος, a dream, and κρίνω, to judge), the art of interpreting dreams, which among the ancient Egyptians was the duty of the hierogrammateis, or sacred scribes. See DREAMS.

Oneiromancy (from ὄνειρος, a dream, and μαντεία, divination), divination by means of dreams, or the interpretation of dreams in reference to future events. See DREAMS.

Ono. The probable representative of this place, Kafr Ana, is laid down on the Ordnance Map at nearly five miles north by west of Ludd (Lydda), and described in the accompanying Memoirs (ii, 251) as "a mud village, surrounded with palms and other trees in gardens, and has a well (sebil) to the north."

Onuphis, one of the sacred bulls of the ancient Egyptians. It was of a black color, had shaggy recurved hair, and is supposed to have been the emblem of the retroceding sun.

Onymus, ADAM JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born March 29, 1754, at Würzburg, and died there Sept. 9, 1836, doctor of theology, cathedral dean, and vicar-general. He is the author of, De Usu Interpretationis Allegorice in Novi Fœderis Tabulis (Bamberg, 1803):—Der 104. Psalm übersetzt und mit Anmerkungen (Würzburg, 1807):—Die Weisheit Sirachs aus dem Griechischen mit Anmerkungen (1786–88):—*Die Glaubenslehre der kathol. Oosterzee, JOHANN JACOB VAN, a noted Dutch theologian, was born April 1, 1817, at Rotterdam. He studied at Utrecht, and on leaving the university in 1840 was made doctor of theology for presenting his Disputatio Theologica de Jesu, e Virgine Maria Nato. In 1841 he was preacher at Eemnes, in 1843 at Alkmaar, in 1844 at Rotterdam. In 1862 he became professor of theology at Utrecht, and opened his lectures with a Latin oration, De Scripticismo Hodiernis Theologis Cuote Vitando. Oosterzee lectured upon almost all the branches of theology, and soon became the recognized leader of the evangelical school of Holland. In learning, eloquence, and piety he ranked with the greatest divines of his age. He was also a voluminous writer. Several of his works have been translated, and commend themselves very highly to practical and conservative religious minds in Great Britain and America. Oosterzee died July 29, 1882, at Wiesbaden, Germany, where he had gone to restore his broken health. Besides his opening addresses, as, Hoe moet het modern Naturalisme bestreden worden? (1863):—Zullen wij nog Theologie studeren of niet? (1865):—Welke Theologie is in Staat, de Stormen van dezen Dagen te verduren? (1866):—Van welke Theologie is iets goeds voor de Toekomst der Kerk te verwachten? (1867):—and valuable essays which he published in the Jaarboeken voor wetenschappelijke Theologie, edited by himself, and in other reviews, we mention, Jacques Sazrin (1866):—Christologie des Oude en Nieuwe Ver- bonds (1855–57, 2 parts):—Het Leven van Jezus (2d ed. 1863–65):—Historie of Roman? het Leven van Jezus door Renan voorlooppig toegelicht (1863):—Het Johannes Evangelie, een viertal apologetische Voorlezingen (1867):—De Theologie des Nieuwen Verbonds (2d ed. 1872; Engl. transl. Lond. 1870; 4th ed. 1882):—Voor Kerk en Theologie, Mededeelingen en Bijdragen (1871–75, 2 parts):—Christelijke Dogmatiek (2d ed. 1876, 2 parts; Engl. transl., Lond. and New York, 1874; 2d ed. 1878):—Practische Theologie (Engl. transl. 1878, 2 parts):—Theopneustie (1882). For Lange's Bible Work Oosterzee wrote the commentary on Luke (1859; Engl. transl. New York, 1866); the Pastoral Epistles and Philemon (1861; transl. 1868); and with Lange he prepared the commentary on James's epistle (1862; Engl. transl. 1867). His Sermons comprise twelve volumes. Oosterzee left an autobiography and a work upon apologetics. Ophni. The modern representative of this place, Jufna, is laid down on the Ordnance Map at two and three quarter miles north-west of Beitin (Bethel), and thus described in the accompanying Memoirs (ii, 294):

"An important Christian village, with a Latin church and convent (Mâr Yûsef), on an ancient road from the north to Jerusalem. The octagonal apse of this church, with colored glass in its east window, and a red-tiled pointed roof, forms a conspicuous feature of the village as seen from the south. The place is situated in a small plain, and on the south, higher up, is a spring called Ain Jelazûm. The road crosses the valley-bed by a small foot-bridge (now broken), with an inscription in Arabic, and on the south of this is a Greek church of St. George, with a fine walnut-tree and two melo-trees. There are ruins of a town in the village, and pillar-shafts, as if of a former chapel, east of the Latin monastery. The hills and valleys are cultivated with olives, vines, figs, pears, apricots, and pomegranates. The population is stated by Robinson at two hundred, some Latins, some Greeks."

The Greek church is particularly described, ibid. p. 323.

Ophrah. (1) OF BENJAMIN. The probable modern representative of this place, et-Tayibeh, lies four miles north-east of Bethel on the Ordnance Map, and is thus described in the accompanying Memoirs (ii, 298): "A large village in a conspicuous position, with well-built stone houses. A central tower stands on the top of the hill; on either side are olive and fig gardens in the foreground. The view is extensive on both sides. A ruined church of St. George exists near, and there are remains of a ruined castle in the village. The inhabitants are Greek Christians." The archaeological remains are minutely described (ibid. p. 370). (2) OF MANASSEH. For this place Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 339) the modern Ferata, south-west of Nablûs; but this is not within Manasseh, and is proposed by Guérin for Pirathon (q. v.). It is more probably (Tristram, Bible Places, p. 203) Arrabeh, which is laid down on the Ordnance Map at two miles south-west of Dothan, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (ii, 164) as a very large village on the slope of a bare ridge, with remains of an ancient town.

Opitz, PAUL FRIEDRICH, a German scholar, son of Heinrich, was born at Kiel, March 26, 1684. He studied at different universities, was in 1721 professor of Greek and Oriental languages at his native city, in 1727 professor of philosophy, and died Oct. 5, 1747. He published, De Custodia Templi Hierosolymitani Nocturna (Kiel, 1710):—De Gigantibus (1715):—De Amico Israelitarum in Fæsto Tabernaculorum Consortio (1717):—De Christo Apostolo et Pontifice Confessionis Nostræ (1721):—De Hadriani Imperatoris Nomine, Indole, Virtutibus ac Vitiis (1722):—De Hadriani Imperatoris Moribus, Eruditique cum Doctoribus Judæorum Controversiis (1723). Oporin, JOACHIM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 12, 1695. He studied at different universities, and commenced his academical career at Kiel in 1719. In 1733 he was professor of theology, in 1735 went to Göttingen, and died Sept. 5, 1753, doctor of theology. He published, Historia Critica de Perennitate Animæ Humani (Kiel, 1719):—Historia Critica Doctrinæ de Immortalitate Mortalium, etc. (Hamburg, 1735):—De Messia, cum Infans Esset (1739):—De Firmitate ac Inspiratione Divinæ (1740):—Clavis Evangelii Joannis (Göttingen, 1743):—Zacharias auf's Neue übersetzt, etc.:—*Diss. Oppenheim, DAVID, a modern Jewish writer, was born Dec. 18, 1816, at Leipnik, Moravia. He received a thorough rabbinical education, was in 1846 rabbi at Jamnitz, in 1857 at Gross-Beeskereck, Hungary, and died Oct. 21, 1876, at Vienna. Oppenheim contributed to all the leading Jewish journals and reviews, and caused a great stir among Roman Catholics by keenly criticising, in the Wiener Mittheilungen, an article on the history of the Jews in Austria, which had appeared in the Freiberger Kirchenlexikon. Oppenheim laid bare the falsehoods and misstatements of that article, and elicited the rejoinder of Ritter von Pawlikowski, who, in his book of a hundred sheets, on the relation between Jews and Christians, devoted no less than seventy pages to refute, or rather to insult, Oppenheim. One of his ancestors was David ben-Abraham Oppenheim (q. v.) (B. P.)

Oreads were nymphs who presided over the mountains, daughters of Jupiter. They were very numerous, Diana having a thousand to attend her. These nymphs were accredited with having first reclaimed men from devouring each other, by teaching them to subsist on acorns and chestnuts.

Oreb, THE ROCK. Tristram (Bible Places, p. 230) acquiesces in the identification of this with the remarkable peak two and a half miles north of Riha (Jericho), called Osh el-Ghurah, which is the most prominent of all the conical peaks that terminate the terrace running down into the Jordan valley, and is about five hundred feet above the plain (Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, iii, 167).

O'Reilly, BERNARD, D.D., a Roman Catholic bishop, was born in Ireland in 1803. He was consecrated bishop of Hartford, Conn., Nov. 10, 1850, and died at sea in January, 1856.

Orenburg-Tartar Version of the Scripture. As the name indicates, this version is intended for the Tartars in the vicinity of Orenburg. The version made into that dialect is not an original translation, but merely an accommodation of Mr. Brunton's Karaas Version (q. v.) to the peculiar idioms and orthography of the Kirghisian Tartars, residing in the Russian government of Orenburg. Mr. Charles Frazer, one of the Scottish missionaries at Astrachan, prepared a translation of the New Test., which left the mission-press at Astrachan in 1820, at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Since 1871 a part of the Old Test. has also been published. (B. P.)

Oriental Literature and Languages is the common designation for the languages and literatures of all the peoples of Asia, as well as of those of Moslem Africa and Europe. Even during the Middle Ages the attention of European savants was turned towards the Oriental languages, especially the Arabic, and this for two main reasons. In the first place, it was religious zeal which, by the knowledge of the Arabic, intended to refute the Mohammedans and convert them to Christianity. For this purpose pope Innocent IV ordered that chairs for instruction in Arabic should be founded at Paris, and popes Clement IV and Honorius IV showed also a great interest in the matter. Under Clement V, the synod held at Vienne, in 1311, resolved that professors of Arabic and Chaldee should be appointed at Paris, Rome, Oxford, Bologna, and Salamanca. Pope John XXII especially instructed the bishop of Paris to see that these languages were taught in the Sorbonne. In the second place, it was a scientific interest which led to the study of Oriental literature, in order to make the Western nations acquainted with the medical, astronomical, and philosophical writings of the Arabs, and with the works of Aristotle, which were extant only in Arabic translations. Towards the end of the 12th century we meet with Latin translations from the Arabic, which increased during the Middle Ages, and were printed in the 15th century. The Reformation revived the study of Oriental languages by their application to Biblical exegesis. For the Church of Rome the study of Oriental languages became a matter of necessity, because of her missionary stations in the East, and thus pope Urban VIII founded, in 1627, at Rome, the Collegium pro Fide Propaganda, where the Oriental languages were taught. Through the Jesuits in China and Japan, Europe became acquainted with the eastern languages of Asia and their literature. In a more scientific manner the study of the Oriental languages was taken up in the middle of the 18th century. The Englishman, William Jones, while a resident in East India (1780-90), called special attention to the riches of the Indian literature, and founded at Calcutta, in 1784, the Asiatic Society. At Paris, Silvestre de Sacy made the study of Arabic of special interest, and attracted students from all parts of Europe. Till towards the end of the 18th century the study of the Oriental languages had only occupied a subordinate position in the curriculum of sciences; but with the formation of the different Asiatic societies the study of Oriental languages had become a specialty. The societies for promoting this study are as follows, of which the first three are the most important in Europe:

1. The Asiatic Society of Bengal, founded in 1784, by Sir William Jones, at Calcutta, published the Asiatic Researches (Calcutta, 1788-1833, 17 vols.), which were partly translated into French and German. Since 1833 the Asiatic Researches have been superseded by the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, which is published monthly. Under the auspices of this society, but at the expense of the Anglo-Indian government, since 1846 the Bibliotheca Indica, a collection of Oriental works in the original, with a translation, of which at the beginning of the year 1880 more than five hundred numbers had already appeared, is published. Besides the Asiatic Society there exist a great many branch societies, which also have their own periodicals.
2. The Société Asiatique, at Paris, founded in 1822 by Silvestre de Sacy (q. v.), Klaproth (q. v.), Abel Rémusat, Jomard, Chézy, and others, which, besides editing the Journal Asiatique, since 1823, also publishes Oriental works, partly in the original, partly in translations.
3. The Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, which was opened by Colebrooke, March 19, 1833. In the place of the Transactions (1824-34, 8 vols.), it now publishes the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.
4. The Deutsche morgenländische Gesellschaft, founded in 1845. Its journal is Zeitschrift der deutschen Gesellschaft.
5. The Société Orientale de France, at Paris, with the Revue de l'Orient as its organ since 1845.
6. The Syrio-Egyptian Society, at London, with Original Papers as the journal since 1850.
7. The Koninklijke Instituut voor de Taal-, Land- en Volkenkunde van Nederland en Indië, at Amsterdam, which publishes the Bijdragen since 1853.
8. The American Oriental Society, at Boston, founded in 1842, with the Journal, since 1843, for its organ.

Osbon, Abiathar Mann, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Pittsfield, Mass., in 1808. He entered the New York Conference in 1829, with which he ever after remained connected, and in which he occupied many of the most important appointments, as pastor and presiding elder, and also as a member of the General Conference. He died Aug. 6, 1882. He often wrote for the periodicals, and published a small volume on the prophecies of Daniel. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1883, p. 89.

Osgood, Samuel (1), D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Fryeburg, Me., in February, 1774. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1805, and in 1809 settled as pastor of the First Congregational Church in Springfield, Me., where he continued till his death, Dec. 8, 1862. Dr. Osgood was an able preacher and an active reformer. He published a number of sermons and addresses. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1862, p. 681.

Osgood, Samuel (2), D.D., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Charlestown, Mass., Aug. 30, 1812. He graduated from Harvard College in 1832, and entered the Unitarian ministry in 1835. In 1837 he was settled over a church in Nashua, N. H. Previous to this he had been the editor, with James Freeman Clarke, of The Western Messenger, at Louisville, Ky., a periodical which for a time maintained a high literary rank. In 1841 he became pastor of the Westminster Church. From 1849 to 1869 he was pastor of the Church of the Messiah in New York city. From 1850 to 1854 he was one of the editors of The Christian Enquirer, a Unitarian journal published in that city. Having resigned his charge, he travelled abroad for seven months. Returning to New York, he entered the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1869. He died in New York city, April 14, 1880. Dr. Osgood's contributions to different magazines, reviews, and newspapers were of a high order; the same is true of the occasional orations, lectures, and addresses which he delivered from time to time. He was a very versatile student, although perhaps his strong point was that of theology and Christian morals; an excellent German scholar, and familiar with all the great German theologians; also fond of historical researches, and a prominent member of the New York Historical Society, of which for a long time he was home corresponding secretary. But although of studious habits, he always took a warm interest in current public events, as a public-spirited citizen, ever ready to co-operate in the advancement of any scheme for promoting literature or art. His last public work was the reading of his paper before the Historical Society on Channing's Place in American History. Much of Dr. Osgood's literary work, scattered through periodicals or printed in a pamphlet form, it is impossible here to catalogue. He published, among other works of greater or less importance, translations from Olshausen and De Wette, The History of Passion (1839), and Human Life (1842). Among his original works are, Studies in Christian Biography (1851);—The Heathstone (1854);—God with Men; or, Footprints of Providential Leaders (ed.):—Milestones in our Life Journey (1855);—The Holy Gospel, illustrated by Overbeck (1856);—Student Life (1860);—American Leaves (1867). Among his principal addresses before the New York Historical Society was one upon Thomas Crawford and Art in America, in 1875. He also delivered a discourse before the society on its sixty-second anniversary, Nov. 20, 1866. Many of his essays will be found in The International Review, The North American Review, The Bibliotheca Sacra, Harper's Monthly Magazine, and other periodicals. It is stated that he left unfinished a work entitled The Renaissance of Art in America, which was to include his papers upon Bryant and Channing.

Osgood, S. M., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Henderson, Jefferson Co., N. Y., March 2, 1807. In his early manhood he resided in Cortland, N. Y., and was one of the publishers of the Cortland Chronicle. In 1831 he came back to Watertown, and in 1834 received an appointment as missionary printer at Maulmain, Burmah. He returned to the United States in 1846, and performed, for a period of about twenty-nine years, most valuable service as one of the financial agents of the Missionary Union. He received, in 1860, an appointment as district secretary of the Missionary Union for the West, which he held until his death, at his home in Chicago, July 9, 1875. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 876. (J. C. S.)

Oslander. By way of supplement we add the following:

1. GOTTLIEB, was born at Stuttgart, March 15, 1786, and died Dec. 6, 1827, dean at Knittlingen. He is the author of different theological essays, for which see Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, iii, 168; Ersch u. Gruber, Allgemeine Encyclop. p. 261 sq.

2. JOHANN, a son of Johann Adam (1), was born at Tübingen, April 2, 1657. After completing his studies he travelled through France, and at Paris he made the acquaintance of La Chaise, who in vain endeavored to convert him to the Church of Rome. Having returned, Oslander was in 1686 professor of Hebrew at Tübingen; a few years later professor of Greek and philosophy, and assistant preacher to his father. Oslander died Oct. 18, 1724, having held the highest civic and ecclesiastical positions. See Schmidt, Leben Johann Oslander's (1843); Ersch u. Gruber, Allgemeine Encyclop. Theil 3, vol. vi, p. 263 sq.

3. JOHANN ERNST, a brother of Gottlieb, was born June 23, 1792, at Stuttgart. In 1820 he was deacon at Metzingen, in 1824 professor at Maulbronn, in 1840 dean at Göppingen, in 1860 doctor of theology, and died April 3, 1870, senior of the Protestant clergy of Württemberg. He is the author of, Philipp Melancthon, eine Rede (Stuttgart, 1830);—Zum Andenken Dr. Gottfried Menken's (Bremen, 1832);—Apologie des Lebens Jesu gegen Strauss (Stuttgart, 1837);—Lehrbuch zum christlichen Religionsunterricht (1839);—Commentar über die Briefe Pauli an die Korinther (1849, 1858). Ostrander, Daniel, a veteran Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Plattekill, N. Y., Aug. 9, 1772. He was converted at sixteen, entered the New York Conference in 1798, was for fourteen years on circuits, for eight on station (New York, Brooklyn, and Albany), and for twenty-eight years was presiding elder. From 1808 to 1840 inclusive he was elected member of every General Conference. He retired in 1843, and died Dec. 8 of that year. He was firm, faithful, wise in pursuing his course, ever at his post, and always ready to serve. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843-44, p. 472; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 221.

Ostrander, Henry, D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born at Plattekill, N. Y., March 11, 1781. He graduated from Union College in 1799; studied under Dr. Froeligh; was licensed by the Classis of Paramus in 1800; became pastor at Coxsackie in 1801; at Catskill (or Leeds) in 1810; Catsbaan in 1812; also at Saugerties village in 1839; and stated supply at Hurley in 1811. He was without a charge from 1862 until his death, Nov. 22, 1872. Fifteen Sermons of his are published in Gordon's Memoir of him, with selections from his autobiography, and extracts from his letters. See Corwin, Manual of Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 396.

Otey, JAMES HERVEY, D.D., a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Liberty, Bedford Co., Va., Jan. 27, 1800. He graduated at the University of North Carolina in 1820, was ordained deacon in 1825, and presbyter in 1827; afterwards became rector of St. Paul's, in Franklin, Tenn., from which parish he was elected bishop of the diocese, the consecration taking place in Christ Church, Philadelphia, Jan. 14, 1834. He died at Memphis, Tenn., April 23, 1863. From his urbanity and piety he usually went by the name of "the good bishop." He was the author of numerous Sermons, etc., and a volume on The Unity of the Church (1852). See Amer. Quar. Church Review, July, 1863, p. 321.

Otji (Tachi, or Twi) Version of the Scriptures. The language distinguished as "Ashantee Proper, or Otji," is spoken in the south of Asante (Ashantee), in Fantee, Akim, Akwapim, and in Akwam. There are trifling dialectic differences in the language spoken in these several districts, but it may be considered, nevertheless, one and the same with the Akwapim or Otji, the best cultivated of them all. In 1846 the missionaries of the Basle Missionary Society commenced the preparation of a version of the New Test. into Ashantee, and completed the gospels of Matthew and Luke. Since 1855 the Rev. J. G. Christaller, one of the missionaries stationed at Acropong, has prosecuted the task of Scripture translation into the Otji language, and the four gospels, after a careful revision, were printed in 1857 by the British and Foreign Bible Society. In 1861 the book of Genesis, the epistle to the Romans, and the general epistles of John followed, and in 1865 the entire New Test. was in circulation. In 1870 the Old Test. was printed in Europe, under the superintendence of the translator, and since then the entire Bible has been in circulation. (B. P.)

Otji-herero Version of the Scriptures. The Otji-herero is the same as the Damara, and is spoken by a south-western African tribe. The committee of the South African Auxiliary Bible Society printed in 1875 the book of Psalms in that language, the translation having been prepared by the Rev. H. Brincker, of the Rhenish Missionary Society. In 1879 the British and Foreign Bible Society, at the request of Dr. Fabri, of the Rhenish Missionary Society, printed the New Test., which was also translated by Mr. Brincker, and revised by a committee. Otshirbani, in Kalmuckian worship, was a god of third rank, represented under a singular form. He appears only clothed about the hips. The figure has large eyes, a monstrous open mouth, is contracted, with head turned back, as if in convulsions. This deity was sent to heaven to combat the evil demons. He was victorious, and decapitated the spirits, from which he made himself a crown, ear-rings, and a long necklace, which extended to the belly. From the mouth through the body there runs a straight channel, which physicians use to give medicine. The idol is placed on the mouth of the sick, a pill is put into the channel, and falls into the mouth of the patient.

Otter, WILLIAM, D.D., an English prelate, was born at Cuckney, Nottinghamshire, Oct. 23, 1768. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow and tutor; was presented to the rectory of Colneworth, Bedfordshire, in 1804, with which he held the vicarage of Sturmer, in Essex; appointed to Chetwynd, Shropshire, in 1810; to Kinet, in 1816; St. Mark's, Kennington, in 1825; was principal of King's College, London, in 1831, and consecrated bishop of Chichester, Oct. 2, 1836. He died Aug. 20, 1840. Bishop Otter was an accomplished scholar, an able preacher, blameless in life, and held in high esteem by all who knew him. He published three Tracts respecting the Bible Society against bishop Marsh (1812-13):—Life and Remains of E. D. Clarke (1824, 4to; 1825, 2 vols. 8vo):—Life of T. R. Maltus (1836). After his death a volume was published of his Pastoral Addresses (1841, 8vo). See (Lond.) Gentlemen's Magazine, Nov. 1840, p. 539; London Athenaeum, 1840, p. 364; *The (Lond.) Otther, JACOB, the reformer of Esslingen, was born at Lautenburg, in Alsace. He studied at Freiburg, where Wimpeling was his teacher, and while a resident at Strasburg Otther published the sermons of Geiler, of Kaiserberg, in a Latin translation, in 1510. In 1520, while preacher at Wullenweiler, near Freiburg, he openly declared himself an adherent of Luther. In 1522 he was preacher at Kenzingen, in the Breisgau, but he left that place in 1524 on account of the opposition which he met from the civil and ecclesiastical authorities. Otther went to Neckarsteinach, near Heidelberg, and abolished there the mass and other papistic usages. In 1527 he left that place, and, after a short stay at Strasburg and in Switzerland, finally settled in 1532 at Esslingen, where he brought about the work of reformation, which had been commenced by Ambrosius Blaser. Otther died in the early part of 1547. See Seckendorf, Ausführliche Historie des Lutherthums (Leipsic, 1714); Keim, Reformationsblätter der Reichsstadt Esslingen (1860) and Schwäbische Reformationsgeschichte; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. Otto, LEOPOLD MARTIN VON, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Warsaw, in Poland, Nov. 2, 1819. He studied at Dorpat and Berlin, and acted for some time as vicar at Kalish. In 1844 he was pastor at Petrikau, and in 1849 at Warsaw, where he developed a great activity in founding many Christian institutions. Having taken part in the Polish revolution, he was imprisoned and suspended from his office. From 1866 to 1875 he served as pastor at Teschen, in Austrian Silesia, and when permission was granted for his return to his native town, he resumed his pastorate there again, where he died, Sept. 22, 1885. In acknowledgment of his great efforts for propagating theological literature in the Polish language, the Leipzig University conferred on him in 1864 the degree of doctor of divinity. He published, The Augsburg Confession in the Polish language, in 1852:—History of the Evangelical Church of the Augsburg Confession of Warsaw, from 1652 to 1781 (1882). He afterwards published an evangelical review, the Zwiastun Ewangeliczny. (B. P.)

Ouseel, PHILIPP, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Dantzic, Oct. 7, 1671, and studied theology and medicine at different universities. In 1711 he was preacher at Leyden, in 1717 professor at Frankfurt, and died April 12, 1724, doctor of theology and medicine. He wrote, De Lepra Cutis Hebraeorum:—Introductio in Accentuationem Hebraeorum Metricam:—De Accentuatione Hebraeorum Prosaica:—De Auctore Decalogi:—De Nominibus Decalogi:—De Decalogo soli Israeli Datus:—De Denario regni Calorum:—De Natura Decalogi. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 60; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Outrein, JOHANN D', a Reformed theologian, was born at Middleburg, Oct. 17, 1663. He studied at Franeker, and was preacher there in 1687. In 1688 he was appointed librarian of the academy, in 1691 preacher at Arnheim, in 1708 at Dort, in 1708 at Amsterdam, and died Feb. 20, 1722. He was a voluminous writer. A complete list of his many writings is given in Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Outremont, HECTOR ALBERT CHAULET D', a French prelate, was born at Tours, Feb. 27, 1825. He became titular of St. Gatien of Tours in 1862, bishop of Agen in 1871, archbishop of Maus in 1874, and died Sept. 16, 1884.

Ouvrier, LUDWIG BENJAMIN, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Prenzlau, Prussia, May 7, 1735. He studied at Halle, and was for some time private tutor. In 1763 he was made court-preacher at Darmstadt, in 1770 member of consistory, and in 1772 professor of theology at Giessen. Ouvrier died Oct. 1, 1792. He published, Untersuchung über die Lehrrätze des Christenthums (Berlin, 1778):—De Theologia Populari (Giessen, 1775):—Annotaciones Quædam ad 2 Petr. ii, 2; Judæ 6 (1776):—De Necessitate Satisfactionis a Paulo Rom. viii, 3 Asserta (1777):—De Theologia Morali (1779):—An Actor, iv, 24 Spiritus Sanctus Dicitur Unicus Creator (1780):—De fide in Resurrectione Restituendis Corporibus (1781):—Geschichte der Religionen nebst ihren Gründen und Gegengründen (1781–83, 2 vols.). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Overkamp, GEORG WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 9, 1707, at Greifswalde, and died at his birthplace, July 27, 1790, professor and senior of the university. He wrote, De Significatione Verborum Quibus Induratio Pharaonis in Historia Moaisica Exprimitur (Jena, 1736):—De Judæis Primariis Christiani Nominis Hostibus (eod.).—De Judæis Frustra a Guilielmo Whistono alisque Corruptionis Hebræi Codicis Insimulatis (Greifswalde, 1739):—De Hebræorum פסח Pontificis Maximi in Summo Expiationis de Vicario (eod.):—De Peccato ac Pœna Israël Typicis (1743):—De Divinitus Prædicto ac Definito Tempore Nativitatis Messias (eod.):—De Philosophia Orientali (1744):—De Magis ex Oriente ut Vere Sapientibus (1749):—De Salomone, Veræ Sapientia Magistro, ex Libro Coheleth Ostensio (1754):—Meletema Quadragesimale in Jes. liii, 7, 8, 9 (1760):—Commentatio in Ps. xxxiii (1770):—De Distinctione in Judæos et Græcos, in Græcos et Barbaros (1782). Owen, ISAAC, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Milton, Vt., March 8, 1809. Two years later he removed with his parents to Indiana. He was converted in his sixteenth year, in his twenty-third was licensed to preach, and in 1834 entered the Indiana Conference. For fourteen years he filled without interruption the regular appointments given him by that Conference, and during the last four years of the time served with great efficiency as agent of the Indiana Asbury University. In 1848 he received a transfer to California as a missionary. Upon his arrival in California the interests of the work were mainly placed in his hands. For many years he filled the office of presiding elder; twice he was elected to the General Conference; once, upon the non-arrival of the bishop, he was chosen to fill his place and preside; and he was always among the foremost in Church and literary enterprises. To no one man was California more indebted for her progress in morals and social reform than to Dr. Owen. He died Feb. 9, 1866. Industry, zeal, and faithfulness marked his life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1867, p. 233; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Owen, Joseph, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Bedford, N. Y., June 14, 1814. He graduated from Princeton College in 1835, and from the Theological Seminary there in 1838; was ordained in 1839 for the mission-field, in which he did his life-work. Landing in India in 1840, and assigned to the station of Allahabad, he continued to labor there without release or relaxation for four-and-twenty years. After the death of his first wife, in 1864, he obtained a short release, and crossed the Himalaya mountains into Tibet. Five years later he undertook a visit to his native land. In acknowledgment of the value of his translation of the Bible into Hindû, the North India Bible Society presented him money to visit Palestine. He visited Egypt, Jerusalem, Constantinople, Germany, and Scotland on this tour, and was intending to visit America. He died at Edinburgh, Scotland, Dec. 4, 1870.

Owl-headed Minerva. The idea of this goddess is due to the imaginative enthusiasm of Dr. Schliemann, who believed that he saw an owl-headed Athena in the rude attempts at the imitation of the human face on vases and other objects discovered by him at Hissarlik. The faces of certain images of Apollo, found on the coasts of Asia Minor, and now in the British Museum, are ruder than those of the Hissarlik antiquities. Similar faces are also found on the Etruscan blackware from Chiusi, where the spout of the vase serves as a nose, and it is probable that the ornamentation originated in two eyes being set on each side of a vessel's spout or mouth, to ward off the evil eye. Two large eyes are sometimes introduced on Greek vases in the midst of a group of figures. See MINERVA.

Oxygraphus (from ὄξυς, swift, and γράφω, to write), a name sometimes given by the Greek fathers to the Notary (q. v.) of the ancient Christian Church.

O'zem (Heb. O'tsem, צֶמַח, strength; Sept. Ἀσὺμ v. r. Ἀσάμ and Ἀσάν; Vulg. Assom and Asom), the name of two men of the tribe of Judah.

1. The fourth of the sons of Jerahmeel by his first wife (1 Chron. ii, 25). B. C. cir. 1656.

2. The sixth son of Jesse, and brother of David (1 Chron. ii, 15). B. C. cir. 1100.

Pabisch, FRANCIS JOSEPH, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Roman Catholic scholar and divine, was born at Zlabings, Moravia, March 30, 1825. In his fourteenth year he was sent to the grammar-school of Znaim, and from there to the high-school of Brunn; in 1843 entered the University of Vienna; and in 1847 the archiepiscopal seminary in the same city. In March, 1850, he was ordained priest, and was given a chaplaincy near Vienna. In 1851, on the invitation of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, he came to America, and was placed in charge of Whiteoak, seven miles from Cincinnati. In 1853 he began to give a few hours a week to teaching ecclesiastical history and German in the Seminary of Mount St. Mary's of the West. Later, he studied theology and canon law at the College of the Propaganda in Rome. He was appointed chaplain to the Church of Santa Maria sopra Minerva, and after four years of arduous study graduated doctor of theology and doctor of civil and canon law. From 1858 to 1860 he practiced as a jurist to the congregation of the Council of Trent. In 1861 Dr. Pabisch returned to the United States, and on his arrival at Cincinnati was given the chair of ecclesiastical history and canon law at the Seminary of Mount St. Mary's, and in 1863 succeeded to the rectorship. On the financial downfall of that institution, his intellect gave way, and he was taken to the Mount Hope Retreat, near Baltimore, where he died, Oct. 2, 1879. In connection with Rev. Thomas S. Byrne, Dr. Pabisch translated Alzog's Universal Church History from the German (Cincinnati, 1874, 1876, 1878, 3 vols. 8vo), with additions on the history in England and America. See (N. Y.) Cath. Annual, 1881, p. 93.

Pachacamac, the supreme god of the Peruvians. This deity had a magnificent temple in a valley called Pachacama, built by the Incas or emperors of Peru. Such immense treasures had been laid up in this temple that Pizarro found 900,000 ducats in it, though four hundred savages had taken away as much as they could carry. The Peruvians had so great a veneration for this deity that they offered him whatever they esteemed most precious, and so great was their awe of him that they durst not look upon his image. Even their priests and kings entered his temples with their backs towards his altar, and came out again without daring to turn.

Pachmann, THEODOR, a Roman Catholic theologian of Austria, for some time professor of canon law at the university in Vienna, who died Feb. 2, 1881, doctor of theology, is the author of Lehrbuch des Kirchenrechtes (Vienna, 1853, 8 vols.; 3d ed. 1863-66). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 969. (B. P.)

Packard, ALPHRUS SPRING, D.D., a Congregational minister and educator, was born at Chelmsford, Mass., Dec. 20, 1799, and was the son of Rev. Dr. Hezekiah Packard. He studied at the Phillips Academy of Exeter, and graduated from Bowdoin College in 1816. He was elected tutor of the college in 1819, and, in 1824, professor of languages and classical literature; from 1842 to 1845 filled a vacancy in the chair of rhetoric and oratory; in 1864 was called to the chair of the Collins professorship of natural and revealed religion; and in 1883 and 1884 was acting president. He was chosen a member of the Maine Historical Society in 1828, and was long its secretary and librarian. He died suddenly at Squirrel Island, Boothbay Harbor, Me., July 13, 1884. His sermons, lectures, and contributions of various kinds to the press were numerous. See Boston Advertiser, July 14, 1884. (J. C. S.)

Paddock, ZACARIAH, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Northampton, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1798. He was converted at the age of eighteen, licensed to preach in 1818, and the same year entered the Genesee Conference. His most responsible appointments were: Ridgeway, Clarence, Batavia, French Creek, Westmoreland, Buffalo, Rochester, Auburn, Cazenovia, New York Mills, Sauquoit, Ithica, Binghamton, Oxford, Utica, Wilkesbarre, Honesdale, and Chenango; upon most of which he was eminently successful. He took a superannuated relation in 1870, and died, a member of the Wyoming Conference, at his home in Binghamton, N. Y., July 4, 1879. Dr. Paddock's name in American Methodism in his declining years became a synonym for gentleness, sweetness, and purity. He published several small volumes, and wrote quite extensively for the Church papers and periodicals. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 86.

Padilla, FRANCESCO DE, a Roman Catholic theologian, for some time professor of theology at Seville, who died at Malaga, May 15, 1607, canon and doctor of theology, is the author of Historia Ecclesiastica de Espanna (Malaga, 1605, 2 vols. fol.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 816; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Page, DAVID COOK, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was, in 1853, rector of a church in Memphis, Tenn.; about 1858 removed to Allegheny, Penn., as rector of Christ Church, and there remained during the greater part of the rest of his life. A short time previous to his death he became rector of Trinity Church, Natchez, Miss. He died in Allegheny City, Penn., May 7, 1878, aged seventy-six years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 170.

Pagendarm, JOHANN GERHARD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Lübeck, Dec. 2, 1681. He studied at Wittenberg, and acted for some time as preacher at different places. In 1780 he commenced his academical career at Jena, and died May 28, 1784. He wrote, De Codice Judaorum Olmenisium Ebraeo (Jena, 1730):—De Hebræis Danielis (1745):—De אבר יסכה et אבר יסכה ad Gen. xi, 29, in the Bibliotheca Lubecensis, vi, No. 5. Pahari Version of the Scripture. The Pahari is spoken by the Pahari, a hill tribe in the Rajmahal district, Bengal, who are supposed to be among the earliest settlers in the country. The Rev. E. Droege, of Bhangalore, who has spent nearly a quarter of a century among the Pahari, and who is the only European that knows much of their language, has translated the gospel of Luke, which was published by the Calcutta Auxiliary Bible Society in 1881. The same scholar also prepared a translation of the gospel of John, which was published in 1883. These are the only parts of the Scripture which are yet printed. (B. P.)

Paine, Robert, D.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Person County, N. C., Nov. 12, 1799, of Baptist parents. In early life he removed to Tennessee; was converted Nov. 9, 1817; licensed to preach the same year; the next year was admitted into the Tennessee Conference, and after laboring on several circuits and in important stations, was elected president of La Grange College, Alabama, in 1830, a position which he retained until his elevation to the episcopacy in 1846. He had been a member of every General Conference from 1824, and was active in the discussion that led to the division of the Methodist Church in 1844. His extensive labors as a bishop closed with his death, Oct. 20, 1882. He was a very able preacher, a ready speaker, and a devoted Christian. He wrote Life and Times of Bishop McKendree. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1882, p. 147; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Paine, William Pomeroy, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Ashfield, Mass., Aug. 1, 1802. He studied at Ashfield Academy; in 1827 graduated from Amherst College, and in 1832 from Andover Theological Seminary; from 1829 to 1831 he was tutor in Amherst College. His only pastorate was of the Church at Holden, Mass., where he was regularly ordained and installed, Oct. 24, 1833. He resigned this charge in February, 1875, but remained pastor emeritus until his death, Nov. 28, 1876. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 421.

Painting, CHRISTIAN. The first law which governed the early Christian sculptors and painters was to present Christ as the source and centre of their life, and so to depict him that other figures in their compositions should appear like rays emanating from him. With respect to the contents and spirit of representation, it may be said that, during the entire period of early Christian art, both sculpture and painting were, for the most part, limited to symbolical expression. In the beginning, symbolical representations were alone permitted. Soon, however, the art impulse partially broke away from these fetters; yet art still remained a sort of biblia pauperum, and served chiefly as a mere reminder of the themes of sacred history. Even at a later period, when works of art were employed in multitudes for church decorations, Biblical scenes, especially from the Apocalypse, were still preferred. As early as the 4th century we find a portrait-like representation of sacred personages accompanying these forms of artistic symbolism. It was even believed that veritable portraits of Christ, the Madonna, and the Apostles, existed in paintings from the hand of St. Luke, and in sculpture from that of Nicodemus, in the napkin of St. Veronica, yea, even in the so-called αἰκονοποιήσεις ("likenesses of celestial origin").

In the first third of the early Christian period, from the 3d century to the second half of the 5th century, of which numerous works of art in the so-called cemeteries (catacombs of Rome, Naples, Syracuse, etc.) have been preserved, painting still maintained the ancient plastic method of representation (as may be seen also in the paintings in the cemeteries, in the mosaics of Santa Costanza and Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome, San Giovanni in Fonte, and San Nazario e Celso at Ravenna). In the second third, till the 8th century, painting sought more and more to adapt the antique forms to the idealistic, transcendental spirit of Christianity, as may be seen from the mosaics of Santa Pudenziana and Santi Cosma e Damiano at Rome, of San Appollinare Nuovo, San Appollinare in Classe, and San Vitale at Ravenna, and some miniatures. After the 8th century, painting, and in fact, the entire art of early Christianity, lapsed into a continually deepening decline, till the 11th century, as may be seen in the mosaics of San Prassede, San Marco, and others in Rome, and miniatures of various manuscripts, and the Iconostasis (q. v.) of Greek and Russian churches.

With the new life which the 11th century ushered in Western Christendom, architecture reached not only the climax of its own development, but also asserted a decided preponderance over sculpture and painting. One spirit and one life prevailed in all three of the sister-arts. The newly awakened art impulse developed itself in the North, especially in Germany, much later in Italy. Here the earliest movement took place in the 12th century, and the following century had been, ushered in before the first endeavors were made by single artists of lesser rank to blend the Byzantine style with the ancient Italian, and thus to infuse new life into the old Christian types. The "Romanesque" style of painting first reached completeness in Giovanni Cimabue and in Duccio di Boninsegna of Sienna (fl. about 1282). On this wise there grew up two schools of painting—that of Florence and that of Sienna; the Florentine of a severer type, approaching nearer to the early Christian (Byzantine), the Siennese characterized more by tenderness and sentiment, more independent, and likewise more graceful in the rendering of form. These two masters were followed by Giotto di Bondone of Florence (1276-1336), known under the title of "the father of Italian painting," but in fact only the founder of the Gothic style of painting. He was a bold reformer, and broke through the traditions of art and servile adherence to the early Christian types. The best pupils of Giotto were Taddeo Gaddi, and his son, Angelo Gaddi, Giotto, Orcagna, Spinello, Aretino, Antonio Veneziano, and others.

In Germany, the beginnings of the Romanesque style may be traced back to the 11th century. An improvement is manifest in the 12th century, especially in the famous altar of Verdun (of the year 1180, now in the monastery of Neuburg, near Vienna), in the mural paintings of the grand hall of the monastery of Brauweiler, near Cologne, and the ceiling of the central aisle of St. Michael, at Hildesheim. Far more numerous and important are the works still preserved from the period of the Gothic style, in which the peculiar spirit of mediævalism first attained to complete artistic expression. The development of glass-painting must especially be noted—probably a German invention, dating at the end of the 10th century—examples of which are seen in the windows of St. Cunibert, at Cologne, in the choir of Cologne Cathedral, in the Church of St. Catharine, at Oppenheim, and in Strasburg Cathedral. In easel pictures, which previously appear to have been very little painted, there is manifest no higher artistic endeavor until the middle of the 14th century. After this three separate schools may be distinguished: 1. The Bohemian, or school of Prague, founded by Charles IV; 2. The Nuremberg school, the chief representative monuments of which are several altar-shrines in the Frauenkirche, in St. Laurence, and St. Sebald, at Nuremberg; 3. The school of Cologne, by far the most important, whose chief representatives were master Wilhelm (about 1360) and master Stephan Lochner (about 1480).

With the beginning of the 15th century broke forth, in opposition to the spirit of mediævalism, a decided endeavor after greater truth of expression in art—an endeavor in light, color, drawing, and composition, to bring the spiritual import of representation into harmony with the laws and principles of nature. This naturalistic development first manifested itself in Italy in the Florentine school. Fra Giovanni Angelico da Fiesole (1387-1455), although in other respects wholly dominated by the spirit of mediævalism, was, nevertheless, the first who sought to penetrate into the psychological meaning of the human countenance. Over against him, already decidedly emancipated from mediævalism, stands Tommaso di San Giovanni da Castel, called Masaccio (1401-28), one of the greatest masters of the 15th century. With Fra Angelico are associated the names of Benozzo Gozzoli and Gentile da Fabriano; with Masaccio those of Fra Filippo Lippi, his son Filippino, Domenico Ghirlandajo, and Bastiano Mainardi. Other Florentine artists, as Antonio Pollajuolo and Andrea del Verocchio, who were also sculptors, strove by anatomical studies to transfer plastic forms to painting in a more vigorous modelling of the human figure; while Luca Signorelli of Cortona (1440-1521), by the nobleness and artistic truth of his compositions, presents a strong contrast with the deeper sentiment of the Umbrian school, which, with its chief theatre in the vicinity of Assisi, is an antithesis of the Florentine. Celebrated masters of the Umbrian school were Pietro Perugino (1446-1526), the teacher of Raphael, and the latter's father, Giovanni Santi (died 1494), as well as Raphael's friend, Francesco Francia (died 1517). The remaining schools of Italy, as the Venetian, with its Giovanni Bellini (about 1430-1516), the school of Padua and Mantua, with masters like Francesco Squarcione and Andrea Mantegna (1431-1506), follow the Florentine.

Italian painting reached its climax in the 16th century. The most celebrated masters of that period were Leonardo da Vinci, Cesare da Sesto, Andrea Salaino, Francesco Melzi, and especially Luini. The Venetian school of the 16th century sought to realize by means of color the noble results to which Leonardo had attained. In the quality of color this school achieved a supremacy over all others. Its chief master was Titian. With him labored the distinguished pupils of Giorgione—Fra Sebastiano del Piombo, Giacompo Palma, called Il Vecchio, and Pordenone. Among Titian's own pupils the most distinguished was Jacopo Robusti, called Tintoretto. In the renowned Paul Veronese, we have a master of color of the highest rank. The principal seat of the Lombard school in the 16th century was Parma. Its chief master was Correggio. The Florentine school, and, later, almost the entire painting of Italy after the beginning of the 16th century, were ruled by Michael Angelo, and by such lesser lights as Ricciarelli, Venusti, Sarto, and others. The greatest of the five great masters is Raphael. His best pupils were Giulio Romano (1492-1546), Gaudenzio Ferrari, and Giovanni da Udine.

In the Netherlands a new impulse was given to Christian painting by Hubert van Eyck (died 1426), the inventor, or, rather, the improver, of oil painting, and his younger brother and pupil, John van Eyck (died 1441). Their principal pupils were Pieter Christus, Rogier van der Weyden, and particularly Hans Memling. The influence thus begun made itself felt in Holland, where a similar school was founded, whose chief masters were Lucas van Leyden, and his contemporary Jan Mostaert. At the beginning of the 16th century a number of artists followed the style of the Van Eycks. The most distinguished of these was Quintin Massys, the smith of Antwerp (died 1529).

Similar was the career of German art during this period. The Gothic style had a long supremacy; but about the middle of the 15th century all the German schools followed the Italian. The chief masters of this period were, in the school of Cologne, Johann von Mehem, the painter of the Death of the Virgin; in the school of Westphalia, the master of Liesborn monastery; in the school of Ulm and Augsburg, Martin Schön (about 1480), the somewhat younger Bartholomäus Zeitblom, and his successor, Martin Schaffner, of Ulm, and Hans Holbein, father of the renowned Holbein the younger, of Augsburg; in the school of Nuremberg, Michael Wohlgemuth (1484-1519), and more especially his pupil Albrecht Dürer. Mention must also be made of the Saxon school, whose head was the well-known Lucas Cranach (1472-1553), the friend of Luther, whose best pupils were his sons, John and Lucas Cranach the younger. The only artist who can be compared with the great master of Nuremberg is Hans Holbein the younger (1497-1554). His most characteristic works are the Darmstadt Madonna, a copy of which is at Dresden, and his well-known Dance of Death.

In the second half of the 16th century the painting of Germany and the Netherlands lost its independence by servile imitation of Italian masters. But in Italy, too, we find a sudden decline, which clearly evidences that art had passed its zenith. A second race of pupils became mere imitators, even exaggerating the one-sidedness of Titian, Correggio, and Michael Angelo. The best examples of these so-called "mannerists" were Fr. Salviati, and Giorgio Vasari. In opposition to this confusion, at the end of the century arose the Bolognese school of the Caracci, whose advent marks for Italy the commencement of the fourth period of modern painting. Ludovico Caracci, and his nephews and pupils, Agostino and Annibale Caracci, established a sort of eclectic system, whose purpose it was to imitate the chief distinguishing qualities of the five great masters of painting. Their best pupils were Domenichino (1581-1641), Guercino (1590-1666), Franc. Albani (1578-1660), and especially Guido Reni (1575-1642), the most distinguished of all. A second school of Italian painting arraying itself in opposition to the idealism of the great masters, and developing a one-sided realism and naturalism, was founded in the beginning of the 17th century. Its principal representative was Mic. Angelo Amerighi da Caravaggio, whose pupils, the two Frenchmen, Moysse Valentin and Simon Vouet, and the eminent Spanish master, Gius. Ribera, called Spagnoletto, transplanted their influence to France and Spain. Notwithstanding the eminent talents exercised to uphold the fame of Italian painting, yet in the 18th century it reached its lowest level of decadence. It was in Spain that the new revival of catholicism in art found, in the 17th century, its strongest support. The five great masters who represent the completest development of painting in Spain were almost all from the school of Seville. They were: 1. José Ribera; 2. Francesco Zurbarán (1598-1662); 3. Diego Velasquez da Silva (1599-1660), one of the most eminent of portrait-painters; 4. Alonzo Cano; 5. Bartolomé Murillo. The flourishing period of Spanish painting was of short duration; and in the last quarter of the 17th century the schools of Spain degenerated into mere factories of art, such as Luca Giordano of Italy introduced.

In the Netherlands, painting maintained a certain elevation of rank for a somewhat longer period. Here two distinct schools, that of Brabant (Belgium) and that of Holland, developed themselves out of national divisions. The former had its masters in Peter Paul Rubens, and in his pupils, viz. Jac. Jordans, Caspar de Crayer, and, above all, Anton van Dyck (1599-1641). The latter was represented by Theodor de Keyser, Franz Hals, Barth. Van der Helst, and others, who were almost exclusively portrait-painters. A far higher development was, however, reached in the famous Rembrandt, whose most distinguished pupils and successors were Gerbrandt van der Eeckhout, Solomon Koning, and Ferdinand Bol.

France and Germany can claim no position of importance during this period in a brief review of Christian painting. In Germany, the Thirty Years' War had nearly uprooted all elements of culture, and when, in the 18th century, the country began to recover from these devastations, masters of only subordinate rank, as Balth. Denner, Dietrich, and Raphael Mengs (1728-79), appeared upon the stage. In France, the older and better masters, like Nic. Poussin, Eustache Leueur, and others, strove in vain to make head against the theatrical style represented by Charles Lebrun, the favorite of Louis XIV. Since the diffusion over Europe of that immoral and irreligious spirit which preceded and followed the French Revolution, Christian painting has naturally experienced a marked decline. But in Germany, France, and Belgium individual schools have again grown up, the excellences of which, in the appreciation of the grand and the beautiful, cannot be denied. In Germany, Munich, Düsseldorf, Berlin, and of late Vienna, must be mentioned as the principal seats of revived painting, in which sacred themes occupy a most significant place, and these treated both in a Catholic and a Protestant spirit, the former by Cornelius, Overbeck, Fritsch, H. Hess, Schraudolph, and others; the latter by Lessing, Hübner, Bendemann, Deger, Von Gebhardt, and others. On the whole, however, modern religious painting, corresponding to the religious condition of the present time, seems partly a mere endeavor to revive a greatness and power which has perished, and partly a blind effort to reach a new goal, which is still enshrouded in darkness.

The best modern works on the history of Christian painting are, Kugler, Handbuch der Geschichte der Malerei seit Constantin dem Grossen (2d ed. Berlin, 1847; 4th ed. by Lübke, 1872); Ch. Blanc, Histoire des Peintres de Toutes les Ecoles depuis la Renaissance jusqu'à nos Jours (Paris, 1851 sq.); W. Lübke, Geschichte der italienischen Malerei vom 4. bis 16. Jahrhundert (8th ed. Stuttgart, 1880); A. Woltmann, Geschichte der Malerei (Leipzig, 1878; Engl. transl. Lond. and N. Y. 1881); Ruskin, Modern Painters (Lond. 1848-60, 5 vols.); Crowe and Cavalcaselle, Storia della Pittura in Italia dal Secolo II al Secolo XVI (Florence, 1875); the art. Malerei in Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop.; and Peinture in Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v. PALESTINE, COLONISTS IN. On this subject we present an extract from Lieut. Conder's Tent Work in Palestine, ii, 305 sq.:

"The German colonists belong to a religious society known as the 'Temple,' which originated among the Pietists of Württemberg, who, without leaving the Lutheran Church, separated themselves from the world, and engaged in Sunday meetings for prayer and edification. The Pietists accept as their standard the explanation given by Dr. J. A. Bengel (in his Gnomon of the New Test.) of the prophecies in the Revelation. Among the friends and disciples of Bengel was a certain Dr. Hoffmann, who obtained from Frederick, the eccentric king of Württemberg, a tract of barren land at Kornthal, where his disciples established a Pietist colony, which he intended to transplant later to Palestine. Hoffmann, however, died, and his followers remained contentedly on their lands; but Hoffmann's son was not forgetful of his father's designs, and instituted a new colony at Kirchenhardthof, with a special view to its final removal to the Holy Land. Among his earliest disciples was Herr G. D. Hardegg, who became in time a leader among the Temple Pietists.

"The younger Hoffmann (Christopher) visited Palestine about 1868, and, in 1867, a small trial expedition of twelve men was sent out. They settled in reed huts near Semûnleh, on the edge of the Plain of Esdræon, west of Nazareth; and in spite of the warning of friends who knew the unhealthy climate of that place, they remained in the malarious atmosphere of the low ground near the springs, until they all died of fever.

"On Aug. 6, 1868, Christopher Hoffmann and G. D. Hardegg left Kirchenhardthof, and in October they reached Palestine; after visiting various places, they resolved on settling at Haifa and Jaffa, and bought land in both places. The Haifa colony was the first founded, that at Jaffa being some six months younger. Hardegg became president of the former, and Hoffmann of the latter.

"The religious views of the colonists are not easily understood, and I believe that most of them have rather vague ideas of their own intentions. Their main motive for establishing colonies in Palestine is the promotion of conditions favorable to the fulfilment (which they expect to occur shortly) of the prophecies of the Revelation and of Zechariah. They suppose it to be a duty to separate themselves from the world, and to set an example of a community living, as closely as possible, on the model of the apostolic age. The spread of infidelity in Germany appears to be the main cause of this separatist tendency among the Pietists.

"The tenets of the Temple Society are probably best summarized in the 'Profession of Faith of the Temple,' published by Herr Hoffmann, and including five articles as below:

"1. To prepare for the great and terrible day of the second coming of Jesus Christ, which, from the signs of the times, is near. This preparation is made by the building of a spiritual temple in all lands, specially in Jerusalem.

"2. This temple is composed of the gifts of the Spirit (1 Cor. xii, 4), which make the true Church, and every one should strive to possess them.

"3. The means to obtain these is to seek the kingdom of God, as described by the prophets (Isa. li, 2; xli, 28; Ezek. xl, 45).

"4. The temple of Jerusalem is not a building of dead, but of lively stones; of men of every nation (1 Pet. ii, 4-10) united in the worship of God in spirit and truth.

"5. The Temple service consists of sacrifices such as are described in the New Test. (Rom. xii, 1; Heb. xiii, 15; James i, 27).

"The writings of Hardegg are far more diffuse and mystic. The main peculiarity which I have been able to extract from them is the belief that it is not to the Jews, but to the true Israel (by which he apparently understands the Temple Society to be intended), that prophecies of a return to Palestine are to be supposed to refer.

"I have stated as far as possible the apparent religious beliefs of the community, but there seem to be many shades of doctrine among them; all, however, agree in an expectancy of some immediate change in the world's affairs, in the arrival of Armageddon and the Millennium, and in the fulfilment of all prophecy.

"In 1875 I had the opportunity of attending one of the Sunday services, in the colony at Haifa. The congregation was devout and earnest; the service was simple and free from extravagance of any kind. The president offered up a long prayer in German, a hymn was sung with the usual musical good taste of Germans, and a chapter of the prophecy of Zechariah read. The president then delivered an exhortation, announcing the immediate advent of the Saviour, who would 'suddenly come to his temple.' Other elders followed, speaking with much earnestness, and another hymn was sung, after which the congregation quietly dispersed from the bare school-room in which they had assembled. A discussion of the affairs of the colony often immediately succeeds the religious services.

"Of the history of the Jaffa colony we gathered comparatively little. They have two settlements—one called Sarona, about two and a half miles north of the town, consisting, in 1872, of ten houses; the second, nearer the walls of Jaffa, was bought from the surviving members of an American colony which came to grief, and this settlement included thirteen houses, with a school and a hotel, the latter kept by Hardegg's son, who also represents the German government in Jaffa.

"In 1872 the Jaffa colony numbered one hundred men, seventy women, and thirty-five children: two of the colonists were doctors, and some twenty were mechanics, the rest being farmers. They employed a few natives, and cultivated four hundred acres of corn-land, paying the ordinary taxes to the Turks. The children are taught Arabic, and European languages, also Latin and Greek. The houses are clean, airy, and well built, and the colony wears an aspect of industry and enterprise, which contrasts with the squalor and decay of the native villages.

"With the Haifa colony we became more intimately acquainted, by living in one of the houses for three months, during the winter of 1872-73, and again in the hotel of the colony, for about two months, during 1875, when we saw a good deal of the working of the community.

"In 1872 the colonists numbered two hundred and fifty-four—forty single and forty-seven married men, thirty-two single and fifty-one married women (four widows), and eighty-four children. There were about fifty mechanics, and the settlement consisted of thirty-one dwelling-houses. The land was four hundred and fifty acres of arable ground, with one hundred and forty olive-trees, and seventeen acres of vineyard.

"In the first three years of its existence only seven deaths occurred in the colony, but the mortality increased later: in 1872 there were eighteen deaths among the two hundred and five colonists at Jaffa, which were due principally to fever, but such a death-rate has never yet occurred at Haifa.

"The little village of well-built stone houses is situated west of the walled town of Haifa, under the shadow of the Carmel range. A broad street runs up from the shore towards the mountain, and the greater number of the buildings stand, in their gardens, on either side. Close to the beach is the Carmel Hotel, kept by a most obliging and moderate landlord, and a little farther up are the school and meeting-house, in one building. Mr. Hardegg's dwelling, farther east, is the largest house in the colony. The total number is stated at eighty-five, including buildings for agricultural purposes.

"In 1875 the colonists numbered three hundred and eleven, having been reinforced principally by new arrivals from Germany; the increase of accommodation since 1872 was thus far greater than that of settlers. The land had also increased, in the same period, to six hundred acres, with one hundred acres of vineyards and gardens; but the soil of the newly-acquired property near Treh, in the plain west of Carmel, is of very poor quality, and the Germans have not yet succeeded in their favorite scheme of obtaining grounds on the top of the mountain, where the climate and soil are both good.

"The live-stock consisted of seventy-five head of cattle, two hundred and fifty sheep, goats, and pigs, and eight teams of horses. A superior American threshing-machine had been imported. The trades followed are stone-cutting and masons' work, carpentry and wagon-making. Blacksmiths, copper-smiths, tin-smiths, joiners, shoemakers, tailors, butchers, harness-makers, turners, soap-makers, vintners, and quarrymen are also found among the colonists. There has been an attempt to trade in soap, olive-oil, and olive-wood articles, but, for these undertakings, more capital is required than the Germans at present possess. A good windmill and an olive-press have been brought from England. A tannery was also being put up in 1875, and a general shop exists, which the natives, as well the Germans, frequent.

"The colonists were many of them employed on the English orphanage at Nazareth, which Mr. Shumacher designed and built; and all the masons' and carpenters' work was executed by the Germans. The colonists also have done much to clear the road from Haifa to Nazareth, though they have not made it, considering that, from a professional point of view, it is not yet a made road at all. Their wagons are now driven between the two places, and the natives employ them for moving grain.

"The schools in the colony, for the children and younger men, are two in number. In the upper school, Arabic, English, French, and German, arithmetic, drawing, geography, history, mathematics, and music are taught; in the lower, Arabic and German, writing, arithmetic, and singing; in both religious instruction is given; and the girls are taught knitting, sewing, and embroidery.

"The colony has thus been sketched in its religious and practical aspects. Though much talk has been expended on the question of colonizing the Holy Land, there is no other practical attempt which can compare in importance with that of the Temple Society. It remains to be seen what the success of the undertaking will be.

"The colonists belong entirely to the peasant and mechanical classes, and even their leaders are men comparatively uneducated. As a rule they are hard-working, sober, honest, and sturdy; and, however mystic their religious notions may be, they are essentially shrewd and practical in their dealings with the world. They are a pious and God-fearing people, and their natural domesticity renders it highly improbable that they will ever split on the rock which wrecked the former American colony, whose president, it appears, endeavored to follow the example of Brigham Young by introducing polygamy. The German colonists have also a fine field for enterprise, in the introduction into Palestine of European improvements, which are more or less appreciated by the natives; and, as they have no other community to compete with, they might be able to make capital of their civilized education. The wine which they sell is comparatively excellent, and finds a ready market, as do also many of their manufactured articles.

"Such is one side of the picture, but when we turn to the other we find elements of weakness, which seem to threaten the existence of the colony.

"In the first place, there is apparently no man in the community of sufficiently superior talent or education, or with the energy and force of character, which would be required to control and develop the enterprise. The genius of Brigham Young triumphed over the almost insuperable difficulties of his audacious undertaking, despite even the prejudice which the establishment of polygamy naturally raked against his disciples. However superior in piety and purity of motive the leaders of the Haifa colony may be, they cannot compare with the Mormon chief in the qualities to which his success was due.

"In the second place, the colonists are divided among themselves. In 1875 we found that Herr Hardegg had been deposed (temporarily, I understood, till he changed his views) from the leadership of the colony, and he had been succeeded by Herr Shumacher, a master-stonemason and architect, who is, moreover, the representative of the American government at Haifa. This deposition of the original leader had caused dissensions among the Germans, and several of the influential members did not attend the Sunday meetings.

"To internal troubles external ones were added. The colonists are not favorites either with natives or with Europeans, with Moslems or with Christians. The Turkish government is quite incapable of appreciating their real motives in colonization, and cannot see any reason, beyond a political one, for the settlement of Europeans in the country. The colonists, therefore, have never obtained title-deeds to the lands they have bought, and there can be little doubt that should the Turks deem it expedient, they would entirely deny the right of the Germans to hold their property. Not only do they extend no favor to the colony, though its presence has been most beneficial to the neighborhood, but the inferior officials, indignant at the attempts of the Germans to obtain justice in the courts, without any regard to the 'custom of the country' (that is, to bribery), have thrown every obstacle they can devise in the way of the community, both individually and collectively.

"The difficulties of the colonists are also increased by the jealousy of the Carmelite monks. The fathers possess good lands, gradually extending along Carmel round their fortress monastery; they look with disfavor on the encroachments of the Germans, and all the subtlety of Italians is directed against the German interests.

"The peculiar views of the colonists, moreover, cause them to be regarded with disfavor by influential Europeans in the country, who might do much to help them. They are avoided as religious visionaries, whose want of worldly wisdom might, at any time, embroil their protectors in difficulties not easily smoothed over.

"The community has thus to struggle with a positively hostile government, while it receives no very vigorous support from any one. The difficulties are perfectly well known to the native peasantry, who, with the characteristic meanness of the Syrians, take the opportunity to treat with insolence people whom they believe they can insult with impunity. The property of the colonists is disregarded, the native goat-herds drive their beasts into the corn, and several riots have occurred, which resulted in trials from which the colonists got no satisfaction.

"The indiscretion of the younger men has brought greater difficulties on the community; they have repaid insolence with summary punishment, and finding no help from the government, have in many instances taken the law into their own hands. Thus the colony finds itself at feud with the surrounding villages, and the hostile feeling is not unlikely to lead to very serious difficulties on some occasion of popular excitement.

"There are other reasons which militate against the idea of the final success of the colony. The Syrian climate is not adapted to Europeans, and year by year it must infallibly tell on the Germans, exposed as they are to sun and miasma. It is true that Haifa is, perhaps, the healthiest place in Palestine, yet even here they suffer from fever and dysentery, and if they should attempt to spread inland they will find their difficulties from climate increase tenfold.

"The children of the present generation will, probably, like those of the Crusading settlers in Palestine, be inferior in physique and power of endurance to their fathers. Cases of intermarriage with natives have, I believe, already occurred; the children of such marriages are not unlikely to combine the bad qualities of both nations, and may be compared to the Pallani of Crusading times. It seems to me that it is only by constant reinforcements from Germany that the original character of the colony can be maintained; and the whole community, in Palestine and in Germany, is said not to number more than five thousand persons.

"The expectation of the immediate fulfilment of prophecy has also resulted in the ruin of many of the poorer members of the community, who, living on their capital, have exhausted it before that fulfilment has occurred. The colony is thus in danger of dissolution, by the gradual absorption of the property into the hands of those who originally possessed the most capital; and in any case it is very likely to lose its original character of apostolic simplicity, some of the members becoming the servants and hired laborers of others.

"The natural desire of those members who find themselves without money is to make a livelihood by any means in their power. Where every man is thus working separately for himself, the progress of the colony, as a whole, is not unlikely to be forgotten, and the members may very probably be dispersed over Palestine, following their various trades where best they can make money."

Pali Version of the Scriptures. Pali, though no longer a vernacular language in any country, has for ages been established as the religious and learned language of the Buddhists in the island of Ceylon, in the Burman empire, in Siam, Laos, Pegu, Ava, and throughout almost the whole of the eastern peninsula of India. As a language it is immediately derived from the Sanscrit, and was probably the native language of Magadha, the birthplace of Buddha. A version into the Pali was commenced in 1813, under the auspices of the Colombo Bible Society, by Mr. Tolfrey, assisted by two learned Buddhist priests. The version had advanced as far as the end of the epistle to Philemon, when Mr. Tolfrey died, in 1817. In 1825 the Rev. Benjamin Clough resumed the work, and finally, in 1835, the whole New Test. was printed in Pali. One of the Buddhist priests who assisted Mr. Tolfrey in the translation became a sincere convert to Christianity, and subsequently devoted his whole attention to the completion and revision of this important work. Pallium, a piece of pontifical dress. It is the peculiar mark of primates, metropolitans, and archbishops, and a few privileged bishops, to be worn by them at councils, ordinations, and on certain occasions in church. Its other names were anophorion, superhumale, and, in the writings of Theodoret and St. Gregory Nazianzen, hiera stole. It is a circular scarf of plain lambs' wool, worn like a collar about the neck, and having two falling ends fastened over the chasuble by three gold pins fixed on the left shoulder, the breast, and back, the number three signifying charity, or the nails of the cross. Before the 8th century it was ornamented with two or four red or purple, but now with six black, crosses, fastened with gold pins, which superseded an earlier ornament, the Good Shepherd, or one cross, in the 4th century. It has been supposed to be the last relic of an abbreviated toga, reduced to its laticlave by degrees. In the time of Gregory the Great it was made of white linen cloth, without seam or needlework, hanging down from the shoulders. See PALI.

Palm, JOHANN GEORG, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hanover, Dec. 7, 1697. He studied at Jena, was for some time court-chaplain at Wolfenbützel, in 1727 pastor at Hamburg, and died Feb. 17, 1748. He is the author of, Einkleitung in die Geschichte der angburgischen Confession (Hamburg, 1730); — De Codicibus Veteris et Novi Testamenti Quibus Lutherus in Conficienda Interpretatione Germanica usus est (1735); — Geschichte der Bibelübersetzung Dr. Martin Luther's (edited by J. M. Götte, Halle, 1772). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, a. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i. 167; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Palmer, Edward Henry, an English Orientalist, was born at Cambridge, Aug. 7, 1840. In 1868 he took part in the expedition for exploring the Sinai territory, and made an examination of the names of places, traditions, and antiquities of Arabia Petrea. With the same object in view he explored, in connection with Tyrwhitt Drake, the desert Et-Tih and Moab, in 1869 and 1870. Upon his return to England he was made professor of Arabic at Cambridge in 1871. In 1878 he settled at London, and in 1882 went on a secret mission, at the instance of the English government, into the desert east of the Suez canal. On his second trip through the desert he was killed, in October, 1882. Palmer published an Arabic translation of Thomas Moore's Paradise and the Peri (1865); — Oriental Mysticism (1867); — Report on the Bedawin of Sinai and their Traditions (1870); — The Desert of the Exodus (1871); — A History of the Jewish Nation (1874; Germ. transl. Gotha, 1876); — A Grammar of the Arabic Language (London, 1874); — A Persian-English Dictionary (1876); — Life of Haroun Al Raschid (1878), and for Max Müller's Sacred Books of the East he translated the Koran. See Besant, Life and Achievements of Edward Henry Palmer (London, 1883). (B. P.)

Palmer, Heinrich Julius E., a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Giessen, June 28, 1808. In 1828 he was appointed professor at the gymnasium in Darmstadt, and died in 1865, a doctor of philosophy. He published, Religiöse Vorträge (Mayence, 1833; second series, Darmstadt, 1839):—Lehrbuch der Religion und der Geschichte der christl. Kirche (1849, 2 vols.):—Der christliche Glaube und das christliche Leben (4th ed. 1862):—Die confessionellen Fragen der Gegenwart vom kirchenrechtlichen und theologischen Standpunkte (1846). Palmer, Karl Christian, father of Heinrich Julius, was born at Delitzsch, May 2, 1759. In 1787 he was professor at Leipsic, and died at Giessen, July 17, 1833, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, De Nexu inter Theologiam Moralem et Publicam Religionis Institutio (Leipsic, 1788):—Paulus und Gamaliel, ein Beitrag zur ältesten Christengeschichte (Giessen, 1806):—Predigten über die Evangelien des ganzen Jahres (1817). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 495, 569; ii, 134. (B. P.)

Palmer, Walter C., M.D., a devoted Methodist evangelist, was born Feb. 9, 1804. He was converted in 1817, and among the hallowed associations of the "Old Allen Street Church" in New York, grew up to a beautifully developed Christian character. He practiced medicine for many years in that city, and at length, in connection with his saintly wife, gave up his time to labors for the conversion and sanctification of souls, travelling extensively, and holding meetings everywhere in this country as well as in Great Britain. He died at Ocean Grove, July 29, 1883. See (N. Y.) Christian Advocate, Jan. 3, 1884; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Palpa Version of the Scriptures. Palpa is a dialect spoken in the small states north of Oude, below the Himalayas. A version of the New Test. was commenced at Serampore in 1817, and completed at press about 1832. See Bible of Every Land, p. 122. (B. P.)

Paniel, Karl Friedrich Wilhelm, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Mannheim, April 19, 1802. He studied at Heidelberg, was for some time preacher at Käferthal, near Mannheim, in 1834 at Ziegelhausen, near Heidelberg, in 1839 pastor at Bremen, and died in 1867, doctor of theology. He published, Allgemeine Uebersicht derjenigen Gegenstände, welche das gegenwärtige Bedürfniss der evangelisch-protestantischen Kirche Baden empfiehlt (Mannheim, 1832):—Homiletisches Magazin (Heidelberg, 1836, 2 vols.):—Pragmatische Geschichte der christlichen Beredsamkeit und der Homiletik (Leipsic, 1839-40). Panis Litære ("bread briefs") were letters of recommendation, by which a secular lord ordered a monastery or other institution of charity to receive a certain person for support. The right of issuing such letters was connected with the duty, originally imposed upon such institutions, of showing hospitality to princes and other great lords when they were travelling. During the Middle Ages the emperor of Germany exercised a very extensive right of this kind; but the custom existed also in other countries. Towards the end of the 18th century the princes of the different countries refused to admit such royal briefs in their respective territories, and Frederick the Great openly refused to acknowledge such a brief, and asked to be let alone in future with such imperial orders. See Klüber, Litteratur des deutschen Staatsrechts (Erlangen, 1791), p. 540-543, 548; Häberlin, Pragmatische Geschichte der neuesten kaiserlichen Wappkapitulation (Leipsic, 1792), p. 97; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. Pappelbaum, GEORG GOTTLIEB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stargard, March 16, 1745, and died at Berlin, March 6, 1826, doctor of theology and archdeacon. He published, Untersuchung der rautischen Handschrift des Neuen Testaments (Berlin, 1785):—Codicis Nori Testamenti Raviani in Bibliotheca Regia Berolinensi Publica Aservati Examen, etc. (Leipsic, 1796):—Codicem Græcum Apostolorum Acta et Epistolæ Continens Berolini in Bibliotheca Viri Generosissimi, etc. (Berlin, 1815). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 100, 101; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 973. (B. P.)

Papst, JOHANN GEORG FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Ludwigstadt, Bayreuth, Oct. 21, 1754. He studied at Leipsic and Erlangen, was in 1783 professor of philosophy at the latter place, in 1794 dean at Zirndorf, near Nuremberg, in 1818 doctor of theology, and died June 7, 1821. He wrote, De Authentia Capituli XXI Joannis (Erlangen, 1779):—De Faustia Christiana Religione Initium (1786):—Geschichte der christlichen Kirche (1787):—De Ipsorum Christianorum Culpa in Veratationibus Motis a Romanis (1789-90):—De Apostolica Ecclesia Exemplo Caute Adhibendo (1790):—Commentar über die Geschichte der christl. Kirche nach dem schrock'schen Lehrbuch (1792-1801). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 536, 591; ii, 24; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Para (du Phanjas), FRANÇOIS, a philosophical writer of France, was born in the castle Phanjas, Dauphiné, in 1724. He joined the Jesuits of Embrun, and soon distinguished himself as a philosopher and mathematician. Para died at Paris in 1797. Of his works we mention, Éléments de Métaphysiques Sacrée et Profane (2d ed. Paris, 1779, 3 vols.):—Les Principes de la Saine Philosophie Conciliés avec Ceux de la Religion (1774, 2 vols.):—Institutiones Philosophicæ (published posthumously, in 1800):—Tableau Historique et Philosophique de la Religion (1784). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Paradise. There have been at least four notable attempts in very recent times to discover this long-sought locality; two of them by American, and two by German authors. Their theories have been put forth with the greatest assurance, and in most cases supported by a vast array of learning; but they all seem to have failed to satisfy the judgment of the literary world, or to add anything substantial towards a reasonable solution of the question.

1. The view of Friederich Delitzsch, the eminent Assyriologist, son of the well-known commentator, has already been given under the art. EDEN. Brilliant as are the researches of his work, its conclusions have been rejected by the most careful and competent critics. See Halévy, in the Revue Critique, 1881, p. 457 sq.; Noldecke, in the Zeitschr. d. deutsch. morgenländ. Gesellschaft, 1882, p. 174; Lenormant, in Les Origine de l'His- toire, vol. ii. We cite (from The Nation, N. Y., March 15, 1883) some of the geographical objections:

"Why, if the stream of Eden be the middle Euphrates, is it left unnamed in the narrative, though it is certain that the Hebrews were perfectly familiar both with the middle and the upper course of that river? . . . If the lower Tigris be meant by the Hiddekel, why is this river described as flowing in front of Assyria, which lay above the central Mesopotamian lowland asserted to be Eden? How should a writer, familiar with the whole course of the Tigris, deem its lower part a branch of the Euphrates? . . . Why is Havilah, if the Arabian border-land so well known to the Hebrews be meant, so fully described by its products? Who tells us that the gold, the bdellium, and the shoham of Babylonia were also characteristic of the adjoining Havilah?"

2. A modern traveller, Rev. J. P. Newman, D.D., had previously indicated a somewhat similar position to the above (A Thousand Miles on Horseback, N. Y. 1875, p. 69), namely, at the confluence of the Euphrates and the Tigris; and he was confident that ancient tablets would yet be exhumed fully establishing this location. But the inscriptions recovered by Smith, Rassam, and others in that vicinity do not confirm the theory, and it has thus been brushed aside with the multitude of other conjectures that preceded it.

8. A more startling conclusion is announced by Rev. William F. Warren, D.D., LL.D., president of the Boston University, "that the cradle of the human race, the Eden of primitive tradition, was situated at the North pole, in a country submerged at the time of the deluge" (Paradise Found, Boston, 1885, 8vo). This is the outcome of his researches in early traditions, noticed under our art. COSMOLOGY. The author brings to the support of this view an amazing amount of reading and investigation, which we have not space to criticise in detail. To such as are prepared to accept the mythologies of antiquity as having a historical basis, and to place the Biblical account on a level of authority with them, and at the same time to extend the origin of the human race to a date contemporary with the thermal era of geology, this book, which is written in a fascinating style, and illustrated with a copious reference to the literature of the subject, will prove at least an ingenious and plausible, if not a conclusive, argument; but for those who maintain the literal accuracy of the history in Genesis, and the substantial agreement of the topographical conditions there given with the present conditions of the earth's surface, it cannot appear other than a most preposterous and chimerical hypothesis. The great objection which we see in it is the setting aside as an unintelligible narrative the only professed and historic description which we possess of the Garden of Eden, and then resorting to the vague and conflicting testimony of paganism, combined with the scanty and problematical indications of cosmological science, for an identification that is at last claimed as decisive and final. If the Biblical passage (Gen. ii, 10-14), with its explicit items, fails to point out the true spot, we may as well give up the attempt as hopeless. To us that account seems sufficiently clear and consistent; and we believe that explorations in the region thus designated will vindicate the accuracy of the Scripture language beyond any reasonable doubt. It is a question of exegesis and geography, not of mythological comparison.

4. The last formal production in this line is an attempt to show that Paradise was situated about sixty-five miles south-east of Damascus, in a shallow alluvial basin, amid the wild basaltic crags of the desolate volcanic region known as the Hauran (Die Auflösung der Paradies-frage, by Moritz Engel, Leipzig, 1885, 8vo). An elaborate effort is made to identify the names and circumstances; but the agreement is most fanciful and indistinct. Eden is the present Ruhbe, an Arabic term for a rich patch of soil; the four rivers are the wadies which pour down the surrounding slopes in the rainy season; while the most violent processes of rationalism are resorted to for the purpose of disposing of the associated names and features of the narrative: e.g. the cherubim are volcanoes of the Hauran; Cain is only a more specific title for Adam; Cain's sons and Lamech's wives are mountain-peaks adjacent, etc. It would seem as if the ne plus ultra of absurdity has now been reached in the vagaries on this subject, and it is time to return to sober examination of the given data, if any success is to be achieved in the exposition.

Parah. The probable site is Khurbet Farah, laid down on the Ordnance Map at five and a half miles north-east of Jerusalem, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (iii, 209) as "heaps of stones only."

Parasurama is the sixth avatar, or incarnation of Vishnu, in which he appears as Rama, the son of Jamadagni, armed with a parasu, or axe. Arjuna, king of the Haihayas, had obtained, as a reward for his pious deeds, a thousand arms and sovereignty over all the earth. The gods, alarmed at his power, applied to Vishnu, who decided to be born as a son of Jamadagni, in order that he might slay him. Jamadagni was a pious sage, who had married Renuka, a princess, and had obtained by her five sons, the last of whom was Rama, or Vishnu incarnate. On a certain occasion Arjuna came to the hermitage of Jamadagni, and was there hospitably received by the saint, who could treat him and his followers sumptuously, as he possessed a fabulous cow of plenty, that not only supplied him with the milk and butter required for his sacrificial offerings, but with everything else he wished for. Pleased with the precious qualities of this cow, and disregarding the kind treatment he had received, Arjuna carried off with him the cow and her calf. When Rama, who was absent at this time, returned to the hermitage, he took up his axe (or his bow) and slew Arjuna and his army. The sons of Arjuna, to avenge their father's death, attacked the hermitage and succeeded in killing Jamadagni. Thereupon Rama made a vow to extirpate the whole Kshattriya, or military race, and, not satisfied with destroying the sons of Arjuna, he killed every Kshattriya whom he met afterwards. It is said that "he cleared thrice seven times the earth" (i.e. slew as many generations) "and filled with their blood the five large lakes of Samantapanchaka, from which he offered libations to the race of Bhriyu." He then performed a solemn sacrifice, and distributed the land and great riches among the ministering priests. There can be little doubt that the legend is in essence historical, recording a great struggle in primeval times between Brahmins and Kshattriyas, of which we have the parallel in the history of Vasishtha and Viswamitra (q.v.).

Pareau, LOUIS GERLACH, a noted Dutch theologian, son of John Henry, was born at Deventer, Aug. 10, 1800. He studied at Utrecht, and at the age of twenty took the degree of doctor of theology on presenting Commentaria Critica ad 1 Cor. xiii. On the same day (Sept. 23, 1820) he was also made doctor of philosophy "honoris causa." After ministering for some time at Nederlangbroek and Voorburg, he was made professor of moral theology at Groningen in 1831. He opened his lectures with an address, De Animo non Minus Theologorum quam Ingenio Academicæ Institutione Informando. Pareau was twice rector of the university (in 1843 and 1858), and died Oct. 27, 1866. He is the author of, Initia Institutionis Christianæ Moralæ (Groningen, 1842):—Dogmatica et Apologetica Christiana (1845):—in connection with Hofstede de Groot, Hermeneutica Codicis Sacri (1846):—Encyclopædia Theologi Christiani (1851), also in connection with Hofstede de Groot. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B.P.)

Parizek, ALEXIUS VINCENTZ, a Roman Catholic theologian of Austria, was born at Prague, Nov. 10, 1748. In 1765 he joined the Dominicans, and received holy orders in 1771. For a time tutor at the grammar-school in Prague, he went, in 1783, to Klattau, Bohemia, as director of the German grammar-school. In 1786

he was made episcopal notary at Budweis, in 1802 doctor of theology, in 1811 dean of the theological faculty at Prague, and died April 15, 1822. He is the author of a number of ascetical works, for which see Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 258, 350. (B. P.)

Park, Calvin, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Northbridge, Mass., Sept. 11, 1774. He graduated from Brown University in 1797, three years after was appointed tutor in the university, and in 1804 was elected professor of languages. From 1811 to 1825 he was professor of moral philosophy and metaphysics. In 1800 he was licensed to preach, in 1815 ordained an evangelist, and from 1826 to 1840 was pastor of the Evangelical Congregational Church at Stoughton. He died there, Jan. 5, 1847. His literary taste was exquisite, and he instinctively perceived the beauties and defects of a literary performance. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 460.

Park, Roswell, D.D., an Episcopal minister and educator, was born at Lebanon, Conn., Oct. 1, 1807. He was educated at Union College, and at West Point Military Academy, where he graduated in 1831. He then served as a lieutenant of engineers until September, 1836, when he accepted the chair of natural philosophy and chemistry in the University of Pennsylvania, a position which he held until 1842. He took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1843, and taught and preached in Pomfret, Conn., from 1846 to 1852. He became president of Racine College in the latter year, and chancellor in 1859. He founded a school in Chicago in 1863, and died there, July 16, 1869. Dr. Park published, Selections of Poems (1836):—A Sketch of the History and Topography of West Point, etc. (1840):—Panology (1841):—Hand-book for American Travellers in Europe (1853). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Parker, Charles Carroll, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Underhill, Vt., Sept. 26, 1814. He graduated from the University of Vermont in 1841; studied one year at the Union Theological Seminary, N. Y.; taught at Burlington, Vt., one year; was a Congregational pastor at Tinnmouth from 1848 to 1854; thereafter served at Waterbury until 1867; at Boston Centre, Me., until 1868; at Goshen until 1871, and finally, as a Presbyterian minister, at Parsippany, N. J., until his death, Feb. 15, 1880.

Parker, Joel, D.D., a Presbyterian divine, was born at Bethel, Vt., Aug. 27, 1799. He graduated from Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1824; was ordained in 1826, and settled at Rochester, where he remained until 1830; was pastor of Dey Street Church, New York city, from 1830 to 1833; at New Orleans from 1833 to 1838, and at the Broadway Tabernacle, New York city, from 1838 to 1840. He was chosen president and professor of sacred rhetoric in the Union Theological Seminary in the latter year, and retained the position two years. During the next ten years he served the Clinton Street Church, Philadelphia. He became pastor of the Bleecker Street Church, New York city, in 1852, and of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church in 1854. He died in New York city, May 2, 1873. Dr. Parker was for some time associate editor of the Presbyterian Quarterly, and published, among other works, Lectures on Universalism (Rochester, 1829):—Morsels for a Young Student (about 1832):—Reasonings of a Pastor with the Young of his Flock:—Sermons on Various Subjects (1852). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Parker, John, an Irish prelate, was born in Dublin, and was made a petty canon of St. Patrick's in 1642. He was subsequently prebendary of St. Michan's and dean of Killala, whereupon he took his degree of bachelor of divinity in Trinity College, Dublin. He was chaplain to the marquis (afterwards duke) of Ormond. In 1649 he was cast into prison by Cromwell, on suspicion of having been employed as a spy by the marquis, who was then laboring to restore Dublin to the king. On his release he was promoted to the bishopric of Elphin, whence he was translated, in 1667, to Tuam, and in 1678 to the archdiocese of Dublin. With his sees he held in commendam the rectory of Gallowne, the treasurer'ship of St. Patrick's, Dublin, and the prebend of Desertmore, in the church of St. Finbar, in the diocese of Cork. He died Dec. 28, 1681. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 283.

Parker, Linus, D.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Rome, N. Y., April 23, 1829. He went to New Orleans in his sixteenth year, at once joined the Poydras Sunday-school, and became a dry-goods clerk. He volunteered in the Mexican war, and soon after his return received license to preach, and in 1849 entered the Louisiana Conference, in which he filled the most important appointments, including the presiding eldership (1870), the editorship of the New Orleans Christian Advocate (in connection with his ministerial labors), and membership in the General Conference, until his election as bishop in 1882. He died in this latter work, March 5, 1885. He was a most faithful pastor, a loving friend, and a graceful writer. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1885, p. 159; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Parmelee, Simeon, D.D., a centenarian Congregational minister, was born at West Stockbridge, Mass., Jan. 16, 1782. He was a student of Middlebury College for a few months; then studied theology with Rev. Lemuel Haynes, of West Rutland, Vt. He was ordained pastor of the Church at Westford, Aug. 31, 1808, and was dismissed, Aug. 8, 1837. From Nov. 9 of that year to April 26, 1843, he was pastor in Williston. He served for a time as acting-pastor at Underhill, and was installed there Sept. 11, 1844, and dismissed Nov. 9, 1854. From 1852 to 1854 he was acting-pastor at Milton; from 1854 to 1857 at Tinnmouth; from 1857 to 1863 at Underhill; from 1863 to 1866 at Swanton. With the exception of a short time, during 1868 and 1869, when he again supplied Westford, he resided after 1866, without charge, at Oswego, N. Y. He died there, Feb. 10, 1882. See Cong. Year-book, 1883, p. 27.

Parsons, John, D.D., an English prelate, was born at Oxford, July 6, 1761. He graduated from Wadham College; was chosen a fellow of Balliol; and appointed to the college livings of All-Saints and St. Leonard's, in Colchester. He was recalled to Oxford by his election to the mastership of Balliol, Nov. 14, 1798; received the office of vice-chancellor in 1807; was promoted to the deanery of Bristol in 1810; instituted to the vicarage of Weare, Somersetshire, in 1812; and consecrated bishop of Peterborough in 1813. He died March 12, 1819. Bishop Parsons was an humble Christian, a ripe scholar, an able preacher, and a wise administrator. See The (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, June, 1819, p. 384; November, p. 669.

Parsons, Justin Wright, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Westhampton, Mass., in 1824. He graduated from Williams College in 1845, and from Union Theological Seminary in 1848; was ordained by the New York Presbytery, Dec. 26, 1849, and immediately thereafter sailed for Thessalonica, Greece. After laboring at this post until 1854, he was transferred to Smyrna, Asia Minor, and in 1857 to Baghlehijeh, Turkey, thence again in 1861 to Nicomedia, and then, after an absence in the foreign field for twenty years, he returned to his native land on a short visit for the benefit of his health. Having again entered upon his work, in July, 1880, he was making a missionary tour on the mountains east of the sea of Marmora, accompanied by his servant, when they encamped for the night; the next morning they were found by the roadside murdered by a band of Zureks. See N. Y. Observer, Aug. 12, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Parsons, Levi, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Northampton, Mass., Aug. 20, 1779; graduated from Williams College in 1801; subsequently spent two years as tutor, and trained for the ministry under Dr. Hyde of Massachusetts. He was licensed in 1807, and the same year became pastor of the Church in Marcellus, N. Y., where he remained twenty-six years. He then supplied Tully for one year, and Otisco for another; next went to his former charge in Marcellus, held it six years longer, and then spent the remainder of his ministry with the Third Church in Marcellus, and at Borodino. He died Nov. 20, 1864. See Mears, Presbyterianism in Central New York, p. 628.

Pasch, Georg, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 23, 1661, at Dantzig. He studied at Rostock and Wittenberg, was in 1689 professor at Kiel, and died Sept. 30, 1707. He wrote, Diss. de Rechabitis ex Jerem. xxxv, an essay prepared while yet at the gymnasium (Dantzig, 1681):—De Operationibus Demonum (Wittenberg, 1684):—Diss. Physici de Pluralitate Mundorum contra Cartesianos (eod.):—Utrum Pontificii Cogantur Concedere Lutheranos in Religione sua Suleurii? (Kiel, 1689):—De Philosophia Characteristica et Paranetica (1705):—De Variis Modis Moralium Tradendi Liber (1707). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Pasch, Johann, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Hamburg in 1709, is the author of, De Eclipsi Solis in Die Passionis Christi:—De Numero Beati Apoclytica:—De Tikkun Sopherim:—De Angelorum Lingua Sine Lingua:—De Signo Cruci:—De Schemhamphorash:—De Voce Hebraica Selah:—De Serpente Seducere:—De Morte Immortalium Mortis Christi Testium Judaei et Gentilis:—De Johanne Baptista. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Paterson, James, D.D., a Scotch Baptist minister, was born at Dumbarton, on the Clyde, in 1801. His early education was obtained at the burgh school of his native town; and he began life as a school-teacher. He entered the University of Glasgow with the idea of becoming a physician, but never took his degree. During his course there he labored as an evangelist with the Glasgow City Mission. He was invited by Dr. Marshman to become a missionary to Serampore, but declined the invitation. In 1829 he hired a small room in Glasgow, fitted it up with forms, and began preaching to a congregation of very poor persons. Here a Church was organized, and removals were made from time to time to better quarters. In 1850 he undertook the editorship of the Scottish Temperance Review, and subsequently of the Scottish Review. He was one of the originators (in 1846) of the Glasgow Commercial College, and long one of the instructors. He died Jan. 29, 1880. See (Lond.) Bapt. Hand-book, 1881, p. 334.

Paterson, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was first minister at Foveran, and next at Aberdeen. He was advanced to the see of Ross, Jan. 18, 1662, where he remained until his death in 1679. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 203.

Paterson, John (2), a Scotch prelate, was first minister at Ellon, Aberdeenshire, and afterwards at the Tron Church, and dean of the city of Edinburgh. He was preferred by the interest of the duke of Lauderdale to the see of Galloway, Oct. 23, 1674, where he continued until March 29, 1679, when he was translated to Edinburgh. In 1687 he was put into the see of Glasgow, where he continued until the revolution in 1688. He died at Edinburgh, Dec. 8, 1708. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 64, 270, 282.

Paton, James, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of Dunkeld in February, 1571. He was deprived in 1575, and died July 20, 1596. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 96.

Patrizi, Francis Xavier, a Jesuit, who died at Rome, April 23, 1881, professor of exegesis at the Collegium Romanum, is the author of, De Interpretatione Scripturarum Sacrarum (1844, 2 vols.):—De Evangelio (1853, 2 vols.):—Commentarius in Evangelium Joannis (1857):—Comment. in Evangelium Marci (1862). Patten, David, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Boston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1810. He graduated at the high-school there, went thence to Wilbraham Academy, where he was converted in his eighteenth year, and afterwards to Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., where he graduated in 1834. In 1832 he was licensed to preach, and employed as supply at Hartford, and also supplied Power Street Church, Providence, R. I., during his last college year. On completing his course at Wesleyan he was at once called to the principality of Wilbraham, and in 1835 entered the New England Conference. He served as principal at Wilbraham seven years, then entered the pastoral office, and, receiving a transfer to the Providence Conference, was sent in turn to Chestnut Street, Boston; Nantucket; Elm Street, Bedford; Fall River, and Mathewson Street, Providence, serving two years in each place, and one year to Warren. In 1852 he was appointed presiding elder of Providence District, which office he filled until his election, in 1854, to the professorship of theology in the Biblical Institute at Concord, N. H. By unceasing efforts he secured an enlarged endowment for the institute, its removal to Boston, its establishment on an assured financial basis as a department of Boston University, and retained his position in its chair of homiletics and pastoral theology until 1873. He then, on account of impaired health, relinquished his office and became agent of the university and secretary of the board of trustees, devoting to its interests his unflinching love and unflagging zeal until his death, March 26, 1879. The estimate placed upon Dr. Patten's character and worth by his conference is made manifest by his three elections to the General Conference in 1848, 1852, and 1864. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 80; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Patten, William, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Halifax, Mass., about 1760, and graduated from Dartmouth College in 1780. He was ordained pastor of the Second Church at Newport, R. I., May 24, 1786, dismissed April 15, 1833, and died in 1839. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 592.

Patterson, Andrew Oliphant, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Fayette County, Pa., July 1, 1794. He graduated from Washington College in 1814, spent one year in theological study at Princeton, and was ordained by the Presbytery of Redstone, April 18, 1821; preached at Mount Pleasant and Swickley churches until 1834, was agent for the Domestic Board of Missions until 1836, preached at Beaver Church from 1837 to 1839, and at New Lisbon from 1840 to 1851; then became stated supply at Bethel, O., for one year, and settled as pastor from 1853 to 1857. He supplied College Corner for a short time, and died at Oxford, O., Dec. 14, 1868. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 28.

Pattison, Dorothy Wyndlow (usually called Sister Dora), an English philanthropist, was born at Hauxwell, Yorkshire, Jan. 16, 1832, being the daughter of the rector there. In 1864 she joined the "Sisterhood of Good Samaritans," a religious order recognised by the Church of England, and the next year became a nurse in the Cottage Hospital at Walsale, where she devoted herself in the most exemplary manner and with rare skill to the care of the sick, both in body and soul, until, exhausted in strength, she retired in 1876, and died Dec. 24, 1878. See her Biography, by Margaret Lonsdale (London and Boston, 1880).

Pattison, Mark, D.D., an English clergyman, was born at Hornby, Yorkshire, in 1813, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford. He became a fellow of Lincoln College in 1840 and rector in 1861. He died July 31, 1884, leaving numerous essays and reviews on literary and educational subjects. See Men of the Time, s. v.

Patton, William, D.D., a Congregational and subsequently a Presbyterian minister, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 23, 1798. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1818, attended Princeton Theological Seminary from 1819 to 1820, and in the latter year (June 8) was ordained an evangelist in Charlotte, Vt. Having gathered a Presbyterian congregation in New York city, named the Central Presbyterian Church, he was installed pastor May 7, 1822, and remained in charge until Sept. 15, 1834. The three years following he was secretary of the Presbyterian Education Society. From October, 1837, to October, 1847, he was pastor of the Spring Street Church, New York city, and from 1848 to 1852 was pastor of the Hammond Street Congregational Church. During the next ten years he resided in New York without charge; then removed to New Haven, Conn., where, in 1863, he was acting-pastor of the College Street Church. Subsequently he resided at New Haven without charge, until his death, Sept. 9, 1879. From 1864 Dr. Patton was one of the vice-presidents of the American Missionary Association. Besides important articles in various periodicals, he published, in 1833, a revised and enlarged edition of The Cottage Bible, in two volumes. The same year he published The Village Testament, and in 1859 the same work, revised, under the title of The Cottage Testament. His other works are, The Christian Psalmist (1836):—The Laws of Fermentation, etc. (1871):—The Judgment of Jerusalem (1877):—Jesus of Nazareth (1878):—Bible Principles Illustrated by Bible Characters (1879). He also issued editions of Edwards on Revivals and Finney on Revivals, besides a number of pamphlets. He was an ardent advocate of temperance and a powerful lecturer on that subject. He made fourteen voyages to Europe, at first for health, and afterwards as a delegate to various religious bodies. Dr. Patton was a clear, forcible, and copious writer, a bold and impressive speaker, valiant for the truth, an humble and devout Christian. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1880, p. 8; Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 25; Filial Tribute, by Dr. William W. Patton (Washington, 1880).

Paul, John de St., an Irish prelate, was prebendary of Donnington, in the cathedral of York, and canon of Dublin, when he was advanced to the archbishopric of Dublin, Sept. 12, 1350. In 1360 he was one of the three whom the king appointed to explore for such mines of gold and silver as were thought to be abundant in various parts of Ireland. In 1361 he had an especial writ of summons to a great council to be held in Dublin, on which occasion he is said to have labored with his usual good sense and judgment to effect a general amnesty and pardon of such of the Irish and English as were then opposed to the government. He died Sept. 9, 1362. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 134.

Pauli, Carl Wilhelm, a German jurist, was born at Lübeck, Dec. 18, 1792. He studied jurisprudence at Göttingen and Tübingen, and occupied the highest positions in his profession at his native place, where he died, March 18, 1879. For a number of years he belonged to the officers of his Church, which he served everywhere, and for which he undertook the publication of a new hymn-book in 1832. Having thus become interested in hymnology, he continued his studies, and published as their result, Geschichte der lübeckischen Gesangbücher und Beurtheilung des Gegentheiligen (Lübeck, 1875). He was a warm friend of the mission among the heathens, and for a number of years stood at the head of the missionary society at Lübeck. To this period belong his Der lübeckische Verein zur Beförderung der evangelischen Mission unter den Heiden im Jahre 1856 (ibid. 1857) and Nothgedrungene Erklärung in Sachen des lübeckischen Vereins (ibid. 1857). His essay, Peter Heyling, der erste deutsche Missionär, in Warneck's Allgem. Missions-Zeitschrift (May, 1876), is a valuable contribution to the history of missions and the Church. (B. P.)

Pauli, Christian William Henry, a minister of the Church of England, was born of Hebrew parentage, at Breslau, Silesia, Aug. 11, 1800. He received a strict Jewish education, and at the age of twenty-four, while yet in the synagogue, published a volume of sermons under the title Predigten für fromme Israeliten (Halle, 1824, by Hirsch Prinz, as his Jewish name originally was). When twenty-five years of age he embraced Christianity at Minden; on coming to England was for some time a student at Cambridge, and while there was invited to come to Oxford, where he was appointed lecturer in Hebrew. This post he held for thirteen years, and published, in 1839, his Analecta Hebraica. In 1840 he was ordained, and sent to Berlin by the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. In 1843 he was stationed at Amsterdam, but resigned his position in 1874. He then retired to Luton, Bedfordshire, England, and died May 4, 1877. He also published, The Great Mystery; or, How can Three be One? and A Translation of the Chaldee Paraphrase of Isaiah (Lond. 1871). (B. P.)

Pauli, Georg Jacob, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Brunswick, July 24, 1722. He studied at Halle, was in 1746 director of the Reformed gymnasium, in 1750 cathedral preacher, in 1751 preacher at Berlin, in 1774 again at Halle, and died Feb. 23, 1795. He published, De Occasionibus Psalmi xxxiv Conscribendi (Halle, 1747):—De Conciliando Loca Marc. xv, 25 et Joh. xiz, 14 (1748):—De Auctoribus Classicis in Christianorum Scholis Caute Tractandis (1749):—Entwurf einer katechetischen und populären Theologie (2d ed. 1785):—Heidelbergerischer Katechismus (1781). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Paulinians is a name sometimes applied by the Arians to the ancient Christians, from Paulinus, bishop of Antioch.

Paumier, Louis Daniel, a Protestant theologian of France, was born at Autretot, Feb. 23, 1789. He studied at Lausanne, and in 1813 accepted a call to a parish in the neighborhood of Bolbec. In 1817 he was called to Rouen, where he spent the remainder of his life. Besides his ministerial functions, he instructed in a parochial school, which he had founded in 1820, organized different Christian societies, and succeeded in opening a Protestant hospital. Paumier died Sept. 15, 1865, highly honored by both Protestants and Roman Catholics. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Pawson, John, a prominent minister in early Methodism, was born at Thorner, near Leeds, Nov. 12, 1787. He was early convicted under Methodist preaching, and after a long struggle was joyfully brought into the light. He preached his first sermon in 1761, in 1762 Wesley sent him to York, and from that time to Feb. 3, 1806, when he preached his last sermon at Wakefield, he exercised his ministry with marked diligence, ability, and success. He was frequently appointed to the large cities, and in 1785 Wesley ordained him, with Hanby and Taylor, for Scotland, in which country, owing to the Scottish character, creed, and mode of worship, Pawson was convinced Methodism would never make much headway. Triumphantly his busy life was closed at Wakefield, March 19, 1806. Twice Pawson was elected president of the conference (1793 and 1801). "During the trials which followed Wesley's death, he was one of the pillars of the shaken structure of Methodism." He wrote in favor of giving the sacraments to the societies in 1792, commended Kilham's pamphlet on the same subject, proposed the solution of the difficulties at the conference in London in the same year, published a revised and enlarged copy of the Large Minutes (1797), and An Affectionate Address to the Junior Preachers (1798). He believed Methodist government was not sufficiently articulated, favored the appointment of bishops, and the division of England into four Methodist dioceses, and introduced services in the Established Church hours. He was a man of sound judgment, piety, and zeal, and Adam Clarke published a worthy eulogy of him in the Methodist Magazine (Lond. 1807). See Jackson, Early Meth. Preachers, iv, 1 sq.; Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 202 (see Index); Smith, Hist. of Methodism, li (see Index); Crowther, Portraiture of Methodism, 2d ed., p. 382 sq.

Pay, STEPHEN DE, a Scotch prelate, was prior of the abbey of St. Andrews, and in 1383 was elected bishop of the same. But he was taken prisoner by the English at sea, on his way to Rome, and died in March, 1385. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 26.

Payne, George, LL.D., an English Congregational minister, was the son of a Baptist minister at Walgrave, Northamptonshire, and at a very early age gave indications of superior intelligence. He was educated in Hoxton College and the University of Glasgow. In 1807 he became assistant to the Rev. Edwar Parsons, of Leeds, and in the following year to the Rev. George Lambert, of Hull. In 1812 he removed to Edinburgh as pastor of Albany Street Chapel, where he labored eleven years. In 1824 he was called to the theological chair in Lancashire College, Blackburn. After five years in that capacity he became president and theological professor of the Western College, Exeter, where he remained until his death, June 19, 1848, at the age of sixty-seven. He published, Divine Sovereignty.—Original Sin (London Congregational Lectures for 1844).—Elements of Mental and Moral Science.—Elements of Language.—and a tractate on Congregationalism. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1848, p. 234; (Lond.) Evang. Mag. 1848, p. 393, 415.

Payne, John, D.D., a missionary bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was consecrated in St. Paul's Church, Alexandria, Va., July 11, 1851, as bishop of Western Africa. He resigned his jurisdiction in October, 1871, and returned to the United States, fixing his residence at Oak Grove, Va., where he continued to reside until his death, Oct. 23, 1874, aged sixty years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

Payson, CHARLES HENRY, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Leominster, Mass., Sept. 28, 1831. He graduated at Amherst College in 1852, and from the Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., in 1857; was ordained pastor of the mission chapel connected with the Madison Square Chapel in 1860, where, with the exception of a year and a half spent at Berlin and Heidelberg, he labored uninterruptedly with great zeal and success until his death, Jan. 24, 1877.

Peck, JESSE TRUESDELL, D.D., LL.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was born at Middlefield, Otsego Co., N. Y., April 4, 1811. He was converted when sixteen years old, immediately united with the Church, and commenced a course of study preparatory to the ministry. After two years he was licensed as a local preacher, and in 1832 was admitted into the Oneida Conference, and sent to Dryden Circuit. The next year he was appointed to Newark, and successively to Skaneateles and Potsdam, when he became principal of Gouverneur High School, and remained four years. In 1841 he was elected principal of Troy Conference Academy, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a position which he retained till 1848. In 1849 he was chosen president of Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pa.; in 1852 he became senior preacher of the Foundry Church in Washington, D. C.; in 1854 secretary of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church; in 1856 he was appointed pastor of Greene Street Church, N. Y. He was next stationed at Powell Street, San Francisco; in 1860 was made presiding elder of San Francisco District. At the close of that year he became pastor in Sacramento City, and after two years was stationed at Santa Clara. From 1864 to 1865 he was pastor of Howard Street Church, San Francisco, and was for several years president of the board of trustees of the University of the Pacific, also president of the California State Bible Society. In 1866 he was appointed to Peekskill, N. Y.; in 1867 to Hudson Street, Albany, where he remained three years, and was then stationed at Centenary Church, Syracuse. In 1872 he was elected bishop, and at once entered upon the duties of that office with great earnestness and intensity of interest, also striving to advance the interests of Christianity, wherever his influence was felt. He was a delegate to the Methodist Ecumenical Conference, held in London in 1881, where he distinguished himself by his able and dignified manner of presiding. He died at Syracuse, May 17, 1883. Bishop Peck's religious experience was especially rich and full, and his life most consistent and irreproachable. He was devoted to Methodism, but his broad, catholic spirit led him to regard Christians of all denominations as brothers in Christ. His sermons were clear and strong; as a pastor he was loving and faithful; and as a bishop, untiring in his energy till attacked by disease, which rendered further labor impossible. He was author of, The Central Idea of Christianity.—The True Woman.—What must I Do to be Saved?.—and The History of the Great Republic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1883, p. 76; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Pecthelmus, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Galloway about 730. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 271.

other bishops on the breast, over the chasuble, at mass. It is sometimes called a rationale or rational. Its use appears to have been common during the Middle Ages, for several examples occur on monumental effigies, but since the 14th century it seems to have been disused. It was placed round the neck, and hung on the breast, either by a chain of gold or by three or more silver-gilt pearl-headed pins.

Peebles, JOHN, a Scotch prelate, after enjoying several praiseworthy positions, was preferred to the archdeaconry of St. Andrews, constituted lord chancellor in 1377, and in the same year became bishop of Dunkeld. He died in 1396. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 85.

Peguese Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. The Peguese is still spoken in Pegu, a country which formerly included all the sea-coast and the mouths of the rivers of the Burman empire, but the Burmese portion of which, comprising by far the greater part of its extent, is now a province of the British Indian empire. The Peguese language is supposed to be more ancient than the Burmese, although the alphabet is the same, except two additional consonants. A translation of the New Test. was printed at Maulmein in 1847. This is the only part of the Bible now extant. See Bible of Every Land, p. 11 sq. (B. P.)

Peip, ALBERT, a Christian philosophical writer of Germany, who was born at Zirke, Posen, in 1830, and died Sept. 29, 1875, professor of philosophy at Göttingen, is the author of, Christus und die Kunst (Berlin, 1853):—Die Wissenschaft und das geschichtliche Christenthum (ed.) :—Beweis des Christenthums (1856):—Christosophie (1858):—Philosophie und innere Mission (Dresden, 1860):—Jacob Böhme (Leipzig, ed.) :—Die Kirchen- und Staats-Parteien (1861):—Jacob Böhme, in seiner Stellung zur Kirche (Hamburg, 1862):—Zum Beweis des Glaubens (Gütersloh, 1867):—Das Kreuz und die Weltweisheit (Hanover, 1869):—Religionsphilosophie (published by Theodore Hoppe from Peip's academical lectures, 1879). Pelham, GEORGE, D.C.L., an English prelate, youngest son of the earl of Chichester, was born Oct. 13, 1766. He studied at Clare Hall, University of Cambridge; was appointed prebend of Chichester Cathedral in 1790, bishop of Bristol in 1803, translated to Exeter in 1807, and to the bishopric of Lincoln in 1820. He was also clerk of the closet to the king and canon residentiary of Chichester. He died in May, 1827. Bishop Pelham published, Charge to the Clergy of the Diocese of Bristol (1804, 4to):—Sermon at St. Paul's (1805, 4to). See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, March, 1827, p. 191; (N. Penny, JOSEPH, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the University of Glasgow. Two years after he came to America he taught in the academy at Flushing, L. I. In 1821 he took charge of the First Church, Rochester, N. Y.; in 1832 of that at Northampton, Mass., and in 1835 became president of Hamilton College. After leaving that institution, in 1839, he removed to Grand Rapids, Mich., and from there to Pontiac, where his health failed, and he returned to Rochester. He died there, March 20, 1860. Dr. Penny was a man of superior abilities and fine education. In 1829 he visited his native land and organized temperance societies there. See Mears, Presbyterianism in Central New York, p. 319, 630.

Pepys, HENRY, D.D., an Anglican prelate, the son of Sir William Weller Pepys, was born April 18, 1768. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, taking the degree of B.A. in 1804 and M.A. in 1807; became rector of Morton, Essex, in 1822, also of Westmill, Hertfordshire, in 1827, and prebendary of Wells in 1836. In 1840 he was consecrated bishop of Sodor and Man, and was translated to the see of Worcester in 1841. He died at Hartleybury Castle, Worcestershire, Nov. 13, 1860. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1861, p. 706.

Perché, NAPOLEON JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Angers, France, Jan. 10, 1805. He was educated for the Church, and was ordained a priest Sept. 19, 1829. In 1837, when bishop Flaget went to Europe in the interests of his diocese, father Perché offered his services as a missionary, which were accepted, and on his arrival in America he began his labors in Kentucky and founded a church in Portland. In 1842 he was transferred to New Orleans and appointed chaplain of the Ursuline convent, which office he held until April, 1870. Father Perché founded at New Orleans the Propagateur Catholique, of which he was principal editor. On May 1, 1870, he was consecrated bishop coadjutor of New Orleans, and on the death of Odin, May 25, 1870, he became the archbishop of the diocese. He died there, Dec. 27, 1883. He was a man of great energy, far-seeing judgment, and great eloquence, and his many charitable acts endeared him to the people, among whom he labored with zeal and fidelity.

Percy, HUGH, D.D., an Anglican prelate, was born in London, Jan. 19, 1784, being a son of the first earl of Beverley. He was consecrated bishop of Rochester in June, 1827, and was transferred to the see of Carlisle in the following September. He was also chancellor of Salisbury and prebendary of St. Paul's. He died suddenly at Rose Castle, near Carlisle, Feb. 12, 1856. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1856, p. 145.

Persea. See PEREA.

Perfect, THE, an appellation frequently applied in the early Christian Church to those who had been baptized, and thereby been admitted to the full privileges of Christians, having a right to partake of the Lord's Supper.

Pericōpē (περικοπή) is the title of those sections of Holy Scripture which were appointed to be read in the services of the Church. The synagogue, with its parashioth (q. v.) and hapharas (q. v.), no doubt furnished the pattern which in the different sections of the Church took a different shape. Little of this process has been recorded: it belongs to what Basil calls the ἀγραφῆς ἐκκλησίας μυστήρια.

The oldest documents which speak of reading the Scriptures in the church belong to the Greek Church, and they are the more important since the Greek Church is the mother of all the Oriental churches, and thus the origin, not only of their liturgies, but also of their lectionaries. The sources at our disposal show the remarkable wealth of the Greek Church in this respect; for not only do the Sundays, the prominent days of Christ's history, and the many saints' days, have their regular gospel and epistolary lessons, but such are also assigned to every day in the week. Thus, for the period between Easter and Pentecost, as Chrysostom already states, the Acts and the gospel of John were read continuously. For the rest of the Church year, three separate and independent series of lessons are employed—one series for the Sundays, beginning with the second after Pentecost; one series for the Sabbaths, beginning in the Pentecost week; and one series for the five weekdays between the Sunday and Sabbath. All three series select both from gospels and epistles, following the order of the books and chapters in the New Test. History explains this strange phenomenon. It is very evident that the Greek Church at first introduced lessons for the Sundays, later for the Sabbaths, and still later for the weekdays.

Next in importance is the Armenian system, which has only become known by professor Petermann's translation from the Armenian Church Almanac, published at Venice in 1782, and in German translation found in Alt's Kirchenjahr, ii, 136, 225. Scripture-reading is a most important part of the Armenian church-service—more so than in the Greek Church, and lessons from both the Old and New Tests, are employed. Among the Syrians we find for the most part the Greek reading-system, while the Nestorian system of Bible-lessons contains for the first time a series of lectiones selectæ, which in some respects deserves to be placed at the side of the Romish pericope system.

The documents with reference to the reading-system of the Jacobite Christians are quite ample; a list of the New-Test. pericopes of the Jacobites is found in the edition of the Syriac New Test. published by Widmanstadt (Vienna, 1855). The Maronites have virtually the same plan of Scripture-reading as the Jacobites. While the lectionary plan adopted by the Alexandrian churches was only a branch of the Greek, that of the Coptic churches was entirely distinct, and is a portion of the Coptic liturgy of St. Basilus. A Latin translation is found in Renaudot's Collection, i, 137 sq., from which it is evident that, in every chief service, the Copts read from four different parts of the New Test. Virtually identical with the Coptic is the Ethiopic system. See Renaudot, i, 499, 507 sq.

A proper transition from the eastern to the western systems would be the North-African lectionaries, if we were in possession of such. With the exception of the Mozarabic, prevalent among the African and Spanish Christians in the 13th century, no list has been preserved.

In the Occidental Church we have, in reference to the public reading of Scriptures, a phenomenon similar to that observed in the Church of the East. As, here, the Byzantine system was most predominant, so, in the West, the Roman system gradually supplanted all the rest. A difference between the two consists in this, that the non-Byzantine systems of the East were mostly followed by bodies that stood opposed to the Byzantine Church, while the non-Roman system found a home in bodies on doctrinal and fraternal footing with the Roman Church.

To the reading-systems no more extant belongs the Capuan. Of its existence we have ample proof in the Cod. Fuldensis, corrected in the year 545 by bishop Victor, himself of Capua. That the Christians of Gaul once pursued a peculiar plan in the public reading of the Scriptures is manifest from a letter of the missionary Augustine to Gregory the Great. Besides, there are other scattered evidences from Hilary (354), Sidonius (472), Salvianus (440). See Mabillon, De Liturg. Gallicana, p. 29 sq. Then we have a capitular of Charlemagne, abolishing the Gallic liturgy in favor of the Romish. Under the title, Missæ Ambrosiana, the very ancient liturgy and reading-system of the Milan Church is still preserved. Its original form cannot be definitely determined, as the different printed texts do not agree among themselves. Concerning the Mozarabic liturgy, comp. the art. s. v. Of the Old British and Irish systems not a single trace remains, the Roman having entirely supplanted them. The Roman system of Scriptural reading, like the whole Roman liturgy, has passed through three stages—that of its origin and development, down to the time of the Carolinians, that of supremacy in the Middle Ages, and that of fixed and formal codification by the Council of Trent.

The oldest traces of it are found in the 5th century, about the time of Jerome, to whom Berno and later writers ascribe its origin. It consists of a double list—one of the epistle, and the other of gospel selections—partly chosen freely, and partly with partiality for certain books.

In the second period, this system made its greatest conquests; in France supplanting the Gallic, in Germany entering with Christianity. It also experienced some internal changes during this time, especially on account of the many saints' days and the introduction of the Corpus Christi festival in 1264.

Finally, the Council of Trent declared the papal system the only legitimate one for the Roman Church, only allowing those churches the use of any other which could prove that the latter had been in constant use there for the past two hundred years.

With the reformation effected by Luther and his German Bible, the traditional character of church services necessarily had to change also. The Bible was read, studied, and explained. The most complete system of Bible-lessons was introduced in England, to some extent, also, in Germany and Switzerland. This whole subject is treated by Ranke, Fortbestand des herkömmlichen Perikopenkreises (Gotha, 1859).

The old pericope system has a peculiar history within the section of the Protestant Church that has retained it. In England, Cranmer, in composing the prayer-book, simply took the epistles and gospels as found in the missal of the English bishoprics, omitting only those intended for days not celebrated by Protestants. This latter was also done in Germany; but some other changes were made here, especially at the close of the Epiphany and Trinity Sundays. In the pre-reformatory system there were no lessons for the sixth Sunday after Epiphany, nor for the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh Sundays after Trinity. This defect was remedied successfully during the 16th century by an unknown master in liturgica, and the present arrangement is the result.

The subordinate services, such as the matins, vespers, as also services during the week, prayer-meetings, and the like, found great favor in the eyes of the Reformers. Luther, in 1526, the Zurich order of worship for 1535, and the Geneva liturgy, gave directions for the use of lessons in such services. The Church of England pursued its own plan in arranging the daily lessons. Not content, as the Continental reformers were, with selecting only certain sections of Scripture to be read, Cranmer arranged for morning and evening services such a course of lessons that in every year the entire Old Test., with the exception of the Psalter and the purely ritual sections of the Pentateuch, was read through once, the New Test. three times, and the Psalter twelve times, i. e. was to be chanted through once a month. In Germany, the services during the week in course of time became almost extinct.

The public Scriptural reading, thus reduced to the regular gospel and epistolary lessons for the different Sundays, could not long satisfy the Church. Already Spener advocated an enlarged pericope system; and since 1769, when the movement was started by the elector George of Hanover, the evangelical authorities in the various provinces of Germany have sought to remedy this defect, especially by the adoption of new series of pericopes. See Suckow, Die kirchl. Perikopen (1830); Matthäus, Die evang. Perikopen des Kirchenjahres (Anspach, 1844-45, 2 vols.); F. Permian Version of the Scriptures. The Permian is a sister dialect of the Syrjenian and Wotjak, and the three peoples who live in the north-east of European Russia, in the Perm, Wjatka, and Archangel governments, belong to a common race. Mr. Schiefner estimates the number of the Permians at 50,000, the Syrjenians 70,000, and the Wotjaks 200,000. From the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1880, we learn that the gospel of Matthew, prepared for prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte by P. A. Popou, has been revised and translated into the Russ character by the academican Wiedemann, and published by the above society. From the report for 1882 we learn that the Holy Synod have sanctioned the publication of the gospel of Matthew, long delayed by the censorial authorities, and that the portion will now be circulated throughout the government of Perm, among the population of about 50,000 souls. Perreyve, HENRI, a Roman Catholic writer of France, was born at Paris in 1831. At the age of twenty he was made a priest, and in 1861 he was professor of Church history at the Sorbonne. He died in 1865, leaving La Journée des Malades, an ascetical work. Father Grattr, the teacher of Perreyve, wrote Vie de Henri Perreyve (Paris, 1866). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Perrine, Matthew La Rue, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Freehold, N. J., May 4, 1777. He graduated from Princeton College in 1797, studied theology under Dr. John Woodhull of Freehold, and was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, Sept. 18, 1799. On the 24th of June, 1800, he was ordained, and for four months acted as a missionary in western New York. On June 15, 1802, he was installed as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Bottle Hill (now Madison), N. J. In 1809 he made another missionary tour, and on Oct. 31, 1811, was installed as pastor of the Spring Street Church, New York city. Here he continued till the summer of 1820, when, by his own request, the relation was dissolved. In 1821 he was elected to the professorship of ecclesiastical history and Church polity in the Auburn Theological Seminary. He died Feb. 11, 1836. Dr. Perrine had the reputation of being an accurate and thorough scholar. He was of a speculative and metaphysical turn. As a preacher he was always instructive and interesting. He published, Letters Concerning the Plan of Salvation (New York, 1816):—A Sermon Before a French Mis- sionary Society in N. Y. (1817):—An Abstract of Biblical Geography (1835). See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century; Gen. Cat. of a Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 193; Aikman, Historical Discourse (1876), p. 13.

Perrine, William Henry, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Lyons, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1827, and moved with his parents to Michigan in 1838. He was converted at the age of thirteen; in 1858 graduated at the Spring Arbor College, having entered the ministry in 1851. The following are his successive appointments: South Albion, Jackson; Lafayette Street, Detroit; Adrian, Ann Arbor; superannuated two years; Flint; professor in Albion College four years; presiding elder of Lansing District; professor again in Albion College; St. Joseph, Albion, Marengo, Parma, Concord. He died in Albion, Mich., Jan. 22, 1881. Dr. Perrine was a fine pulpit orator, and had great versatility of his talent. He took especial interest in Sunday-schools and Bible studies, having visited Palestine in 1857. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 312; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Perry, GIDEON BABCOCK, D.D., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at South Kingstown, R. I., Oct. 12, 1800. Among several parishes of which he was rector were St. Paul's, Cleveland, O., and Grace Church, in the same city. He was also the founder of St. James's parish in Cleveland. Subsequently he was rector of Trinity Church, Natchez, Miss., and of Grace Church in Hopkinsville, Ky., where he died, Sept. 30, 1879, having been fifty-seven years in the ministry. See Providence Journal, Oct. 13, 1879. (J. C. S.)

Persian Version of the Scriptures. By way of supplement we add the following: "As the style in which the gospels of the Polyglots is written has long been antiquated at Ispahan, several efforts were made during the present century to produce a version in the polished dialect now spoken by the Persians. A translation of the gospels was made under the superintendence of colonel Colebrooke, and printed at Calcutta in 1804. In 1812 the Rev. L. Sebastiani had advanced nearly to the end of the Epistles, in a translation of the New Test. from the Greek, and during the same year the gospels of this version were printed at Serampore. In the meantime another translation of the New Test. was progressing at Dinapore, under the superintendence of Henry Martyn. The translators were Sabat and Mirza Firut. This version was completed in 1808, but it was so replete with Arabic and abstruse terms, intelligible only to the learned, that the Rev. H. Martyn determined upon visiting Persia in person for the sake of obtaining a clear and idiomatic version. In 1811 he reached Shiraz, the seat of Persian literature, and remained there nearly a year, in the meantime executing from the original Greek a translation of the New Test. The state of his health compelled him to return to England, but he expired during his journey homeward, at Tokat, Asia Minor, in 1812. Copies of the work were deposited with Sir Gore Ouseley, the English ambassador in Persia, who, on returning to England by way of St. Petersburg, met with prince Galitzin, then at the head of the Russian Bible Society. The suggestion made to the prince to have an edition of Martyn's Test. printed was complied with, and in less than six months the impression was completed.

In 1813 a communication was received by the corresponding committee at Calcutta from Meer Seid Ali, the learned native employed by Mr. Martyn, at Shiraz, in which he informed the committee that the manuscript of the Persian New Test. and of the Psalms (which had likewise been translated at Shiraz) was in his possession, and he waited their orders as to its disposal. He was directed to take four copies of the manuscript, and forward the same to Calcutta, while he was invited himself for the purpose of superintending the publication. The Psalter and the New Test. passed through the press at Calcutta in 1816. The Psalter was reprinted at London, under the superintendence of Dr. Lee, in 1824, and the New Test., edited by the same scholar, in 1827. Other editions followed in 1837 and 1847.

Of all the editions of the Persian New Test., the most incorrect seems to have been that printed at St. Petersburg in 1815, and, at the request of the missionaries, the issue was stopped by the Russian Bible Society. The Rev. W. Glen, of the Scottish mission at Astrakhan, was in consequence led to undertake a version of the Psalms in Persian, for the benefit of the numerous individuals speaking that language who resort to Astrakhan and the south of Russia. In 1826 the British and Foreign Bible Society made arrangements with the Scottish Missionary Society for the services of Mr. Glen in making a translation of the poetical and prophetic books of the Old Test. In the meantime Mirza Jaffier had been engaged by the same society to produce a translation of the historical books of the Old Test. at St. Petersburg, under the eye of Dr. Pinkerton, and according to specific directions given by Dr. Lee. The only portion of Mirza Jaffier's version which was published is the book of Genesis, printed at London in 1827, under the care of Dr. Lee. Mr. Glen's version of the Psalms and Proverbs was published at London in 1830-31, and again in 1836. The entire Old Test., translated by Mr. Glen, left the press in 1847.

In 1824, the Rev. T. Robinson had commenced another translation of the Old Test., which was printed in 1838. A Persian version of the prophecy of Isaiah was purchased by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1838. This version had been executed by Mirza Ibrahim, of the East India College at Haileybury, and was published in 1834.

Since 1872 a revision of H. Martyn's New Test. has been undertaken by the Rev. R. Bruce, of the Church Missionary Society, stationed at Julfa, near Ispahan, which was completed in 1877. The same translator also commenced the revision of the Old Test. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1879, we learn that Mr. Bruce and the Revs. J. Bassett and J. L. Potter, of the American Presbyterian Mission, have formed themselves into a committee for the revision of the Persian Scriptures. The different books of the Old Test. were distributed among the different revisers, and each will carefully examine the work of the others. The revised New Test., too, was to be subjected to a joint revision. From the report for the year 1882, we learn that the latter, after having been thoroughly revised by the translator and professor Palmer of Cambridge, was published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. As for the Old Test., the work of revision is progressing slowly. (B. P.)

Persian-Jewish Version. See JUDÆO-PERSIAN VERSION.

Personality is an attribute of conscious beings only, and thus distinguishes individuals from each other. In the Trinity it is simple and absolute, so that the three persons of the godhead are not three beings, since they have a common consciousness. In man it is compound, consisting of a body and a soul, which are not homogeneous, as are the three divine persons, and yet constitute but a single being, inasmuch as the consciousness essentially resides in the soul, which is therefore per se the real person, and remains such after the separation from the body. In Jesus Christ there was a double or complex personality, because he had a complete human soul (as well as body), and was also filled hypostatically with the divine spirit. He consequently may be said to have had a sort of double consciousness; for the divine spirit did not always communicate everything to the human spirit, and the latter could not be commensurate with the former. Yet he was not two persons, inasmuch as the two natures were indissolubly blended, and the twofold personality likewise. The partial lack of homogeneity between the divine and the human spirit in him did not negative this, just as the still greater dissimilarity between human flesh and soul does not negative unity in man.

Perthes, FRIEDRICH MATTHIAS, a Protestant theologian of Germany, son of Friedrich Christoph, was born at Hamburg, Jan. 16, 1800. In 1842 he was pastor at Moorburg, near Hamburg, and died Aug. 29, 1859. He is best known as the author of Des Bischofs Johannes Chrysostomus Leben (Hamburg, 1858). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 984. (B. P.)

Pertz, GEORG HEINRICH, a famous German historian, was born at Hanover, March 28, 1795. In 1823 he was secretary of the royal archives at Hanover, in 1842 head-librarian at Berlin, and he died at Munich, Oct. 7, 1876. He edited Leibniz-gesammelte Werke (Hanover, 1848 sq.), and published Ueber Leibnizens kirchliches Glaubensbekenntnis (Berlin, 1846):—Ueber die gedruckten Ablassbriefe von 1454 und 1455 (1857). Peruvian Religion. In the earliest times the inhabitants of the kingdom of Peru, which Manco Capac, the first inca, ruled, seem to have been believers in the coarsest fetishism. They only had one supreme deity, the mother of all, Mama Kocha, in honor of whom wild animals, plants, and prisoners of war were sacrificed. The devouring of fallen or sacrificed enemies was a sacred custom of the Peruvians. A great flood had overpowered the country, and after this Manco Capac, and his wife, Mama Oello, children of the sun, came from a foreign country to the shores of the sea Titicaca, where they built the city of Cuzco, collected the remaining people, and gave them laws and sacred teachings, which were carefully preserved until the arrival of the Spaniards. The supreme being of the later Peruvians was called Pachacamac, who was the creator of all beings, also of the sun; the latter was his only visible representative on earth, and was therefore divinely worshipped; but the god himself was exalted above the sacrifices of mortals. The moon and stars also had temples, like the sun, but of less splendor, inasmuch as all that was of gold in the temples of the sun was made of silver in those of the moon and stars. There were male and female priests: of the latter, the maidens of the sun were of two kinds; the higher, from the Inca-family, dedicated their whole lives to the service of the sun, and there were more than fifteen hundred of these in conventa. If unfaithful, they and their whole family were to be exterminated, according to the law known as "hard law." But in the entire history of Peru not an instance of this occurs. The second class of servants of the sun did not live in the capital, Cuzco, but in the provinces of the kingdom, and were chosen from all classes. The conditions of reception were beauty and purity. When the cruel Pizarro came to Peru, the immense riches were carried off by the Spaniards, and the beautiful daughters of the Incas, the virtuous sun-maidens, became a prey to the insolent warriors.

Peter (Saint), FESTIVALS OF.—I. Depositio Petri in Catacombas et Pauli in via Ostiensis. The Catalogus Liberianus (854) first mentions the entombment of the bones of Peter and Paul as having taken place in the year of the consuls Tuscus and Bassus (258), and gives the date as III. Cal. Julii, that is, June 29. A festival in commemoration of that day is recorded in the Latin Church by Prudentius in the 4th century, by Augustine (Serm. 295-299), Maxim. of Turin (ibid. 66-69), and Leo the Great (ibid. 82-84) in the 5th; after the 6th it is noticed in all martyr chronicles. In the Greek Church it is stated by Theodorus Lector, in his Church history (ii, 16), as having been celebrated in Constantinople towards the close of the reign of Anastasius I (518); after the 7th century it is given in all calendars, even those of Copts, Ethiopians, and Armenians. In 1748 Benedict XIV decreed a celebration of eight days for the city of Rome; and in 1867, the eighteenth centenary, it was renewed with great magnificence by Pius IX.

II. Festum Cathedra Petri Antiochena, for Feb. 22, mentioned in the Calendarium Liberianum, and celebrated in commemoration of the accession of the apostle Peter to the episcopal chair, without, however, specifying the locality of the chair. The same is the case with the Calendarium of Polemius Silvius (448). In the Ambrosian Liturgy, and in the Sacramentarium of Gelasius I, the festival is omitted altogether; but is found again in the Sacramentarium of Gregory, and after his time always.

III. Festum Cathedra Petri Romana, Jan. 18, was generally confounded with II, but became independently established in the 8th century, and formally fixed during the Carolingian age, to which time, also, belongs the final recognition of the tradition of the double episcopacy of St. Peter.

IV. Festum Sanctum Petri ad Vincula or in Vinculis, also called Festum Catenarum Petri, Aug. 1, is not mentioned until the 9th century, in Wandalbert's Martyrologium, and Pseudo-Beda's Homil. de Vinculis Sancti Petri (Beda's, Opp. iii, 96). In the Greek Church it is celebrated Jan. 16, in the Armenian Feb. 22. The latter Church also celebrated a festival of "the finger of the apostle Peter" (Asemami, Euchol. Eccles. Orient.), and the Abyssinians commemorate on July 31 a festival in honor of St. Peter (Ludolf, Hist. Æthiop. p. 424), but the origin and significance of the latter is not known. Pharaoh of the Exode. Owing to the deep interest in the history of that event, extraordinary efforts have been made by Biblical scholars to identify this Egyptian king, whose name is not given in the sacred narrative. Most writers have been content to compare the chronologies of Egypt and the Bible together, and rest in the simple synchronism, a result necessarily problematical, from the acknowledged uncertainty of both these chronological schemes. Thus the Speaker's Commentary (i, 455, Amer. ed.) concludes that the Egyptian monarch in question was Thothmes III; but this result depends upon a series of chronological calculations and comparisons every step in which is debatable. The most favorite identification, however, of late, has been with Menephtah I, son of Rameses II, or the great Sesostri. This is adopted by Brugsch, Bunsen, Chabas, Ebers, Lenormant, Lepsius, Rawlinson, De Rouge, Vigouroux, and others. We give the reasons pro et con.

1. Josephus cites (Apion, i, 26 sq.) Manetho as stating that Moses was identical with a certain Osmariph, or Egyptian priest of Heliopolis, who headed a revolt of a band of lepers in the reign of Amenophis; and this prince appears to be the Menephtah (or Merneptah) of the monuments, and the Amenophath or Amenephtes of the 19th dynasty of Manetho's lists, by reason of his association, in the above account in Josephus, with Sethos or Rameses as his son, and Rhampses (or Rameses) as his father. But Josephus himself expressly and somewhat passionately contradicts the identification in question, and he alleges, and goes far to prove, numerous inconsistencies and fallacies in it, arguing, in short, that the whole story is a mendacious invention, and especially dwelling upon the fact that the insurgents in that case, so far from succeeding in their escape from Egypt, were ultimately subdued and destroyed by the Egyptians. The statements of Manetho himself, as extant in Syncellus and Eusebius, make no mention of this identification, but variously name Amosis (head of the 18th dynasty) and Achencheres (ninth king of the same dynasty) as the Pharaoh of the Exode.

In another passage (Apion, i, 32, 33) Josephus gives a similar narrative from Chæremôn; but, as he justly shows, the contradictions of the story are there still more apparent. In a third account, from Lysimachus (ibid. 34) the Egyptian king's name is given as Buechoris, and so all trace of identity disappears. Josephus himself repeatedly affirms that Manetho's own work gave Tethmosis (or Thummoseos, son of Asiaphragmuthosis [Misphragmuthosis]) as the name of the Pharaoh of the Exode.

2. The circumstances of Rameses II, father of the Egyptian king under consideration, are supposed to favor his identification with the Pharaoh of the oppression, and so to coincide with the theory in question. Thus he was a great builder of cities, especially (it is alleged) of Pi-Tum and Pi-Ramese, which are held to be the Pithom and Raameses of the Bible. But the last identifications are extremely doubtful, and the name Rameses appears as that of a district as early as Joseph's day (Gen. xlvii, 11). The identification of an oppressed or conquered people in his reign, named Aperu on the monuments, with the Hebrews, is equally doubtful, both in the reading and application; it is at all events certain that the people so named were foreign serfs, and that they were employed in large numbers at a period considerably later than the Exode (Brugsch, Hist. of Egypt, ii, 129). Opposed to this identification is the well-known character of the Rameses in question as a just and humane prince, who cannot have been guilty of the atrocious policy of drowning all the male children of a portion of his subjects.

3. The character and circumstances of Menephtah himself are not given with sufficient detail in the Egyptian chronicles or monuments to enable us to say with definiteness whether they agree or disagree with the Biblical account. There is nothing in them, however, which tallies with the overthrow at the Red Sea. If, as the history in Exodus implies, and as later Scriptural notices expressly affirm (e.g. Psa. cxxxvi, 15), the Egyptian king was himself drowned there, it cannot have been Menephtah, who certainly reigned much longer than the brief interval between Moses' return to Egypt (Exod. iv, 19; comp. ii, 15) and the Exode. Moreover, Menephthah was one of a large family of sons born to Rameses during his long reign, and this militates decidedly against the adoption of Moses as heir through a daughter. Dr. Schaff adduces (Through Bible Lands, p. 102) a circumstance mentioned by Herodotus (ii, 111), that the successor of Sesostris (supposed to be Rameses II) was smitten with blindness for ten years as a punishment for hurling his spear into the Nile during an extraordinary overflow; but this looks to us very little like the catastrophe at the Red Sea; and, besides, the historian calls the king in question Phoron, and he names his successor Proteus, words which have no place in the dynastic lists.

4. Finally and conclusively, the chronology of the period will not allow this identification. The lowest date for the Exode is the Rabbinical, B.C. 1812; Usher's is 1491; Hales's, 1614; our own, 1658; while the dates assigned to the end of Menephthah's reign are as follows: Mariette, cir. B.C. 1288; Lepsius, 1278; Wilkinson, 1200; ours, 1175. The difference, in any case, is from a quarter of a century to four centuries and a half. It is useless to plead the uncertainty of the dates in either line, because it is precisely here that both the Egyptian and the Biblical chronologies begin to be definite; and the tendency of modern criticism is to widen rather than contract the discrepancy at this point. This objection has not escaped Josephus, who expressly remarks (Apion, i, 27) that, according to Manetho, "Moses lived many generations earlier" than the king in question, or, more definitely (ibid. 26), 518 years, or, according to his own detailed estimate (ibid. 15), exactly 327 years. Our calculation, 483 years, is nearly a mean between these. Josephus further states (Apion, ii, 2) that "Solomon built the temple 612 years after the Jews came out of Egypt" (he elsewhere makes it variously 592 and 632 years—in our own scheme it was 648 years); and he fortifies this date by a reference to the then well-known contemporaneous Tyrian annals. He adds (ibid.) that the date of the Exode, according to the above notice of Lysimachus (i. e. as occurring under king Bocchoris) would make it "1700 years ago," or about B.C. 1680, which again is substantially our date. We conclude therefore that Josephus at least (from whom, be it noted, the whole basis of this proposed identification is derived) was clear and consistent as well as definitely grounded in his chronology, both in its Biblical and its Egyptian relations; and like him we must decidedly reject this synchronism. Phelps, ELIAKIM, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Belchertown, Mass., March 20, 1790. From 1811 to 1813 he was a member of Brown University, but graduated in 1814 from Union College. He was ordained at Brookfield, Oct. 23, 1816, as the colleague of Rev. Ephraim Ward, and continued to minister there until Oct. 25, 1826. During the succeeding three years he was principal of the Ladies' High-school at Pittsfield. In February, 1830, he was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Geneva, N. Y., and held that position until September, 1835. From 1836 he was secretary of the American Education Society in Philadelphia, and of the same in New York to 1845. For one year he was acting-pastor at Kingston, R. I., and served in the same relation at Putnam, Conn., from 1856 to 1858. His residence from 1871 to 1874 was at Andover, Mass., and from 1874 to 1880 at Weehawken, N. J. During 1831-35 he was a commissioner of Auburn Theological Seminary, N. Y., and for the last year of that term was president of the commissioners. He died at Weehawken, N. J., Dec. 29, 1880. Dr. Phelps published a volume of addresses, entitled The Ministry

Philaret, archbishop of Tschernigow, who died in 1866, was one of the most learned historians of the Russian Church. He is the author of a work on Cyril and Methodius, the Apostles of the Slavs (1846; Germ. transl. Milan, 1848). He also wrote on the Service of the Russian Church in the Pre-Mongolian Time (1847):—History of the Russian Church (4th ed. 1862, 5 vols.):—Review of Russian Literature from 862 to 1858 (1859, 2 vols.). Philip, a Scotch prelate, was in the see of Brechin in 1351. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 162.

Philip the Magnanimous, landgrave of Hesse, born at Marburg, Nov. 23, 1504, was one of the most prominent characters in the history of the German Reformation. He was only five years old when his father died, and only fourteen when he was declared of age. He was present at the diet of Worms in 1521, but had, at that time, not yet decided with respect to religious matters. He was, however, one of those who insisted that the safe-conduct accorded to Luther should be kept sacred. He visited Luther in his lodgings, and on his return allowed mass to be celebrated in German at Cassel. In February, 1525, he opened his country to the reformation, in May he joined the Torgau Union, and in June he appeared at the Diet of Spire as one of the leaders of the Protestant party, surprising the Roman Catholic bishops by his theological learning, the imperial commissioners by his outspokenness, and king Ferdinand himself by the open threat of leaving the diet immediately if the enforcement of the edicts of Worms was insisted upon. The great task he had on hand was to unite the German and Swiss Protestants into one compact party, and at the Diet of Spire (1529) he succeeded in baffling all the attempts of the Roman Catholics to produce an open breach. The conference of Marburg, in the same year, was also his work, and it had, at all events, the effect of somewhat mitigating the hostility of the theologians. Nevertheless, at the diet of Augsburg (1530), the Lutherans appeared to be willing to buy peace by sacrificing the interests of the Zwinglians. Philip proposed war, open and immediate; but the Lutherans suspected him of being a Zwinglian at heart, and their suspicion made him powerless. He subscribed the Confessio Augustana, but reluctantly, and with an express reservation with respect to the doctrine of the Lord's Supper. Finally, when he saw that nothing could be done, while he knew that the emperor could not be trusted, he suddenly left Augsburg. This resoluteness made an impression on the other Protestant princes; and in March, 1531, he was able to form the Smalcaldian League, though he was not able to procure admission to it for the Swiss Reformed. He also opened negotiations with the king of Denmark; in 1532 he compelled the emperor to grant the peace of Nuremberg; in 1534, after the brilliant victory at Laussen, he enforced the restoration of duke Ulrich, of Würtemberg, by which that country was opened to the Reformation; in 1539 he began negotiations with Francis I, and in 1540 he again proposed to wage open war on the emperor. But at this very moment his authority was greatly impaired, and his activity much clogged, by his marriage with Margarethe von der Saal—a clear case of bigamy. The theologians, even Luther and Melancthon, consented, provided this marriage was kept secret. The duchess of Roonlitz, the sister of Philip, would not keep silent, and the question arose what the emperor would do. The case was so much the worse, as, in 1535, Philip had issued a law which made bigamy one of the greatest crimes in Hesse. The emperor, however, simply used the affair to completely undermine the political position of the landgrave, but the profit he drew from it was, nevertheless, no small one. During the difficult times which followed after the peace of Crespy (1544), the Protestant party had no acknowledged head; during the Smalcaldian war (1546-47), no acknowledged leader. After the war, the emperor treacherously seized the landgrave, and kept him in prison for five years. After his release, in 1552, Philip spent all his energies in ameliorating the condition of his country, which had suffered so much from war. But he still had a lively interest in religious matters, and acted the part of a mediator, especially between the Protestants and Roman Catholics; thus he was very active in promoting the conference of Naumburg in 1544 and that of Worms in 1557. Philip died March 31, 1567. Philip, Hermann, a medical missionary, was born of Jewish parentage at Brunswick in 1813. While a student of medicine he joined the Prussian army, which he left after some years' service in order to join a brother of his who was in Java in the Dutch service. Philip embarked at Rotterdam for Batavia, but owing to some accident which happened after the vessel had left the harbor, he came to England. At London, through his employers, he became acquainted with a Presbyterian minister, who spoke to him of Christ and made him think of the Saviour. Philip, with the recommendation from this minister, went to Scotland. At Glasgow he became acquainted with Dr. Duncan, who encouraged him in his inquiries. On Dec. 9, 1839, the Kirk session of St. Luke's Church at Edinburgh admitted him a member of the Church of Christ. Philip now went through a regular course of theological studies, and commenced his missionary labors in 1841, along with the Rev. D. Edward, among the Jews in Moldavia. Being convinced of the great advantage to a missionary of a thorough knowledge of medicine, Philip, after nine years' missionary labor, returned to Edinburgh to complete his medical education. This done, in 1850 he was sent to Algiers, under the auspices of the Scottish Society for the Conversion of Israel, as medical missionary. From Algiers, in 1852, he was sent to Alexandria, in Egypt. In 1860 Philip, who, by this time, had the degree of D.D., in addition to that of M.D., was engaged by the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, and was sent to labor at Jaffa, the seaport of Palestine, where he remained for six years. When the cholera raged at Jaffa in 1865, and the population was panic-struck, and the civil and military authorities had fled, Dr. Philip was the only practitioner at Jaffa, and acted not only as physician, but also as governor and police. The Malta Times of September, 1865, states that "the calls and appeals which Dr. Philip had were constant, inasmuch that, when passing through the streets, the crowds thronged upon him to kiss his hands and feet; and while Christians and Jews offered up masses and prayers for him, the Mohammedans forgot their prophet, and the sound was heard in the mosques, 'There is but one God, and the doctor!'" In 1866 Dr. Philip, at his own request, was removed to another field, and sent to Leghorn, where he remained until 1870, when the door was opened to him to preach the gospel to the Jews in Rome. He died Feb. 8, 1882. (B. P.)

Philippi, Friedrich Adolph, a noted Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born of Jewish parentage at Berlin, Oct. 15, 1809. At the age of eighteen he entered the Berlin University to study philosophy. In 1829 he went to Leipsic for the study of philosophy, and in the same year joined the Lutheran Church. In 1830 he was promoted as doctor of philosophy, and acted for two years as teacher at Dresden. In 1832 he returned to Berlin, passed his examination, and in 1833 received the "facultas docendi." He was appointed professor of ancient languages at the Joachimsthal Gymnasium, a position which he resigned after eighteen months in order to prosecute theological studies. Having passed his examination, he was in 1836 made a licentiate in theology, and commenced to lecture in 1837. In 1841 Philippi was called as professor of theology to Dorpat, in 1851 to Rostock, and died Aug. 29, 1882. He wrote, De Celsi Aderuarii Christianorum, Philosophandi Genere (Berlin, 1836);—Der thätige Gehorsam Christi (1841);—Commentar über den Brief Pauli an die Römer (Frankfort, 3d ed. 1866; Engl. transl. Edinburgh, 1878);—but his main work is Kirchliche Glaubenslehre (Güterslothe, 1854-82, 6 vols.), a learned and able vindication of strict Lutheran orthodoxy. After Philippi's death there were published from his manuscripts, and edited by his son, Erklärung des Briefes Pauli an die Galater (Güterslothe, 1884);—Symbolik. Akademische Vorlesungen (1883);—Predigten und Vorträge (ed.). See Mecklenburgisches Kirchen- und Zeitblatt, 1882, No. 19-21; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Zuchold, *Bibl. Philippa, Georg, a German professor of canon law, was born Jan. 6, 1804, at Königsberg, Prussia. He studied at Göttingen, and commenced his academical career at Berlin, where he joined the Roman Catholic Church. In 1833 he went to Munich, in 1849 to Innsbruck, in 1851 to Vienna, and died Sept. 6, 1872. His main works are, Das Kirchenrecht (Ratisbon, 1845-72, 7 vols.);—Lehrbuch des Kirchenrechts (2d ed. 1871);—Deutsche Reichs- und Rechtsgeschichte (4th ed. 1859, 2 vols.);—Vermischte Schriften (Vienna, 1856-60, 3 vols.). Phinehas, Hill and Tomb of. According to Lieut. Conder these have been identified. He says (Tent Work, i, 77):

"The village of 'Awertah, called Abeerthah in the Samaritan dialect, stands in the Plain of the Mikhnah, and is sacred to the Samaritans and to the Jews as containing the tombs of Phinehas and Eleazar, Abishua and Ithamar. It is probably to be recognised as the Hill of Phinehas, where Eleazar was buried according to the Bible (Josh. xxiv, 28), and which is described as in Mount Ephraim.

"In 1873 I visited the village and examined the two principal monuments. That of Eleazar, west of the houses, is a rude structure of masonry in a court open to the air. It is eighteen feet long, plastered all over, and shaded by a splendid terebinth. In one corner is a little mosque with a Samaritan inscription bearing the date 1180 of the Muslim era. The tomb of Phinehas is apparently an older building, and the walls of its court have an arcade of round arches now supporting a trellis covered with a grape-vine; the floor is paved. A Samaritan inscription exists here as well as at the little mosque adjacent. The tombs of Ithamar and of Abishua, the supposed author of the famous roll, are shown by the Samaritans, close by." Piderit, Johann Rudolph Anton, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 18, 1720, at Pyrmont. He studied at Jena and Marburg, and commenced his academical career at the latter place in 1746. In 1747 he was professor of philosophy, in 1759 doctor of theology, in 1768 professor of Oriental languages at "Collegium Carolinum" in Cassel, and died, after having experienced in a high degree the "odium theologicum," Aug. 2, 1791. Pie, Louis François Désiré Edouard, a French prelate, was born at Pontgouin (Eure-et-Loir) in 1815. For some time vicar-general of Chartres, he was appointed in 1849 bishop of Poitiers, and made himself conspicuous by his zeal in defending the temporal power of the pope. He opposed the imperial government in a series of pastoral letters, and assembled, in January, 1868, a provincial council at Poitiers to discuss the religious interests of his diocese and of France. From the very beginning of the oecumenical council in 1870 he was one of the most ardent defenders of papal infallibility. Pie was made cardinal in 1879, and died at Angoulême in 1880. He published, Instruction Synodale sur les Erreurs de la Philosophie Moderne (1855):—Instruction sur les Principales Erreurs des Temps Présent (1854):—Discours Prononcé à l'Occasion du Service Solennel pour les Soldats de l'Armée Pontificale (1860). Piedmontese Version of the Scriptures. As early as 1831 a translation of the New Test., faithfully rendered from Martin's French version into modern Piedmontese, was forwarded to the British and Foreign Bible Society by lieutenant-colonel Beckwith. The translation was made by Mr. Berte, pastor of La Tour, and Mr. Gegmet of Lausanne. An edition was completed at press in 1834, but in 1840 the New Test. was put on the index of forbidden books at Rome. In 1837 the British and Foreign Bible Society issued the gospels in parallel columns with the French text, and in 1841 the Piedmontese version of the Psalms, executed from Diodati's Italian version, was published. This edition had also, in parallel columns, the Italian text. Of late, however, things have changed for the better, and the British and Foreign Bible Society now freely circulates the Piedmontese New Test., the Psalms with the Italian text, and the gospels with the French, in parallel columns. See Bible of Every Land, p. 286. (B. P.)

Pierce, George Foster, D.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, son of Dr. Lovick Pierce, was born in Greene County, Ga., Feb. 8, 1811. He graduated from Franklin College, Athens, began to study law, but was soon after converted, and in 1831 was received into the Georgia Conference, in which he filled important appointments until his election as president of the Georgia Female College at Macon in 1840. He was a member of the memorable General Conference of 1844. Having returned to the pastoral work, he was called in 1848 to the presidency of Emory College, and in 1854 to the episcopacy, an office which he filled with eminent ability until his death, Sept. 3, 1884. He was a laborious pastor, an eloquent preacher, and a most upright Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1885, p. 152; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Pierce, Lovick, D.D., a distinguished minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Halifax County, N. C., March 24, 1785.

In early childhood he removed with his parents to South Carolina; in 1808 was converted; in 1804 began to preach; and Jan. 1, 1805, entered the South Carolina Conference. In it he served Pedee Circuit; Apalachee Circuit, Ga.; in 1807 Augusta Station; in 1809 was made presiding elder; in 1812, while stationed at Milledgeville, he was drafted to serve as a soldier, but was soon commissioned as chaplain, in which capacity he acted during the war; about that time he studied medicine, and, retiring from the conference, followed its practice for about six years. In 1823 he re-entered the effective ranks, and was stationed at Augusta. From that time he filled the chief appointments. He was a member of the first General Conference, which met in 1812, and was always elected to represent his conference in the General Conferences. He read much and wrote a great deal; was always ready, clear, cogent, coherent, and powerful. He died at the residence of his son, bishop Pierce, in Sparta, Ga., Nov. 11, 1879. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1879, p. 88; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Pierius, Urban (originally Birnbaum), a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Schwedt, Pomerania, in 1546. He studied law and theology, was for some time doctor and professor of theology at Frankfurt, afterwards pastor at Brandenburg, and superintendent at Cüstrin. In 1589 he was appointed superintendent at Dresden, and in the same year professor of theology and general superintendent at Wittenberg. In 1591 he was dismissed as Crypto-Calvinist, and imprisoned, but was finally released at the intercession of queen Elizabeth of England. Pierius then went to Bremen, and died May 12, 1616, superintendent. He wrote, Typus Doctrinæ Orthodoxæ de Persona et Officio Christi:—Examen und Erläuterung der in der Leichenpredigt Nic. Crell's fürgebrachten neuen Religions-Streitigkeiten:—Apologia und Verantwortung des über Nicol. Crell nach gehaltener Leichenpredigt angestellten Examens. See Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Pierre, Jean Henri Grand, D.D., a minister of the National Reformed Church of France, was born at Neuchâtel, Switzerland, towards the close of the last century. He was educated at Neuchâtel and at the University of Tübingen, Germany; was called to be an assistant pastor with Vinet at Basle, in 1823, where his piety, zeal, and eloquence were the means of an extensive revival of religion. In 1827 he was called to Paris to take charge of the House of Missions, virtually a theological seminary, in which Dr. Pierre also acted as professor of theology and languages, being a fine classical and Hebrew scholar, as well as an able theologian, ready writer, and eloquent preacher. He was eventually called to L'Oratoire, the great Protestant Church of Paris, where he remained for twenty years. While Vinet was compared to Pascal, and Adolph Monod to Saurin, Dr. Grand Pierre was called the Bourdaloue of the revival. He visited America in 1870 in order to attend the Evangelical Alliance. He died near Basle, Switzerland, July 10, 1874. Dr. Pierre published a considerable number of works, commentaries, sermons, etc., which had a wide circulation. His last production was a volume of sermons dedicated to his former parishioners. For many years he was editor of L'Esperance, the principal religious paper of the orthodox Protestants of France. See (N. Y.) Presbyterian, Aug. 8, 1874. (W. P. S.)

Pietista, CATHOLIC, a name which was applied to the brethren and sisters of the pious and Christian schools founded by Nicholas Barre in 1678. They devoted themselves to the education of poor children of both sexes.

Pikullos (Pikollos, or Potollos) was the destroying principle, the third person of the trinity among the Lithuanians, or ancient heathen Prussians, being the opposite of Potrimpos, the preserving principle. An image of this god stood at Romowe, in a hollow of the sacred oak-tree. He was represented as an old bearded man with pale face, the head bound by a white cloth. Three skulls, one of a man, another of a horse, and the third of a bull, were his symbols. Human beings, cattle, horses, and goats, were sacrificed to him, and their blood was poured out at the foot of the great oak-tree to cause its constant growth. Potrimpos was loved, Pikullos feared. He found joy in men's misery. He was not worshipped among other nations, but was compared with Pluto, and with the moon, Loke, Hel, and Odin of the Scandinavians.

Pilet, JEAN ALEXANDRE SAMUEL, a Reformed theologian, was born at Yverdon, Switzerland, Sept. 19, 1797. He studied at Lausanne, and was ordained in 1821. In the same year he was called to Morges as director of the college, and in 1828 succeeded Louis Henri Manuel as pastor of the French Reformed Church at Frankfurt-on-the-Main. In 1834 he returned to Switzerland, and was in 1836 appointed professor of Biblical literature at Genoa. He died April 5, 1865. Pilet was one of the Old-Test. translators of the French Bible, called the Version de Lausanne. See Chrétiens Évangéliques (1868); A. De Montet, Diction. Biogr. des Genevois et des Vaudois qui se sont Distingués, etc. (Lausanne, 1878); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v. (B. P.)

Pilgrims, POOR, an order of Roman Catholic devotees, which originated about the year 1500. They commenced in Italy, but passed into Germany, where they wandered about as mendicants, barefooted and bareheaded.

Pilmore, JOHN, a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of Moray, April 3, 1825, and continued bishop there for thirty-seven years. He died in the castle of Spynie in 1862. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 140, 187.

Pin (acus) in ecclesiastical use. Pins made of precious metal, and, in later mediæval times, enriched with jewels, were used for attaching the archiepiscopal (or papal) pallium to the planeta or casula (chasuble). The earliest mention of these is, probably, the description given by Joannes Diaconus of the pallium of Gregory the Great. Their first use, therefore, must probably date between the close of the 6th and the beginning of the 9th century. Innocent assigns to these pins a certain mystical significance.

Pinkerton, ROBERT, D.D., a Scotch Congregational minister, was born in 1780. He left Scotland in 1805 as missionary among the tribes of the Caucasus, under the patronage of the Edinburgh Missionary Society. In 1809 he took up his residence at Moscow, and, in company with Drs. Paterson and Henderson, undertook the visitation of the Russian empire with the view of putting the Bible into universal circulation. When those labors were suspended by imperial authority, Dr. Pinkerton travelled over the entire continent of Europe for the purpose of organizing societies for the dissemination of the Bible, both in Protestant and Catholic countries. He died April 7, 1859. See (Lond.) Comp. Year-book, 1860, p. 204.

Pinkham, JOHN, a veteran Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Dover, N. H., Jan. 25, 1808. When he was two years of age his parents moved to Casco, Me., where he was converted at the age of sixteen, and at eighteen became a public exhorter. In 1830 he was ordained pastor of the Church at Sandwich, N. H., where he remained for seven years, and then removed to Gilsford, where, for eight years, his labors were greatly blessed. His next settlement, of five years, was at Alton. He was, for the next two years, a resident of Dover, and spent most of the time in assisting pastors in revival work. He then returned to Casco, chiefly occupied as an evangelist. He died there, Jan. 8, 1882. See Morning Star, March 1, 1882. (J. C. S.)

Pinkney, WILLIAM, D.D., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal bishop, was born at Annapolis, Md., April 17, 1810. After graduating from St. John's College, in his native city, he became a rector in Somerset County in 1836, at Bladensburg in 1838, and at Washington in 1855; was consecrated assistant bishop of Maryland Oct. 6, 1870, and became sole bishop Oct. 17, 1879. He died July 4, 1883. Bishop Pinkney was decidedly evangelical.

Pinner, MOSSA, a Jewish author, who died at Berlin in 1880, doctor of philosophy, is the author of, Compendium des babylonischen Talmud (Berlin, 1852):—Talmud Babb Tractat Berachot mit interpolirtem Texte, mit hebr. Commentar nebst deutscher Uebersetzung (1842):—Prospectus der alten hebr. und rabbinischen Manuscripte nebst einem Facsimile des Propheten Habakuk (Odessa, 1846):—Offenes Sendschreiben an die Nationen Europa's und an die Stände Norwegens (1848):—Aufruf an die orthodoxen Rabbiner Europa's (1858):—Geschichte der neuen Reformen der jüd. Gemeinde in Berlin und ihre Bekämpfung (1857). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 108; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 996. (B. P.)

Pinney, JOHN BROOKE, LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Baltimore, Md., Dec. 25, 1806. He graduated from the University of Georgia in 1828, having studied law while in college; graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1832; was ordained by the Presbytery of Philadelphia the same year, and soon after went to Africa in the service of the American Colonization Society as agent for the colony of Liberia. He returned in 1847, and was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Washington, Pa., where he remained until his appointment as secretary of the New York State Colonization Society, a position which he occupied from 1848 to 1863, and again several years later. He made two visits to Africa to promote the interests of the colony of Liberia. His entire life was devoted to the welfare of the African race, and he engaged in his work with indomitable zeal and energy. He had worn himself out long before his end came, but, though infirm, he labored to the last. He died at his plantation, near Ocala, Fla., Dec. 25, 1882, and was buried under the shade of the oaks near his house, six black men acting as pall-bearers. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 25. (W. P. S.)

Piquet, FRANÇOIS, an eminent Roman Catholic missionary, was born at Bourg-en-Brasse, France, Dec. 6, 1708. Having been educated at the seminary of St. Sulpice, Paris, he was admitted to that order, and in 1738 was sent to Montreal, of which the Sulpicians were the founders and pastors. In 1740 he was placed in charge of the Iroquois mission at the Lake of the Two Mountains. He accompanied the Iroquois in their ensuing campaign, and tried to found a mission at Oswegatchie, but, protected by count de la Gallissonière and Bigot, he began his work on the site of Ogdensburg, in 1749. The Mohawks burned his mission buildings a few months after, but in two years he received three thousand in Christian instruction. In May, 1752, a bishop conferred the sacraments for the first time within the present limits of New York State. The fall of Canada approaching, Piquet, in 1759, had to abandon Oswegatchie, and retired with his converts to Grande Isle des Galops, where he built a chapel. His register closes July 23, 1760. He then returned to Europe, and the traveller Bossu met him at Corunna in 1762. In France he was occupied in various duties in the Church, and died at Verjon, July 15, 1781. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1877, p. 60; De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 447.

Pirathon. The modern Ferata is laid down on the Ordnance Map at five and a half miles south-west of Nablûs, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (ii, 162) as "a small village of ancient appearance, standing on a tell or mound, with a rock-cut tomb to the south and a sacred mukâm to the east." It has "a few cisterns and the remains of a sarcophagus" (ibid. p. 285). Instead of this identification Lieut. Conder, with less probability, suggests Ferôn, lying ten miles west of Sebastieh, and described (ibid. p. 164) as "a small village on a slope, at the edge of the plain, with a few trees and a well to the east. The inhabitants are all Greek Christians."

Pirie, WILLIAM ROBINSON, D.D., a Scotch divine, son of Rev. George Pirie, D.D., of Slains, Aberdeenshire, was born in that village, July 26, 1804, and educated at the University of Aberdeen. He was appointed minister at Dyce in 1830; professor of divinity in the university of Marischal College, Aberdeen, in December, 1843; minister at Greyfriars, of the same city, in September, 1846; professor of divinity or Church history in united universities, Marischal and King's colleges, in 1860, and in May, 1877, principal and vice-chancellor of the same, a position which he occupied until his death, Nov. 4, 1885. Dr. Pirie was active in every movement which agitated the Scottish Church during the forty years of his public life. He was the author of Natural Theology (Edinb. 1868). See Fasts Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 501.

Pirkosma, in the mythology of the Greenlanders, is the god to whom all other deities are subordinate, and who distributes rewards or punishments according to moral actions.

Pisanaki, GEORG CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Johannisberg, Prussia, Aug. 23, 1725. He studied at Königsberg, and in 1748 was teacher at the cathedral school. In 1773 he was doctor of theology, and died Oct. 11, 1789. He wrote, Canonicæ Librorum Omnium Vel. Testamenti, etc. (Berlin, 1775):—Λογία τοῦ Στοιῦ Judaorum Fidei Credita, etc. (Königsberg, 1778):—Beleuchtung der sogenannten biblischen Dämonologie (ed.):—De Erroribus Irenæi in Determinanda Ætate Christi (ed.):—De Miraculis Spiritus Sancti Donis, etc. (ed.):—Vindiciae Psalmorum, etc. (1779):—Adversaria de Accommodationibus Veteris Testamenti, etc. (1781):—An Liber Jonas non Historicum sed Fabulum Contineat? (1789). Pischon, JOHANN KARL, a Reformed theologian, was born at Cottbus, in Lower Lusatia, Oct. 12, 1764. He studied at Halle, was in 1790 cathedral-preacher there, in 1799 court-preacher at Potsdam, and died Nov. 18, 1805. He published several volumes of sermons. See Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner, p. 297 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 62, 96, 149, 222, 292, 323, 331. (B. P.)

Pisciculi (little fishes), a name which the early Christians sometimes assumed, to denote, as Tertullian alleges, that they were born again into Christianity by water, and could not be saved but by continuing therein. See ICHTHUS.

Pistores (bakers) was a term of reproach applied to the early Christians in consequence of their poverty and simplicity.

Pistorius, HERMANN ALEXANDER, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 27, 1811, at Walbeck. He studied at Halle, was in 1848 preacher at Süpplingen, near Magdeburg, and made himself conspicuous by his opposition against the so-called Friends of Light (q. v.), and by advocating the right of the Lutheran Church in the State Church of Prussia. In 1849 he left the State Church, having the year before published Aufruf an alle Lutheraner innerhalb der preussischen Landeskirche, became Lutheran preacher at Wernigerode, afterwards at Wollin, and finally superintendent at Breslau, where he had to pass through many trials. In 1863 he was called to Basedow, Mecklenburg, and died April 27, 1877. He published, Das christliche Leben in Liedern (Dresden, 1840):—Was und wo ist die lutherische Kirche? (Magdeburg, 1844):—Richtige Erklärung der Bibelstellen, etc. (1845):—Ueber Kraft und Form der Revolution (Leipzig, 1858). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 998 sq. (B. P.)

Pithom. This has recently been identified by Edouard Naville, who has carried on excavations under the auspices of the "Egypt Exploration Fund," with Tell el-Maskhuta, or Abu Kesheid (usually thought to be the site of Heroöpolis), and he has published the results of his explorations in a volume entitled The Store-city of Pithom (Lond. 1885). The identification rests chiefly on the discovery, upon the spot, of a statue of a squatting man, in red granite, the lieutenant of king Osorkon II., "Ank-rens-nefer, the good recorder of Pithom" (p. 4, 5, 13), together with an inscription on a large monument of Rameses at Ismaïleh, containing the words "the lord of Theku, of Succoth." This is certainly somewhat slender ground, but it may perhaps be provisionally accepted for the present. Mr. Naville found the remains of what he regards as a large temple with numerous chambers, indicating the existence of a city there in ancient times, but he was unable to make out its plans, or to unearth it to any great extent.

Pitiscus, MARTIN FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hamburg in 1721. In 1756 he was preacher at his birthplace, in 1768 professor of Oriental languages, and died Nov. 18, 1794. He wrote, Versuch von der Religion der Stammeltern des menschlichen Geschlechts (Hamburg, 1768):—Eximium Divinae Sapientia Specimen (1763):—Ueber den Canon der Bücher des Alten Testaments (1776):—Zur Beurtheilung der von Herrn Hofrath Lessing herausgegebenen Fragmente eines Ungenannten von Duldung der Deisten (1779). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 106. (B. P.)

Planck, KARL CHRISTIAN, a philosophical writer of Germany, was born at Stuttgart, Jan. 17, 1819. He studied theology at Tübingen, and commenced his academic career in 1848 as lecturer in philosophy. In 1856 he was professor at the gymnasium in Ulm, in 1869 at the seminary in Blaubeuren, in 1879 ephorus of the seminary at Maulbronn, and died June 7, 1880. He published, Gezetz und Ziel der neueren Kunstentwicklung (Stuttgart, 1870):—Seele und Geist (1871):—Wahrheit und Flackheit des Darwinismus (1872):—Grundriss der Logik (1873):—Anthropologie und Psychologie (1874):—Logisches Causalgesetz und natürliche Zweckthätigkeit (1877):—Ziel und Entwicklungsgesetz der alten Philosophie (1877):—Testament eines Deutschen (edited after the author's death by K. Köstlin, Tübingen, 1881). (B. P.)

Platt, James McClure, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Athens, Pa., Dec. 31, 1826. He graduated from the University of the City of New York in 1847, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1853; became pastor at Lawesville, O., the same year; at Leetsdale, Pa., in 1867; and at Bath, N. Y., in 1869, where he died, April 14, 1884. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1885, p. 47.

Plessner, Solomon, a Jewish rabbi of Germany, was born at Breslau, April 19, 1797. He received a thorough rabbinic education, was in 1822 instructor of religion at Festenberg, Silesia, in 1830 instructor at the teacher's seminary in Berlin, and died at Posen, Aug. 25, 1883, where he had acted as rabbi for nearly forty years. He is the author of, Die apocryphischen Bücher des Alten Testaments in's Hebräische übersetzt, etc. (Breslau, 1833):—Materialien für tiefere Einblicke in das Alte Testament und die rabbinischen Schriften (Berlin, 1836), also with the title Belehrungen u. Erbauungen (ibid. eod.):—Die kostbare Perle oder das Gebet (1837-38):—Jüdisch-Mosaischer Religionsunterricht (1838-39):—Religiöse Vorträge (1840):—Festreden (1841). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 107. (B. P.)

Plitt, Gustav Leopold, a noted Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 27, 1836, at Genin, near Lübeck. He studied at Erlangen and Berlin, and commenced his theological career at the former place in 1862. In 1866 he was made professor, and in 1872 doctor of theology. He died Sept. 10, 1880. Plitt, who is best known as the associate editor of the second edition of Herzog's Real-Encyclopädie für Protestantische Theologie und Kirche, published the following works: De Auctoritate Articulorum Smalcaldicorum Symbolica (Erlangen, 1852):—Festpredigten des heiligen Bernhard (1860):—Melanchthon's Loci Communes in ihrer Urgestalt (1864):—Einleitung in die Augustana (1867-68, 2 vols.):—Aus Schellings Leben in Briefen (1869-70, 3 vols.):—Die Albrechtsleute oder die Evange- liche Gemeinschaft (1871):—Die Apologie der Augustana (1873):—Grundriss der Symbolik für Vorlesungen (1875):—Isidokus Trutfetter von Eisenach, der Lehrer Luther's (1876):—Gabriel Biel als Prediger (1879):—Dr. Martin Luther's Leben und Wirken (edited after Plitt's death by Petersen, Leipsa, 1883). See Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Plitt, Johann Jacob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 27, 1727, at Wetter, Hesse. He studied at Halle, was in 1749 preacher at Cassel, in 1755 professor at Rinteln, in 1762 preacher at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, and died April 7, 1773, doctor of theology. He wrote, De Gloria Dei in Promulgatione Legis Sinaiticae (Göttingen, 1755):—De Nezu inter Bonitatem Dei Infinitam et Justitiam ejus Puniram Arctissimo (1756):—De Vero Conceptu Ceremoniae Religiosis (Rinteln, 1759):—Testimonia Quorundam Ecclesiarum Patrum pro Baptismo Infantum (1760):—De Punientia Caini (1761):—Theologische Untersuchungen (1764-71, 8 vols.); besides he published a number of sermons and other ascetical works. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 451. (B. P.)

Plum, Friedrich, a Danish Lutheran theologian, who died at Odensee, Jan. 18, 1833, doctor of theology and bishop of Funen, is the author of, Efterredninger om den udenlandske nyere theologiske og pastorale Litteratur, etc. (Copenhagen, 1818 sq.):—Observationes in Textum et Versiones Maxime Graecis Obadiæ et Habacuci (1796). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 12, 224; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 107. (B. P.)

Plumb, Elijah Whiton, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Halifax, Vt., July 28, 1798. He attended Hopkins Academy at Hadley, Mass.; spent one year in Harvard College; graduated from Middlebury College in 1824; taught school the next two years in Brattleboro', Vt.; from 1826 to 1828 was similarly employed in Hampton, N. H.; studied theology with Daniel Dana, D.D., of Newburyport; was ordained pastor, May 18, 1831, at Pawlet, Vt., and dismissed Oct. 29, 1845; from 1846 to 1851 was pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Potsdam, N. Y.; in 1853 became principal of St. Lawrence Academy; and from 1864 to 1867 was acting pastor in Sterling, Ill. The two succeeding years he resided at Potsdam without charge, and then removed to East Bloomfield, which was his residence until his death, July 12, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 26.

Plumer, William Swan, D.D., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Greensburg (now Darlington), Beaver Co., Pa., July 26, 1802. He graduated from Washington College, Va., in 1825, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1827; having been licensed to preach in 1826, he soon after organized a Presbyterian Church at Danville, subsequently another at Warrenton, N. C., and preached also at Raleigh, Washington, and Newbern, in the same state. In 1834 he became a pastor in Richmond, Va., and in 1837 founded the Watchman of the South, a weekly religious journal, which he edited for eight years. The same year he removed as pastor to Baltimore, Md. In 1854 he became professor of didactic and pastoral theology in the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny City, Pa.; in 1866 was called to the chair of theology in the Theological Seminary at Columbia, S. C., where he remained until it was closed in 1880. He died at the Union Protestant Infirmary, Baltimore, Md., Oct. 22 of the same year. Dr. Plumer was the author of many excellent works, among which are, Argument Against the Indiscriminate Incorporation of Churches and Religious Societies (1847, 8vo):—The Bible True, and Infidelity Wicked (New York, 18mo):—Plain Thoughts for Children (Philadelphia, 18mo):—Short Sermons to Little Children (18mo):—Thoughts Worth Remembering (New York, 8vo):—The Saint and the Sinner (Philadelphia, 18mo):—The Grace of Christ (1853, 12mo):—Rome Against the Bible and the Bible Against Rome (1854, 18mo):—Christ our Theme and Glory (1855, 8vo):—The Church and her Enemies (Philadelphia, 1856, 18mo):—The Law of God as Contained in the Ten Commandments (ibid. 1864, 12mo):—Vital Godliness (New York, 1865, 12mo):—Jehovah Jireh (Philadelphia, 1866, 12mo):—Studies in the Book of Psalms (1866):—The Rock of our Salvation (New York, 1867, 12mo):—The Words of Truth and Love (Philadelphia, 1868, 18mo):—also commentaries on the epistles to the Romans and Hebrews, works of great merit:—besides Memoirs and Select Remains of William Nevins, D.D. (1836, 12mo):—and an abridgment of Stevenson on the Offices of Christ (Philadelphia, 1837, 16mo). He wrote more than fifty religious tracts, issued by six religious societies, several single sermons, and contributed largely to various religious journals and papers. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 20; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Plunket, THOMAS LORD, D.D., a bishop of the Church of Ireland, was born in 1799, being the eldest son of William Conyngham Plunket, the Irish chancellor, distinguished as a lawyer, an orator, and a statesman, and whom he succeeded as second baron in 1854. Dr. Plunket was appointed dean of Down in 1831, and promoted to the bishopric of Tuam in 1839. He became ecclesiastical commissioner in 1851, and died at Tourmakready, County Mayo, Oct. 19, 1866, being at the time patron of ninety-five livings in his united diocese of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry. He was an indefatigable laborer in the missionary department of his work, especially in Connaught. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. January, 1867, p. 655.

Pluquet, FRANÇOIS ANDRÉ ADRIEN, an ecclesiastical writer of France, was born at Bayeux in 1716. He was professor of philosophy at the Collège de France, canon of Cambrai, and died at Paris in 1790. He published, Examen du Fatalisme (Paris, 1757, 2 vols.):—Dictionnaire des Héreses, des Erreurs et des Schismes (1762, 2 vols.):—Essai Philosophique et Politique sur le Luce (1786):—De la Superstition et de l'Enthousiasme (published after his death, 1804). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Pogatschar, JOHANNES, prince bishop of Laybach, was born at Brezov, Jan. 22, 1811. From 1838 to 1852 he occupied the theological chair at the Laybach Theological Seminary, was made prince bishop in 1875, and died Jan. 25, 1884. For many years he edited the Laybach Church Gazette, and in the ecclesiastico-political affairs he sided with the Austrian government in behalf of the new school-laws. (B. P.)

Pohlman, HENRY NEWMAN, D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born at Albany, N. Y., March 8, 1800. In August, 1820, he graduated from Hartwick Seminary—the first student in the first Lutheran theological seminary in the United States. In March following he received license to preach in Rhinebeck, and in May was ordained in New York city. After serving a few months in two small churches at Saddle River and Ramapo, N. J., he took charge of the Lutheran churches in Hunterdon County, which at that time numbered three, many miles apart. For twenty-one years he continued in this work, until each of these congregations was able to support its own pastor. The great event of his ministerial life was a remarkable revival of religion at New Germantown during the winter of 1839-40. In 1843 he became pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran Ebenezer Church in Albany, N. Y., and remained in this pastorate about three years. Of the General Synod he was three times elected president, and was a delegate from 1836 to every meeting of that body. At the time of his admission to the ministry the General Synod had just been formed, and the New York Ministerium, a party to the original convention, had already withdrawn. This led to the creation of two parties in the ministerium, resulting in 1830 in the formation of the Hartwick Synod. Dr. Pohlman, with a few other friends of the General Synod, decided to remain with the ministerium; and in 1836 the ministerium renewed its connection with the General Synod. He took an active part in the work of organizing churches. On Sept. 3, 1867, after the New York Ministerium had decided to withdraw from the General Synod, a new synod was organized, and Dr. Pohlman was elected its first president, and held this position until his death in Albany, Jan. 20, 1874. For many years he was a trustee of the State Idiot Asylum at Syracuse. During thirty years he was a trustee of Hartwick Seminary. For three years he assumed the duties of corresponding secretary of the Lutheran Mission Board in New York, and for some time afterwards was an active member of the executive committee. See Quar. Rev. of Evang. Luth. Church, iv, 359.

Poindexter, ABRAM MAER, D.D., a Baptist divine, was born in Bertie County, N. C., Sept. 22, 1809. He studied at Columbian College, Washington, D. C., but did not graduate. He united with the Church in 1831, was licensed in 1832, and ordained in 1834. Most of his life was spent in Halifax County, Va. For a time he acted as financial agent of Columbian and Richmond Colleges, was secretary of the Southern Baptist Publication Society, and officially connected with the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. He died May 7, 1872. Dr. Poindexter ranked high as a preacher, especially on occasions where a large body of the people were assembled. He was also distinguished as a most skillful debater. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 924. (J. C. S.)

Polanus, AMANDUS, a Swiss theologian, was born at Oppeln, Silesia, in 1561, and died at Basle in 1610, professor of theology and Old-Test. exegesis. Polanus was one of the ornaments of the Basle University, and wrote, Analysis Malachias (Basle, 1597):—Commentarius in Danielelem (1598):—Analysis Hosea (1601):—Commentarius in Ezechielem (1607):—Exegesis Aliquot Vaticanorum Veteris Testamenti de Christi Nativitate, Passione et Morte, Resurrectione et Ascensu in Caelo (1608):—De Aeterna Dei Prædestinatione (1600):—Symphonia Catholica (1607):—Theses Hellarminio potissimum Oppositæ (published after Polanus's death by J. G. Grosse, 1613):—Institutiones de Concionum Sacramentorum Methodo (1604):—Synagma Theologia Christiana (1612). Poles, ANCIENT MYTHOLOGY OF THE. The Poles, a Slavic people, had a religious system agreeing with that of other Slavonic mythologies, and it is an error to call them fire-worshippers, or to say they worshipped Roman gods, as some affirm. Gnesen, the capital of Poland, the seat of prince Primas, contained a row of great temples, of which now only a few traces may be found. There stood the temple of Nija, the god of the soul; of Perun, the god of thunder, etc. There the principal gods of Slavonic heathendom were worshipped with bloody sacrifices. This warlike nation had many gods of war, but some superintended also domestic concerns.

Polish Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. The revision of the New Test. from the Greek, undertaken for the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1878, by Messrs. Manitius, Diehl, Poplooski, and Fecht, of Warsaw, was completed in 1881, and an edition of five thousand copies was published at Vienna under the care of the Bible society's agent, Mr. E. Millard. See SLAVONIC VERSION. (B. P.)

Polyander, JOHANN, a Reformed theologian, was born at Metz, March 28, 1568. He studied at different universities, was in 1588 pastor at Dort, in 1611 professor of theology at Leyden, and died Feb. 4, 1646. He wrote, Concertatio anti-Sociniana:—Synagma Exercitationum Theologicarum:—Miscellanea Tractationes Theologicae:—De Existencia Jesu Christi Es- sentialis et Gloria Divina contra Crellium:—Harmonia Locorum Sacra Scripturae invicem Discrepantium:—Disputatio adversus Invocationem Sanctorum:—Annotationes in Jonam. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Meursius, Athene Batava. (B. P.)

Polychronius, bishop of Apamea, and brother of Theodore of Mopsuestia, was one of the most prominent exegetes of the school of Antioch in the 4th century. Of his life nothing further is known. He wrote commentaries on Job, Daniel, and Ezekiel. Of his commentary on Daniel we have a great many fragments. He explains the book as referring to Antiochus Epiphanes, and not to the anti-Christ; in the fourth monarchy he sees the Macedonian empire, and in the ten heads the diadochai. He everywhere contends for the historical sense and opposes the allegorical interpretation, as well as the theory of a twofold sense. Though he was never formally condemned, yet he was nevertheless considered a heretic. See Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v., but more especially Bardenhewer, Polychronius (Freiburg, 1879), and Möller's review, in Schürer, Theol. Literaturzeitung, 1879, col. 255 sq. (B. P.)

Polykrates, bishop of Ephesus, A.D. 196, is known in Church history by his opposition to the Roman bishop, Victor, in the famous Paschal controversy (q. v.). Eusebius has preserved Polykrates' letter of protest, which is given in English by Schaff, History of the Christian Church (N. Y. 1883), ii, 216 sq. See also Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. v, 24 (ed. Heinichen, i, 250 sq.); Ceillier, Hist. des Aut. Sacr. et Eccles. ii, 203 sq.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Pontanus, Heinrich, a Protestant theologian, who died at Utrecht, Sept. 5, 1714, doctor and professor of theology, is the author of, De Sale Sacrificiorum:—De Ritu Merionis in Baptismo. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 630. (B. P.)

Pontanus, Jacob, a Jesuit, was born at Brück, Bohemia, in 1542, and died at Augsburg, Nov. 25, 1626, professor. He edited Cyriilli Alex. Comment. in Duodecim Prophetas Minores, Græce et Latine cum Notis (Ingolstadt, 1607). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 889; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Poole, George Atcliffe, an English theologian, was born in 1809. He was a scholar of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and took his degree in 1831. After holding several curacies and a benefice at Leeds, he settled permanently in Northamptonshire, first as vicar of Welford, from 1843 to 1876, and then as rector of Winwick, from 1876 to 1883. Poole, who died Sept. 25 of the latter year, ranked as one of the leading English authorities on ecclesiastical architecture. He published a variety of sermons and theological works, including an account of the Life and Times of St. Cyprian (1840). His chief works, however, related to ecclesiology. In 1842 appeared Appropriate Character of Church Architecture:—Churches, their Structure (1845):—History of Ecclesiastical Architecture in England (1848); in conjunction with Mr. J. W. Hugall, he issued an account of the Churches of Scarborough, Filey, and Neighborhood, and Guide to York Cathedral. Poole's last work was History of the Diocese of Peterborough, for the series of Diocesan Histories, in the course of publication by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. (B. P.)

Popo Version of the Scriptures. The Popo or Dahomey is spoken at Dahomey, between the Volta and Lagos. A translation of Matthew and Mark was made by the Rev. T. J. Marshall, a native minister, and printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society at London in 1884. Other parts of the New Test. are now being translated. (B. P.)

Porter, Herschel S., D.D., a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, was born in Butler County, Ky., Feb. 12, 1816. After studying at various academies, he was licensed to preach in May, 1835, and in September, 1837, was ordained at Glasgow, Ky. He spent about four years as an itinerant in Kentucky, travelled also for some time as an agent for Cumberland College; then served a year as pastor at Fayetteville, Tenn.; subsequently made an extensive preaching tour, passing through most of the Southern States, returning to Kentucky in 1843. He spent several months of that year in Western Pennsylvania, then went to Philadelphia to organize a congregation, and remained there until the spring of 1851. In the fall of that year he settled in Memphis, Tenn., and labored there until the latter part of 1855. He died there Oct. 5 of the same year, professor of natural history in the Memphis Medical College. In 1853 he was moderator of the General Assembly. Dr. Porter was devoted to science, and was proficient in astronomy and geology. He published a series of Astronomical Sermons, 400 pp.:—The Atonement:—and a work on the Foreknowledge and Decrees of God. See Beard, Biographical Sketches, 1st series, p. 307.

Porter, Noah, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born Dec. 15, 1781, at Farmington, Conn. After his graduation he taught for some time, and then studied theology; was ordained over the Congregational Church in his native town, Nov. 5, 1806, where he had a long and successful ministry. From 1823 to 1862 he was a member of the corporation of Yale College, and was long a member of the prudential committee. He died at Farmington, Sept. 24, 1866. A number of his occasional discourses were published, and among them A Half-Century Discourse, preached Nov. 12, 1856. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1867.

Porterfield, John, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Glasgow in 1571 and 1572. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 260.

Portuguese Version of the Scriptures. By way of supplement, we add the following: The first New Test. of Almeida was printed at Amsterdam in 1681; a second or revised edition was published at Batavia in 1698, and another again at Amsterdam in 1712. In 1744 were published at Tranquebar the books of Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Canticles, and in 1751 followed the four greater prophets; the first three of which were translated by Almeida, and the fourth (Daniel), by C. F. Walther, missionary at Tranquebar. A second edition of the entire Old Test. was published at Batavia in 1748. In this edition a version was given of the books left untranslated by Almeida, by Jacob op den Akker, one of the Dutch missionaries at Batavia. Between 1721 and 1757 two revised editions of the Pentateuch and of the Psalms, two revised editions of the New Test., and one of the four gospels, were printed at Tranquebar and Batavia. Another edition of the Old Test. was printed at the latter place between 1783 and 1804, and no further editions appear to have been given of this version until it was republished by the British and Foreign Bible Society.

A Catholic Portuguese version of the entire Scriptures, from the Vulgate, was published in twenty-three volumes, with annotations, at Lisbon, from 1781 to 1788, by Don Antonio Pereira de Figueiredo, a Portuguese ecclesiastic. An edition containing his latest corrections was commenced at Lisbon in 1794, but was not completed till 1815. On account of the numerous corrections, this edition may be regarded as a new version.

A third translation of the Scriptures was accomplished by the Rev. Thomas Boya, at the expense of the Trinitarian Bible Society. This version, based on Almeida's translation, but faithfully made in accordance with the original, was published in London; the New Test. in 1843 and the Old in 1847.

When the British and Foreign Bible Society undertook the publication of the Portuguese Scriptures, the version of Almeida, the only Protestant one, was selected. But this publication was not received as was anticipated, perhaps, because Almeida was a converted

Protestant, but mostly because it was an antiquated version, many of the words being obsolete, and the style not idiomatic. The complaints against this version were laid before the society, and in 1818 an edition of Pereira's version of the New Test. was printed, which was followed by another edition of both the entire Bible and the New Test. in 1821, Mr. Cavalho correcting the press. Another edition of Pereira's New Test. was printed in 1823, and a revised edition of the whole Bible was given in 1824, under the care of Messrs. Da Costa and Green. In 1857 the American Bible Society published a Portuguese New Test., the version used being a translation made in London from the Greek. Of late the British and Foreign Bible Society has undertaken a revision of Almeida's Bible translation, the version and idiom being modernized. This edition was printed in Lisbon in 1874, the text being accompanied with occasional alternative renderings, and with the most important references from the Old to the New Test. The orthography and style have been modernized, and the translation has been compared with the original throughout by the society's editorial superintendent, who has been assisted by competent natives in completing the edition. The same society published, in 1879, an edition of the Portuguese Bible of Figueiredo, with alternative readings from the Hebrew and Greek, under the care of the Rev. Robert Stewart and the editorial superintendent. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1885, we learn that steps have been taken, in connection with the American Bible Society, for the formation of translation committees in Spain and Brazil for the production of a new version of the Scriptures, which will be acceptable on both sides of the Atlantic. (B. P.)

Porubasky, GUSTAV, a Protestant theologian, was born at Presburg, March 18, 1812. He received his classical and theological training at the lyceum of his native place, which at that time was one of the most prominent Protestant schools of Austro-Hungary. To continue his studies he went, in 1833, to Vienna, and two years later to Berlin. In 1837 he was called as pastor of the Germano-Slavic congregation at Tyrnau, and in 1840 he accepted a call to Vienna. In this important position he developed all his faculties for the benefit of the Church, school, and mission, and his efforts were acknowledged by the Vienna faculty, which honored him in 1871 with the doctorate of theology. He died July 17, 1876. He published, Evangelische Kanzelcoeträge (Vienna, 1833):—Festandachten über das Leiden und Sterben Jesu Christi (1854):—Jacobus, der Zeuge vom lebendigen Glauben (1861):—Die Rechte der Protestanten in Oesterreich (1867). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. ii, 1005; Roskoff, Zur Erinnerung an Dr. Gustav Porubasky (Vienna, 1876). (B. P.)

Possinus, PIERRE, a French Jesuit, was born at Narbonne in 1590. He was an excellent Hebrew and Greek scholar, and died at Rome towards the end of the 17th century. He published, Thesaurus Asceticus, etc. (Paris, 1684):—Collationes Isidorianæ, etc. (Rome, 1670):—Nili Opera (1639):—Nili Epistolæ (1657), etc. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 878, 880, 881, 896, 897, 898; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Postmillenarians. See PREMILLENARIANS.

Potrimpos, in Lettish mythology, was a chief deity of the Lithuanians and ancient Prussians before the occupancy of the country by the Germans, being the second person in the Northern trinity, which consisted of Perkunos, Potrimpos, and Pikolloa. He was the god of victory in war, and in peace the giver of fruitfulness, of blessing, and of domestic felicity. His image stood at Romowe. It represented a friendly, laughing youth. As Perkunos was a god of the warming and destructive fire, so Potrimpos was a god of the fructifying and destructive water. Ears of corn and wheat were offered to him, and his head was decorated with field products. Many children were also burned as sacrifices to him. In a large brass urn a snake was kept and fed in honor of him; therefore the snake was always a sacred animal among the Prussians. It seems possible that Potrimpos was a female deity, and the wife of Donnerer—at least, some modern writers affirm this. Perhaps this was the mother of the gods, whom Tacitus mentions as worshipped among the Æsthyans.

Potter, LOUIS JOSEPH ANTOINE DE, a Belgian writer, was born at Bruges in 1786, and died at Brussels in 1859. He published, Considerations sur l'Histoire des Principaux Conciles, etc. (Brussels, 1816; Paris, 1818, 2 vols.):—Esprit de l'Église, etc. (Paris, 1821, 6 vols.). These two works were republished under the title Histoire Philosophique, Politique et Critique du Christianisme et des Églises Chrétiennes (ibid. 1836-37, 8 vols.), and an abridged edition, entitled Résumé de l'Histoire du Christianisme (1856, 2 vols.):—Vie de Scipion Ricci, Evêque de Pistoie (Brussels, 1825, 3 vols.; Paris, 1826, 4 vols.):—Lettres de Pie V. sur les Affaires Religieuses de Son Temps en France (1827):—Catéchisme Rationnel (eod.; reprinted by baron de Pounat in 1862). But all of Potter's works, written in the philosophical spirit of the 18th century, were placed on the "Index" at Rome. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 543, 866. (B. P.)

Potton, RICHARD DE, a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of Aberdeen about 1256, and died in 1287. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 108.

Pouchen, LEVIN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Königsberg, Oct. 26, 1594. He studied at the theological university of that city, was in 1621 professor, in 1623 second court-preacher, in 1626 professor of Hebrew, in 1640 doctor of theology, in 1645 attended the colloquy at Thoren, and died May 4, 1648. He wrote, Commentar. in Prophetiam Joel:—Explicatio Historie Passionis Christi:—Disputat. de Usu Philosophiæ in Theologia:—De Protevangelio Paradisiaco:—De Resurrectione Jesu Christi:—De Pia et Vera Philosophandi Ratione:—De Ecclesia:—De Baptismo:—De Resurrectione Mortuorum:—De Duabus in Christo Naturis, etc. See Arnold, Historie der königsbergischen Universität; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Poujoulat, JEAN JOSEPH FRANÇOIS, a Roman Catholic writer of France, was born at Fare, Bouches-du-Rhône, in 1800. He studied at Aix, and in 1826 went to Paris, and there published, conjointly with Michaud, the Bibliothèque des Croisades, whom he accompanied in 1830 to the East. Poujoulat died at Paris in 1880. He wrote, Histoire de Jerusalem, Tableau Religieux et Philosophique (1811-42, 2 vols.; 4th ed. 1856):—Histoire de S. Augustin (1844, 3 vols.; 3d ed. 1850, 2 vols.):—Lettres sur Bossuet (1854):—Le Cardinal Maury, sa Vie et ses Œuvres (1855; 2d ed. 1859):—Vie de Monseigneur Sibour, Archevêque de Paris:—Le Père Ravignan, sa Vie, ses Œuvres (1858):—Le Pape et la Liberté (1860):—Examen de la Vie de Jésus de Mons. Renan (1863). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Poulain, NICOLAS, a Reformed theologian, was born at Meaulis, near Luneray, Seine-Inférieure, Jan. 13, 1807. He was pastor of Nanteuil-lès-Meaux in 1832, in 1833 at Havre, in 1857 at Lausanne, and in 1862 at Luneray. Poulain died at Geneva, April 3, 1868. He published, Qu'est-ce qu'un Christianisme sans Dogmes et sans Miracle? (1863):—Réponse à Trois Lettres de M. Albert Rerille (1864):—L'Œuvre des Missions Évangéliques (1867), an apologetical work of great value. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Power, JAMES, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Nottingham, Chester Co., Pa., in 1746. He graduated from Princeton College in 1766, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Newcastle June 24, 1772, and settled in the western part of Pennsylvania. In 1776 he became pastor of Mt. Pleasant congregation, and retained this position until 1817. He died Aug. 5, 1830. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 326.

Præbenda, Richard de, a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of the see of Dunkeld, in the Church of St. Andrews, Aug. 9, 1169. He died in 1173. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 74.

Præbenda, Robert de, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of Dunblane in 1258. In 1268 he, with one other, was sent to protest against the contributions imposed upon the Scotch clergy by Ottobon. He was still bishop here in 1282. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 178.

Prætorius, a name common to several Lutheran theologians of Germany, of whom we mention the following:

1. ANDREAS, who died Dec. 20, 1586, at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, doctor of theology, is the author of Propositiones de Jesu Christo, Dei et Mariæ Filio. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v.

2. CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, born Aug. 30, 1698, at Bertschdorf, Upper Lusatia, studied at Wittenberg, and died in 1738 at Bernstadt, in his native province. He wrote Amanitates Biblicæ, comprising only the Pentateuch (1724—29, 6 parts). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, a. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v.

3. EPHRAIM, was born at Dantzic, March 11, 1657. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1685 preacher at Münsterberg, in 1698 at his native city, in 1705 at Thorn, and died Feb. 14, 1723. He wrote, Exercitationes theol. de Jonæ:—Atheus Proprio Gladio Jugulatus ex Eccl. iii, 18—21;—Bibliotheca Homiletica (Leipzig, 1691—98, 3 parts; 2d ed. 1711—19). Prateolus, GABRIEL, a Roman Catholic theologian of France, was born at Marcoussi in 1511, and died at Péronne, April 19, 1588, doctor of theology. His main works are, De Vitiis, Sectis et Dogmatibus Omnium Hæreticorum (Cologne, 1569):—Histoire de l'État et Succès de l'Eglise (Paris, 1585). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 637; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v. (B. P.)

Pratje, JOHANN HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 17, 1710. He studied at Helmstädt, was in 1735 preacher at Horneburg, his native place, in 1743 at Stade, and in 1749 general superintendent of Bremen and Verden. In 1787 his alma mater honored him with the doctorate of theology. He died Feb. 1, 1791. His writings, comprising almost all departments of theology, are given in Döring, Die gelehrten Kunzelredner, p. 299—305; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 119, 799; ii, 282, 290. (B. P.)

Pratt, James, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector in Portland, Me, for several years prior to 1858; then of the Church of the Covenant, in Philadelphia, Pa., where he remained until 1860, when he took charge of Trinity Church, Chicago, Ill. About 1864 he left that parish, and in 1866 was residing in New York city; in 1868 he removed to Philadelphia as the financial secretary of the Evangelical Knowledge Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church. During several years he resided in Philadelphia without assuming the duties of the regular pastorate, until 1873, when he became rector of St. Philip's Church, in that city. He died Jan. 17, 1874, aged sixty-five years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

Pratt, John, D.D., a Baptist minister and educator, was born in Windham County, Conn., Oct. 12, 1800. After spending a few years in Columbian College, he graduated from Brown University in 1827. For a short time he was a professor in Transylvania University, Ky., and then accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church in New Haven, Conn. In 1831, for six months, he had charge of the South Reading, Mass. (now Wakefield), Academy, and then was invited to preside over the Granville, O., Literary and Theological Institution. In 1837 he resigned, and accepted the professorship of ancient languages in that institution, and held this position, with occasional interruptions, for twenty-two years (1837—59), when he retired to private life. He died Jan. 4, 1882. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 983. (J. C. S.)

Pratt, Nathaniel Alpheus, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Centre Brook, Conn., Jan. 29, 1796. He graduated from Yale College in 1820, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1823, and was ordained Feb. 25, 1824. From this time till 1826 he labored for the Shrewsbury Church, N. J. From 1827 to 1840 he was pastor of the Church at Darien, Ga. He organized a Church in Roswell, in 1842, where he continued until his death, Aug. 30, 1879. During the time at Roswell he taught, for five years, a boarding-school for boys. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1880, p. 11.

Premillennarians is a popular designation of a class of theologians who understand "the first resurrection," spoken of in Rev. xx, 5, as predicting a separate and literal revivification of the saints previous to the millennium, and their personal reign with Christ on earth during that period, in opposition to the usual or post-millennarian view, which explains it in a figurative and spiritual sense. Among the advocates of the premillennial scheme have been counted, with more or less reserve, such eminent names as those of Mede, Jurieu, Daubuz, Sir Isaac Newton, archbishop Newcome, bishops Newton, Horsley, and Heber, doctors Gill, Toplady, Bengel, Dörner, Nitzsch, Delitzsch, Van Oosterzee, Hofmann, Aubelen, Ebrard, Rothe, Lange, Christlieb, Luthardt, Gausson, Godet, Trench, Ellicott, Ryle, Hoare, Tregelles, Elliott, Alford, Bickersteth, Bonar, Tyng, Lord, and many other learned and pious divines, especially among Protestants, while the great majority of scholars and writers of Christendom, in all ages and denominations, have been ranged on the opposite, or post-millennial side, of whom we need mention only, among moderns, Whitby, Faber, Brown, Barnes, Hengstenberg, Stuart, and Wordsworth. The history of the Chiliasitic doctrine, both Jewish and Christian, is well summarized in the Speaker's Commentary, excursus at the end of Rev. xx. See RESURRECTION, THE FIRST.

Preston, WILLIAM, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Woodbury, Conn., Aug. 26, 1801. He graduated from Yale College, was first a clerk in New York city, then studied theology in Alexandria, Va., was tutor in Kenyon College for a year, and on Oct. 12, 1828, was admitted to deacon's orders by bishop Chase of Ohio. He began his ministry in the town of Worthington, but soon removed to Trinity Church, Columbus, where he remained for twelve years. In 1841 he accepted a call from the parish of St. Andrew's, in Pittsburgh, Pa., where he continued ten years. He was then called to his former parish in Columbus, but, owing to ill-health, removed some four years later to Christ Church, Bridgeport, Conn., where he labored until 1856, when he went back to his old charge in Pittsburgh. In 1853 he resigned this post, and after a time removed to Bedford, Pa., where he was rector of St. James's Church. He died there, April 25, 1875. See Obit. Rec. of Yale College, 1875.

Priapus, in Greek mythology, was the son of Bacchus and Venus. The angry Juno touched the body of the pregnant Venus so that she gave birth to a hideous child with unnaturally large genital organs. The older writers do not know him. He was worshipped as the god of country fruitfulness, and his statues were placed in gardens.

Price, THOMAS, LL.D., an English Baptist minister, was born at Bristol, April 21, 1802. He was converted at fifteen, and baptized in Broadmead Chapel by Dr. Ryland. In 1820 he studied in the Bristol Academy, and afterwards at the Glasgow and the Edinburgh universities; was ordained in 1824 copastor of the Devonshire Square Church, London, and in 1826 became pastor. He delivered popular lectures, which he published in two volumes in 1836, with the title, A History of Protestant Nonconformity. He resigned his pastorate the same year, and became one of the founders of the Anti-State-Church Association, now the Liberation Society; he was appointed treasurer, and was one of the society's most zealous advocates. A disease in his throat utterly incapacitated him from public speaking, so he devoted his energies to the founding of the Dissenters and General Fire and Life Assurance Company. He also became proprietor and editor of the Eclectic Review, which he conducted for nineteen years. In 1848 he became a confirmed invalid, and died May 29, 1867. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1868, p. 125.

Priohard, JOHN, D.D., a Welsh Baptist minister, was born near Amlwch, Wales, in March, 1796. He pursued his studies in the College of Aberystwyth, and was ordained as pastor of the Church at Llangollen, which was his only settlement. Through his exertions a college was established in the place where he resided, in 1862, for training young men for the ministry, of which he was for a time the president. He died Sept. 7, 1875. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 939. (J. C. S.)

Pries, a name common to several Lutheran theologians.

1. JOACHIM HEINRICH (1), was born Nov. 12, 1714, at Rostock, where he began his theological studies, which he continued at Jena. At the university of his birth-place Pries commenced his academical career in 1739. In 1745 he was appointed professor, in 1749 he took the degree of doctor of theology, and died Aug. 1, 1763. He is the author of, De non Consummatis Patribus Veteris Testamenti ad Dictum Pauli Ebr. xi, 39, 40 (Rostock, 1749):—Quo Sensu Eternitas Dei Fixa sit Momentum? (1752):—De Jona, Christi Typo (1753):—De Præexistentiæ Dei Ante Abraham (1755):—De Prophetis et Apostolis (1757):—De Infalibilitate Apostolorum (1760), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.

2. JOACHIM HEINRICH (2), son of the preceding, was born at Rostock, Sept. 24, 1747. He studied at the universities of his native place and Jena. For some time preacher at Ribnitz, he was appointed professor of theology at Rostock in 1779, took the degree of doctor of theology in 1791, and died Oct. 24, 1796. He wrote, Progr. in Deut. xviii, 15 (Rostock, 1779):—Sapientia Redemptoris in Apparitionibus Post Resurrectionem (1780):—Natura Jesu Christi Divina (1782):—Mortuorum Resurrectio Veteris Fædere non Incognita (1783):—De Personis quibus Epistola ad Galatas Scripta est (1786):—De Morte Christi Vicaria (1788):—De Numero Paschatum a Christo Post Baptismum Celebratorum (1789). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.

3. JOHANN GABRIEL, who died at Güstrow in 1788, rector, wrote, Progr. in Genes. xli, 43 (Rostock, 1754):—De Divina Legum Mosaicarum Præstantia (1755):—De Divina Legum Mosaicarum Indole (1756):—De Divina Lege, etc., Warburtono Opposita (1757):—De Israelitarum Theocratia Præstantia (1759):—De LXX Interpretibus (1768). Prime, SAMUEL IRENÆUS, D.D., an eminent Presbyterian divine, son of Dr. N. S. Prime, was born at Ballston, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Nov. 4, 1812. He graduated from Williams College in 1829, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1835; was ordained the same year as pastor at Ballston Spa, in 1837 assumed the same relation at Matteawan, but on account of failing health resigned in 1840, and became editor of the New York Observer; in 1841 one of the secretaries of the American Bible Society; in 1849 editor of the Presby- terian, but the next year resumed the editorship of the Observer, with which he remained connected until his death, July 18, 1885. Dr. Prime was a fine scholar, a genial Christian, and a facile writer. Besides numerous anonymous works, he published many popular writings, the chief of which are enumerated in Allibone's Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v., the most important being travels and biographies, and several volumes on prayer.

Prindle, CYRUS, D.D., a noted Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Canaan, Litchfield Co., Conn., April 11, 1800. He was converted in 1816, licensed to preach in 1821, and the same year joined the New York Conference, was appointed to the Plattsburgh Circuit, and thereafter for over half a century continued with but a single month's intermission the active duties of the ministry: twenty-one years in New York, nineteen in Vermont, six in Massachusetts, and ten in Ohio, when he retired in 1877, in the full possession of his bodily and mental powers. In 1843 he was a chief leader in the formation of the Wesleyan Methodist connection in America, which seceded from the Methodist Episcopal Church on account of its alleged connection with slavery; but this being removed by the war of the Rebellion, he returned to his former church in 1867. He died at Cleveland, O., Dec. 1, 1885. Dr. Prindle was a man of great pulpit power and singular purity of character.

Proal, PIERRE ALEXIS, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Newark, N. J., in 1798. He was ordained deacon in New York, Sept. 18, 1818, his first parish being St. John's Church, Johnstown, where he remained for a short time; then he took charge of St. George's Church, Schenectady; in 1836 he became rector of Trinity Church, Utica, a position which he retained until the spring of 1857, when, on account of impaired health, he resigned. He died in that city Sept. 15 following. Dr. Proal was one of the most prominent clergymen of the diocese of Western New York, from its organization held the post of secretary of the convention, and was deputy to the General Convention. He was an earnest and forcible preacher. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1857, p. 465.

Prometheus, in Greek mythology, was the son of the Titan Japetus and the Oceanid Clymene, full of wisdom, art, and might, a friend and companion of the gods, who loved him for his gifts, but in whom he awakened hatred when he doubted their omniscience. He once sought to prove Jupiter's knowledge, and the latter never forgot his audacity, but planned his destruction. Vulcan nailed him to the Caucasus, and the eagle of Jupiter daily came down and devoured his liver, which grew again at night. For a long time he bore these tortures with patience, for he knew a mortal would eventually liberate him. This Hercules did by shooting the eagle. According to others Chiron liberated him. A third myth makes Jupiter himself the liberator of the great Titan. Prometheus was married to Asia, and was the father of Deucalion. According to the ancient story, he provoked the gods by forming a man, and then stealing fire from heaven to animate the form.

Pronier, CÉSAR LOUIS, a Swiss theologian, was born at Plainpalais, near Geneva, Oct. 19, 1834. He was in early life in business in the United States, but returning in 1858, studied theology at Geneva and Berlin. In 1860 he assisted professor Gausson in his academical duties at Geneva, and in 1863 became his successor. In 1870 Pronier founded the Liberté Chrétienne, a journal designed to plead the separation of the Church from the State. In 1873 he went as a delegate to the Evangelical Alliance, held at New York city, never to return again to Geneva. for the "Ville du Havre," upon which he embarked with two other members of the alliance, Antonio Carrasco de Madrid, and Cook of Paris, collided with the "Loch Earn," and went down, Nov. 22, 1873. Pronier published, Questions Indiscrètes Adressées à Mme. Armand Gaud et à M. Ed. Krüger (Geneva, 1857);—La Suisse Romande et le Protestantisme Libéral (Lausanne, 1869);—La Liberté Religieuse et le Syllabus (Geneva, 1870). Przybov, SAMUEL, a Socinian of Poland, who died June 19, 1670, had studied at Leyden, and occupied high offices in his country. But being a Socinian, he had to leave Poland, and went to Brandenburg. He wrote, Cogitationes Sacrae ad Initium Evang. Matth. et Omnes Epistolae Apostolicas (Amsterdam, 1692 fol.);—Vita Fausti Socini (1686), etc., to be found in Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum. Psellus, MICHAEL, one of the most famous Byzantine writers of the 11th century, was born about the year 1020 at Constantinople. He studied at Athens, and held for many years the first chair in philosophy in his native city. The emperor Constantine Ducas appointed Psellus tutor to the imperial princes, and when Michael Ducas, his former pupil, died, in 1078, Psellus retired to a monastery, where he died in 1106. On account of his many writings Psellus was styled πολυγράφωτος. His principal works are, De Omnisfaria Doctrina 167, διασκαλία παντοδασία, a metaphysical exposition of the fundamental ideas of all science;—De Dæmonum Operatione περί ενεργητίας δαιμόνων, a dialogue, edited by Boissonade (Paris, 1838), and of special interest for the study of the sect of the Euchites. A comparison between the ancient Christian and Attic orators is contained in Charakteres SS. Gregorii Theologi, Basilii Magni, Joh. Chrysostomi, Gregorii Nysseni. All of Psellus's works are found in Migne, Patrologiæ Græca, vol. cxxii. See Leo Allatius, Diatriba de Psellio (Paris, 1864; reprinted in Migne). Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament. After a careful examination of the scope of the Biblical canon, the ancient Church divided the mass of Biblical literature, in the widest sense of the word, into three classes: 1, the canonical and inspired; 2, the non-canonical, but on account of their long use, worthy of being read in the churches (ἀντιλεγόμενα and ἀναγιγνωσκόμενα, ἐκκλησιαζόμενα), and, 3, the other books of a Biblical character in circulation (Biblical name in the title, a Biblical form, Biblical contents, but differing greatly in spirit and truth from the canonical books), called apocryphal, or such as should be kept secret (ἀπόκρυφα). Virtually the same books which the ancient Church called apocrypha are embraced under the name Pseudepigrapha by the Protestant Church. Since, after the example of Jerome, the non-canonical books of the Old Test. received the name apocrypha, it became necessary to find a new one for the third class. The name ψευδεπιγραφαί is, indeed, taken only from a single and outward mark, namely, the spurious character of the author's name which they bear. It is neither sufficiently comprehensive, nor does it distinguish sufficiently this class of writings from the antilegomena; nor is it applicable to all the writings of the third class. For many reasons, however, it is probably the best term that could be found.

As there is an Old and a New Test., so likewise there are pseudo-epigrapha of each, all writings that claim either to have been written by or to treat of Old-Test. personages, whether these writings are of Jewish or Christian origin, being called pseudepigrapha of the Old Test.; and those writings which pretend to be gospels, acts of the apostles, epistles of apostles, and revelations under a New-Test. name, being termed pseudepigrapha of the New-Test. The latter class might probably be better called apocrypha of the New Test. (in the old sense of the word).

In the following the pseudepigrapha of the Old Test., those that are extant as well as those of which only fragments are preserved, or which are only known by name, will be treated. We premise a few remarks on the origin and development of this whole class of literature. The rapid growth and spread of pseudepigraphic literature among the Jews and Christians in the last century before, and the early centuries after, Christ, is a peculiar phenomenon, for which other nations have only distant analogies; and it is all the more remarkable, because such writings are in direct contradiction to the duty of strict truthfulness demanded by both Mosaism and Christianity. That these books were used only in sectarian circles cannot be proved. It is true that heretics in early days of the Church frequently adopted this method of promulgating their errors, but this was in the period of the decay of this literature, and we must remember, on the other hand, that, in the course of the centuries during which it flourished, it generally was employed for honorable and usually noble purposes, and by members of the orthodox Church. There is no doubt that their origin is not to be explained as an imitation of the secret books in possession of the priests of the Gentile temples, but that they are the outgrowth of the peculiarity and life of the Jewish congregation, and were then transferred to the Christian Church. Above all, it must be remembered that it was the custom of Jewish writers not to prefix their names to their productions, as these were written for the benefit of the congregation, not for the author's glorification. Different was the practice with the prophets, who, with their names, guaranteed the truth of the revelation. Thus the names of the authors of nearly all other books have been hidden from posterity. This custom of omitting the author's name explains, to some extent, the origin of writings under a strange name. The other weighty reason lies in the inner rupture in the spiritual life of the Jews, which began before the captivity, but showed itself in great potency in the first centuries of the new Jerusalem. With the ruin of the old political and religious organization, and the sufferings under heathen supremacy, the freedom of the national spirit was also broken, the Holy Spirit of revelation withdrew, the state of affairs and the teachings of former days became decisive for the new period; and as all this led to the formation of a canon in the first centuries after the exile, it also increased the reverence for the old history, the old persons and writings, so much, that these ruled and decided the whole spiritual life of the people. The examination, study, and application of the sacred writings were the fundamental objects of these times. Although, through association with other nations and educational forces (Persians, Greeks, Romans), and through a more systematic and deeper investigation of the old books, new knowledge and aims were born, and although, in extraordinary and dangerous times, prominent men felt themselves called upon to speak to the congregation, yet the lack of personal influence always induced such authors to put their thoughts and words into the mouth of some pious man of antiquity, and conform the shape and style of their writings to those of the Old Test. A thorough acquaintance with these latter facilitated the application of their contents to later circumstances. Such revivification of ancient persons, which makes them the bearers of later thoughts, was common to all literature; and it was but one step further to ascribe a whole book to them. In many respects this kind of literature can be compared with the dramatic works of other nations; but to call it intentionally fraudulent is hardly to be justified, for the multitude of such books shows that the knowledge of their late origin was constantly present to the minds of the readers. Yet the danger of leaving a false impression, at least in the minds of the less cultivated part of the congregation, although for the contemporaries comparatively small, was constantly growing with time, especially when Christianity brought these later spiritual productions of the Jews to nations who did not understand them. The opposition of the early Christian Church against such books can thus be easily understood, but theological science must investigate, and make all possible use of them. The pseudepigraphical form was chiefly adopted for the purpose of instruction, exhortation, and consolation in the great trials and troubles of post-exilic days. What the prophets had been for the past, the later writings were intended to be for the present, by the prophetic character which they assumed. Most of the pseudepigraphical works are prophetic in their nature, some also apocalypses, in imitation of the book of Daniel.

Besides the pseudepigraphical literature, the so-called haggadic midrash, as we find it in the later Targumim, Midrashim, and Talmud, as well as in the Pseudepigrapha, was especially cultivated.

With the rise of Christianity, a new element was introduced into this literature, and contributed to its growth and development, not through the Essenes, as modern Jewish writers would have it, but through the Judaizing sects and the gnosticism arising from them, especially in Asia Minor and Egypt. In the hands of the sects and heretics they later became instruments for dangerous purposes, which resulted in the antagonizing attitude of the Church. The number of Jewish and Christian pseudepigrapha was undoubtedly very large. Even in the apocalypse of Ezra (4 Ezra xiv, 46 Lat., xiv, 51 Ethiop.), seventy apocryphal writings are distinguished from the twenty-four canonical books, which, however, is probably a round number that became authoritative for later times. It is probable that those preserved are the best of their class. Of many we have only the titles, or short extracts in the Church Fathers. The last decades have discovered some that were regarded as lost, and the future may yet furnish us others. They have more than a passing interest, they have historical value, because they were the popular literature of their day. According to their contents, the pseudepigrapha may be divided into different classes, viz.:

I. LYRICAL POETRY. To this class belong:

1. The Psalter of Solomon (q. v.). By way of supplement to the literature we add Pick, The Psalter of Solomon (Greek and English, in the Presbyterian Review, October, 1888), and an art. by Dean in the Expositor (Lond. December, 1883).

2. A pseudepigraphon of Δαβὶδ, mentioned in the Const. Apost. vi, 16. Whether this is Psa. cii of the Greek Bible, or a larger, independent work, cannot now be decided.

II. PROPHETIC WRITINGS. Under this head we enumerate:

a. The so-called Apocalypses or Revelations. This is the name assigned to those books of fictitious prophecy which, after the spirit of prophecy had departed from Israel, were written, in the manner of genuine prophetic books, to solve the problems suggested by the fate and sufferings of the people. They seek a solution of the intricacies of the present in predictions of the glory of the future. Accordingly, they do not imitate the old prophets in their chief peculiarity, namely, to counsel and warn the people on account of their sins, but they undertake a subordinate office, that of foreseeing and foretelling the future, their chief object, while they nevertheless endeavor to erect their prophetic building on the foundation of the inspired seers. The chief contents of these revelations are the Messianic times in their relation to the present time and circumstances. Not that the fact that the Messianic time would come, but when and how, was the question for the waiting congregation. The books that seek to answer these questions are called apocalypses. Their contents are most varied and peculiar, their explanation manifold and strange; the topics discussed all referring directly or indirectly to the kingdom of God, and the future of the chosen people; their style enigmatical and highly figurative. A portion of these apocalypses have been treated by Lücke, Einführung in die Offenbarung des Johannes (2d ed. Bonn, 1848); Hilgenfeld, Die jüdische Apokalyptik (1867); Langen, Das Judenthum in Palästina zur Zeit Jesu (1866); Schürer, Lehrbuch der N. T. Zeitgeschichte (1874; 2d ed. with the title, Gesch. des jüd. Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, 1886).

3. The Enoch and Noah Writings, combined in the Book of Enoch (q. v.). We add, by way of supplement to the literature, Drummond, The Jewish Messiah (Lond. 1877), p. 17 sq.; The Book of Enoch, in the British and Foreign Evangelical Review (Lond. July, 1879); Bissell, The Apocrypha of the Old Testament (New York, 1880), p. 665 sq.; Schodde, The Book of Enoch Translated, with Introduction and Notes (Andover, 1889); Laurence, Book of Enoch the Prophet, translated, with Text corrected by his Latest Notes, with an Introduction by the Author of Evolution and Christianity (Lond. 1888); Enoch's Gospel, in the Expositor, May, 1884; Dictionary of Christian Biography (ed. Smith and Wace), s. v. Enoch, Book of.

4. The Aviañhū Mōwōm, Assumptio Moisi (q. v.).

5. The Fourth Book of Ezra, see ESDRAS, BOOK OF, and add Gildemeister, Ezra Liber IV, Arabice (Bonn, 1877); Benseley, The Missing Fragment of the Latin Translation of the Fourth Book of Ezra (Cambridge, 1875); Drummond, u. s. p. 84-117.

6. The present Jewish Ezra revelation found an entrance into the Church, but usually with some modifications. In the editions of the Vulgate it has, besides these, long additions in front and at the close. These, in the MSS., are written as separate Ezra books, one of which, at least (chap. I sq.), is of Christian origin, to impress the importance of Christianity upon the stubborn Jews; the other, probably a portion of an independent Jewish work. Both are translations from the Greek.

7. Τὸ λόγιον καὶ ἀνακάλυψις τοῦ ἁγίου προφήτου Ἐσδράμ καὶ ἀγαπητοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, published by Tischendorf, in Apoc. Apoc. (Leipzig, 1866), p. 24-33, from a Paris MS., has no value. On other Ezra literature, see Tischendorf, Studien und Kritiken (1851), part II; Lücke, l. c.

8. Closely related to the Ezra prophecies is the apocalypse of Baruch, published in a Latin translation from a Syriac MS. in the Ambrosiana at Milan, by Ceriani (Monum. Sacra, I, ii, p. 73 sq.), in 1866, and by Fritzsche (p. 664-699), also in Syriac, by the former, in 1871. It is a revelation to Baruch concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, the ensuing captivity, and the second destruction, to which are added visions of the Messianic future. It is allied in contents and style to 4 Ezra, and called forth by the same historical events, but is a later production. The original language is Greek. See Ewald, Göttinger Gelehrten Anzeige, 1867, p. 1706 sq.; Ewald, Geeschichte (3d ed.), vii, 83 sq.; Langen, De Apoc. Baruch Comment. (Freiburg, 1867); Hilgenfeld, Messias Judaeorum, p. 131 sq.; Fritzsche, u. s. p. xxx sq.; Schürer, u. s. p. 542 sq.; Renan, Journal des Savants, 1877, p. 222 sq.; Drummond, u. s. p. 117-132; Kneucker, Das Buch Baruch, p. 190 sq. (Leipzig, 1879).

9. Whether the Pseudepigraphon Baruchi mentioned in the Synopsis Psalms Athanasii is the same as the above is uncertain. We still, however, possess a Christian Baruch book, for which see BARUCH, BOOK OF, in the supplement of this Cyclopaedia.

10. Eliae Revelatio et Visio. See ELIAS, APOCALYPSE OF.

11. Ascensio et Visio Isaiae. See ASCENSION OF ISAIAH.

12. An apocalypse or prophecy of Zephaniah is mentioned in the four catalogues of the Apocrypha, and is also quoted by Clemens Alexand. Stromata, v, 11, § 78.

13. An apocryphon of Jeremiah, in Hebrew, used by the Nazarenes, is mentioned by Jerome (see Fabricius, 2d ed. i, 1102 sq.), as the source of the quotation in Matt. xxvii, 9; but this is probably fictitious.

Concerning the apocalypses of, 14. Habakkuk; 15. Ezekiel; 16. Daniel; 17. Zechariah, the father of John the Baptist, we have no further information.

18. An apocalypse of Moses, distinct from the Book of Jubilee (No. 31), and the Assumptio Moisi (No. 4), we know only from Syncellus, Protius Amphil., and others (Fabricius, p. 588), who mention it as the source of Gal. vi, 15.

19. A Lamech book is mentioned in the catalogues of Cotelier and Montfaucon; and

20. The Gnostic Sethites possessed an apocalypse of Abraham (q. v.).

b. Testaments:

21. A διαθήκη τῶν πρωτοπλάστων, according to Fabricius, li, 83, contained the mention that Adam was taken into Paradise when forty days old. It is probably a portion of the Vita Adami (No. 35).

22. The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (q. v.); to the literature must be added Pick, The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, in the Lutheran Church Review (Philadelphia, July, 1845); Schnapp, Die Testamente der zwölf Patriarchen (Halle, 1854).

23. An apocryphon, τῶν τριῶν πατριάρχων, is mentioned in the Const. Apont. vi, 16.

24. An apocryphal testament of Jacob, mentioned in the Decretum Gelasii (Fabricius, i, 437, 799).

25. A προσευχὴ ἰωσήφ, "prayer or blessing of Joseph," is frequently mentioned, and is also counted among those read (παρ' Ἑβραίων) by Origen and others (Fabricius, i, 765-766). It seems to have been strongly cabalistic.

26. A διαθήκη Μωσίου is mentioned in the four catalogues and in the Catena of Nicephorus, i, col. 175.

27. Concerning the διαθήκη Ἰλίου, Asc. Jes. cap. 1-5, see No. 11.

28. The testaments of Adam and Noah are portions of the Vita Adami (No. 35).

c. Other books concerning the Prophets:

29. In the acts of the Nicene synod (Fabric. i, 845) mention is made of βιβλος λόγων μυστικῶν Μωσίου. What book is meant is uncertain. The later Jews had a work, Petrat Moise, the death of Moses.

30. Liber Eldad et Medad is mentioned in Pastor Hermas, i, vii, 3, 8, and cited as the holy writings generally are; later authorities mention it as an apocryphon of the Old Testament.

III. BOOKS ON HISTORICAL MATTERS AND HAGGADIC WRITINGS. These include:

31. The Book of Jubilees (q. v.). To the literature we add Drummond, p. 143-147; Deane, The Book of Jubilees, in the Monthly Expositor, August and September, 1886; Dillmann, Beiträge aus dem Buche der Jubiläen zur Kritik des Pentateuch-Textes (Berlin, 1883, in reports of the Berlin Academy of Sciences); Schodde, The Book of Jubilees (translation, etc., in Bibliotheca Sacra, October, 1885, etc.).

32. Jannes et Mambres treats of the contest between Moses and the Egyptian sorcerers (Exod. vii, 11). Cf. 2 Tim. iii, 8. See Heath, Quar. Statement of the "Palest. Exploration Fund." Oct. 1881, p. 211 sq.

33. Manasseh's conversion (2 Chron. xxxiii, 11) early gave rise to an apocryphon of Manasseh, used both by Christian writers and by the Targum on Chronicles (Fabricius, i, 1000 sq.).

34. A novel based on Gen. xli, 45, we have in Aemath (q. v.).

35. Books of Adam, see ADAM, BOOK OF. To the literature we add, Trumpp, in Abhandlungen der bayrischen Akademie der Wissenschaften (Munich, 1880, 1882); Meyer, Vita Adæ et Evæ, in the same journal (1879); Malan, The Book of Adam and Eve (Lond. 1882).

36. A gnostic writing, called Noria, after the wife of Noah, is mentioned by Epiphanius, Hær. 96.

37. An Eblonitic book, ἀναβιβαστοὶ Ἰακώβου (Gen. xxviii), also mentioned by Epiphanius (Fabricius, i, 437).

On the Jewish Midrashim. See MIDRASH, in this Supplement.

Later, this class of literature was used for worldly and evil purposes, and stood in the service of quackery, witchcraft, and sorcery. The name of Solomon was, above all others, connected with this kind of works; sometimes, also, that of Joseph and Abraham (Fabricius, i, 1043, 390, 785). See Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. a. v. (B. P.)

Pseudo-Isidorian Decretals. See DECRETALS, PSEUDO-ISIDORIAN.

Pufendorf, Samuel, a German historian, was born at Chemnitz, Saxony, in 1632. He lectured on jurisprudence at Heidelberg and Lund, and finally settled at Berlin as historiographer to the elector of Brandenburg. Pufendorf died in 1694. His principal work is De Jure Naturæ et Gentium (Lund, 1672 and often; transl. into German, English, and French). Though essentially only an elaboration and systematization of the ideas of Grotius, it forms the foundation of the modern conception of the doctrine of natural and international rights. Previously that doctrine had been based on the decalogue and developed in accordance with the idea of the justice of God. But Pufendorf emancipated the natural law from theology, without opposing the dogmas of the latter, because he recognised in religion the means of realizing the right and God as its author. Pufendorf's work attracted great attention, but also met with much opposition; indeed, Buddeus and Wolff were the first who fully recognised it. Among his other works, his De Habitu Religionis Christianæ ad Vitam Civilem (Bremen, 1687) has also theological interest as a defence of his colleagues' system. In a work published after his death, in 1695, entitled Jus Fœdiale Divinum seu de Consensu et Dissensu Protestantium, he demonstrates the impossibility of uniting the Lutherans and Reformed as long as the latter retain the doctrine of absolute predestination. See Stahl, Die Philosophie des Rechts (3d ed. Heidelberg, 1854), i, 182; Hettner, Literaturgeschichte des XVIII. Jahrhunderts (Brunswick, 1856-62), iii, 83 sq.; Bluntschli and Brater, Deutsches Staats-Wörterbuch, viii, 424-439; Droysen, Zur Kritik Pufendorfs, in Abhandlungen zur neueren Geschichte (Leipzig, 1876); Franck, Geschichte der protestantischen Theologie, ii, 62 sq.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. a. v.; Liechtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v. Pullen (Pulley, Puley, Pulby, or Bullen), RICHARD. See PULLKYN.

Pünjer, GORG CHRISTIAN BERNHARD, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Friedrichsgabekoog, Schleswig-Holstein, June 7, 1850. He studied at different universities, took the degree of doctor of philosophy in 1874, and commenced his academical career at Jena in 1875. In 1880 he was made professor, and in 1883 doctor of theology. Pünjer died May 13, 1885. He is the author of, Die Religionslehre Kant's (Jena, 1874);—De Michaelis Serretti Doctrina Commentatio Dogmatico-historica (1876);—Geschichte der christlichen Religionsphilosophie seit der Reformation (Brunswick, 1880, 1883, 2 vols.);—Die Aufgaben des heutigen Protestantismus (1885). Besides contributing to different encyclopædic works and literary journals, he started in 1881 the Theologischer Jahresbericht, giving an annual review of all theological works published in German, French, English, Dutch, etc., a work indispensable to the student in spite of its many deficiencies. (B. P.)

Punshon, WILLIAM MORLEY, LL.D., an eminent Wesleyan Methodist minister, was born at Doncaster, Yorkshire, England, May 29, 1824. His home influences were decidedly Methodist, and at the age of seventeen he gave himself to Christ. He at once conscientiously devoted himself to a rigid course of self-culture and energetic usefulness, which he continued until his death. In 1840 he removed to Sunderland, where he became an accredited local preacher. In 1843 he began his preparation for the ministry, under that devoted missionary, Benjamin Clough, at Woolwich. He was accepted as a probationer by the conference in 1844, and went to the theological school at Richmond, but did not complete his course, as he was sent to Maidstone Circuit to supply a vacancy. In 1845 he was appointed to the Whitehaven Circuit. In 1867 he was appointed by the conference as its representative to the Canadian Conference, and also elected to its presidency. He arrived in America in 1868, and met the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Chicago the same year, to which he was the representative of the Wesleyan Church. He visited the General Conference of 1872, and his speech before that body at that time was probably by far the best he ever delivered in America. The Wesleyan Church honored him by making him president of the conference in 1874. In 1875 he was appointed one of the secretaries of the Foreign Missionary Society, which position he held until his death, in London, April 14, 1881. Dr. Punshon was undoubtedly the greatest orator which the Wesleyan body of England has produced in this centure. He was by nature poetic, and his style was largely controlled by this tendency, highly ornate, with great beauty and variety of illustration. In early life his discourses were rhetorical rather than logical, but during the latter part of his career his efforts "combined, as far as would be possible, the Ciceronian and Demosthenic styles." These qualities, coupled with a wonderful voice and great personal magnetism, gave him a power over an audience which is seldom equalled. His character as a Christian was specially attractive. "A remarkable fact in the history of Mr. Punshon is that he displayed, in the important positions in which he was placed in later years, very great practical sagacity, and proved that a great semi-poetic orator may be a successful man of affairs." He published several volumes of sermons and addresses, also one of poems. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1881, p. 36; (N. Y.) Christian Advocate, April 21, 1881; also his Biography (Lond. 1881).

Purcell, JOHN BAPTIST, D.D., an eminent Roman Catholic prelate, was born of humble parents at Mallow, County Cork, Ireland, Feb. 26, 1800. In his eighteenth year he left his home for the United States, and in June, 1820, entered Mount St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Md. After three years he received minor orders, and the following year was sent to France to complete his theological course at the seminary of St. Sulpice, Paris. On May 21, 1826, he was ordained priest by archbishop Quelen in the Notre Dame cathedral. Immediately on his return to America he was appointed professor of philosophy at Mount St. Mary's College, and in 1828 he became president of it. On Oct. 18, 1833, he was consecrated bishop of Cincinnati. By his unflagging zeal he saw his large diocese flourishing with its churches and charitable and religious foundations. In 1836 he had his great public debate, which lasted a week, with Alexander Campbell. In 1850 Cincinnati was made an archiepiscopal see, and Purcell and Hughes received the pallium together in the pope's private chapel. Bishop Purcell died at St. Martin's, O., July 4, 1883. He was a man of great vigor, devotion, and labor, naturally generous and charitable. His latter years were made unhappy by the memorable financial disaster which overtook him, and which caused him to retire some time before his death to a monastery. He left debts to the amount of one million of dollars. He published several volumes, chiefly sermons and biographies. See Cath. Annual, p. 34; Gilmour, Funeral Oration (N. Y. 1883).

Purinton, JESSE M., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Coleraine, Mass., Aug. 12, 1809. He united with the Church at the age of eleven, studied at Hamilton, N. Y., and was ordained in 1834. His pastorates were in his native place; Arcade, N. Y.; Forestville and Mount Moriah, Pa., and at Morgantown, W. Va. For several years he was a missionary in north-western Virginia, and assisted pastors much in times of revival. He died at Morgantown, June 17, 1869. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 950. (J. C. S.)

Purviance, JAMES, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Baltimore, Md., Feb. 19, 1807. He was educated at St. Mary's College and at the U. S. Academy at West Point, subsequently studied law, and graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1835. He was ordained an evangelist by the Presbytery of Louisiana in 1837; served one year thereafter as stated supply at Baton Rouge; at Carmel, Miss., in 1841, and pastor from 1846 to 1854. He was president of Oakland College from 1855 to 1860; resided at Carrollton, La., from 1861 to 1862; at Natchez, Miss., in infirm health, from 1863 to 1871, and died there, July 14, of the latter year. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 90; Nevin, Presbyterian Encyclop. s. v.

Pusey, EDWARD BOUVERIE, D.D., D.C.L., an eminent Anglican divine, son of the late Hon. Philip Bouverie (half-brother of the first earl of Radnor), who assumed the name of Pusey by royal license, was born in 1800. He was educated at Christ Church College, Oxford, where he graduated with high honor in 1822, and the next year was elected to a fellowship in Oriel College. After studying in Germany for two years, he was appointed in 1828 regius professor of Hebrew at Oxford University, a position to which is attached a canonry in Christ Church, and he retained these offices until his death, Sept. 16, 1882. His connection with the Tracts for the Times, and the controversies growing out of them, are detailed under PUSEYISM (q. v.). Dr. Pusey was a High-churchman of the purest morals and the staunchest orthodoxy, and also a scholar of no ordinary character. Besides his doctrinal writings, he published several exegetical works (on the minor prophets and Daniel), and a number of small volumes on Church-history. See his Life, by Bigg (Lond. 1883); Memorial Sermon, by Liddon (ibid. 1884).

Puseyites, a term often applied to the High-Church party in the Anglican Church, from their adherence to the views of Dr. Edward Pusey (q. v.), but repudiated both by him and by them.

Pushtu Version of the Scriptures. By way of supplement we add here the following. The first attempt to produce a Pushtu version of Scripture seems to have been made by Dr. Leyden, who in 1811 furnished the corresponding committee of Calcutta with a translation of the gospels of Matthew and Mark. At his death the translation was continued by the Serampore missionaries, with the aid of some learned natives previously in the employ of Dr. Leyden. In 1819 the New Test. was published at Serampore, and in 1832 the Pentateuch and the historical books of the Old Test. were also issued there. Considering the circumstances under which these versions were made, they were very fair productions, in spite of their deficiencies. A need for a new translation was, however, felt more and more, and efforts were made in that direction. Previous to the mutiny in India, the gospel of John, translated by the Rev. R. Clark, and that of Luke, by captain James, had been placed in the hands of the North India Auxiliary Bible Society. But both were destroyed with the press at Agra, in 1857. Copies, however, were soon ready for publication, to which were added the gospels of Matthew and Mark, and the Acts as translated by the Rev. J. Löwenthal (q. v.). In 1864 the entire Pushtu New Test. was printed, the translation having been made by Mr. Löwenthal. He was not allowed to translate the Old Test. into the Pushtu. Before he had fairly entered upon the duty, he was killed, in 1864. The work of translating the Old Test. was taken up by the Rev. T. P. Hughes, of the Church Missionary Society, in 1873. Besides Mr. Hughes, the Rev. T. J. L. Mayer, also of the Church Missionary Society, has been engaged in translating the Old Test., and, assisted by Quazi Abdur Rahman, he translated the Psalms, which were printed in 1881. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1885 we learn that considerable progress has been made in translation work, both in the Old and New Tests., and preparations are in progress for a revision of the New Test. The bishop of Lahore has arranged to have meetings of the revision committee in Kohat and at Murri, when it is hoped that the different translations will be harmonized under the guidance of the bishop. (B. P.)

Putnam, ISRAEL WARBURTON, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Danvers, Mass., Nov. 24, 1786. He entered Harvard College in 1805, but left in his sophomore year, and graduated from Dartmouth in 1809. He began the study of law; in 1811 united with the Church in Salem, and not long afterwards began the study of theology, graduating from Andover Theological Seminary in 1814. In October of that year he preached at Brookfield and in various other places, and in January, 1815, accepted a call to the First Church in Portsmouth, N. H. Some time after he engaged in a controversy on Unitarianism with Dr. Nathan Parker, pastor of the South Parish Church in Portsmouth. In October, 1835, he was installed pastor of the Old Pilgrim Church, Middleborough, Mass., and continued in that relation until his death, May 3, 1868. See Cong. Quarterly, 1868, p. 317.

Puto (Pooto, Pouto, or Poo-Teon-Shan) is a small rocky island off the eastern extremity of Chusan, coast of China. It is about seventy miles from the mainland, near Ningpo, in latitude $30^{\circ}25'$ north, and longitude $122^{\circ}40'$ east, and is about five miles long and from one to two broad. It is famous in the annals of Chinese Buddhism, as having been devoted to the religious rites and services of that faith for more than a thousand years. It has numerous shrines and temples, and here Chinese Buddhism may be seen in its perfection, its rites being carefully practiced in the great temple.

Pyraeum, a fire temple of the ancient Persians. It was simply an enclosure, in the centre of which was placed the sacred fire, and the building was so constructed that the rays of the sun could not fall on this fire. The first pyraeum was built by Zoroaster, at Balk, in Persia; and thence the sacred fire was conveyed to other fire-temples both in Persia and India. See PARAKES; ZOROASTER.

Pyre (πυρά, from πῦρ, fire), the funeral pile of wood on which the ancient Greeks often burned the bodies of their dead. The body was placed upon the top with oils and perfumes, and in the heroic age it was customary to burn animals and even slaves along with the corpse. When the body was consumed and the pyre burned down, the fire was extinguished by throwing wine upon it, and the bones were collected, washed with wine and oil, and placed in urns.

Pyt, HENRI, a Protestant theologian of France, was born April 5, 1796, at Sainte Croix, canton of Vaud, Switzerland. He studied at Geneva, and in 1818 went to Saverdun, France, where he acted as an evangelist. In 1819 he entered the services of the London Continental Society, and was ordained at London in 1821. He was pastor at Bayonne and Béarn, but most of his time he spent in missionary work at Boulogne-sur-Mer, Versailles, and Paris. Pyt died at the latter place, June 24, 1835. Of his literary work we mention the revision of the New Test. into the French Basque, which he undertook at the instance of the British and Foreign Bible Society. See Guers, Vie de Henri Pyt (Paris, 1850); A. de Montet, Dict. Biogr. de Genève et de Vaud, ii, 844; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Pythia, the priestess of Apollo at Delphi, who gave forth the oracular responses of the god. At first there was only one Pythia, but afterwards there were always two, who alternately took their seat upon the tripod. See ORACLE.

Pythian Games, one of the four great national festivals of the Greeks. They were celebrated on a plain in the neighborhood of Delphi in honor of Apollo, Artemis, and Leto, and on one occasion they were held at Athens. They are said to have originated in a musical contest, which consisted in singing a hymn in honor of Apollo, with an accompaniment on the cithara. The other exercises customary at the Grecian games were subsequently added. Originally they were celebrated at the end of every eighth year, but in the forty-eighth Olympiad they began to be held at the end of every fourth year, and were regularly observed down to the end of the fourth century. Lesser Pythian games were celebrated in many other places where Apollo was worshipped. See GAMES.

Quade, MICHAEL FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 28, 1682, at Zachau, Pomerania. He studied at Wittenberg and Greifswalde; was in 1716 rector of the gymnasium at Stettin, and died July 11, 1757. He wrote, De Dionysio Areopagita Scriptisque eidem Suppositis (Greifswalde, 1708);—De Apostasia a Lutherismo ad Papismum Aeternum Exiliosa (1711);—De Vita Judae Apostoli (eod.);—De Ritu Veterum Vota Solvendi et Nuncupandi Variisque Votorum Generibus (1730). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Quagutl Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. Quagutl is the vernacular spoken by the Indians of Vancouver's Island. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1882 we learn that, at the request of the Church Missionary Society, the gospel of Matthew, translated by the Rev. A. J. Hall, the only European who has studied the Quagutl, has been printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. The same society also published, in 1884, the gospel of John, prepared likewise by Mr. Hall. (B. P.)

Quarles, FRANCIS, an eminent author and poet, was born at Stewards, near Rumford, Essex, England, in 1592. He was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and Lincoln's Inn. He occupied various civil office until the rebellion of 1641 in Ireland, and he died Sept. 8, 1644. Quarles was a man of learning and ability, and the writer of many books in prose and verse, which are admirable for their moral and religious character. The following are a few of his works: Emblems, in five books;—A Feast for Worms, in a Poem on the History of Jonah;—Hadassah, or History of Queen Esther;—The History of Samson;—Job Militant, with Meditations Divine and Moral;—Sion's Sonnets Sung by Solomon the King;—Sion's Elegies Sung by Jeremy the Prophet;—Pantologia, or the Quin-tescence of Meditation:—Divine Fancies, Digested into Epigrams, Meditations, and Observations;—Midnight Meditations on Death;—Manual of Devotion;—Hieroglyphics of the Life of Man;—The Enchiridion, containing Institutions Divine and Moral. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Quetzalcoatl, an idol or god of the Mexicans, particularly worshipped by all persons concerned in traffic. Forty days before the feast of this god, the merchants purchased a well-shaved slave, who during that time represented the deity, spending his time in dancing and rejoicing, and on the day of the festival was sacrificed to the deity at midnight, his heart being first offered to the moon, and then laid before the idol. This deity was worshipped under another name at Cholula, where he was looked upon as the god of the air, the founder of the city, the institutor of penance, and the author of sacrifices. He was represented sitting on a kind of pedestal, habited in a cloak ornamented with red crosses. His devotees drew blood from their tongues and ears to procure his favor; and before going to war sacrificed to him five boys and as many girls of three years of age.

Quichuan Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. Quichua was the predominant language of Peru during the sovereignty of the ancient Incas. It still prevails on the plateau of the Andes, from Quito to Santiago del Estero, and in some districts it is exclusively spoken. Before the year 1880 the Quichuans were entirely without the word of God in their vernacular. At the request of the Rev. F. N. Lett, the British and Foreign Bible Society's agent for Buenos Ayres, the gospel of John was translated by the Rev. J. H. Gibbon-Spilsbury, of the South American Missionary Society, and an edition of one thousand copies was published at the expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

This is the first portion of the word of God translated and published in the Quichuan. (B. P.)

Quinby, Hosea, D.D., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Sandwich, N. H., Aug. 25, 1804. He was converted in 1824, and graduated from Waterville College, now Colby University, in 1832. He became principal of the Parsonsfield Seminary, Me., and having been ordained June 2, 1833, preached habitually during his nearly seven years' connection with the institution. He was one of the editors of the Morning Star, and began to write a history of the Free Baptist denomination, which was published in part in the Quarterly Magazine. For a few years he was pastor and teacher at Meredith village, N. H. Upon the establishment of the Smithville Seminary, afterwards Lapham Institute, in North Scituate, R. I., in 1846, he was appointed its principal, and was very successful in the management of its affairs. Subsequently, as the seminary was greatly embarrassed financially, it was sold to Mr. Quinby, and carried on by him as a private enterprise for several years. For thirty years he did double work as preacher and teacher, and may be said to have been the father of the educational interests of his denomination. In January, 1855, he became, a second time, pastor of the church in Meredith, and resumed his work as a teacher. On Feb. 28, 1857, he entered upon his duties as pastor of the church in Pittsfield, N. H., at the same time having charge of a high-school in the village. His next settlements were at Lebanon, Me., in 1861, and Lake Village, N. H., in 1864. In 1868 he removed to Concord, and devoted himself to literary work, and to his duties as chaplain of the New Hampshire state prison, for several years. His last pastorates were at Nottingham, October, 1872; Pittsfield, January, 1875, and Mellon Mills, in May, 1876, where he died, Oct. 11, 1878. (J. C. S.)

Quinet, Edgar, a French philosophical writer, was born at Bourg, Bresse, Feb. 17, 1803. He studied at Paris and Heidelberg, was for some time professor at Lyons and Paris, and died at Versailles, March 27, 1875. He published, De la Grèce Moderne dans ses Rapports avec l'Antiquité (1830);—De l'Avenir des Religions:—De la Révolution et de la Philosophie:—Des la Vie de Jésus par Strauss (essays written for the Révue des Deux-Mondes and Révue de Paris. His treatise on the life of Jesus was translated into German by Kleine, 1839):—Génie des Religions (1842):—L'Ultramontanisme ou la Société Moderne et l'Eglise (1843; Germ. transl., Leipsic, 1845):—Le Christianisme et la Révolution Française (1846):—Philosophie de l'Histoire de France (1855):—Question Romaine devant l'Histoire (1867):—La Création (1870, 2 vols.). His works were published in 11 vols. (1856-1870). See Chassin, Edg. Quinet, sa Vie et son Œuvre (Paris, 1859); Vinet, Littérature Franç. au Dix-Neuvième Siècle; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Quistorp, Johann Jacob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Rostock, March 19, 1717. He pursued his theological studies at the university of his native place, was in 1743 professor at Kiel, in 1747 court-preacher at Eutin, in 1754 professor at Rostock, and died Dec. 26, 1766. Besides several volumes of sermons, Quistorp published, De Christo Legem et Prophetas non Solvente, sed Implente (Rostock, 1759):—De Sacris Penitentibus Victimis Jansenistarum (1760):—De Recentissima Loci de Angelis Bonis ex Theologia Dogmatica Proscriptione Telleriana (1764). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

R

Rabbah (Josh. xv, 60) is conjectured by Lieut. Conder (Tent Work, ii, 339) to be the present Khurbet Rubba, laid down on the Ordnance Map at five miles northeast of Beit-Jilbrin, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (iii, 360) as consisting of "caves, cisterns, and heaps of stones, ruined walls, bases of pillars and shafts much worn, two lintel stones with crosses, each measuring about seven feet by two and a half feet."

Rabbanism is the name of a school of Jewish doctors in Spain, which flourished for nine generations, covering the period from the beginning of the 11th century to the end of the 15th, after which they succeeded to the Gaons (q. v.). The founder of this school was rabbi Samuel Hallevi, surnamed Haragid, or the prince, who lived in 1027. The last of the line was rabbi Isaac Aboab, of Castile, who left that kingdom after the edict of banishment in 1492, and spent the remainder of his life in Portugal. See SCHOOLS, HEBREW.

Rabbath-Ammon. Some additional particulars respecting Ammán are given by Merrill, East of the Jordan, p. 386 sq.

Rabbith. Tristram (Bible Places, p. 237) thinks this may be the modern Arrabah, which, however, does not lie "in the plain" of Esdraelon, but about two miles southwest of Dothan; while Lieut. Conder suggests (Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, ii, 228) Rāba, a small stone village lying about nine miles southwest of Beisān, and therefore entirely beyond the boundaries of Issachar.

Rabe, Johann Jacob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 16, 1710, at Lindfuhr, near Würzburg. He studied at Altdorf, was in 1741 deacon at Anspach, in 1764 archdeacon, in 1778 pastor and member of consistory, in 1790 general superintendent. Rabe died Feb. 12, 1798. He is best known by his German translation of the Mishna (Anspach, 1760-63, 6 parts), and by his translation of the treatises Berachoth and Peah, according to the Jerusalem Talmud (1777, 1781). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 127; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 212, 523, 524, 525; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Racovian Catechism, a Socinian catechism which was published in Poland in the 17th century. It was prepared by Schmalz, a learned German Socinian who had settled in Poland, and by Moskovzewski, a learned and wealthy nobleman. It derived its name from being published at Racow, a little town in southern Poland, the seat of a famous Socinian school. The catechism was published in Polish and Latin, and afterwards translated into German and English. In 1652 the English parliament declared it to contain matters that are blasphemous, erroneous, and scandalous, and ordered "the sheriffs of London and Middlesex to seize all copies wherever they might be found, and cause them to be burned at the Old Exchange, London, and at the New Palace, Westminster." A new English translation was published in 1817 by Abraham Rees, with a historical introduction. There was also a smaller catechism, drawn up by Schmalz in German, and first published in 1605. See CATECHISM; SOCINIANISM.

Radha, in Hindû mythology, was the first wife of the god Krishna. She was afterwards adored as the goddess of love.

Radulfus, a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of the see of Brechin in 1202. He died in 1218. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 157.

Radulf, a Scotch prelate, was ordained bishop of the see of Galloway in 790. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 272.

Rae, William, a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of Glasgow in 1335, and died in 1367. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 244.

Ragnarokr (Divine twilight), in Norse mythology, is the final destruction of the world, which threatens the Scandinavian deities, the Asas, their treasures, their creations, and also the earth and its inhabitants. The Edda gives the following description of it:

"There will come a winter, called Fimbulweter, in which snow will fall from all sides, with a severe frost and rough winds, whereby the warmth of the sun will be destroyed. Three such winters will succeed each other without a summer intervening. But previous to these there will be three years of bloody war over the whole earth. Brothers will slay each other, and even parents will not spare their children. Then the wolf Skoll will devour the sun, another wolf, Hati, the moon. The stars will disappear from the heavens, the earth will reel, the trees will be torn out by their roots, the mountains fall, and all chains and bands burst asunder. The Fenris-wolf will tear himself loose, the sea boil, because the Midgard-snake will seek the shore. Then also, the ship Naglfar will become loose. It is made out of the nails of human beings. The giant Hrymer is pilot. The wolf Fenris precedes it with open mouth. The Midgard-snake vomits poison, which contaminates the air and the water. In this tumult the heavens will burst, and Muspel's sons come riding, led by Surtur, who is surrounded by fire, and whose sword shines brighter than the sun. When they ride over Bifrost (rainbow bridge) it will collapse. Muspel's sons will come to Fenris and the Midgard-snake. Loke, Hrymer, and all Hrymtuses will join them. Muspel's sons will have their own order of battle. Then Heimdal will blow into the Gjallar horn and wake up all the gods. Odin will ride to Mimer's well to get advice for him and his. The ash-tree Yggdrasil will fall, and everything be full of fear in heaven and earth. The Aes will prepare themselves with the Einherjars and proceed to the plain. Before them will ride Odin with a golden helmet, a good armor, and the never-falling spear Gungnir. He will battle against Fenris. Thor will fight at his side against the Midgard-snake. Freir will combat against Surtur, and will fall. The cause is the lack of a good sword, which he gave to Skirner. The dog Gramr will tear himself loose, causing much misery. He will combat Tyr, and the two will kill each other. Thor will slay the snake, but fall, poisoned by the snake's venom. The wolf will devour Odin, but Vidar will rend open his jaw and pull Odin out. After all this, Surtur will throw fire and burn the whole earth. But then there shall arise out of the sea a beautiful green earth, in which corn will grow. Vidar and Vali will live on the Ida-plain where formerly Asgard lay. There Thor's sons also, Magni and Modi, will appear with the hammer, Mjölner. Hödur, Baldur, and Heiðr will also be there. There will likewise be two human beings, Lif and Lifthrasir, who will become the progenitors of the new race of men."

Rait, John, D.D., a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Aberdeen in 1851. He died in 1855. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 111.

Raith, Balthasar, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 8, 1616. He studied at Tübingen, was there in 1656 professor of theology, and died Dec. 5, 1683, doctor of theology. He wrote, Questionum Anti-Judaicarum Trias de Messia (Tübingen, 1667):—Vadam Talmudicum Quoad Priora Capita Testatum (1658):—De Proselytismo Judaico - Christiano (1666). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Rajmahal Version of the Scriptures. See PAHARI.

Rakkon is thought by Lieut. Conder (Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, ii, 263) to be identical with the present Tell er-Rekket, close to the Aujeh (supposed to represent Mejarkon), and five and a half miles along the shore north of Joppa, where "cisterns and traces of ruins are said to exist under the sand" (ibid. p. 275). Tristram strangely says (Bible Places, p. 51), "Mejarkon and Rakkon have recently been identified with Oyun Kara, in the plain of Sharon, three miles south-east of Joppa." See RAMATH-LEHI.

Raleigh, Alexander, D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Castle Douglas, Jan. 3, 1817, and removed to Liverpool in his youth. He was educated at the Blackburn Theological Academy, which became, during his course, Lancashire Independent College. In 1844 he went to Greenock as pastor of the Congregational Church, and there labored until compelled by declining health to resign. In 1850 he became pastor at Rotherham, and in 1855 of the Elgin Place Church, Glasgow. In 1859 he accepted an invitation from the Church at Hare Court, for which the new chapel at Canonbury had then just been built. The church was greatly blessed under his labors. From a very small number, it was increased to nearly one thousand members. Other churches were established in the neighborhood, and, for a time, a joint pastorate was arranged with Stamford Hill. His last pastorate was at Kensington, begun in 1875, and continued until his death, April 19, 1880. "The work of Dr. Raleigh was of exceptional quality and power, and entered largely into the religious life of the churches. Few ministries have been more fruitful. His preaching was remarkable for the freshness, vigor, beauty, and felicity of his thought and style, but especially for the unwavering belief and fervid affection with which he held and set forth the great evangelical truths" of the gospel. He published four volumes of sermons, entitled, Quiet Resting-Places:—The Story of Jonah:—The Little Sanctuary:—The Story of Esther. His widow has published the posthumous volume, The Way to the City. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 387.

Ralph of Escures, archbishop of Canterbury, was eminent for his literary attainments and for his surpassing affability. The year of his birth is unknown. He was yet very young when he joined his father at St. Martins and became a monk in 1079. In 1089 he served the offices of sub-prior and prior, and in the same year was elected abbot. He remained abbot of Sées, France, for sixteen years. He became bishop of Rochester in 1108, and was elected to the see of Canterbury April 26, 1114, where he remained until his death, Oct. 20, 1122. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, ii, 278 sq.

Ralston, James Grier, D.D., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Chester County, Pa., Dec. 28, 1815. He graduated from Washington College in 1838, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1842, having been licensed meanwhile as a preacher. On account of his weak lungs he was engaged in teaching most of his life, but organized a church at Conshohocken, near Philadelphia, in 1845, and the same year founded the Oakland Female Institute at Norristown, Pa., of which he continued the head, with a period of intermission (1874-77), until his death, Nov. 10, 1880. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 61; Nevin, Presb. Encyclop. s. v.

Ramah of Asher. The Ordnance Map exhibits no name corresponding to this in the required locality except Khurbet Rimeh, which lies six miles and a half from the shore, between Ez-Zib (Eodippa) and Ras en-Nakurah, and is described in the accompanying Memoirs (i, 180) as "heaps of scattered stones; a few cisterns."

Ramah of Benjamin. Er-Ram lies five miles north of Jerusalem, and is "a small village in a conspicuous position on the top of a high white hill, with olives. It has a well to the south. . . . The houses are of stone, partly built from old materials" (Memoirs to Ordnance Survey, iii, 18). The remains in the vicinity are described (ibid. p. 155).

Ramah of Naphtali. Er-Ramieh lies seven miles and a quarter south-west of Safed, and is described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (i, 202) as "a small stone village, containing about one hundred and fifty Moslems, situated on a hill-top in a valley, with a few figs, olives, and arable land; the valley to the west turns into a swamp in the winter, owing to its having no drainage; there are cisterns and a large pool for water supply." "There are several large sarcophagi round this village, and one olive-press" (ibid. p. 255). (See illustration on p. 791.)

Ramath-lehi. For this Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, i, 277) Āyūn Kāra, a name, he says, sometimes given to the springs Āyūn Abu-Mekarib, on the slope of a low hill, seven miles from Beit Atāh, a little way (three miles and a half) north-west of Zorah; and this he thinks represents the ancient En hak-Kore.

Ramath-mispeh is conjecturally located by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 226) at Tibneh, a little west of Jebel Ajlûn, the northerly crest of Gilead. "It is the most conspicuous site in the district, a fine natural fortress on an isolated round mamelon-shaped hill, rising above the wide plateau, and commanding a magnificent view of western Palestine." Merrill argues at length (East of the Jordan, p. 365 sq.) for its identity with Kulat er-Rubad, a few miles south of the above spot.

Ramah of Naphtali. (From Thomson's Central Palestine and Phœnicia.)

Ramath-negeb is regarded by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 17) as probably the present "Kurmeh, south-west of Dhullam, where alone for many miles water is always to be found in plenty, and where the ravine is crossed by a strong dam to retain it. The walls of a fortified town are yet clearly to be traced, with extensive ruins, and it is at the head of the most frequented pass into Palestine from the south-east."

Ramathaim-zophim. Lieut. Conder is inclined (Tent Work, ii, 116) to identify this with Râm Allah, east of Beth-horon, on the west slope of Mt. Ephraim, overlooking the maritime plain but he admits that the connections are very much disputed.

Rambach, Friedrich Eberhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Pfullendorf, near Gotha, Aug. 24, 1708. He studied at Halle, was in 1730 teacher there, in 1734 deacon, in 1736 preacher at Teupitz, in 1740 deacon at Halle, in 1766 member of the upper consistory at Breslau, and died in 1775. Rambach is best known as translator of the works of Sherlock, Roques, Lenfant, Bentley, Saurin, Chatelain, Serces, Doddridge, Kidder, Stackhouse, Watt, Sarpi, and others. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 250, 438, 607, 667, 678, 683; ii, 29; Plitt-Herzog, Reut-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Rambach, Johann Jacob, a Lutheran theologian, was born March 7, 1787. He studied at Halle, was in 1760 rector at Magdeburg, in 1765 at Quedlinburg, in 1774 first preacher there, in 1786 pastor at Hamburg, and died Aug. 6, 1818. He wrote, De A diaphorâ in Utroque Sacramento Obvitiis (Halle, 1768):—De Actionibus Prophetarum Symbolicis (Magdeburg, 1760), besides a number of sermons. See Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner, p. 306-315. (B. P.)

Ramoth-Gilead. Dr. Merrill strongly urges the claims of Jerash as the site of this place (East of the Jordan, p. 284 sq.), but Tristram (Bible Places, p. 837) adheres to es-Sall.

Ramsay, Edward Bannerman, LL.D., a Scottish clergyman and author, was born at Balmain, Kincardineshire, Jan. 31, 1793, and graduated from St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1815. He took orders in the Church of England, and was a curate in Somersetshire for seven years. In 1830 he became minister of St. John's, Edinburgh, and in 1841 dean of the Reformed Episcopal Church of Scotland. He died at Edinburgh, Dec. 27, 1872. His publications include, a Manual of Catechetical Instruction (6th ed. Edinburgh, 1851; 9th ed. 1863):—Sermons for Advent (1850):—Scripture Doctrine of the Eucharist (1858):—Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character (ed.):—Diversities of Christian Character Illustrated in the Lives of the Four Great Apostles (ed.):—Present State of our Canon Law Considered (1859):—Christian Life (1862):—Episcopal Church of Scotland (ed.):—Two Lectures on Handel (ed.):—Christian Responsibility (1864):—Thomas Chalmers, D.D.: a Biographical Notice (1867):—Pulpit Table-talk (1868), and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Ramsey, James (1), a Scotch prelate, was rector of Hamilton, and in 1670 was made dean of Glasgow. He was preferred to the see of Dunblane and to the archiepiscopal see of Glasgow. In May, 1684, he was translated from Dunblane to Ross, and here he continued until the abolition of episcopacy in Scotland in 1688. He died at Edinburgh, Oct. 22, 1696. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 204.

Ramsey, James (2), D.D., an Associate minister, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., March 22, 1771. It is supposed that he commenced his classical studies under his minister, Dr. Anderson, when twenty-five years of age. He was licensed at Buffalo, N. Y., by the Presbytery of Chartiers, in 1803; ordained and installed pastor of the congregation of Chartiers, Sept. 4, 1805, and in 1821 was chosen professor in the Western Seminary, to which office was added the professorship of Hebrew in Jefferson College. In 1842 he resigned his professorship and continued his duties as pastor. He died March 6, 1855. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iii, 77.

Ramsey, Peter de, a Scotch prelate, was formerly a monk of Arbroath, but was bishop of Aberdeen in 1250. He died in 1256. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 107.

Randall, Benjamin, the founder of the Free-will Baptists, was born in 1749, and converted under the preaching of Whitefield. He joined the Baptists, but in 1779 was silenced for holding Arminian views respecting the atonement and the will. He was nevertheless ordained at Durham, N. H., in 1780, by a party of seceders, and disseminated his opinions so successfully that in 1781 he was joined by a company who, in 1751, had seceded on similar grounds in North Carolina, called "Separate Baptists," and thus the Church now called Free Baptists was formed. Randall died in 1808.

Randall, David Austin, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Colchester, Conn., Jan. 14, 1818. He united with the Church in 1827; removed west, and was licensed to preach June 30, 1838; was ordained at Richfield, O., December, 1839, where he was pastor of the Church for five years, during which period he edited a Washingtonian paper, and was an earnest advocate of temperance. He removed to Columbus in 1845, and became one of the editors of the Journal and Messenger. From 1850 to 1855 he was pastor of the Church at Columbus, then spent several years abroad, and on his return published a volume entitled The Handwriting of God in Egypt, Sinai, and the Holy Land. For six years Dr. Randall was corresponding secretary of the Ohio Baptist Convention. He died at Columbus, July 27, 1884. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 955. (J. C. S.)

Randall, George Maxwell, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Warren, R. I., Nov. 28, 1810. He graduated from Brown University in 1835, and from the General Theological Seminary in New York in 1838. Soon after he became rector of the Church of the Ascension at Fall River, Mass., where he remained six years, and then removed to Boston to take charge of the newly constituted Church of the Messiah, where he continued from 1844 to 1866. During most of this time he was the editor of the Christian Witness, the leading organ of the Episcopal Church in New England. He was chosen, in the fall of 1865, missionary bishop of Colorado, Wyoming, and New Mexico, and performed the duties of that office most faithfully for seven years. He died at Denver, Col., Sept. 28, 1878. Bishop Randall published several sermons and tracts.

Randolph, John, D.D., a bishop in the Church of England, was born in 1749. He was the son of Dr. Thomas Randolph, president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, at which college John was educated. After occupying different academical posts and ecclesiastical preferments, he was, in 1790, raised to the see of Oxford, translated to that of Bangor in 1807, and thence to London in 1811. He performed with zeal and assiduity the duties of his function, and died July 28, 1813. His publications were chiefly occasional sermons and charges, and a Latin prælection on the study of the Greek language. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1813, p. 120.

Ranft, Michael, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 9, 1700. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1726 assistant preacher to his father at Droysig, in 1729 deacon at Nebra, and succeeded his father in

1743. In 1749 he was preacher at Beerwalde, Altenburg, and died April 18, 1774. He is the author of, Acta Lipsiensium Academia (Leipsic, 1723-24, 15 parts):—Leben und Thaten Pabst Benedicti XII. (Hamburg, 1743):—Corpus Doctrinae Evangelico-Lutherana (Leipsic, 1754-56):—Commentatio Philologica de Amici Sponsi ad Joh. iii, 29 (1758):—Deutsche Erklärung des ix., x. und xi. Capitels der Epistel Pauli an die Römer (1760), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, a. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 694, 857. (B. P.)

Rapheleng, Francis, a famous Dutch Hebraist, was born at Lanoy, near Ryssel, Feb. 27, 1539, and died at Leyden, July 20, 1597, professor. He wrote, Grammatica Hebraica Libellus (printed in the Antwerp Polyglot, 1569-72):—Compendium Thesauri Sanctae Pagnini Linguae Hebraica (1572):—Varia Lectiones et Emendationes in Chaldaicam Bibliorum Paraphrasin (in the Antwerp Polyglot), and published the Syriac New Test. in Hebrew letters (1575). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 133; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 122; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v. "Ravlenghien." (B. P.)

Rappolt, Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 26, 1615, at Reichenbach, Silesia. He studied at Leipsic, was there professor in 1651, and died Dec. 27, 1676, doctor of theology. He wrote, Observationes in Epistolas ad Titum et Coloss.:—Theologia Aphoristica Sancti Joannis:—De Inspiratione Divina:—De Peccato Originis:—De Gratia Justificationis ad Mich. vii, 18-20:—De Christo Sacerdote Novi Testamenti ad Hebr. ix, 24-26. J. B. Carpzov published Rappolt's Scripta Theologica et Exegetica (1695). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 510; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Rarotongan Version of the Scriptures. By way of supplement, we add that a revised edition of the Rarotongan Bible was printed at London in 1872. The revision was undertaken by the Rev. R. W. E. Krause, who returned to Europe on account of illness. The revisers' chief object was to substitute native words, wherever it was possible, for the foreign words which had been used to a large extent in the version in the first instance. In this labor Mr. Krause was aided by the advice and suggestions of the Rev. G. Gill, who had to complete the latter portion, owing to the alarming and serious illness of the original reviser. From the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1884, we learn that the Rev. W. Wyatt Gill, who has had forty years' experience of the South Sea, is now engaged for the Bible Society Committee on a thorough revision of the Rarotongan Bible, and from the report for 1885 we see that the reviser has reached the close of the New Test. (B. P.)

Rask, Erasmus, a Danish Orientalist, was born Nov. 22, 1807, and died Nov. 14, 1832, at Copenhagen, professor. He is the author of, Der ueldste hebraiske Tidsregning indtil Moyses, efter kilderne paa ny bearbejdet og forsynet med et Karl over Paradiis (Copenhagen, 1828; Germ. transl. by Mohnike, Leipsic, 1836):—Über das Alter und die Echtheit der Zend-Sprache (Germ. transl. by Hagen, Berlin, 1826). Ratisbonne, Alfonso Maria, head of the Roman Catholic religious Society of Zion, at Jerusalem, was born at Strasburg, of a respectable Jewish family, his father being the president of the Israelitish Consistory. According to the Notizia sulla sua Conversione (Venice, 1842), Ratisbonne owed his conversion to the apparition of the Virgin Mary, which took place at Rome, Jan. 20, 1842, in the Church of San Andrea delle Fratte. He became henceforth the devotee of the Virgin, and desired to bury himself forever in a monastery, and to retain in his own breast the secret of the mysterious vision with which he was favored. But he was led to publish what he had seen, for the good of others, and was for some time subsequently the lion of the day. The general of the Jesuits came to visit him, and he was even presented to the pope. In honor of the auspicious event, a three days' annual festival was appointed to be held in the Church of San Andrea delle Fratte. Ratisbonne died May 6, 1884. (B. P.)

Rattoone, ELIJAH D., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1787; was ordained deacon, Jan. 10, 1790; soon after took charge of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.; in 1792 became professor in Columbia College of Latin and Greek, and in 1794 was made professor of Grecian and Roman antiquities; resigned in 1797 to assume the rectorship of Grace Church, Jamaica, L. I., in which position he remained until April, 1802, when he became associate-rector of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, Md. A few years after he resigned this charge, and Trinity Church, in the same city, was built for him, where he ministered until the fall of 1809, when he left Baltimore for Charleston, S. C., having been selected president of the Charleston College. His death occurred there in the summer of 1810, of yellow fever. He was an accomplished scholar, and an eloquent preacher. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 265.

Rätz, JOHANN GOTTLIEB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Zittau, Sept. 29, 1839, teacher at the gymnasium, was the author of, Die höchsten Principien der Schrifterklärung (Leipzig, 1824); Beachtungen über die kantische Religionslehre innerhalb der Grenzen der blossen Vernunft (Chemnitz, 1794); Erläuterung einiger Hauptpunkte in Schleiermachers Glaubenslehre (Leipzig, 1828); Ansichten von dem Natürlichen und Uebernatürlichen in der christl. Religion (1803); Die Nothwendigkeit des Rationalismus und sein Verhältniss zur christlichen Offenbarung zu prüfen (Zittau, 1834); Das Suchen nach Wahrheit (1823), etc. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 108, 284, 305, 366, 372, 378, 405, 481, 505; ii, 238; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. s. v. (B. P.)

Rau, SEBALDUS, a Dutch Orientalist, who died in 1810 at Utrecht, professor, was the author of, Exercitationes Philologicae ad Hubigantii Prolegomena (Leyden, 1785); Diatriba de Epulo Funebris Gentibus Dundo, Ies. xzv., 6-8 (Utrecht, 1747). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 134; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 94, 218, 227. (B. P.)

Raulston, JOHN, a Scotch prelate, was first rector of Cambuslang and sacrist of Glasgow, next provost of Bothwell, and then dean of Dunkeld. In 1444 he was preferred to be royal secretary, and in 1447 keeper of the privy seal. He was consecrated bishop of the see of Dunkeld, April 4, 1448. In 1449 he was constituted lord high-treasurer. In 1451 he was employed in an embassy to England. He died in 1452. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 88.

Rausch, ERNST FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died Sept. 28, 1884, at Renghausen, Hesse, was the author of, Zeugnisse von Christo dem Gekreuzigten (Camel, 1887; 2d ed. 1852); Christliche Predigten zum Vorlesen in der Kirche, und zur häuslichen Erbauung (1840); Handbuch bei dem Katechismus-Unterricht (1865); Die Herrlichkeit des Herrn (1866); Die ungeänderte augsburger Confession erläutert (Dresden, 1872). Raymond, JOHN HOWARD, LL.D., an eminent Baptist educator, was born in New York city, March 7, 1814. He entered Columbia College when he was but fourteen years of age, where he remained until nearly the close of the junior year, when he was "suspended," and, as he always admitted, justly. Subsequently he went to Union College, Schenectady, where, in 1832, he graduated with high honors. On leaving college he studied law for two years in New York and New Haven. When he became a Christian, he pursued his theological studies at the Hamilton Theological Seminary, where he graduated in 1838, and was licensed to preach. For ten years (1840-50) he was professor of rhetoric and English literature in Madison University, and filled the same chair in Rochester University from 1851 to 1855, when he was elected president of the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn, N. Y., and held that position until his election, in 1864, to the presidency of Vassar College. He died at Poughkeepsie, Aug. 14, 1878. See Dr. Edward Lathrop, in The Baptist Weekly, Aug. 22, 1878. (J. C. S.)

Read, THOMAS, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Maryland in March, 1746. He was educated at the old Academy of Philadelphia; in 1768 received license to preach, and began his ministry at Drawyer's Creek, Del.; in 1772 he was installed as the pastor; and in 1798 accepted a call from the Second Presbyterian Church of Wilmington. He resigned this pastoral charge in 1817, and died July 14, 1823. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 801.

Reccard, GOTTFRIED CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Wernigerode, March 13, 1785, and died at Königsberg, Oct. 3, 1798, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, De Neomenia Judaeorum Paschali; —De Fuga Infantis Jesu in Aegyptum. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 155; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. s. v. (B. P.)

Recchi, IMMANUEL HAYIM, a Jewish author of Ferrara, who died at Leghorn in 1743, is the author of מנשר חושב, a treatise on the structure of the tabernacle, the holy vessels, etc. (Venice, 1716); —חזון ציון, a cabalistic commentary on the Psalms (Leghorn, 1742); —חזון עשרי, a commentary on the Mishna (Amsterdam, 1781), etc. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. s. v. (B. P.)

Rechenberg, ADAM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 7, 1642, at Leipsdorf, Saxony. He studied at Leipsic, where he began his academical career in 1666. In 1677 he was professor of languages, and in 1678 commenced his theological lectures. In 1699 he was doctor of theology, and died Oct. 22, 1721. He published, Athenagoras Apologia pro Christianis (Leipsic, 1684); —Athenagoras Liber de Resurrectione Mortuorum (eod.); —Athenagoras Opera Graece et Latine cum Animadversionibus (1688); —Novum Testamentum Graecum cum Praefatione et Libris Parallelis (1691, 1702, 1709); —De Justitia Dei Ultrice (1699); —Augustini Enchiridion ad Laurentium cum Praefatione de Studio Theologico (1705); —Exercitationes in Novum Testamentum, Historiam Ecclesiasticam et Literariam Varii Argumenti (1707; 2d ed. 1714); —Hieroleicon Reale, hoc est Biblio-Theologicum et Historico-Ecclesiasticum (1714); —De Theologia et Philosophia Pugna Apparente (1717). Reclam, PETER CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian, was born at Magdeburg, March 16, 1741. In 1765 he was catechist, and in 1768 preacher of the French congregation at Berlin. He died Jan. 22, 1789. He published, Mémoires pour Servir à l'Histoire des Réfugiés Français dans les États du Roi à Berlin (1782-94, 8 vols.); —Mémoire Historique sur la Fondation des Colonies Françaises dans les États du

Roï (1785):—Pensées Philosophiques sur la Religion (ed.):—Sermons sur Divers Textes de l'Écriture Sainte (1790, 2 vols.). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Rectoral View OF THE ATONEMENT is a phrase expressive of the aspect of the sacrifice of Jesus Christ upon the cross as it bears upon the divine government. While the reconciliation of legal justice with pardoning mercy is indeed thus beautifully exemplified, yet it is a very partial representation of the atonement which would make this the final cause or constraining purpose of it. "That God may be just and yet the justifier of him that believeth on Christ" is truly an important result of the vicarious redemption by the Saviour, but to put it forth as the one grand motive or impulse in the divine mind is to reduce the scheme of salvation to a mere piece of governmental policy, the retrieval of an original blunder, an expedient to remedy a constitutional defect in the divine plan. The atonement would have been equally necessary and equally efficacious had Adam been the sole erring or even the sole intelligent creature in the universe. It was required by the nature of God himself, and is demanded as a full theodicy by the moral sense of the sinner likewise, who is thus "without excuse." Neither the prophylactic nor the curative, the coercive nor the punitive, ends of government are normally involved in it, and except as an exhibition of infinite and sovereign love it is logically abortive. See ATONEMENT, THEORY OF.

Redepenning, ERNST RUDOLF, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stettin, May 24, 1810. He studied at Berlin and Bonn, and commenced his academical career at the latter place. In 1836 he was professor there, and in 1839 went to Göttingen, where, in connection with his professorship, he acted as university-preacher. In 1855 he was called as superintendent to Ilfeld, and died March 27, 1883. He is the editor of Origines de Principiis (Leipzig, 1836), and the author of, Origines. Eine Darstellung seines Lebens und seiner Lehre (Bonn, 1841-46, 2 vols.):—Vorschläge und leitende Gedanken zu einer Kirchenordnung für das protestantische Deutschland (Göttingen, 1848):—Umriss und Bestandtheile einer kirchlichen Lehrordnung (1849):—Christliche Wahrheiten für unsere Zeit (1850). Rees, GEORGE, D.D., a Welsh Congregational minister, was born near Brynberian, Pembrokeshire, in 1797, of eminently pious parents. He joined the Church in 1813, and soon began preaching. He received his ministerial education at the Carmarthen Presbyterian College, and, on completing his course, taught and preached for some time in the English portion of Pembrokeshire. Thence he removed to Fishguard, where, with great efficiency, he conducted a grammar-school forty-three years. In 1835 he was ordained pastor at Gideon. His last five years were spent in confinement from paralysis. He died Aug. 31, 1870. Dr. Rees was a thorough Hebrew and Greek scholar. His character was most exemplary. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 338.

Reese, DANIEL C., D.D., one of the four brothers who became distinguished ministers in the Methodist Protestant Church, was born at Baltimore, Md., Feb. 17, 1810. He was converted in his fourteenth year, and in 1830 became an itinerant minister in the Maryland Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, in which he soon took a prominent position. For years he filled the onerous duties of conference steward, was repeatedly elected a representative to the General Conference, and was a member of the convention which met at Montgomery, Ala., in 1867. From 1871 to 1873 he was president of the Maryland Annual Conference, and for forty-four years faithfully served the Church as an itinerant minister. In 1875, on account of feeble health, he was granted a superannuated relation, and died April 23, 1877. See Cobhauer, Founders of the Meth. Prot. Church, p. 368.

Reeves, WILLIAMS, D.D., a minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, was born in Kent, England, Dec. 5, 1802. His parents being poor, his early education was limited. He was converted at the age of twenty-three, and united with the Church. Landing in America about the time of the organization of the Methodist Protestant Church, he united with the Ohio Conference at its first session. In 1833, at the formation of the Pittsburgh Conference, he became one of its members, and was frequently its president. At various times he was elected delegate to the general conferences and conventions of the Methodist Protestant Church. He died April 20, 1871. See Cobhauer, Founders of the Meth. Prot. Church, p. 437.

Reformers is a term usually applied in a religious sense to those who were most prominent in bringing about the great reformation of the 16th century. The principal of these were Wycliffe, Huss, Luther, Calvin, Zwingli, Melancthon, Œcolampadius, Bucer, Beza, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, and John Knox. There are also many others who are fairly entitled to be called reformers.

Regalia Petri (the royalties of Peter) are regarded by Roman Catholics as belonging to the pope in his capacity of sovereign monarch of the universal Church. This claim to royal prerogative is founded on canon law, and has been asserted by the popes with more or less stringency since the 7th century. Among these claims are the following: "To be superior to the whole Church, and to its representative, a general council; to call general councils at his pleasure, all bishops being obliged to attend his summons; to preside in general synods, so as to propose matter for discussion; to promote, obstruct, or overrule the debates; to confirm or invalidate their decisions; to define points of doctrine; to decide controversies authoritatively, so that none may contest or dissent from his judgment; to enact, establish, abrogate, suspend, or dispense with ecclesiastical laws and canons; to relax or do away with ecclesiastical censures by indulgences, pardons, etc.; to dispense with the obligations of promises, vows, oaths, legal obligations, etc.; to be the fountain of all pastoral jurisdiction and dignity; to constitute, confirm, judge, censure, suspend, depose, remove, restore, and reconcile bishops; to exempt colleges and monasteries from the jurisdiction of their bishops and ordinary superiors; to judge all persons in spiritual causes by calling them to his presence, delegating judges, and reserving to himself a final, irrevocable judgment; to receive appeals from all ecclesiastical judicatories, and reverse or confirm their sentences; to be accountable to no one for his acts; to erect, transfer, and abolish episcopal sees; to exact oaths of obedience from the clergy; to found religious orders; to summon and commission soldiers by crusade to fight against infidels or persecute heretics."

Reginald (1), a Scotch prelate, was a Norwegian, and bishop of the Isles about 1181. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 298.

Reginald (2), a Scotch prelate, was consecrated bishop of the Isles in 1217. He died about 1225. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 299.

Regino, born at Altrip on the Rhine, near Spire, was a monk in the monastery of Prüm, and elected abbot there in 892. In 899 he resigned his position and went to Treves, where archbishop Ratbod made him head of the monastery of St. Martin. Regino died in 915. He is the author of, Libri duo de Ecclesiasticis Disciplinis et Religionis Christiana (best edition by Wasererschleben, Leipzig, 1840):—De Harmonica Institutione (printed in Coussemaker's Scriptores de Musica Medii Aevi, Paris, 1867, ii, 1-78). But his greatest work is the Chronicon, the first world's history written in Germany, comprising the time from the birth of Christ to the year 906. The best edition of the Chronicon is found in Monumenta Sacra, i, 536-612 (Germ. transl. by Dümmler, in Geschichtschreiber der deutschen Vorzeit, Berlin, 1857, vol. xiv, part 80). See Wattenbach, Deutsche Geschichtsquellen (4th ed. Berlin, 1877), i, 211-214, 297 sq.; Ermisch, Die Chronik des Regino bis 813 (Göttingen, 1872); Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Régis, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French Jesuit, was born Jan. 31, 1597, at Font-Couverte, Narbonne. In 1616 he joined his order, and intended to go as missionary to Canada. Being, however, denied this by his superiors, he devoted himself entirely to missionary work at home and in churches, chapels, hospitals, prisons, and, in fact, everywhere he preached and exhorted. Régis died Jan. 31, 1640, and was canonized by Clement XII, June 18, 1737. Rehloff, JOHANN ANDREAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Tondern, Aug. 24, 1809. He studied at Kiel and Berlin, was for some time archdeacon at his native place, and in 1837 provost and first pastor at Apenrade. In 1851 Rehloff was called to Hamburg as pastor primarius of St. Michael. In 1870 he was senior of the Hamburg ministerium, resigned in 1879 his pastorate, and died at Kiel, Jan. 9, 1883. Rehloff published some homiletical works, for which see Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. s. v.; also Zum Gedächtniss an Dr. Johann A. Rehloff (Hamburg, 1883). (B. P.)

Rehkopf, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Leipzig, Jan. 20, 1733. He studied at the university of his native place, was in 1761 deacon at Zwickau, in 1764 archdeacon at Reichenbach, in 1769 doctor and professor of theology at Helmstadt, in 1778 superintendent at Dresden, and died March 15, 1789. He published, Vita Patriarcharum Alexandrinorum (Leipzig, 1757-59):—De Zwickaviensibus Litterarum Orientalium Studio Claris (1763):—Janua Hebraea Linguae Veteris Testamenti Olim Adornata a Reinuccio (1769):—De Trinitate (1770):—Michæ et Mathæi in Loco Natali Messias Consensus (1772):—De Vate Scripturæ Sacre (eod.):—Legatus Fecialis ad Malach. iii (1773):—De Persona Jesu Christi Scripturarum Novi Testamenti Expositio (1775), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Reichel, GUSTAV THEODOR, a Moravian minister, was born Dec. 15, 1808, at Berthelsdorf, Saxony. In 1852 he was made a presbyter, and labored for some years at Sarepta, when, in 1857, he was made a member of the executive board of the Unitas Fratrum. For nearly twenty-four years he devoted his entire energy to the service of his Church, and his rich experience was of great value to the executive board, whose president he died, Jan. 28, 1882, at Herrnhut. (B. P.)

Reichhelm, CARL AUGUST WILHELM, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 20, 1817, at Bromberg, and studied at Berlin, where he was assistant preacher at the cathedral for some time. In 1842 he was appointed military preacher at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, in 1849 superintendent at Belzig, in 1853 first preacher of the Reformed Church at Frankfort, and died Dec. 6, 1879, member of consistory. He published, Sinai, Predigten über das Gesetz (Belzig, 1855):—Christus, die rechte Speise und der rechte Frank (Frankfurt, 1857), sermons on the fourth and fifth chapters of John. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. s. v. (B. P.)

Reichlin-Meldegg, CARL ALEXANDER VON, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born of Catholic parentage, at Gravenau, Bavaria, Feb. 21, 1804. For some time professor at the gymnasium, and afterwards of the University of Freiburg, he joined the evangelical Church, Feb. 19, 1832, was in 1840 appointed professor at Heidelberg, and died in 1857. He was the author of, Die Theologie des Magier Manes, etc. (Frankfort, 1825):—Geschichte des Christenthums, incomplete (Freiburg, 1831):—Die mosaische Geschichte vom brennenden Dornbusche (Exod. iii. 1-4) erklärt (1831):—Heinrich E. G. Paulus und seine Zeit (Stuttgart, 1853, 2 vols.), the best biography of the famous Heidelberg rationalist. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 119, 543, 642. Reid, James Seaton, D.D., an eminent minister of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, was a native of Lurgan, and the twenty-first child of his parents. He was ordained minister of Donegon, July 20, 1819, from which place he removed to Carrickfergus in 1823. In 1827 he was unanimously chosen moderator of the Synod of Ulster, and in 1830 was appointed its clerk. In 1838 he was chosen professor of ecclesiastical history of the Belfast Institution. In April, 1841, he was nominated for the chair of ecclesiastical and civil history in the University of Glasgow, by the crown, which position he held until his death, March 26, 1851, in the fifty-third year of his age. He is the author of History of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland (3 vols. 8vo). Dr. Reid spent about twenty years in collecting materials for the work, and putting it into print. The first two volumes were published during his life. At his death he left, in MS., about seven chapters of the third volume. Dr. W. D. Killen was chosen to finish the work, which he did, and published the third and last volume in 1863. This work is a monument of historical research, and is valued not only for its ecclesiastical history, but also for reclaiming many civil facts which would otherwise have been lost.

Reid, Numa Fletcher, D.D., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, son of Rev. James Reid, was born in Rockingham County, N. C., July 3, 1826. He was a boy of remarkable and unyielding integrity and filial affection; was educated at Emory and Henry College; began school-teaching in his eighteenth year at Thompsonville; in 1846 opened an academy at Wentworth, where he labored with great success for five years. He was licensed to preach in 1847, and travelled Wentworth Circuit two years as supply, and in 1851 entered the North Carolina Conference. His fields of labor were: 1852-53, Tar River Circuit; 1854, Front Street, Wilmington; 1855-56, Raleigh Station; 1857, Greensboro' Station; 1858-59, presiding elder of Salisbury District; 1860-63, of Greensboro' District; 1864-67, of Raleigh District; 1868-71, of Greensboro' District; and in 1872 was again sent to Raleigh District, but ill-health led him to exchange for work or Greensboro' District, where he died, June 14, 1873. Dr. Reid was four times elected to the General Conference, and three times headed the list of delegates. In all the relations of life he was a model man. He was learned, logical, solicitous, and eminently successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 805.

Reid, Robert, a Scotch prelate, was born at Aikenhead, and was educated at St. Salvador's College. He was first sub-dean, in 1526 was nominated abbot of Kinloss, and in 1540 was made bishop of Orkney. He died at Dieppe, Sept. 14, 1558. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 223.

Reihing, JACOB, a Roman Catholic divine of Germany, was born in 1579 at Augsburg. He joined the Jesuits at Ingolstadt, taught theology and philosophy there and at Dillingen, and was in 1613 appointed court-preacher to the apostate count-palatine, Wolfgang Wilhelm. In 1615 Reihing published at Cologne, Muri Civitatis Sancta, etc., a kind of apology for his master's apostasy, which elicited rejoinders from the Lutheran theologians Balthasar Meisner and Matthias Hoë von Hoënegg, and from the Reformed theologian Bassecourt. Reihing, not satisfied with this apology, commenced to Romanize the Palatinate. But the careful study of the Bible, which he found necessary in order to dispute with the Protestants, had its influence. In the beginning of the year 1621 Reihing suddenly fled to Stuttgart, and joined the Evangelical Church Nov. 28 of the same year. In 1622 he was made professor of theology at Tübingen, and died May 5, 1628. His writings are mostly polemical. See Oehler, in Mariott's Wahren Protestanten, vol. iii, 1854; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Reimann, JACOB FRIDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 22, 1668. He studied at different universities, was in 1692 rector at Osterwick, in 1693 at Halberstadt. In 1704 he was appointed pastor primarius at Ermsleben, in the principality of Halberstadt, in 1714 cathedral preacher at Magdeburg, in 1717 superintendent at Hildesheim, and died Feb. 1, 1748. Reimann was a voluminous writer. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. s. v. (B. P.)

Reinaldus, a Scotch prelate, was a monk of Melrose when he was made bishop of the see of Ross in 1195. He died in 1218. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 185.

Reindl, GEORG KARL VON, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Bamberg, Nov. 8, 1808. For some time tutor of the Bavarian royal family, he was in 1847 appointed dean of the chapter of the episcopal diocese München-Freising, and died at Munich, Dec. 28, 1882. He wrote, Die Sendung des Propheten Jonas nach Niniveh (Bamberg, 1826); — Abriß der christlichen Kirchengeschichte für Katholiken (1834); — Tempel der häuslichen Andacht (Ratisbon, 1841). (B. P.)

Reineccius, JACOB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Salzwedel in 1571. He studied at Wittenberg, was for some time pastor at Tangermünde, and in 1601 provost at Berlin. In 1609 he was called to Hamburg, and in 1611 was appointed inspector of the newly-founded gymnasium. Reineccius died in June, 1618. He wrote, Panoplia sive Armatura Theologica (Wittenberg, 1609); — Artificium Disputandi (eod.). — Clavis Sancta Theologia (Hamburg, 1611, 2 vols.); — Veteris ac Novi Testamenti Convenientia et Differencia (1612); — Calvinianorum Ortus, Cursus et Exitus (eod.). See Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Reinerding, FRANZ HEINRICH, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 16, 1814, at Damme, Oldenburg. He studied at Münster and at the "Collegium Romanum" in Rome. In 1838 he was a doctor of philosophy, in 1840 he received holy orders, and in 1842 took the degree of a doctor of theology. For some time professor at the gymnasium in Vechta, Oldenburg, Reinerding was in 1851 professor at Fulda, in 1858 at St. Cuthbert's College in Esh, England, in 1863 again at Fulda, and died Feb. 25, 1880. He published, Der Papst und die Bibel (Münster, 1855); — Die Principien des kirchlichen Rechtes in Aufhebung der Mischen (1853); — Clemens XIV. und die Aufhebung der Gesellschaft Jesu (Augsburg, 1854); — Der heilige Bonifacius als Apostel der Deutschen (1855); — Theologia Fundamentalis Tractatus Duo (Münster, 1864); — Beiträge zur Liberus- und Honoriusfrage (1865); — Gedanken über die philosophischen Studien (Vienna, 1866). (B. P.)

Reinhard, MICHAEL HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 18, 1676. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1699 con-rector at Meissen, in 1700 rector at Hildburghausen, in 1713 preacher at Pretsch, in 1721 superintendent at Sondershausen, in 1730 court-preacher at Weissenfels, and died Jan. 1, 1782. He published, De Confessione Tripolitana (Wittenberg, 1694); — De Cibus Hebraeorum Prohibitis (1697); — De Sepultura Animalium Hebraei Unita (eod.); — Elementa Linguae Hebraeae (2d ed. Reinke, LAURENTIUS, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 6, 1797, at Langförden, Oldenburg. He studied at Münster and Bonn, took holy orders in 1822, and commenced his academical career at Münster in 1827. In 1831 he was professor, in 1834 doctor of theology, and in 1847 of philosophy, the latter degree being conferred on him "honoris causa." In 1852 Reinke was made capitular, in 1862 honorary member of the "Société littéraire" of the Louvain University, in 1865 honorary member of the college of doctors of the Vienna theological faculty, and in 1866 "consultor congregationis de propaganda fide pro negotiis ritus orientalia." Reinke died June 4, 1879. He wrote, Exegesis Critica in Iesaiam cap. lli, 18-llii, 12 (Münster, 1836); — Exegesis Critica in Iesaiam cap. ii, 2-4 (1838); — Die Weissagung von der Jungfrau und vom Immanuel (1848); — Ueber das zukünftige glückliche Loos des Stammes Juda (1849); — Beiträge zur Erklärung des alten Testaments (1851-72, 8 vols.); — Der Prophet Malachi (Giessen, 1856); — Die messianischen Psalmen (1857-58, 2 vols.); — Kurze Zusammenstellung aller Abweichungen vom hebr. Text in der Psalmenübersetzung der LXX. und Vulgata, etc. (1858); — Die messianischen Weissagungen bei den grossen und kleinen Propheten des Alten Testaments (1859-62, 4 vols.); — Zur Kritik der älteren Versionen des Propheten Nahum (Münster, 1867); — Der Prophet Haggaï (1868); — Der Prophet Zephania (eod.); — Der Prophet Habakuk (1870); — Der Prophet Micha (1874). (B. P.)

Reinmund, J. F., D.D., a Lutheran minister, spent his boyhood and early manhood in Lancaster, O., to which place he removed with his parents when thirteen years of age. His education, classical and theological, was secured at Wittenberg College. Findlay was the scene of his first pastoral labor. From Findlay he went to Lancaster, from which, after a successful pastorate, he removed, in 1868, to Springfield, where he was employed as superintendent of public schools. In 1873 he received and accepted a call to Lebanon, Pa. Dr. Reinmund was a member of the committee of the General Synod that revised the Hymn and Tune Book. In the hope of restoring his failing health he went to Jacksonville, Fla., but never returned. He died April 26, 1880. See Lutheran Observer, May 7, 1880.

Rekem is thought by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 122) to be the present village of Ain Karim, about four miles west of Jerusalem.

Remeth is regarded by Tristram and Conder as the present er-Rameh, five and a half miles north-west of Sebastieh, "a conspicuous village on a hilly knoll above the small plain, with a high central house. It is of moderate size, with olives below. The sides of the hill are steep" (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, ii, 154).

Remonstrance, ARMINIAN. This is a document drawn up by Uytenbogaert, and presented, in 1610, to the states of Holland, against the decrees of the Synod of Dort. It specifies the five Calvinistic points of doctrine, and then in five articles states the Arminian positions. On this account it gives rise to what is known as the QUINQUARTICULAR CONTROVERSY (q. v.). The Calvinistic party afterwards presented a Counter-Remonstrance. See Schaff, Creeeds of Christendom, iii, 545.

Rémusat, CHARLES DE, a French statesman and philosopher, was born at Paris in 1797, and died June 6, 1875. Besides Essais de Philosophie (Paris, 1884, 2 vols.) and Philosophie Religieuse (1864), he wrote biographies of Abelard (1845), Anselm of Canterbury (1853; Germ. transl. by Wurzbach, Ratisbon, 1854), and Bacon (1858). (B. P.)

Remy, FRANZ, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died at Berlin, May 3, 1882, was a follower of Schleiermacher, and published Hausandachten aus Schleiermacher's Predigten in täglichen Betrachtungen (Berlin, 1861-62, 2 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. a. v. (B. P.)

Renegger, MICHAEL. See RENNIGER.

Reni, GUIDO, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Bologna in 1575, and first studied under Denys Calvert; afterwards entered the school of the Caracci, and was a brilliant pupil. He soon acquired distinction, and early executed some fine works, particularly his picture of St. Benedict in the Desert, for the cloister of San Michele, in Bosco. He afterwards went to Rome, and executed the Martyrdom of St. Cecilia, for the church of that saint, and the Crucifixion of St. Peter also. He now rose rapidly in public estimation. His most celebrated works in the palaces at Rome are his Magdalen, in the Barberini collection, and his fresco of Aurora. The paintings of Guido are numerous, and are to be found in all the principal collections in Italy and throughout Europe. He ruined himself by gambling, and died at Bologna, Aug. 18, 1642. To form a fair estimate of his powers, we are to judge by his best pictures, such as The Magdalen, at Rome; The Miracle of the Mamma, at Ravenna; The Conception, at Forlì; The Murder of the Innocents, and The Resurrection of St. Peter, at Bologna; The Purification, at Modena; and The Assumption, at Genoa, with many other works at Rome, Bologna, and elsewhere. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Rennecke, CHRISTOPH HULDREICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1797. From 1825 to 1831 he acted as tutor of the duchess Helena of Mecklenburg, afterwards duchess of Orleans. From 1831 to 1871 he was pastor at Dargun, in Mecklenburg, when he retired from the ministry and lived as a patriarch among his people. He died April 27, 1881, at Rostock. Rennecke was a brother-in-law of the well-known professor of Halle, Dr. A. Tholuck, with whom he corresponded on the most important topics of the time. He wrote, Die Lehre vom Amt der Schlüssel (Malchin, 1845):—Begründung der Lehren von der Sünde, von der Person Christi (Magdeburg, 1848):—Die Lehre vom Staate, etc. (Leipsic, 1850). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. a. v. (B. P.)

Resurrection, THE FIRST, is a phrase occurring in Rev. xx, 4-6:

"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

Interpreters have been divided as to the distinction in time here denoted by the two successive resurrections. It was the general opinion of the early Christians (but not universal; see Hengstenberg, Apocalyp. ii, 348 note, Carter's ed.) that the thousand years were to be computed from the birth of Christ; and coupled with this reckoning was often expressed a belief in the literal resurrection of saints at that time, prior to the general resurrection; but it is hardly a fair statement that "those who lived next to the apostles and the whole church for three hundred years, understood these words in their literal sense" (Alford, Comment. ad loc.). Bishop Wordsworth affirms (Greek Test. with Notes, ad loc.) that the spiritual interpretation "is that which has been adopted by the best expositors of the Western and Eastern churches from the days of St. Augustine to those of bishop Andrews." A glance at the conspectus given in such works as Poole's Synopsis Criticorum, and Wolff's Cura in N. T., at this place, will suffice to show the great discrepancy in the earlier interpreters on the subject, and that in Ellicott's Horæ Apocalyptice, ad loc., displays an equal divergence in modern times. Those who hold the literal view maintain (1) that this is the only plain meaning of the text, and (2) that it is sustained by several other passages which speak of a distinction of the righteous as raised first (especially 1 Thess. iv, 16). But these latter passages do not require, nor even admit, so long an interval between the resurrection of the saints and that of others, which, moreover, are elsewhere represented as substantially simultaneous (John v, 28, 29; Rev. xx, 12); indeed, Scripture everywhere (unless in the passage in dispute) knows of but one future advent of our Lord, and that the final and universal one, at least after the figurative one at the destruction of Jerusalem. See ESCHATOLOGY. Moreover, such a temporal and earthly reign of Christ as the literalists here require, is at variance with the whole spirit and economy of the Gospel; and we may add that the anticipations which such a theory engenders have been the bane of Chiliasm (q. v.), and the fosterer of fanaticism in all ages. See MILLENNARIANS. Finally and conclusively, the passage in dispute itself explicitly limits the resurrection in this case to the "souls" of the martyrs (not all saints), apparently meaning a revival of their devoted spirit, or, at most, their glorification (as in the case of the "two witnesses," Rev. xi, 11, 12); and not a word is said about a terrestrial reign, but only one "with Christ," i. e. in the celestial or spiritual sphere. The modern literature of the discussion is very copious, but quite sporadic, and no complete treatise has yet appeared on the subject. The best is that by David Brown, D.D., Christ's Second Coming (Lond. 1846, 1847, 1856).

Rettig, HEINRICH CHRISTIAN MICHAEL, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Giessen in 1795, where, after completing his studies, he also established himself as academical teacher. In 1832 he published Die freie protestantische Kirche oder die kirchlichen Verfassungsgrundsätze des Evangeliums, in which he advocates separation of State and Church. In 1833 he was called to Zurich as professor of theology, and died March 24, 1836. Of his works we also mention, Ueber das Zeugnis Justins über die Apokalypse (Leipsic, 1829):—Questiones Philippenses (Giessen, 1831). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. a. v.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. a. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 92, 263, 555; ii, 18. (B. P.)

Reuchlin, a name common to several Lutheran theologians, of whom we here mention the following:

1. CHRISTOPH, the teacher of the famous Bengel, born in 1660, studied at Tübingen and Wittenberg, and died at the former place, June 11, 1707, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, De Artificio Jacobi Magico, etc.:—De Diluvio Mosarico, etc.:—De Nova Creatione Ephes. ii, 10:—De Evangelio ad Rom. i, 16, 17:—De Credendis e Scriptura Sacra Dictis Exegeti Theologica Demonstratis:—De Dubitatione Cartesianæ:—De Ariano, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v.

2. FRIEDRICH JACOB, born at Gerstheim, near Strasburg, in 1695, and died at the latter place, June 8, 1788, doctor and professor of theology, is the author of De Doctrina Cypriana (1751-56, 3 parts). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 906.

3. HERMANN, who died at Stuttgart in 1873, doctor of philosophy, wrote, Das Christenthum in Frankreich innerhalb und ausserhalb der Kirche (Hamburg, 1837):—Geschichte von Port-Royal, etc. (1839, 2 vols.):—Pascal's Leben, etc. (Stuttgart, 1840). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. s. v. (B. P.)

Reuden, AMBROSIIUS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 1, 1543, studied at Leipsic and Jena, and died at the latter place, June 1, 1615. He wrote, Compendium Grammaticae Ebraicae (Wittenberg, 1586):—Isaogoe Grammaticae in Linguam Hebraicam (1604):—Isaogoe Biblica (Hamburg, 1602):—Economia Veteris et Novi Testamenti, Ostendens quid ibi Observandum sit (Leipsic, 1608), etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. s. v. (B. P.)

Reuss, JEREMIAS FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 2, 1700. He studied at Tübingen, travelled extensively, was in 1731 appointed court-preacher and professor at Copenhagen, in 1742 doctor of theology, in 1749 general superintendent of Schleswig and Holstein, in 1757 professor at Tübingen, and died March 6, 1777. He published, De Usu Experientiae Spiritualis in Scripturarum Interpretatione (2d ed. Leipsic, 1785):—Meletema de Sensu Septem Pargoliarum Matth. xiii. Psephitico (1739):—Meletema de Spiritus Sancti Testimonio (1734):—Diss. qua Illustratur Oraculum Zachar. vi, 12, 13 Explanatur (1758):—De Auctore Apocalypsis (1767), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. s. v. (B. P.)

Reuter, Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Schlawa, Pomerania, June 17, 1675. He studied at Wittenberg, in 1702 was deacon there, in 1708 pastor at Zerbst, in 1711 doctor of theology, and died April 6, 1744. He published, De Libanio, Nobili Gracorum Rhetore (Wittenberg, 1699):—De Cultu Dei Adversus Hobbesium, Cherburg et Spinozam (1702):—De Mucurio Aegyptio (1708):—De Faderibus et Testamentis (1706):—De Precibus Beatorum in Caelis pro Homibus in Terris (1714):—De Lege Morali non Abrogata ex Joh. i, 18 (ed.) :—Δικαιώματα νόμων ex Rom. viii (1716):—Typus Doctrinae et Theologiae Moralis (1718):—Electa Theologica (1720). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Reuter, Quirinus, a German scholar, pupil and successor of Zach. Ursinus, was born at Mosbach, Sept. 27, 1558. He studied at Heidelberg. In 1578 he went to Neustadt, where his former teachers lectured at the newly-founded academy. In 1580 Reuter went to Breslau as private tutor, but returned to Neustadt in 1583. In 1590 he was again at Heidelberg, became in 1601 doctor of theology, in 1602 professor of Old Test. theology, and died March 22, 1613. Of his writings we mention, Censura Catecheseos Heidelbergensis:—Diatriba de Ubiquitate:—Tractatus de Ecclesia:—Aphorismi Theologici de Vera Religione:—Dissertatio de δικαιώματι Legis in Christo et Christianis ad Rom. viii:—Commentarius in Obadiam Prophetam una cum Illustrationum Quorundam de Messie Persona et Officio Vaticanorum Explicatione, etc. See Freher, Theatrum Virorum Clariss.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Iselin, Historisches Universal-Lexikon, s. v.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v. Révész, EMERUS, a Reformed theologian of Hungary, was born in 1826. He studied at Debreczin and Buda, and after spending some time for literary purposes in Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, and Germany, became pastor of two country congregations in succession, but was removed in 1856 to Debreczin, where he labored until his death, Feb. 13, 1881. His learning and character made him the leader in the Reformed Church of Hungary. When, on Sept. 1, 1859, the emperor of Austria issued the famous "Patent," which was followed by the edict issued by the minister of public worship, the Protestants of Hungary felt grieved, for the object of the "Patent" and the edict was nothing less than a complete reorganization of the Reformed Church, involving the destruction of self-government and the transference of ecclesiastical legislation to the civil authority. This attempt to deprive the Reformed Church of her inherent rights aroused the spirit of self-defence against the intrusion of the secular power, and Révész came forward with his A Protestáns Egyházalkotmány, etc., i. e. Fundamental Principles of the Protestant Church Constitution According to the Statements of the Leading Reformers, Confessions, and Church Organizations (1856), which appeared as a reply to the order issued by the Austrian imperial cabinet. In this work he sets forth the views of the Reformers, especially Calvin, regarding the Church's inherent and indefeasible right of self-government, and delineates the organizations of the German, Swiss, French, and Scottish Reformed churches. His next production was Opinion Regarding the Chief Points of the Hungarian Protestant Church Constitution (1857). The Hungarian Reformed Church protested against the intrusion of the secular power, and appealed to a national free synod. All who dared to speak publicly against the edict—and among these was Révész—were summoned before the civil courts, and some were even committed to prison. A great deputation of Protestants was sent (Jan. 25, 1860) to the emperor at Vienna, with a petition for the withdrawal of the "Patent" and the edict. The leading spirit in this movement was Révész. On May 15, 1860, the "Patent" was withdrawn, and amnesty was granted to all who were suffering for their opposition to the decrees. Another struggle began when, under the new constitution, in 1868, the Hungarian parliament hurriedly passed the law for the secularization of the elementary schools. Révész, with his usual deep and wide insight, and true Protestant instincts, stood forth to criticise and assail the law on its dangerous side. With the view of enlightening and directing public opinion, as well as vindicating the right of the Protestant Church to manage her own schools, a right secured by constitutional law, he started a scientific monthly magazine in 1870, called the Hungarian Protestant Observer (Magyar Protestáns Figyelmező). A still brighter career was reserved by Providence for the Observer in the field of polemics. The views of the German so-called "Protestant Union" found many advocates in Hungary among the professors of divinity and ministers. The "modern," or rationalistic tendency, based on mere negations, and claiming unrestricted freedom in religion and doctrine, began to exercise its terrible influence in the professorial chairs, religious newspapers, and public meetings. After some preparatory skirmishes, the "Liberals" founded the "Hungarian Protestant Union" at Pesth, in October, 1871, declaring its chief aim to be "to renew the religious-moral life in the spirit of Jesus, and to harmonize it with universal culture." This Protestant Union denied revelation, the divinity of Christ, and highly extolled Unitarianism. But when it had reached its height Révész raised the banner of evangelicalism, and every number of his monthly review was eagerly read in both camps. The chief work by him against the negative theology appeared in a separate form, A Magyar Országgi Protestáns Egyházról, i. e. Concerning the Hungarian Protestant Union, reprinted from the pages of the Observer. It is an effective and conclusive defence of evangelical Protestantism. So severe was the attack on the so-called "new Reformers" that the rationalistic Unitarian Union soon lost its prestige, evangelical principles were saved, and the famous association silently dissolved. Besides the works already mentioned, Révész published, Kálmán Élete és a Kálvinizmus, i. e. The Life of Calvin and Calvinism (Pesth, 1864). This is the first classic history of Calvin's life in Hungarian:—Joannes Sylvester Pannoniensis, a Hungaricus Protestant Reformer (Debreczin, 1859):—Mathias Dévay Biro, the First Hungarian Reformer: his Life and Works (1863). In 1865 Révész filled the chair of Church history, an office which he resigned in 1866, but a volume of general Church history is the fruit of this one year's professorship. In 1871 the Protestant faculty of theology at Vienna conferred on him the degree of doctor of theology. Révész never accepted promotion to any of the higher positions in ecclesiastical government, wishing to remain a simple minister. For Herzog's Real-Encyclopädie Révész wrote in German the article on Dévay and the Hungarian reformation. See Catholic Presbyterian Review, Dec. 1881. (B. P.)

Reynolds, Ignatius Aloysius, D.D., a Roman Catholic ecclesiastic, was born near Bardstown, Ky., Aug. 22, 1798, and educated at St. Mary's College, Baltimore, Md. He became a priest, and was successively vicar-general of Kentucky, rector of St. Joseph's College, and president of Nazareth Female Institute of Kentucky. He was consecrated bishop of Charleston, S. C., March 18, 1844, and died in that city, March 6, 1855.

Reynolds, Walter, archbishop of Canterbury, was the son of a baker, born in Windsor. Of all the primates who have occupied the see of Canterbury, few seem to have been less qualified to discharge the duties devolving upon a metropolitan than he. He was not equal to the situation as regards his talents, learning, piety, or his virtues. He was elected to the see of Worcester, and was duly consecrated at Canterbury, by archbishop Winchelsea, Oct. 13, 1808. Here he was a failure, but he had some friends, and it is due to them that, Jan. 4, 1814, he was translated to the see of Canterbury, and was also made chancellor. He died a desponding old man, Nov. 16, 1837. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, iii, 455 sq.

Reynolds, William Morton, D.D., an Episcopal clergyman, was born at Little Falls Forge, Pa. He entered the ministry in early manhood, being at first identified with the Lutheran Church; was professor of Latin in Pennsylvania College for several years; afterwards president of Capital University, Columbus, O.; and was also at one time president of Illinois State University, Springfield. He changed his ecclesiastical relations about 1863, entering the Protestant Episcopal Church, and was connected with the diocese of Illinois. During the last five years of his life he was rector successively at Harlem and Oak Park, Ill. He died at Chicago, Sept. 5, 1876, aged sixty-four years. See Lutheran Observer, Sept. 15, 1876.

Rhode, Johann Gottlieb Heinrich, a Protestant theologian, was born in 1762, and died at Breslau, Aug. 28, 1837. He wrote, Ueber religiöse Bildung, Mythologie und Philosophie der Hindus (Leipzig, 1827, 2 vols.):—Die heilige Sage und das gesammte Religionsystem der alten Aechter, Meder, Perser und des Zendeokles (Frankfort, 1820):—Gregorii Barhebraei Scholia in Psalmum v et xviii Edita, Translata, etc. (Breslau, 1832):—Prolegomenorum ad Questionum de Evangelio Apostolique Marcionis Denuo Instituendum Caput i-iii (1834). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 519, 521; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. s. v. (B. P.)

Ribbeck, Conrad Gottlieb, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stolpe, Pomerania, March 21, 1759. He studied at Halle, was in 1779 teacher at his native place, in 1786 pastor at Magdeburg, in 1805 at Berlin, and died June 28, 1826, doctor of theology and member of the superior consistory. He published ascetical and homiletical works, for which see Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 495; ii, 92, 148, 163, 168, 175, 177, 202, 205, 207, 232, 294, 331. (B. P.)

Ribov, Georg Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 8, 1703, at Lüchau, Hanover, and studied theology at Halle. In 1722 he went to Bremen as teacher at the gymnasium, and in 1727 to Helmstädt, where he commenced his academical career. In 1732 he accepted the pastorate at Quedlinburg, in 1736 was called to Göttingen, and made doctor of theology in 1737. In 1739 he was appointed professor at the university, but resigned his position in 1759 to accept a call to Hanover. Ribov died Aug. 22, 1774. Of his publications we mention, De Iis in quibus Christum Imitari nec Possumus nec Par est (Göttingen, 1737):—Institutiones Theologiae Dogmaticae (1740):—De Apostolatu Judaico, Speciatim Paulino (1745):—De Terminis Vaticanorum Veteris Testamenti Ultimo (1748):—De Antiquitatibus Judaico-Christianis (1752):—De Initio Numeris Apostolici Sancti Pauli (1756):—De Methodo qua Theologia Moralis est Tradenda (1759). Rice, Benjamin Holt, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Bedford County, Va., Nov. 29, 1782. He was licensed by the Orange Presbytery, Sept. 28, 1810; in 1814 was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Petersburg, Va., where he remained for fifteen years; in 1832 was elected secretary of the Home Missionary Society; in 1833 was chosen pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Princeton, N. J., where he remained, discharging his duties faithfully, for fourteen years, and then became pastor of the church near Hampden-Sidney College, Va. He died Jan. 24, 1856. Dr. Rice possessed superior powers as a preacher. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 625.

Rice, John Holt, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, brother of the foregoing, was born July 23, 1818, at Petersburg, Va. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1838, pursued the study of law for three years in Princeton, was admitted to the bar, and practiced for a time at Richmond, Va. He graduated from Princeton Seminary in 1845, and the same year was licensed by the New Brunswick Presbytery. For several months he assisted his father, who was at that time pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Princeton. Then going south, he labored a year in New Orleans, La., as city missionary. In 1847 he began to preach at Tallahassee, Fla. He next became pastor of the village church at Charlotte Court-House, Va., and was released in 1855. For a time he served as agent of the Presbyterian Board of Publication in Kentucky and Tennessee. In 1856 he was installed pastor of Walnut Street Church in Louisville, Ky., where he remained till 1861. During the civil war he preached in the South, at Lake Providence, La., and Brandon and Vicksburg, Miss. In 1867 he went to Mobile, in 1869 to Franklin, Tenn., and afterwards to Mason, till 1876. After this he labored as an evangelist, preaching to the poor and destitute. He died Sept. 7, 1878. After the division of the Presbyterian Church, in 1861, he adhered to the Southern General Assembly. Dr. Rice had a knowledge wide and varied; his sermons were often of a very high order. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 49.

Rice, Samuel D., D.D., a general superintendent of the Methodist Church in Canada, was born in Maine in 1815. He studied for some time at Bowdoin College, and was converted in his seventeenth year. In 1837 he entered the itinerant ministry. With the exception of a year at the Sackville Wesleyan College, he spent six years in the city of St. John. From 1853 to 1857 he was treasurer and moral governor of Victoria College; from 1857 to 1860 stationed in the city of Hamilton; from 1863 to 1878 governor of the Wesleyan Ladies' College there; in 1873 and 1874 president of the conference; in 1860 appointed to Winnipeg, where he remained for three years as chairman of that district. In 1882 he was elected president of the Methodist Church of Canada; and at the first session of the General Conference of the United Methodist churches he was elected senior general superintendent. He died Dec. 11, 1884. Dr. Rice was a man of tall and commanding appearance. As a presiding officer he was dignified and firm, as a preacher, earnest and forcible; as a pastor and administrator his principle was "not to mend our rules, but keep them." He was a man of strong faith and lofty courage. See (Canada) Christian Guardian, December, 1884.

Richard (1), a Scotch prelate, was elected to the see of St. Andrew's in 1163. He died in 1173. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 11.

Richard (2), a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of Moray in 1187. He died at Spynie in 1208. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 136.

Richard (3), a Scotch prelate, was probably bishop of Dunkeld in 1249. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 80.

Richard (4), a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of the Isles in 1252. He died in 1274. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 300.

Richard, archbishop of Canterbury, was by birth a Norman. Very little is known of his early life. When the primary education of Richard was finished he was received into the monastery of Christ Church, Canterbury, and his manner being noticed by archbishop Theobald, he selected him to be one of his chaplains. Richard's first preferment was to the place of prior, in the monastery of St. Martin, Dover, in 1140. He was consecrated to the see of Canterbury, April 7, 1174, at Anagni, and "a more amiable man than archbishop Richard never sat in the chair of Augustine." In 1176 he was sent to Normandy, to arrange a marriage between the princess Joanna and William, king of Sicily. Ten years after he was seized with a violent chill when making a journey to Rochester, and died while there, Feb. 16, 1184. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, ii, 508 sq.

Richards, John, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Farmington, Conn., May 14, 1797. He graduated at Yale College in 1821, at Andover Theological Seminary in 1824; was for a year agent for the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; pastor at Woodstock, Vt., from 1827 to 1831, associate editor of the Vermont Chronicle from 1831 to 1837, and pastor of the Church at Dartmouth College from 1841 until his death, at Hanover, N. H., March 29, 1859. "Dr. Richards was a comprehensive scholar, faithful to Christ, and heartily devoted to the best interests of mankind. No man ever questioned his learning, integrity, and piety." See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 316.

Richardson, Elias Huntington, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Lebanon, N. H., Aug.

11, 1827. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1850, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1853; was ordained at Goffstown, May 18, 1854, and remained there two years, then was pastor at Dover until 1863; next of the Richmond Street Church, Providence, R. I., until 1867; of the First Church, Westfield, Mass., until 1872; of the Center Church, Hartford, Conn., until 1879, and finally of the Center Church, New Britain, until his death, June 27, 1883. See The Congregationalist, July 5, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Richardson, Merrill, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Holden, Mass., Oct. 4, 1811. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1835, then taught for two years in the Academy of Middlebury, and graduated at Yale Divinity School in 1839. He was ordained pastor at Terryville, Conn., Oct. 27, 1841, remaining there nearly five years. From 1847 to 1849 he was acting pastor at Durham, when he was reinstated at Terryville. From this charge he was dismissed, Jan. 18, 1858. The same month he was installed pastor of the Salem Street Church, Worcester, Mass., and here he remained until September, 1870. The following November he assumed charge of the New England Church, New York city, from which he was dismissed in May, 1872. From June 12, 1873, he was in charge of the Church at Milford, Mass., until his death, Dec. 12, 1876. During 1847 and 1848 he was secretary of the Connecticut School Board. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 423.

Richmond, Edward, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Middleborough, Mass., in 1767. He graduated from Brown University in 1789; studied theology under Rev. Dr. Gurney, of North Middleborough; was ordained pastor of the Church in Stoughton, Dec. 5, 1792; dismissed, Jan. 15, 1817; installed at Dorchester, June 25 following; dismissed in 1833; then resided for several years in Braintree, and died in Boston, April 10, 1842. Dr. Richmond was a candid man, a close and acute reasoner, and was much respected as a minister and a neighbor. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 417.

Richter, Johann Georg, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1727 at Leipsic, where he also pursued his theological studies. In 1750 he commenced his academical career, was in 1751 professor, and in 1756 doctor of theology. He died June 14, 1780, leaving, De Arte Critica Scripturae Interprete (Leipsic, 1750);—De Vitiis Criticis Luciani et Lezicorum Grecorum (1752);—Singulares Quaedam Martini Lutheri de Matrimonio Sententiae (eod.);—De Paulo in vitam Revocati Nuncio ad Act. xii, 32, 33 (1756);—De Munere Sacro Johanni Baptiste Discretus Delegato (1757);—De Theologo Dei Homine ad 2 Tim. iii, 17 (1765);—Tabulae Theologiae Dogmaticae ad Unus Lectionum (1771). Richter, Karl, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1804 at Warendorf. In 1826 he was director of the gymnasium at Rietberg, in 1828 professor at Paderborn, in 1837 director at Culm, in 1844 canon and professor at Pöplin, in 1849 at Posen, in 1867 at Treves, and died Aug. 24, 1869, doctor of theology. (B. P.)

Riddell, Mortimer S., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at East Hamilton, N. Y., May 8, 1827. After pursuing secular business for several years, he studied at the Hamilton Institution, graduating in 1858, and was soon after ordained pastor in New Brunswick, N. J., where he took high rank as a preacher, and his eight years' ministry was eminently successful. His labors, during a revival of remarkable power, broke down his health, and he was obliged to suspend his ministerial work. All his efforts to regain his wasted strength proved futile, and he died at Ottawa, Kan., Feb. 1, 1870. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 968. (J. C. S.)

Ridley, Joseph James, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in North Carolina in 1810. He was confirmed in 1835; made deacon in 1843, and presbyter in 1844; became rector in Oxford, N. C., in 1858, and the following year in Clarksville, Tenn. While in this parish he received the degree of M.D., after having pursued a course of study in medicine. In 1860 he removed to Knoxville, as president of East Tennessee University; the following year returned to Clarksville, as rector of Trinity Church; in 1866 was rector of St. Paul's Church, Louisville, N. C.; in 1867 of St. Thomas's Church, Somerville, Tenn.; about 1870 of Zion's Church, Brownsville, where he died, March 10, 1878.

Riederer, JOHANN BARTHOLOMÄUS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Nuremberg, March 8, 1720. He studied at Altdorf and Halle, was in 1744 afternoon preacher at Nuremberg, in 1745 preacher at Altdorf, in 1752 professor, in 1753 doctor of theology, in 1769 archdeacon, and died Feb. 5, 1771. He wrote, De Genuino Sensu Jerem. xxxi, 8 (Altdorf, 1753); — De Pauli Prædicantia inter Gentes Evangelium Successibus (1759), etc. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Rifian Version of the Scriptures. Rif is a dialect of Shilha, Morocco. A translation of the gospel of Matthew into this dialect was made by Mr. William Mackintosh, agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society at Morocco, which was printed by the same society in 1855, in Arabic type. (B. P.)

Rigaud, STEPHEN JORDAN, D.D., a colonial bishop of the Church of England, matriculated at Exeter College, Oxford; took the degree of B.A. in 1841; was ordained deacon in 1840 and presbyter in 1842; became fellow, tutor, and examiner of Exeter College in 1845–46; head master of Queen Elizabeth School, Ipswich, in 1850; and was consecrated bishop of Antigua in 1857, his jurisdiction comprising seven hundred and fifty-one square miles. He died of yellow fever at Antigua, West Indies, May 16, 1859. Bishop Rigaud was the author and editor of, Letters of Scientific Men:—Newton and Contemporaries:—Defence of Hully against the Charge of Religious Infidelity:—Sermons on The Lord's Prayer, etc. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1859, p. 538.

Rigdon, SIDNEY, a prominent Mormon leader, was born in St. Clair, Beaver Co., Pa., Feb. 19, 1793, and received a fair English education. He learned the printer's trade, and was working in an office in Pittsburgh when, about 1812, a manuscript was offered for publication by an eccentric preacher named Solomon Spaulding, which was entitled, The Manuscript Found, or, The Book of Mormon. Rigdon was so much interested in the work that he made a copy before it was returned to Spaulding, who died a short time after. About 1817 Rigdon became a Campbellite preacher, with an evident leaning towards Adventism. In 1829 he became acquainted with Joseph Smith, and arranged with him to have the Book of Mormon published, as the basis for a new sect. From this time he was closely identified with the Mormon movement, going with the new body, and suffering persecution with them. He was a candidate for the leadership on the death of Smith, and on the election of Brigham Young refused to acknowledge his authority. Accordingly he was excommunicated, and returned to Pittsburgh. He afterwards lived in obscurity, and died at Friendship, N. Y., July 14, 1876. See MORMONS.

Riggs, STEPHEN R., D.D., LL.D., a venerable Presbyterian missionary to the North American Indians, was born at Steubenville, O., March 23, 1812. He graduated from Jefferson College, and pursued his theological studies at Allegheny Seminary. He was ordained and commissioned as a missionary to the Dakota Indians in 1836. He commenced his labors at Laquiparle, where he made encouraging progress in teaching and converting the red men. He reduced the Dakota language to a written form, published text-books for spelling and reading, and translated the Bible. He also published a Dakota Dictionary. Upwards of fifty books, consisting of original writings and translations in connection with a history of Dakota, constitute the literary work of his life. In 1880 Dr. Riggs, Hon. W. E. Dodge, and Justice Strong of the United States Supreme Court, were appointed a committee by the Presbyterian General Assembly of the United States to present to Congress the need of securing to Indians the rights of white men. Dr. Riggs was the author of the memorial which was read to the Senate committee by Justice Strong. More than forty years of his life were spent among the Indians, and he lived to see six of the churches of Dakota transferred to the Board of Foreign Missions. He died at Beloit, Wis., Aug. 24, 1883. See Presbyterian Home Missionary, Sept. 1883; Nevins, Presb. Encyclop. s. v. (W. P. S.)

Rimmon. On the identification of this rock with that of Runmon, see the Quar. Statement of the "Palest. Explor. Fund," Oct. 1881, p. 247. The village Rumnek is not described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordinance Survey.

Rinck, Friedrich Theodor, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 8, 1770, at Stave, Pomerania. He commenced his academical career in 1792 at Königsberg, was in 1900 professor of theology, in 1801 first preacher at Dantzic, and died April 27, 1821, doctor of theology. He is the author of, De Linguarum Orientalium cum Græca MIRA Commentaria (Königsberg, 1788):—Arabisches, syrisches, und chaldäisches Lesebuch (eol.):—Commentarii in Hosea Vulticini Specimen (1789):—Neue Sammlung der Reisen nach den Orient (1807). Rinck, Heinrich Wilhelm, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born in 1822 at Bischofingen, Baden. For some time inspector of the "Evangelical Society" at Ellerfeld, he was in 1855 elected pastor of the Lutheran congregation, and died in January, 1881. He is the author of, Die christliche Glaubenslehre, achristgemäss dargestellt (Basle, 1854):—Vom Zustande nach dem Tode (2d ed. 1866):—Die Zeichen der letzten Zeit und die Wiederkunft Christi (1857):—Bileam und Elias (1868):—Homilien über den Jacobusbrief (1870):—Den ersten Johannesbrief (1872):—Die drei ersten Kapitel der Offenbarung Johannis (1875). (B. P.)

Rinck, Wilhelm Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Diedlingen, near Pforzheim, Feb. 9, 1798. In 1818 he was pastor of the German evangelical congregation at Venice, in 1821 at Bischofingen, in 1827 at Eyringen, in 1835 at Grenzach, Baden, and died in 1856. He is the author of, Lehrbegriff von den heiligen Abendmahl (Heidelberg, 1818):—Dus Send-schreiben der Korinther an den Apostel Paulus aus dem Armenischen (1823):—Lucubratio Critica in Acta Apostolorum, Epistolæ Catholicæ et Paulinæ, etc. (1833):—Die angefochtenen Erzählungen in dem Leben Jesu beleuchtet (1842):—Apokalyptische Forschungen (Zurich, 1853). Ripley, GEORGE, LL.D., a Unitarian divine and author, was born at Greenfield, Mass., Oct. 3, 1802. He graduated from Harvard College in 1823, and from the Cambridge Divinity School in 1826; the following year became pastor of the Purchase Street Unitarian Church, Boston. After remaining a few years he resigned, and devoted himself exclusively to literary pursuits. In 1847 he became literary editor of the New York Tribune, and retained that position until his death, July 4, 1880. He published, Discourses on the Philosophy of Religion (1839):—Letters on the Latest Forms of Infidelity (1840):—Specimens of Foreign Standard Literature (1842). Among his greatest literary labors are, Appleton's New American Cyclopædia, which subsequently was revised and greatly enlarged. He was also editor of an Annual Cyclopædia, published by the same house. He translated Philosophical Essays, by M. Victor Cousin (Edinburgh, 1857). He edited, in connection with R. W. Emerson and S. M. Fuller, The Dial, and with C. A. Dana, Parke Godwin, and J. S. Dwight, The Harbinger. He contributed numerous articles to the Christian Examiner, and Putnam's and Harper's Magazines. See (N. Y.) Observer, July 8, 1880; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (W. P. S.)

Rist, JOHANN VON, a German hymn-writer, was born March 8, 1607, at Pinneburg, Holstein, and died Aug. 31, 1667. He is the author of about six hundred and fifty-eight religious hymns and poems. Some are, indeed, of little value; but very many of them are really good, and some belong to the first rank. They were even read with delight among Roman Catholics, and an empress once lamented "that it were a great pity if the writer of such hymns should be sent to hell." Rist was very much honored, and attained the highest titles in Church and State open to a clergyman, and the emperor honored him in 1654 with the crown of poet-laureate and a patent of nobility. Quite a number of Rist's hymns have been translated into English, as "Auf, auf, ihr Reichthumsgenossen" (Lyra Germ. ii, 23):—"Wach' auf, wach' auf, du sich're Welt" (ibid. i, 4):—"Wie wohl hast du gelabet" (ibid. ii, 144):—"Folget mir, ruft uns das Leben" (ibid. i, 188):—"Werde munter mein Gemüthe" (ibid. ii, 112):—"Ehr' und Dank sei dir gesungen" (ibid. i, 205):—"O Traurigkeit, O Herzeleid" (Christian Singers, p. 191):—"Werde Licht, du Volk der Heiden" (ibid. p. 30):—"Gott sei gelobet, der alleine" (ibid. p. 192):—"O Ewigkeit du Donnerwort" (Jacobi, Psalmodia Germ. i, 97). Ritter, HEINRICH, a philosophical writer of Germany, was born at Zerbst, Nov. 11, 1791. He commenced his academical career at Berlin in 1817, was professor of philosophy in 1824, in 1833 at Kiel, in 1837 at Göttingen, and died Feb. 2, 1869, doctor of theology. He wrote, Der Pantheismus und die Halb-Kantianer (Berlin, 1827):—Ueber die Erkenntniss Gottes in der Welt (Hamburg, 1836):—Ueber das Böse (Kiel, 1839):—Ueber die Emanationslehre (Göttingen, 1847):—Ueber Lessings philosophische und religiöse Grundsätze (1848):—Unsterblichkeit (Leipzig, 1851):—Die christliche Philosophie nach ihrem Begriff (1858-59, 2 vols.):—Encyclopædie der philosophischen Wissenschaften (1864, 3 vols.):—Ueber das Böse und seine Folgen (Gotha, 1869):—Philosophische Paradoxa (Leipzig, 1867). Ritual of the Dead is the name given by Egyptologists to the oldest sacred book of the Egyptian theology. Portions of this book date from the time of king Gagamakhem, a monarch of the third dynasty, the text itself being in many places accompanied by a gloss, which was added at a later period, to render it intelligible. The deities principally mentioned in it are Osiris, Anubis, Horus, and Tum; Amen Ra, as a distinct divinity, being only indirectly referred to. Although the mystical work is now treated as one book, it is really made up of a collection of not less than eighteen separate treatises, including three supplemental chapters and two litanies, which seem to have been added at the time of the new empire. Selections from chapters and illustrations from the ritual abound on the walls of many of the tombs of the eighteenth and nineteenth dynasties, and notably on that of Seti-Menephah I, in the Biban el-Moluk. Other chapters were used as mystical formulas to avert diseases, others as a part of the religious worship of the Egyptians, and a few obscure passages as secret mysteries, the meaning of which is now lost. Many hundred of papyri have been found in the mummy-cases, which contain different portions of the ritual, with their accompanying vignette and rubric, but a complete recension and comparison of all the existing texts have not yet been effected. The text of the ritual underwent no less than three different revisions, viz., in the ancient empire, in the period of the nineteenth dynasty, and in the reign of the Saitic kings. This last was the edition which is most commonly met with, but there appears to have been an attempt at a partial re-edition in the Ptolemaic period. The chief divisions or books of which the Ritual of the Dead is composed are as follows:

- | | CHAPTERS |
|---|-------------|
| 1. The Manifestation of Light (first book)..... | i-xvi. |
| 2. The Egyptian Faith..... | xvii-xx. |
| 3. The Resurrection of the Deceased..... | xxi-xxvi. |
| 4. The Preservation of the Body in Hades..... | xxvii-xlii. |
| 5. The Protection in Hades..... | xliii-li. |
| 6. The Celestial Diet..... | lii, liii. |
| 7. The Manifestation of Light (second book)..... | liv-lxxv. |
| 8. The Metamorphoses..... | lxxvi-xx. |
| 9. The Protection of the Soul; or, Forms for Various Occasions..... | xci-cxvi. |

- CHAPTERS
10. The Going into and out of Hades.....cxvii-cxxiv.
 11. The Hall of the Two Truths.....cxxv.
 12. The Gods of the Orbit.....cxxvi-cxxix.
 13. The Passage of the Sun, or Adorations of the Sun.....cxxx-cxl.
 14. The Festival (Liturgy) of the Names of the Gods.....cxli-cxlii.
 15. The House of Osiris; or, The Chapter of Making the Amulets.....cxlii-cxli.
 16. The Orientation.....cxlii, cxliii.
 17. The Three Supplemental Chapters.....cxliv-cxlv.
 18. The Assistances of Horus.....i, ii.

From these it will be seen that the arrangement of the chapters is inconsecutive so far as their subjects are concerned, and there is every reason to believe that the order in which they now occur, especially in the English translation, is somewhat arbitrary. The ritual is rarely found written in Hieratic, and still more rarely in Demotic. The finest examples are those in the museums of the Louvre and Turin.

River-gods. Deities of streams were worshipped at all times by the Greeks and Romans, each bearing the name of the river over which he ruled.
